The testimony shows that the defendant company, at the time of the injury, was engaged in extending its railroad beyond the point of the accident, and the freight train on which plaintiff was employed as brakeman was daily hauling cars loaded with lumber and iron to a point near where the road was being constructed. On the day of the accident a flat car was loaded with railroad iron by a gang of men working with a construction train of defendant, and placed on a side-track at Palatka for the freight train to pick up and haul to the work on the road. The construction train was under the control of a conductor, whose duty it was to have the cars loaded.

The iron on the flat car projected over one end eighteen or twenty inches, and the car was about the length of or a little longer than the iron. It appears from the testimony of the freight conductor, who was examined as a witness for defendant, that it was his duty to inspect the cars to be taken into the train, and that he received this car after he saw the iron projecting over the end. He states, however, that he was daily hauling lumber and iron for the construction of the road, and it was very common at this time to find cars loaded with lumber and iron projecting over the ends. A witness, who was at the time a brakeman on the construction train, and introduced by plaintiff, testified that he could not say it was a general thing for the company to load trains in that way, but that the flat cars had brakes on them at one end, set back eighteen or twenty inches, and in loading iron the conductor would tell the men to push it back so as not to hit the brakes, and this would cause a projection over the other end. This witness also states that the iron could have been loaded so as to avoid the brakes and still not project over the end. The plaintiff says that his train was engaged in daily hauling cars loaded with lumber and iron, but he never saw any before projecting over the ends of the cars. At the time of the accident plaintiff had been in the service of the company two or three weeks, but he states that he was an experienced brakeman, and had been engaged in this business on other roads two or three years.

The freight train on which plaintiff was employed arrived in Palatka about dark, and the accident occurred between half-past six and seven o'clock at night, in attempting to couple on the car loaded with iron. The engine to which was attached a flat car loaded with lumber, was backed in on the side track to connect with the iron car, and the proof is that the engine went back very carefully. The conductor directed the plaintiff to couple the car, and he went between them for this purpose, and was mashed by the projecting iron. At the time he had a lantern which was giving good light, but he says he did not see that the iron projected until it was too late, and he was caught. The conductor says he saw the iron projecting, and halloosed to plaintiff to look out for himself, but did not call attention to the fact that the iron projected. His reason for calling to plaintiff to look out for himself, he says, was because he was naturally apt to be careless, and it was a bad coupling to make. The engineer, who was examined for defendant, says that he saw the iron projecting over the end of the car, and told plaintiff not to stand up to make the coupling. He knows plaintiff heard him, because he made reply that it was his business, or something like that. Plaintiff says he heard none of this, and did not see his danger until it was too late. He says he acted as carefully as he could, and went between the cars on the side that he thought would be open, as the curve was coming that way. He stood up straight to make the coupling, and he says he could not have coupled the car in any other way, and that was the only way to couple cars. The dead-woods between the cars were long enough for a man to stand between them and turn any way, and the bumpers were one and one fourth to one and one half feet long. One witness for plaintiff testified that plaintiff could not have seen the projection of the iron from where he was standing and attempting to couple the car, and that he could not have coupled in any other way unless he had been possessed of a stick or had been looking to see if the iron was projecting. He says further that coupling can be made by going underneath, and this way is safer, but a brakeman must have his time, and to brake this way he cannot perform his work properly. The conductor testified that he had had ten or twelve years' experience in railroad business, and his invariable rule as brakeman, when coupling at night, was to get down below, in order to avoid mashing, and that a brakeman always runs some risk of getting mashed unless he gets down when coupling without a stick at night. He says it was his custom to instruct brakemen how to couple, but does not remember giving any instructions to plaintiff. The engineer says his first work in railroad business was coupling cars, and the proper way to couple after dark was "under," and then the cars can go together and not hurt the coupler, because he is under, and out of the way. The other brakeman on the train with plaintiff testified that he was not present when the accident happened, but went to the scene soon thereafter. He says the proper way to couple after night is by getting underneath and reaching up, so that the head will be clear of the platform, and that witness coupled this car after the accident in this way without getting hurt. Other testimony in the record relates to the character and extent of the injuries received by plaintiff.

Among other charges for the plaintiff, the circuit judge instructed the jury as follows: "If you believe from the evidence that a car of railroad iron was loaded under the direction and supervision of a conductor of a construction train charged with that duty by the defendant railroad company, and that the same was loaded so that the bars of iron projected over the end of the car, and that with ordinary care in loading, such projection would have been obviated, and that in such condition it was, under the direction of such conductor, placed on a track of defendant's railway for the purpose of being transported by a freight train of defendant's railroad company, and that the plaintiff was a brakeman on said freight train, and that in obedience to the orders of the conductor of said train he proceeded in the nighttime with due care to couple said cars and was injured by said iron projecting over said car, without fault on his part, while attempting to couple said car, then your verdict should be for the plaintiff."

"When a brakeman enters the employ of a railroad company he only risks the dangers which ordinarily attend such employment, and not risks which are directly and only caused by an omission of duty on the part of his employer; and if you believe from the evidence that the plaintiff was injured without fault on his part, by railroad iron projecting over the car, while attempting to couple the car, in the line of his duty and in obedience to the order of his superior, in the night time, and without knowledge of the danger, if such danger was known to his superior, then it is not a risk ordinarily incident to his employment and which he assumes to take, but it is an omission of duty on the part of the defendant, and for which the defendant is liable to plaintiff in whatever damages may have been sustained by him from such injury." These instructions were duly excepted to by the defendant.

By referring to the declaration it will be seen that plaintiff bases his cause of action upon the alleged negligence and default of defendant in loading a car with railroad iron so that the rails projected over the end, and in receiving said car for coupling and transportation in an unsafe and unfit condition. If the declaration can be construed to allege any defect or imperfection in the car other than the way in which the iron was placed on it, it is clear from the evidence that no such defect was shown either in the car or any other machinery or implements with which plaintiff was employed to work. The improper arrangement of the iron on the car cannot be classed under the head of defective machinery, whatever may be defendant's liability by reason thereof on other grounds. The liability of defendant must rest upon the loading of the car so that the bars of iron projected over the end eighteen or twenty inches, or in accepting the car so loaded for coupling and transportation. The accident, it must be remembered, occurred not while the car was being loaded or placed on the side track, but in attempting to couple it on to a train to be carried forward on the road. ACCORDING TO THE FIRST CHARGE ABOVE REFERRED TO, the loading of the car under the supervision of a conductor in charge of defendant's construction train with iron, so that the bars projected over the end, which could have been avoided by ordinary care and placing the same on the side-track of defendant's road for transportation by the freight train, impose a liability upon defendant for an injury received by a brakeman on the freight train in attempting to couple said car at night by direction of his conductor. The charge necessarily excludes the right of the jury to consider such a coupling as coming within the ordinary hazards and risks of the employment which a brakeman assumes in his engagement with the company, because they are instructed to find for plaintiff if they believe from the evidence that a car was so loaded and placed on the side-track for transportation, and that plaintiff was injured in coupling the same while acting within the line of his duty without fault. It was the duty of plaintiff to couple cars on the road of defendant, and when the accident occurred he was acting within the line of his employment. By voluntarily engaging in the hazardous business of coupling cars he assumed the ordinary risk and dangers incident to such business. The authorities are clear on this point. Does the loading of the car in the manner shown by the testimony, and its acceptance for transportation, take the case out of this rule?

In Toledo, W. & W. R. Co. v. Black, 88 Ill. 112, a brakeman sued for injuries received from alleged defective and careless loading of railroad iron, so that it projected over the end of the car. The rails projected over the end eighteen inches, if not further, and plaintiff testified that if the rails had not projected he would have seen the difficulty of coupling, and would not have attempted it. It appears that he had been in the employment of the defendant company as a switchman at its yard six or seven months prior to the accident, and that cars had frequently come in there before loaded as the one in question was with old iron projecting over the end of the cars. The plaintiff stated that he discovered the improper loading just as the car to be coupled was coming towards him, about six feet off, and that he was standing with his lantern, at the end of the cabooc, to which it was to be coupled, and the car was coming slowly. It also appeared that the car was about twenty-eight feet long and the rails projected over both ends; that old rails are of different lengths and was a common article of freight shipped over the road frequently, and generally projected over the ends of the cars; that this resulted sometimes from irregular loading or jolting by transportation, and sometimes the rails were longer than the cars. The plaintiff stooped down to make the coupling and his hand was caught between the iron bars and crushed, and his leg was also injured. It was held that the plaintiff could not recover. The court said: "The accident with which he met was but an ordinary peril of the service which he had undertaken. The business of the employment was attended with danger, and upon entering into it plaintiff assumed the hazard of the ordinary perils which are incidental to it. We do not see why the casualty in question is not one which is to be held as having been in the contemplation of plaintiff as liable to happen, and which he took the risk of when he engaged to enter into the employment."

In Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Gower, 85 Tenn. 485, a brakeman on a railroad recovered a verdict for injuries received in coupling cars. In this case a car loaded with lumber had been taken into a train, and at a station two flat cars were taken out of the train and placed on a side-track, which necessitated the coupling of the lumber car with a box car. It was the duty of the plaintiff to make the coupling, which was done without special order. He stood at one end of the box car, signaled the engineer to back to the car, which was carefully done. When within a few feet of the box car the plaintiff observed that the plank projected over the end of the lumber car, and that it was necessary for him to stoop to avoid it in entering between the cars to make the coupling. He entered in this way and made the coupling, but on account of some difficulty in getting the coupling-pin into the draw-head he raised his head and was caught between the box car and the projecting lumber and badly injured. The trial court instructed the jury, in substance, that the reception of a car so loaded that the lumber projected eighteen inches over the end of it was negligence on the part of the company, and that it was an extraordinary hazard to which the company must not subject its employes. This was declared to be error. The opinion states that it may be extra hazardous in the sense that it is not a coupling ordinarily or frequently required; but it is one incident to the duties of the place, and not more hazardous, as a matter of law, than he stipulates to perform on the occasions, however rare and infrequent, where such couplings become necessary in the variety of shipments made to meet the demands and necessities of trade and transportation. Lumber of all kinds, iron, steel and finished structures must often necessarily be transported on cars of shorter length than the material transported. . . . To hold that such a service is not to be anticipated by a railroad employe as occasional, incidental, though extremely hazardous duty to be performed, would be to do so in manifest disregard of the demands of the age upon transportation lines and their common and well understood service in conformity to such requirements."

The facts in the case of Northern Cent. R. Co. v. Husson, 101 Pa. 1, 47 Am. Rep. 690, were, that Husson was in the employment of the railway company as a hand on one of its gravel trains engaged in hauling ballast, earth, railroad iron, bridge irons, bridge timbers and other material required in constructing a road-bed. It was Husson's duty to assist in coupling the cars, and he assisted one morning in making up a train consisting of four cars loaded with large pieces of bridge iron in such a manner that the ends extended beyond the ends of the cars. When the bumpers or dead-woods of the cars were together the distance between the projecting ends of the iron was about five inches. While Husson was coupling the cars his head was caught and crushed between the ends of the iron so that he died. His widow and child brought suit to recover damages for his death occasioned by the alleged negligence of defendant. The company had a regulation, which was known to Husson, that persons in coupling cars together should stoop below and make the coupling by reaching up. It was held that the risk run by decedent in coupling the cars was ordinarily incident to his employment, and also that he failed to take ordinary care in making the coupling. For a further discussion of the principle of law controlling cases like the one at bar, see Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Plunkett, 25 Kan. 188; Brown v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 31 Kan. 1; Day v. Toledo, O. S. & D. R. Co. 42 Mich. 523; Patterson, Railway Accident Law, § 316.

There are two cases in Iowa which hold a different doctrine: one is the case of Haugh v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 73 Iowa, 66, cited by counsel for appellee, and the other is reported in 36 Iowa, 81 [Hamilton v. Des Moines Valley R. Co.] It appears that they have a statute in this state imposing liability upon railroad corporations for all damages sustained by any persons, including employes, in consequence of any neglect of its agents, or mismanagement of any of its employes. How far these decisions have been influenced by the statute does not appear, as the decision in Haugh's Case makes no reference to any statute.

In the case at bar the plaintiff was twenty-eight years old, and an experienced brakeman. The train on which he was employed was engaged daily in hauling cars loaded with railroad iron and lumber for railroad construction. The conductor testified that it was very common for the iron and lumber to project over the ends of the cars. The plaintiff admits the train was daily hauling lumber and iron, but says he never saw any before the accident projecting over the ends of the cars. Under the charge of the court to the jury, they were precluded from finding that the injury resulted from the ordinary risks and hazards incident to plaintiff's employment, and in this respect it was erroneous, and prejudicial to the defendant.

The second instruction was also calculated to mislead the jury in considering the real question involved in the case. In so far as this charge can be construed as a direction to the jury that the coupling of a car loaded with iron projecting over the end is not such a danger and risk as ordinarily appertain to plaintiff's employment, it would not differ from the first charge considered. In our opinion, however, the second charge changes the basis of a verdict from that presented in the first, and puts it upon the action of a superior officer with knowledge of an extra hazardous coupling, directing the plaintiff, who was a brakeman without knowledge of the extra danger, to make the coupling in the night-time without informing him of this danger. This instruction directed the jury that if plaintiff was injured, without fault on his part, by railroad iron projecting over the end of the car which he was attempting to couple in the night, in obedience to the orders of a superior who knew the danger, and which was not known to plaintiff, then the risk in coupling the car was one not ordinarily incident to plaintiff's employment. The negligence of defendant, upon which plaintiff relied in his declaration, was in load ing a car with railroad iron projecting over the end, and in receiving such car for transportation. The jury was directed to find for plaintiff if they believed that a superior, with knowledge of danger in making a coupling, directed the plaintiff to perform this duty at night when he was ignorant of the danger. There are no allegations in the declaration to justify a finding on this particular phase of the charge. We do not hold that the company would be exempt from liability in a case where a conductor, with knowledge of a dangerous coupling, directed a brakeman to make it in the dark without informing him of the danger, when he did not know of it. What would be the rule in such a case we need not say, because the declaration before us does not allege it. We held in the case of Parish v. Pensacola & A. R. Co., 28 Fla.—, that there could be no recovery upon a cause of action, however meritorious it may be, or however satisfactorily proved, that is in substance variant from that which is pleaded by the plaintiff. And in Jacksonville, T. & K. W. R. Co. v. Neff, 28 Fla.—, we held that the instructions of the court to the jury must be confined to the issues made by the pleadings. In the case now under consideration we think the jury was clearly misled, to the prejudice of defendant, by the charges of the court as to the real question involved, and a new trial should be granted. It is well to note that the present case arose before the passage of chapter 8744, Laws of Florida, and no question is presented under this statute.

There are other exceptions in the record to charges given and refused by the court, but we do not consider them, for the reason that what is stated above covers the question presented by the declaration.

The judgment of the court below is reversed, and a new trial awarded.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT.

Calvin B. DEWEY, Appt.,

v.

DETROIT, GRAND HAVEN & MILWAUKEE R. CO.

(.....Mich.....)

1. An inspector of cars is not a fellow-servant of a brakeman so as to relieve the railroad company from liability for injury to the latter while coupling cars caused by the negligent loading of a car so that lumber projected over the end.
2. The fact that loaded cars were received by a railroad company from another road does not relieve the company from liability for injuries to a brakeman caused by the improper manner in which they were loaded.

(Montgomery and Grant, JJ., dissent.)

(July 28, 1892.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Wayne County to review a judgment in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have resulted from defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Dickinson, Thurber & Stevenson, for appellant:

If any doubt could remain, since Van Duzen v. Letellier, 78 Mich. 493, as to the doctrine now existing, it is swept away by the holding in Morton v. Detroit, B. C. & A. R. Co., 81 Mich. 423. In that case a brakeman on a logging train was thrown from a car and killed by reason of the breaking of the brake chain, which was of insufficient strength to be used with safety. Here it is dislucely stated that it is settled law in this state that a master is bound not only to use all reasonable care in providing safe tools and appliances for the use of workmen in his employ, but that this is a duty which cannot be delegated to another, so as to relieve the master from personal responsibility.

See also Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Herbert, 116 U. S. 650, 39 L. ed. 759; Ford v. Fitchburg R. Co. 110 Mass. 240; Town v. Michigan Cent. R. Co. 84 Mich. 214; Hough v. Texas & P. R. Co. 100 U. S. 213, 25 L. ed. 612; Fuller v. Jewett, 80 N. Y. 46, 36 Am. Rep. 575; Lewis v. Seifert, 9 Cent. Rep. 751, 116 Pa. 648; East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. De Armond, 86 Tenn. 74; King v. Ohio & M. R. Co. 14 Fed. Rep. 277; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Herbert, 116 U. S. 652, 39 L. ed. 760; Fay v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 80 Minn. 281; Gutridge v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. 18 West. Rep. 644, 94 Mo. 468; Gottlieb v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 1 Cent. Rep. 728, 100 N. Y. 466; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Kernan, 9 L. R. A. 708, 78 Tex. 294.

Mr. Otto Kirchner, with Mr. E. W. Meddaugh, for appellee:

The testimony clearly shows that plaintiff fully understood not only the risk attending his employment generally, but that he fully understood the risk involved in doing the particular work in which he was injured, consequently he cannot recover.

Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Smithson, 45 Mich. 212; Hathaway v. Michigan Cent. R. Co. 51 Mich. 253, 47 Am. Rep. 569; Brewer v. Flint & P. M. R. Co. 56 Mich. 620.

The reception of the car improperly laden with lumber, was the negligence of plaintiff's fellow-servant, to wit: the car inspector at Holly.

Smith v. Potter, 46 Mich. 258.

The doctrine of Smith v. Potter, supra, has recently (December 23, 1891) been approved by a brakeman the court nevertheless holds that the brakeman assumes the risk of negligence in making such inspection.

NOTE.—See the case next preceding this one in which after apparently agreeing that the inspection of cars is not the work of the fellow-servant of 16 L. R. A.

this court in Irvine v. Flint & P. M. R. Co. 89 Mich. 416.

McGrath, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Plaintiff, a brakeman in defendant's employ, was injured while attempting to recouple, after dropping two cars at the Lake Shore junction, near Detroit, at 2 o'clock in the morning of October 21, 1890. The last car on the moving section of the train was what is known as a "sand flat car," upon which the bumpers are much shorter than in the ordinary car. The car to be attached was one laden with lumber. The lumber projected several inches beyond the end of the floor of the car, leaving a space of but seven inches, when the cars were coupled, between the ends of the lumber and the end of the sand flat car. When plaintiff went between the cars they were two rods apart. With the aid of his lantern he noticed the character of the drawbar and bumpers upon the sand flat car, and held up his light, and saw that the other car was an ordinary flat, but did not notice that the lumber projected beyond the end of the car. When the cars came together, plaintiff's body was caught between the lumber and the end of the sand flat car, his arm was thrown between the bumpers and crushed. At the conclusion of plaintiff's case the court directed a verdict for defendant, upon the ground that the proximate cause of the injury was the improper loading of the lumber car, and that, as defendant had made provision for the inspection of cars, the negligence was that of the inspector, who was a fellow servant of the plaintiff.

The rule that the master must furnish the servant with a reasonably safe place in which to perform his work has been settled by repeated decisions of this court. Van Dusen v. Letellier, 78 Mich. 492; Morton v. Detroit, B. C. & A. R. Co. 81 Mich. 428; Roux v. Blodgett & D. Lumber Co. 85 Mich. 519; Irvine v. Flint & P. M. R. Co. 89 Mich. 416.

It is also well settled that this duty cannot be delegated to another, so as to relieve the master from personal responsibility. Van Dusen v. Letellier and Morton v. Detroit, B. C. & A. R. Co. supra.

These cases clearly overrule the doctrine of Smith v. Potter, 46 Mich. 258. It was there held that the duty of inspection was not one of management or supervision, and that inspectors and brakemen were in the strictest sense fellow servants. In the Van Dusen and Morton Cases, it was held that the duty of inspection was one that could not be delegated so as to relieve the master of liability. Justice Morse, in the Van Dusen Case, says: "If the master can delegate this duty to an employé, and apply the doctrine of fellow servant to such employé, because he is working in and about the same business, and in the same general line of such business,—as, in this case, the manufacture and piling of lumber,—then the employer is permitted to shirk his duty upon another, and then allowed to escape all responsibility and liability upon the plea that the person injured is the fellow servant of his delegate or agent. The law, as I understand it, will not permit this. It is a duty the master owes, which he cannot delegate to a fellow servant of his employes. If he picks out one of the men working about the mill, and imposes upon him the duty of seeing that the machinery is kept in safe repair, or delegates to one of the men working in the millyard the duty of seeing that these docks are kept safe and sound, these men, as far as these duties are concerned, stand in the place of their employer, and their negligence is his negligence." Champlin, J., concurring, says: "I do not think the duty of inspection, when such inspection is required by the circumstances of the case, can be delegated by the master in such manner as to avoid responsibility, and I concur in reversing the judgment." Campbell, J., who wrote in the Smith Case, says: "I agree in reversing the judgment, but I do not think it proper to throw doubt on our previous decisions which have dealt with the questions in this cause." The Morton Case, by a very full and able opinion by Cabill, J., reaffirms the doctrine of Van Dusen v. Letellier.

In Irvine v. Flint & P. M. R. Co. we held that it is as much the duty of the company to see that the cars are so loaded that brakemen will have reasonably safe access to the brakes, and an opportunity for the discharge of their duties, as it is to see that proper appliances are provided. In the discussion of that question, however, I am satisfied that the statement made in that opinion, that if the cars were inspected, or if the company provided the means for their inspection, by a fellow servant, and the inspector neglected his duty, then there would be no recovery, is not supported by the later decisions of our own court, nor by the weight of authority elsewhere. Shearn & Redf. Neg. 4th ed. §§ 194-204; Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. v. Fox, 81 Kan. 586; Ford v. Fitchburg R. Co. 110 Mass. 241; Hough v. Texas & Pac. R. Co. 100 U. S. 218, 25 L. ed. 612; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Herbert, 116 U. S. 652, 29 L. ed. 760; King v. Ohio & M. R. Co. 14 Fed. Rep. 277; Lewis v. Seifert, 116 Pa. 648, 9 Cent. Rep. 751; East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. De Armond, 86 Tenn. 74; Fay v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 80 Minn. 231; Gutridge v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. 94 Mo. 468, 18 West. Rep. 644; Fuller v. Jewett, 80 N. Y. 46, 36 Am. Rep. 575; Gottlieb v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 100 N. Y. 466; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Kernan, 78 Tex. 294, 9 L. R. A. 703; Hulehan v. Green Bay, W. & St. P. R. Co. 68 Wis. 520; 7 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 825, and note. The doctrine of these cases is that, when it is the duty of the master to furnish sound apparatus, machinery, etc., and defective machinery causes an injury to the servant, the rule which exempts the master from liability for injury to servants through the negligence of a fellow servant does not apply.

In Hulehan v. Green Bay, W. & St. P. R. Co., supra, it was held that where a railway company permitted its track to be incumbered with sticks and blocks of wood at places where plaintiff was called upon to perform his duties in coupling cars, by reason of which he was injured, the negligence of permitting the roadway to be obstructed was that of the company. At best, the duties of brakemen are dangerous, and it is the plain duty of their employers to provide against increased peril. There is no reason why one rule should apply to the case of a defective brake chain, and that another should govern a case where a car has been so improperly loaded as to prevent the use of the brake without great hazard.

In the recent case of Mexican Cent. R. Co. v. Shean (Tex.) 18 S. W. Rep. 151, the cars were improperly loaded, but the decision was put upon the ground that the plaintiff knew that the car was loaded in such a manner as to render the attempt to couple it extremely hazardous. In the present case plaintiff had no such knowledge. It is insisted, however, that this lumber car was one received from another company; but the obligation to receive cars from other roads does not require the reception of defective cars, or cars so loaded as to render their transportation hazardous to employes. The duty is not one to be discharged without reward. The service rendered is not gratuitous. As was said by Campbell, J., in Smith v. Potter: "This [duty imposed by statute] does not require the transfer of cars unfit for passage. . . . There is no difference in the nature of the danger, or in the quality of the inspector's employment, between the case of shifting cars belonging to other roads and cars belonging to the same road. Defects in both lead to the same results, and the methods of examining both are identical." In Fay v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co., Outridge v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., Gottlieb v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. and International & G. N. R. Co. v. Kernan, supra, the cars were freight cars, but the cases hold, and I think correctly, that the fact was immaterial. It follows that the judgment must be reversed, and a new trial had, with costs of this court to plaintiff.

Morse, Ch. J., and Long, J., concurred.

Montgomery, J., dissenting:

I cannot yield my assent to the views expressed by Mr. Justice McGrath in this case. The evidence showed that whatever of fault there was in permitting the car to be loaded in the manner in which it was, was the fault of an inspector provided by the company, and no fault was attributed to the company in employing him. This court has held, not once, but repeatedly, that an inspector of cars, under such circumstances, is a fellow servant of the trainmen, and that no recovery can be had on account of his negligence. Smith v. Potter, 46 Mich. 258; Irvine v. Flint & P. M. R. Co. 89 Mich. 416. And the doctrine of nonliability for the fault of a co-employe has been also applied in other cases where the relations were analogous, and where the authority of the offending servant was quite as broad as is that of one whose duty it is to see that cars are properly loaded. Hoar v. Merritt, 62 Mich. 396; Gardner v. Michigan Cent. R. Co. 58 Mich. 584; Greenwald v. Marquette, H. & O. R. Co. 49 Mich. 197; Quincy Min. Co. v. Kitts, 42 Mich. 84; Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Dolan, 32 Mich. 510. The case of Smith v. Potter was cited and its doctrine approved in 16 L. R. A.

Peterson v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 67 Mich. 102, and was also cited with approval in Randall v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 109 U. S. 481, 27 L. ed. 1004. But it is suggested that the case of Smith v. Potter has been overruled by Van Dusen v. Letellier, 78 Mich. 492; Morton v. Detroit, B. C. & A. R. Co. 81 Mich. 423; Rous v. Blodgett & D. Lumber Co. 85 Mich. 519. It is clear, as I think, that it was not the purpose of Justice Morse, who wrote the opinion in Van Dusen v. Letellier, to overrule the case of Smith v. Potter. In Peterson v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. Justice Morse recognizes the binding authority of Smith v. Potter and other kindred cases in the following language: "If the question were an open one in this state I should not be inclined to hold that either of these persons was a fellow employe of the plaintiff; but the law in this respect is well settled in this state, and the circuit judge followed the decisions of this court, citing them in his charge to the jury." In Van Dusen v. Letellier, the case of Smith v. Potter is distinguished, as is also the case of Hoar v. Merritt. All that is held by Van Dusen v. Letellier is that the employer owes a duty of providing a safe place for his employes to work, and that this duty cannot be delegated to a fellow servant. The case fully recognizes the distinction between the duty of furnishing a safe place and safe machinery to the employe and the duty of seeing that the machinery, appliances or place are properly used or employed. The same may be said of Morton v. Detroit, B. C. & A. R. Co., 81 Mich. 423. This distinction is again recognized in Rawley v. Colliau (Mich.) 51 N. W. Rep. 850, and Kehoe v. Allen, 52 N. W. Rep. 740, (decided at the present term.) In Morton v. Detroit, B. C. & A. R. Co., as the case was put to the jury, the sole question was whether the appliance in question was reasonably safe when originally provided by the defendant, and the circuit judge instructed the jury that the defendant's liability ceased when it provided a chain that was in the first instance reasonably safe. In Irvine v. Flint & P. M. R. Co. in an opinion by Mr. Justice McGrath, the court held distinctly that, if the company provided means for the inspection of the cars by a fellow servant, and the inspector neglected his duty, there could be no recovery. In the present case the injury resulted, not from any fault in the appliances used, but because, in making use of cars and machinery suitable to the purpose, a fellow servant of the plaintiff, engaged in the same general employment, within the rule in Smith v. Potter, neglected his duty. The case of Smith v. Potter has not, as I view it, been overruled by the case referred to, and certainly the court has not taken the pains to point out to the profession the fact that it has been overruled; on the contrary, its doctrine has been frequently recognized, and has become the settled law of the state. The circuit judge applied the doctrine to the case at bar, and the judgment should be affirmed.

Grant, J., concurred with Montgomery, J.

John HEFFRON, Appt.,
v.
DETROIT CITY R. CO.

(.....Mich.....)

A restriction that a street railway transfer ticket given without extra charge must be used within fifteen minutes after it is punched on the first line, is not unreasonable or invalid in the absence of any contract to carry a passenger on both lines for a single fare without exception or conditions or any provision to that effect in the charter or ordinance or of any holding out to the public to this effect, although this might be subject to exception if no car came along within the time limited.

(July 1, 1892.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Wayne County to review a judgment in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover damages for alleged wrongful expulsion of plaintiff from defendant's car. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. E. S. Grece, for appellant:

The plaintiff had paid his fare and was entitled to ride to the Michigan Central Railway depot. The company, instead of taking him there on the first car which it placed at his disposal, by its agent, assaulted him and put him off its car, after he presented to its said agent the certificate received from another agent of the same company, showing he had paid the regular fare for a ride to his destination. This gave him a good cause of action.

Hufford v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. 7 West. Rep. 867, 64 Mich. 681; Wilsey v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 88 Ky. 511; Am. Dig. 1890, 487; Elliot v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 58 Hun, 78; Carsten v. Northern Pac. R. Co. 9 L. R. A. 688, 44 Minn. 454; Pennsylvania Co. v. Bray, 125 Ind. 229; Eddy v. Harris, 78 Tex. 681; Eddy v. Rider, 79 Tex. 53; Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. v. Murden, 86 Ga. 484; Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. v. Dougherty, Id. 744.

Liability for wrongful expulsion.

Johnson v. Northern Pac. R. Co. 46 Fed. Rep. 347; Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. v. Eskeu, 86 Ga. 641; Head v. Georgia Pac. R. Co. 79 Ga. 858; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Brambery (Pa.) Nov. 5, 1888; Chicago, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Holdridge, 118 Ind. 281; Hall v. South Carolina R. Co. 25 S. C. 564.

As to rules of companies.

Butler v. Manchester, S. & L. R. Co. L. R. 21 Q. B. 207, 28 Am. L. Reg. 81; Ward v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 56 Hun, 268. The plaintiff was rightfully on the car and had a right to pursue his journey to the depot.

The assault upon him was unlawful and the action is properly brought.

English v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. 66 N. Y. 454, 28 Am. Rep. 69; Turbell v. Northern Cent. R. Co. 24 Hun, 51; Jeffersonville R. Co. v. Rogers, 88 Ind. 116, 10 Am. Rep. 103, Mur- dock v. Boston & A. R. Co. 187 Mass. 298, 50 Am. Rep. 807; Head v. Georgia Pac. R. Co. 79 Ga. 858; Alabama, G. S. R. Co. v. Heddleston, 82 Ala. 218; Kansas Pac. R. Co. v. Kessler, 18 Kan. 523; Burnham v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 63 Me. 298, 18 Am. Rep. 220; Hamilton v. Third Ave. R. Co. 53 N. Y. 25; Pittsburg, O. & St. L. R. Co. v. Hennigh, 89 Ind. 506; Palmer v. Charlotte, C. & A. R. Co. 3 S. C. 589; City & S. R. Co. v. Brauss, 70 Ga. 869.

The rules of the company should be reasonable, if passengers are to be bound by them; and patrons ought not to be held responsible for the company's breach of its own regulations.

Townsend v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 6 Thomp. & C. 495, 4 Hun, 217.

Often cars are not on time as in this case, or, if they are, are too crowded to admit the passenger, and yet has the passenger no remedy for being expelled from a car but a suit for five cents damages?

Wheeler, Carriers, 180; Lynch v. Metropolitan Elev. R. Co. 90 N. Y. 77.

The mere acceptance of a ticket does not bind a passenger by its terms.

Prentice v. Decker, 49 Barb. 21; Limburger v. Westcott, 49 Barb. 288; Great Western R. Co. of Canada v. Miller, 19 Mich. 306.

Besides the actual damages sustained plaintiff is entitled to damages for the indignity done him, the annoyance, and to injured feelings, etc.

Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Walsh, 47 N. J. L. 548; Carsten v. Northern Pac. R. Co. 9 L. R. A. 688, 44 Minn. 454.

Messrs. Sidney T. Miller and John C. Donnelly for appellee.

Morse, Oh. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff sues in trespass on the case, claiming damages on account of his ejection by a conductor from one of defendant's cars. The declaration, in substance, alleges that, on payment by any passenger of the regular fare, five cents, at any point where the cars are boarded on Woodward avenue, in Detroit, such passenger is entitled to ride on defendant's car from such point to the Michigan Central depot; and that, on payment of said five cents to the Woodward avenue conductor, such passenger becomes entitled to a ticket, to show he has paid his fare on the Woodward avenue line car, and which ticket entitles such passenger to ride on one of defendant's cars on Jefferson avenue, from said Woodward avenue, along said Jefferson avenue, to said depot. The plaintiff, on October 8, 1890, boarded one of defendant's cars on Woodward avenue, and paid the conductor five cents, and received from said conductor a ticket, to show that he had paid his fare on the Woodward avenue car, and which, presented to the conductor on the Jefferson avenue car, would entitle him to ride to said depot. And the plaintiff accordingly rode on street railway lines which furnish transfer tickets makes decisions on the subject highly important. Following the above case is another case on this same subject. See Pine v. St. Paul City R. Co. (Minn.) post, 347.

NOTE.—The rights of street railway passengers on transfer tickets do not seem to have been hitherto brought into litigation, at least so far as to establish precedents which have been reported. The constantly swelling current of passenger traffic on 16 L. R. A.

defendant's car, on Woodward avenue, to the intersection of the Jefferson avenue line, and a few moments thereafter boarded one of defendant's cars on said Jefferson avenue, to complete his journey, and then and there seated himself in said car to be conveyed to said depot, as aforesaid; yet, plaintiff avers, notwithstanding he had paid the defendant its legal fare, as aforesaid, on said Woodward avenue, and had received said ticket, and voucher therefor, showing plaintiff had so paid his fare, and was entitled to ride to said depot, as aforesaid, on defendant's car which he had taken, and although he duly presented the said ticket to the conductor of said Jefferson avenue car, showing his right to ride thereon to said depot, when demanded by said conductor, defendant's agent operating said car, which ticket said conductor then and there refused to accept or receive as satisfaction of plaintiff's fare, and as showing his right to ride on said road in said car, and demanded of plaintiff that he pay another five cents, or get off said car, both of which plaintiff then and there refused to do, but insisted that he had paid his fare, and produced his said ticket, and offered the same to the said conductor of defendant's car, as showing that he had so paid his fare, and was entitled to ride on said car to said depot; but the said agent of defendant refused to take said ticket, or acknowledge the same in any way, but, on the other hand, there and then made an assault upon plaintiff, in the presence of several fellow passengers, and with great force and violence pushed and pulled plaintiff about, violently pushed and forced plaintiff from the car into the public street and highway, and then and there, in the presence of said divers passengers and persons on the street, accused plaintiff of fraudulently attempting to ride on defendant's car without paying his fare, and unlawfully attempting to obtain a passage on the said car without paying his fare, and of trying to defraud the defendant in so doing.

The proofs show that plaintiff paid his fare as alleged upon the Woodward avenue car, and asked the conductor for a "change-off" ticket to the Michigan Central depot. This ticket showed upon its face that it was "void unless used October 8, 1890, as indicated hereon." This indication, marked by the pointing of the index finger of a hand, read as follows:

"This slip will not be honored unless presented at the intersection of the Woodward avenue line and line punched in margin, within fifteen minutes of time punched, for a continuous trip only.

"S. Hendrie, Treas."

The plaintiff testifies that he got off of the Woodward avenue car at the corner of Woodward and Jefferson avenues, and waited fourteen minutes, and, no car coming along or being in sight going towards the depot on Jefferson avenue, he then went to the postoffice, going there on Jefferson avenue and Griswold street; mailed some letters, and came back, where he again waited for eleven minutes before he got a car. On presenting his ticket the conductor told him it was not good. Plaintiff asked what was the matter of it, and the conductor replied, "Read your ticket." Plaintiff said, "I am not obliged to read it." Conductor replied, "They are good only fifteen minutes after they are punched." Plaintiff then said, "I have been waiting a good deal longer than that for your car." The conductor then told him that he must pay the fare, or get off the car. Plaintiff refused to pay the fare, and said that he should not get off the car, unless he was put off. The conductor then put him off. The plaintiff did not resist, and was not injured physically. He had the money to pay the fare, but did not think he ought to pay it. He had used these tickets before, but never had read them, and did not read this one before he was ejected from the car. It will be seen that the proofs did not correspond with the allegations of the declaration, as plaintiff was not given a ticket which entitled him to ride on this car, except within a certain time; and from the declaration it would be inferred that there were no conditions attached to the ticket.

But, under the proofs, if the declaration had made proper averments to correspond therewith, we do not think the plaintiff was entitled to recover. The following section of the ordinance of the city of Detroit was put in evidence: "Sec. 80. The tracks upon Jefferson avenue, Woodward avenue, and Gratiot street shall each be considered and run as one route, and subject its passengers to the payment of a single fare each: provided, however, that all cars running north of Jefferson avenue shall run to and from Jefferson avenue, and the routes intersecting Woodward avenue shall be considered as making a portion of each of said routes respectively." The defendant company was under no obligation, by contract or ordinance, to take the plaintiff upon the Jefferson avenue line, from off the Woodward avenue line, to the Michigan Central depot, for the single fare of five cents, except upon the conditions printed on the face of the ticket; nor is there anything unreasonable in the requirement that the ticket must be used within fifteen minutes. The company had the right, under the ordinances of the city, to treat the Jefferson avenue line as a single road, and to charge five cents fare; but it saw fit to make a continuous fare of five cents from any point on the Woodward avenue line to the Michigan Central depot, if the transfer was made in fifteen minutes from one line to the other. In this case half an hour, at least, had elapsed. If no car had passed within that time, and the car from which plaintiff was ejected was the first one to pass after plaintiff had alighted from the Woodward avenue car, the plaintiff may, under a proper declaration, have an action against defendant, but no such state of facts was averred in the declaration in this case. It was the duty of the plaintiff to read the ticket. His failure to read it cannot give him any rights against the defendant which he would not have had had he read it. And it was also the duty of the conductor not to receive this ticket, and to require the payment of five cents fare, and neither he nor the company could be made liable for putting plaintiff off the car in the manner he was ejected, without physical hurt or damage. The case is ruled by Frederick v. Marquette, H. & O. R. Co. 87 Mich. 342, 26 Am. Rep. 531. This case is much stronger than that, because here there is no question but the conductor gave plaintiff the right ticket,—the same ticket given to all others, and which was good, if used according to its terms and conditions. The case of Hufford v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 61 Mich. 631, 7 West. Rep. 867, is distinguishable in this: There the ticket was one purporting, on its face, to cover the distance to be traveled by Hufford. He paid the usual fare between the two places, and the ticket contained no printed exceptions or conditions restricting Hufford from using it at the time he presented it to the conductor. Its infirmity, if any, was not open to Hufford's plain observation, so that he was informed on its face that it was not good. There were punch marks upon it, but he did not know the significance of them. He asked the station agent about it, who told him the ticket was good. It was sold to him by the company's agent for a good ticket, and it was therefore held to be a good ticket. But there were no such representations to plaintiff in this case. He asked for a "change off" ticket; he received one, which plainly informed him, upon its face, that it must be used within a certain time or it would be void. As long as the defendant had made no contract with the plaintiff to carry him, without exception or conditions, on both lines to the depot for a single fare of five cents, while it had not held out to the public that it would do so, and when it was not obligated so to do by its own charter or the ordinances of the city of Detroit, there was no legal reason why it could not make the regulation that it would carry passengers to the depot on both lines, for a single fare of five cents, provided the transfer ticket was used within fifteen minutes after it was punched on the Woodward avenue line; and, there being no legal reason why this restriction should not be made, the passenger who accepts the ticket must abide by its terms.

The judgment is affirmed, with costs.

The other Justices concurred.

MINNESOTA SUPREME COURT.

Oran S. PINE, Resp't.,
v.
ST. PAUL CITY R. CO., Appt.

(.....Minn.....)

*1 By the ordinance of the city of St. Paul, granting certain franchises to the defendant, a passenger who has paid one fare on any line operated by the company in the city is entitled to a transfer check or ticket entitling him to a continuous passage over any connecting or crossing line. Where such passenger applies for and accepts a transfer ticket for one of several continuous or crossing lines, plainly marked and designated, he will be limited to the line so selected, but where the route designated is not so limited; but is equally applicable to several lines, he will be entitled to be transported over either.

*2. Where a passenger is ejected by a conductor acting in good faith in pursuance of the rules of the company, and upon due notice to him, and with the exercise of no more force than is reasonably necessary, the damages to be allowed, if a recovery is had, are compensatory only.

(June 10, 1892.)

APPEAL by defendant from an order of the District Court for Ramsey County overruling its motion for a new trial after verdict in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged wrongful expulsion of plaintiff from defendant's street-cars. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. McCafferty & Noyes, for appellant:

*Head notes by VANDERBURGH, J.

NOTE.—Please see the case of Heffron v. Detroit City R. Co. (Mich.) ante, 845, reported next before the above case and involving the same subject of street railway transfer tickets.

16 L. R. A.

It was plaintiff's duty to submit for the time being to the reasonable rules of the company, and after he had discovered the mistake in the issuance of the ticket, to quietly and peaceably leave the car or pay his fare and seek redress in a proper action for the mistake of the conductor who gave him a wrong ticket.

Townsend v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 56 N. Y. 295, 15 Am. Rep. 419; Yorton v. Milwaukee, L. S. & W. R. Co. 54 Wis. 234, 41 Am. Rep. 23; Bradshaw v. South Boston R. Co. 135 Mass. 407, 46 Am. Rep. 481; Weaver v. Rome, W. & O. R. Co. 8 Thomp. & C. 270; Mackay v. Ohio River R. Co. 9 L. R. A. 182, 84 Va. 65; Petrie v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 42 N. J. L. 449; Edwards v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 81 Mich. 864; Frederick v. Marquette, H. & O. R. Co. 87 Mich. 342, 26 Am. Rep. 531; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Griffin, 68 Ill. 499; Shelton v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 29 Ohio St. 214; Yorton v. Milwaukee, L. S. & W. R. Co. 54 Wis. 234, 41 Am. Rep. 23; McClure v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. 34 Md. 532, 6 Am. Rep. 845; Walker v. Dry Dock E. B. & B. R. Co. 38 How. Pr. 827; Dietrich v. Pennsylvania Street R. Co. 71 Pa. 432, 10 Am. Rep. 711; Downs v. New York & N. H. R. Co. 36 Conn. 287, 4 Am. Rep. 77.

In the absence of malice in ejecting a passenger from the cars, damages must be compensatory only.

Du Laurans v. First Div. of St. Paul & P. R. Co. 15 Minn. 49 and cases cited.

The fact that the conductor, under the construction placed by the court upon the ordinance, acted illegally, is not a circumstance even, showing or tending to show that he acted with malice.

Hoffman v. Northern Pac. R. Co. 45 Minn. 58.

The jury gave a verdict of $400, which is excessive to extortion even allowing the element of vindictive damages to remain a factor.

Finch v. Northern Pac. R. Co. 47 Minn. 36.

Mr. M. L. Countryman, for respondent: Murdock v. Boston & A. R. Co., 187 Mass. 293, 50 Am. Rep. 307, shows what the law is where a passenger is ejected because an apparently valid ticket given him by an agent of the company is, under the "rules and regulations," in fact invalid.

In Finch v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 47 Minn. 86, this court allowed $250 for a technical ejection, where no personal injury or indignity was suffered.

Finch v. Northern Pac. R. Co. supra, and Serve v. Northern Pac. R. Co. (Minn.) Jan. 18, 1892, establish the liability of the company in tort for the conductor's act in ejecting a passenger, notwithstanding the conductor obeyed "rules and regulations" and had no evidence of the passenger's right of exception to the rule.

See also City & S. R. Co. of Savannah v. Brauss, 70 Ga. 368; Hubbard v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. (Mich.) 18 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 336.

In Higgins v. Louisville, N. O. & T. R. Co., 64 Miss. 80, it was held that a verdict of $500 for carrying a passenger nearly three fourths of a mile past his station, on a dark and rainy night, thus compelling him to walk back, was not an excessive compensation.

In St. Louis, A. & T. R. Co. v. Berry (Tex. App.) Nov. 12, 1890, a verdict of $500 for mental suffering caused by delay in reaching destination was held not excessive.

In Chicago, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Holdridge, 118 Ind. 281, a verdict of $200 was sustained in favor of a passenger who, without any force being used, was required to pay twenty-five cents extra in order to avoid being ejected.

In Hardenbergh v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co., 41 Minn. 200, $400 was allowed for a technical ejection, without actual force or injury.

In Serve v. Northern Pac. R. Co., supra, $550 was allowed in a case of ejection where no personal violence was resorted to.

Vanderburgh, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Action for damages for an alleged wrongful expulsion from one of defendant's street-cars. At the time of the injury complained of defendant was operating several lines of street-cars in the city of St. Paul, and among them was the Grand Avenue line, which intersects Wabasha street on West Seventh street. The St. Anthony Park, Fair Grounds and Hamline line extends over Wabasha and University avenues to Lexington avenue, and thence to Hamline; the Interurban line extends over Wabasha and University avenues to and beyond Lexington avenue; and the University avenue, Wabasha and West St. Paul line from West St. Paul over Wabasha and University avenues to Kent street, its western terminus, which is a considerable distance east of Lexington avenue. These lines all connect with the Grand Avenue line on Wabasha street. By the ordinance forming its contract with the city, and from which it derives its authority to run its cars and exercise its franchise in the city, the defendant is required "to issue a transfer check or ticket to any person who has paid one fare on any line operated by it in the city of St. Paul, which ticket entitles the passenger to a continuous passage over any connecting or crossing line operated by the company. No passenger shall be entitled to more than one transfer for one fare, and such transfer check shall be used only by the person receiving the same for a continuous passage, and shall be used upon the next car departing upon the connecting line upon which it is to be used." Under this ordinance, a passenger on the Grand Avenue line, going east, would be entitled to a transfer over any one of three other routes mentioned which he might select, and of course but one. If, for instance, such passenger should desire to go to Lexington avenue, he could take either the first or second lines mentioned running on Wabasha street and University avenue; but if he took passage on the third line the car would take him, in the same direction, no further than Kent street. On the day in question the plaintiff was a passenger on the Grand Avenue line, going east, and, having paid one fare, was entitled to, and applied for, a transfer ticket. He notified the conductor that he wanted to go to Lexington avenue, and asked for a transfer to that avenue. The conductor thereupon gave him a transfer check which on its face purported to be a transfer "from Grand Avenue line to line punched." And under the words "going east" thereon was printed in separate lines "N. on Interurban," "N. on Rondo," "N. on Rice," "University and Wab." (the latter word being an abbreviation for "Wabasha"), "N. on Lexington." The line actually punched was "University and Wab." There were no other words on the check to indicate the Hamline line, or the line to Lexington avenue, or that "the line punched" was the West St. Paul line. The plaintiff wanted a transfer good to Lexington avenue. The defendant might, therefore, have given him one over either the Interurban or Hamline line, and, by accepting a transfer ticket limited to either in accordance with the rules of the company, if properly expressed on the ticket, he could not complain that he was obliged to take the particular line indicated by the transfer ticket. In response to his request he was given a ticket which apparently entitled him to be carried over the University and Wabasha route as far as the car on that route which he might take should go. There was nothing on the face of it to show that the route or line punched was not the one that he desired. By its terms it presumptively gave him a legal right under the ordinance to ride on the cars of the Hamline line which ran over Wabasha street and the University avenue. The transfer check is furnished by the company, and the terms used must be most strongly construed against it; and when he asked for a ticket to "University and Lexington," and was given a transfer over "University and Wab.,"—that being a route leading directly to Lexington avenue,—it was rightly construed, as against the company by the trial court, as entitling the plaintiff to take a car over that route, and he was rightly on board the car from which he was ejected. This was the construction placed upon the transfer by the plaintiff, by the conductor who issued it, and by the conductor upon the Interurban car, who directed him to take the Hamline car. At the instance of the conductor of one of the cars on the Interurban line, the plaintiff entered a car of the Hamline line. The conductor on the latter car refused to accept the transfer in question, in conformity with the rules of the company, which forbade him to accept a transfer check given for another line. As a matter of fact the first conductor made a mistake in the form of the transfer, the line punched being the West St. Paul line, as before stated. Under the regulations of the company, however, it became the duty of the conductor to reject the transfer and collect of the plaintiff the regular fare, because his transfer check was not good over the Hamline line. The plaintiff, having refused to pay his fare or leave the car, was removed by the aid of a policeman.

In order to the successful and orderly management of its business, it is proper for the company to adopt and enforce suitable regulations for the transfer of passengers, as enjoined by the ordinances. Whether a passenger has not a right to insist upon a transfer general in its terms and good for any connecting line he may elect, or whether the city council might require the transfer to be in that form, it is not necessary to decide in this case. If the passenger accepts a transfer plainly marked for a particular line, he is not entitled to take a car of another and different line. By accepting such a transfer he so far consents to the regulations of the company in respect to the route and line of cars designated, and the conductors on the several lines would be obliged, in obedience to the rules of the company, to distinguish between the transfers and require them to be used on the particular lines designated. But in this case, as we have seen, the transfer was not sufficiently explicit to limit its application to the West St. Paul line, as the company intended, and under the ordinance it was good for the line of cars which plaintiff took, running over University and Wabasha streets; that is to say, he was entitled to a transfer for the line he took and asked for, and the transfer accepted was sufficiently general to entitle him to use it thereon. His expulsion from the car was therefore wrongful. But the evidence does not present a case for the allowance of punitive damages, and upon this point the instructions of the court were erroneous. The conductor acted in obedience to the rules of the company. He so informed the plaintiff, and no more force was used than was absolutely necessary. Compensatory damages only were recoverable. The instructions were presumptively prejudicial on this point, and from the amount of the verdict it is apparent, we think, that it could not have been limited to compensatory damages merely. There must therefore be a new trial.

Order reversed.

NEBRASKA SUPREME COURT.

Clark D. GILLESPIE, Admr., etc., of Clark D. GILLESPIE, Deceased, Plff. in Err.,
v.

City of LINCOLN.

(.....Neb.....)

*1. A city is not liable at common law for the negligent acts of the members of its fire department.

*2. Plaintiff's intestate was struck and killed by a ladder wagon or truck belonging to the fire department of the defendant city, through the negligence of the driver thereof, a member of said department, while driving along one of the streets of the city for the purpose of exercising a team of horses belonging to the department. Held, that the city is not liable.

(June 11, 1892.)

ERROR to the District Court for Lancaster County to review a judgment in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries resulting in death and alleged to have been caused by the negligence of defendant's servant. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Charles O. Whedon, for plaintiff in error:

Liability of a city for the acts of its employees

*Head notes by Post, J.

NOTE.—For note on liability of municipal corporation for negligent acts of firemen, see Dodge v. Granger (R. L.) 15 L. R. A. 781.
16 L. R. A.

"is based upon the right which [the employer has to select his servants, to discharge them if not competent, or skillful, or well-behaved, and to direct and control them while in his employ."

Kelly v. New York, 11 N. Y. 482.

The non-liability of cities for the negligent acts of fire departments is based in some states upon the language of the statute which in those states makes the maintenance of a fire department obligatory upon the city. If, however, the statute simply confers a power that the city is at liberty to exercise or not, at will; that is in no sense compulsory, but its exercise is purely voluntary, and if the city chooses to organize and control the department, it is unlike in its effects and consequences the exercise of a power imposed upon the city by legislative requirement—one is voluntary and the other would be compulsory, and this should make a difference in the two cases.

The language of our statute is permissive only, and what the city of Lincoln does regarding its fire department it does voluntarily.

This being true, the doctrine of respondet superior applies, and the city would be liable.

The manner in which the driver followed the instructions given him is what constitutes the wrong. The public have the right to use the streets. The city is obliged to keep them in such shape and condition as will allow their use by the public.

Lincoln v. Walker, 18 Neb. 251; Lincoln v. Gillilan, Id. 119; Lincoln v. Holmes, 20 Neb. 39; Lincoln v. Woodward, 19 Neb. 259; Platts-mouth v. Mitchell, 20 Neb. 280.

Of what use is this requirement if the city can keep its fire apparatus charging along the streets at a high rate of speed when no alarm of fire has been given? When a fire breaks out and an alarm is given, the knowledge almost instantly becomes general. Everybody is on the lookout to prevent injury. Fast driving then is not especially dangerous. But in exercising the teams the case is different, and for the city to order or allow its employes to run a dangerous truck at a high rate of speed when no emergency existed, is gross negligence for which the city should be held liable.

Hutton v. New York, 9 N. Y. 163, 59 Am. Dec. 526; Todd v. Troy, 61 N. Y. 506; Clemence v. Auburn, 66 N. Y. 384; Evans v. Utica, 69 N. Y. 166, 25 Am. Rep. 165; Niven v. Rochester, 76 N. Y. 619; Weed v. Ballston Spa, Id. 329; Saulsbury v. Ithaca, 94 N. Y. 27, 46 Am. Rep. 122; Dewire v. Bailey, 131 Mass. 169, 41 Am. Rep. 219.

When a municipal corporation is charged by its charter with the duty of keeping its streets in suitable condition for public travel, the agents of the corporation charged with that duty are bound to exercise an active vigilance in the performance thereof.

Todd v. Troy, supra; Atlanta v. Perdue, 53 Ga. 607; Rosenberg v. Des Moines, 41 Iowa, 415; Chicago v. Hoy, 75 Ill. 530; Pomfrey v. Saratoga Springs, 7 Cent. Rep. 44, 104 N. Y. 459.

The degree of care and foresight which it is necessary to use must always be in proportion to the nature and magnitude of the injury that will be likely to result from the occurrence that is to be anticipated and guarded against.

New York v. Bailey, 2 Denio, 433; Smid v. New York, 17 Jones & S. 126.

A person standing in the relation of master to one he has selected as his servant from a knowledge or belief in his skill, and who can remove him for misconduct, and whose orders the employe is bound to receive and obey, is liable for his acts of negligence in the business intrusted to him, whether such servant has been appointed directly, or through the intervention of an agent.

Quarman v. Burmett, 6 Mees. & W. 509; Mulligan v. Wedge, 12 Ad. & El. 737; Rapson v. Cubitt, 9 Mees. & W. 710; Sprout v. Hemyngway, 14 Pick. 1, 25 Am. Dec. 350.

One of the duties of a municipal corporation arising out of the voluntary adoption of its charter, is to use reasonable care in the conduct of any work which it undertakes and the accomplishment of which is within its corporate power.

Chicago v. O'Brennan, 65 Ill. 160; Chicago v. Turner, 80 Ill. 419; Freeport v. Isbell, 83 Ill. 440, 25 Am. Rep. 407.

When the city has the appointment and supervision of the employes, and the duty to be performed is for the benefit of the corporation, the city is liable for the wrongful or negligent act.

New York v. Bailey, supra; Tormey v. New York, 12 Hun, 542; Walsh v. New York, 41 Hun, 299.

And where the duty is imposed on the corporation, and the officers or departments are simply made by charter agents of the corporation.

Martin v. Brooklyn, 1 Hin, 545; Polley v. Buffalo, 20 N. Y. Week. Dig. 163; Niven v. 16 L. R. A.

Rochester, 76 N. Y. 619; Barnes v. District of Columbia, 91 U. S. 540, 23 L. ed. 440; Ehrgott v. New York, 96 N. Y. 264, 48 Am. Rep. 622; Deyoe v. Saratoga Springs, 3 Thomp. & C. 504; Groves v. Rochester, 89 Hun, 5; Pettengill v. Yonkers, 25 N. Y. Week. Dig. 451.

Supposing the city had built an engine-house abutting on one of the principal streets in such a defective manner that it fell down upon a passer-by who was exercising the proper care and discretion in passing along the street. Would not the city be liable for any injury he might sustain? It would seem that this question must be answered in the affirmative. Wherein does the supposed case differ in principle from the one at bar?

Briegel v. Philadelphia, 185 Pa. 451; Goodloe v. Cincinnati, 4 Ohio, 518; Rhodes v. Cleveland, 10 Ohio, 160, 36 Am. Dec. 82; McCombs v. Akron, 15 Ohio, 479.

Mr. C. E. Magoon, also for plaintiff in error.

Mr. E. P. Holmes, City Atty., for defendant in error.

Post, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This case comes into this court on a petition in error. The error assigned is the sustaining of a demurrer by the district court of Lancaster county to the petition of plaintiff in error, the material part of which is as follows: "That on and prior to the 29th day of May, 1889, the said defendant had an organized and paid fire department, and had and owned engines, hose, hose-carts, ladders, wagons, trucks, and other apparatus for the use by, and which was used by, said defendant and its said fire department in extinguishing fires. That said defendant then had and owned horses, which were used by said defendant in drawing said wagons, trucks, hose-carts, and engines to the place in said city where a fire might be burning, and for other purposes. That among other apparatus the said defendant then owned a large truck or wagon, upwards of twenty feet in length, which was used by the defendant in transporting about the city long ladders, used by said fire department. That said defendant, at the time of committing the wrongs hereinafter mentioned, had in its pay and employ one Peter Keykendall, who was under the direction and control of the defendant, and whose duty it was, under the direction of said defendant, to drive the team attached to said ladder truck or wagon about the city; and said wagon was not at the time hereinbefore mentioned, May 29, 1889, supplied with any brake or lock or other appliance for stopping said wagon when in motion, or to assist the horses to said wagon attached in stopping the same; that the distance between the front and hind wheels to said truck or wagon was about eighteen feet; that said wagon or truck, when loaded with ladders and other apparatus carried thereon, and with the driver thereon, weighed upwards of two thousand pounds. That Ninth street extends through said city from north to south, and intersects and crosses P, R, and S streets in said city, and said Ninth street and said P, R, and S streets have for many years last past been public streets in said city, and on said 29th day of May, 1889, said Ninth street was paved with wood, and between S and P streets was a paved and smooth street, and from S to R street had a smooth and level surface, and was free from obstruction, and was paved with wood. That the said Peter Keykendall, under his employment, was by the defendant required to drive said ladder truck or wagon about the city when no fires were burning which required to be extinguished by said defendant or said fire department, for the purpose of exercising the horses to said wagon attached, and was also required to drive said horses attached to said wagon, when the same was heavily loaded, on and along the public streets of the said city at a furious rate of speed, and as fast as said horses could be made to run, without any regard whatever for the lives or safety of citizens of the city who might be upon the streets, and this when no fire or fires were burning which required the action of the defendant or its fire department to extinguish, for the sole and only purpose of exercising said horses. That on the 29th day of May, 1889, the said Peter Keykendall, then being in the employ of the defendant, and acting under the orders and direction of the defendant, drove a span of large, high-spirited, and powerful horses attached to said ladder truck or wagon about the public streets of said city, for the purpose of exercising said horses. Said wagon or truck was loaded with ladders and other apparatus, and the driver rode therein, and said wagon with its load weighed upwards of two thousand pounds; that said wagon was not on said day supplied with any lock or brake or other appliances for stopping or assisting in stopping said wagon when in motion, as the defendant then well knew. That said Keykendall on said day drove said span of horses to said wagon attached as aforesaid on and along said Ninth street at a furious and dangerous rate of speed, and as fast as said horses could be driven, when there was no fire burning which required the services of said fire department or any of its members or employees of said city to extinguish, but said horses were driven for exercise only; that Clark D. Gillespie, an infant of tender years, being then but six years of age, was at the time crossing said Ninth street near the place where said street intersects and crosses R street at the north side of said R street, and said span of horses were driven upon said Clark D. Gillespie, and he was thrown upon the pavement, and the front wheel of said wagon was driven over and across his body; that said boy, after being knocked down and run over by said horses, and by one of the front wheels of said wagon, raised his head and attempted to arise from the pavement, when he was struck and run over by one of the hind wheels of said truck or wagon and was instantly killed. That the killing of said boy was caused by the driving over him of said team and wagon as aforesaid. Plaintiff further says that at said time said team and wagon were not being driven to any fire which required to be extinguished, but were being driven on and along said street for the sole and only purpose of exercising said horses, under the direction and orders of the defendant, at a dangerous rate of speed, and were driven so fast that it was impossible for the said Clark D. Gillespie to escape being run over. That the said Clark D. Gillespie was the son of the plaintiff. That on the 22d of July, 1889, the plaintiff was by the county court of said Lancaster county duly appointed administrator of the estate of said Clark D. Gillespie, and gave the bond by said court required, and took the oath by law required in such case. That on or about the 22d of July, 1889, plaintiff presented to the city council his claim for damages sustained by the estate of said Clark D. Gillespie by reason of the killing of him, the said Clark D. Gillespie, together with the names of the witnesses and a statement of the time, place, nature, circumstances, and cause of the injury and damages complained of, which claim was verified by the oath of the plaintiff; that afterwards, and on or about the 12th of August, 1889, said claim was by the defendant and the mayor and council thereof, to which it was presented as aforesaid, rejected and disallowed. That by reason of the killing of said Clark D. Gillespie as aforesaid the estate of the deceased has sustained damages in the sum of $5,000, for which sum plaintiff prays judgment, with interest from the 12th of August, 1889, and for costs."

16 L. R. A.

The contention of the defendant in error is that no liability exists on the part of a city like Lincoln for injuries occasioned by the negligent acts of members of its fire department. This exemption is placed upon the ground that, in performing their duties, firemen act in obedience to a legislative command, and, although appointed and paid by the city, they are to be regarded rather as officers charged with a public duty than as servants of the city. Public policy, it is claimed, forbids the imposition upon a city of liability for the negligence of this class of employees, since they are engaged in the discharge of a duty imposed by law for the welfare of the public, and from which the city, as a corporation, derives no benefit or advantage. Counsel for plaintiff in error, while not conceding the rule to be as stated, insists that it could have no application to the case at bar, for the reason that the statute under which the fire department of the city of Lincoln is organized and governed is permissive only, and whatever is done by the city in that respect it does voluntarily, and therefore the rule respondet superior is applicable. To this proposition we cannot assent.

The provision on the subject is found in subdivision 83, § 67, of the charter of the city of Lincoln: "Cities governed under the provisions of this Act shall have power by ordinance to provide for the organization of a fire department, to procure fire engines, hooks, ladders, buckets, and other apparatus, and to organize fire engine, hook and ladder, and bucket companies, and to prescribe rules of duty and the government thereof, with such penalties as the council may deem proper, not exceeding $100, and to make the necessary appropriations therefor, and to establish regulations for the protection from and extinguishment of fires." This language, although permissive in form, is in one sense mandatory. True, it is not mandatory in the fullest sense of the word, since the duty of the city to provide protection to life and property from fire cannot be enforced by mandamus or other remedy. It is not every duty imposed upon the state, or the different agencies thereof called "municipal corporations," that can be thus enforced. Kentucky v. Dennison, 65 U. S. 24 How. 66, 16 L. ed. 717; Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. 93. It is none the less a duty on the part of the city because the law has not provided a means for its enforcement by the mandate of the court. There existed a moral or equitable obligation on the part of the defendant city to provide means of protection from fires within its limits, and in the discharge of that duty provision was made for its fire department. If defendant is to answer for the wrongful act of Keykendall, the driver of the ladder wagon, it must be upon the rule respondent superior. It is clear that upon no other principle is it chargeable. In this connection, it should be noted that the claim is made by plaintiff that Keykendall, in driving the team at the time in question, was acting within the scope of his authority. Counsel says in his brief: "The exercising of the team was a proper thing to do. It lies in the way of a proper discharge of the functions of the department. It was not ultra vires. The way in which it was performed is what we complain of." Taking it for granted, then, that the driving of the team at the time in question was a proper exercise of the functions of the fire department of the city, and within the line of duty of the driver, we will proceed to examine some of the authorities bearing upon the question involved.

In Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. 974, the rule is stated thus: "If the corporation appoints or elects them, can control them in the discharge of their duties, can continue or remove them, can hold them responsible for the manner in which they discharge their trust, and if those duties relate to the exercise of corporate powers, and are for the peculiar benefit of the corporation in its local or special interest, they may justly be regarded as its agents or servants, and the maxim of respondent superior applies. But if, on the other hand, they are elected or appointed by the corporation, in obedience to the statute, to perform a public service, not peculiarly local or corporate, but because this mode of selection has been deemed expedient by the Legislature in the distribution of the powers of the government, if they are independent of the corporation as to the tenure of their office and the manner of discharging their duties, they are not to be regarded as the servants or agents of the corporation, for whose acts or negligence it is impliedly liable, but as public or state officers, with such powers and duties as the statute confers upon them, and the doctrine of respondent superior is not applicable." Among the officers who are not servants of a city, within the foregoing rule, and for whose negligence it will not be chargeable, the learned author enumerates policemen, health officers, and firemen. The rule as to the liability of the latter the author states, in section 978, as follows: "The exemption from liability in these and the like cases is upon the ground that the service is performed by the corporation in obedience to an Act of the Legislature; is one in which the corporation, as such, has no particular interest, and from which it derives no especial benefit in its corporate capacity; that the members of the fire department, although appointed, employed, and paid by the city corporation, are not the agents and servants of the city, for whose conduct it is liable, but they act rather as officers of the city, charged with a public service, for whose negligence in the discharge of official duty no action lies against the city, without being expressly given. The maxim of respondent superior has therefore no application." To the same effect, see 2 Thomp. Neg. 735; Shearm. & Redf. Neg. 295, 296.

16 L. R. A.

Hayes v. Oakkosh, 83 Wis. 814, 14 Am. Rep. 760, was an action to recover damages resulting from a fire occasioned by the negligent use of an engine employed in suppressing a fire in the neighborhood. Chief Justice Dixon, in the opinion, says: "Neither the charter of the city nor the general statutes of the state contains any peculiar provision imposing liability in cases of this kind, and the decisions elsewhere are numerous and uniform that no such liability exists." Wilcox v. Chicago, 107 Ill. 384, 47 Am. Rep. 484, is directly in point. In that case the plaintiff sought to recover for injuries occasioned by a collision between his carriage and a hook and ladder wagon of the city, through the negligence of the driver while in the discharge of his duty. In the opinion of the court, by Judge Walker, it is said: "To allow recoveries for the negligence of the fire department would almost certainly subject property holders to as great if not greater burdens than are suffered from damage by fire. Sound public policy would forbid it, if it were not prohibited by authority." In Fisher v. Boston, 104 Mass. 94, 6 Am. Rep. 196, the plaintiff received personal injuries through the negligent use of hose by a fire company of the city in extinguishing a fire on adjoining premises. Judge Gray, in the opinion of the court, says: "But the extinguishment of fires is not for the immediate advantage of the town in its corporate capacity, nor is any part of the expense thereof authorized to be assessed upon owners of buildings or other special class of persons whose property is peculiarly benefited or protected thereby. In the absence of express statute, therefore, municipal corporations are no more liable to actions for injuries occasioned by reason of negligence in using or keeping in repair the fire engines owned by them than in the case of a town or highway."

In Hafford v. New Bedford, 16 Gray, 297, the plaintiff was struck and injured by a hose-cart on a sidewalk of a public street. The firemen in charge thereof had negligently drawn it along and upon the sidewalk from the engine house ten or fifteen rods distant. The city was held not liable. In Jewett v. New Haven, 83 Conn. 363, 9 Am. Rep. 882, the plaintiff, without negligence on his part, was struck and injured in a public street by a hose cart, which was being driven to the engine house for an additional supply of hose for use at a fire then raging, but at a dangerous rate of speed, and without the exercise of reasonable precaution for the safety of passers-by. It was held the rule respondent superior did not apply, and the city was not chargeable.

In Dodge v. Granger, 17 R. I. —, 15 L. R. A. 781, a very recent case, on the authority of cases above cited, the city was held not liable for injuries caused by contact with a ladder projecting across the sidewalk in front of an engine house, negligently permitted by the firemen to remain in that position while engaged in cleaning the house. This principle has been repeatedly applied to other officers or employés of municipal corporations, as in Mazmilian v. New York, 63 N. Y. 180, where plaintiff's intestate was killed by a collision with an ambulance wagon, which was caused by the negligence of the driver, an employé of the commissioners of public charities and corrections; Haight v. New York, 24 Fed. Rep. 93, where, following the last case, it is held that the city is not liable for damage caused by a collision with a steamboat owned by the city, but in the exclusive use of the board of charities and corrections; Condict v. Jersey City, 46 N. J. L. 157, where the deceased was killed through the negligence of a driver employed by the board of public works to remove garbage from the streets to a public dumping ground; Caldwell v. Boone, 51 Iowa, 687, where the injury resulted from the wrongful act of a policeman paid by the city; Ogg v. Lansing, 35 Iowa, 495, 14 Am. Rep. 499; Brown v. Vinahaven, 65 Me. 402, 20 Am. Rep. 709, and Barbour v. Ellsworth, 67 Me. 294,—in each of which it was held that the city was not chargeable with the negligence of its health officers; Burrill v. Augusta, 79 Me. 118, 1 New Eng. Rep. 697, in which plaintiff's horse was frightened by the escape of steam from a fire engine, negligently allowed to remain in the street; Elliott v. Philadelphia, 75 Pa. 347, where plaintiff's horse was killed through the negligence of a police officer, by whom he had been arrested for violation of an ordinance of the city against fast driving; Bryant v. St. Paul, 33 Minn. 289, where the plaintiff fell into a vault negligently left open and exposed by the board of health. In the last case, the distinction between the class of officers above-mentioned and other agents of the city is clearly pointed out by Vanderburgh, J., as follows: "The duties of such officers are not municipal or corporate duties with which the corporation is charged in consideration of charter privileges, but are police or governmental functions which could be discharged equally well through agents appointed by the state, though usually associated with and appointed by the municipal body." There are many cases in the reports of the states and the United States in harmony with the foregoing, among which are Smith v. Rochester, 76 N. Y. 506; Van Horn v. Des Moines, 63 Iowa, 447, 50 Am. Rep. 750; O'Meara v. New York, 1 Daly, 425; Wheeler v. Cincinnati, 19 Ohio St. 19; Howard v. San Francisco, 51 Cal. 52; Ham v. New York, 70 N. Y. 459; Welsh v. Rutland, 56 Vt. 228. The cases cited by plaintiff may be said to sustain the proposition that the law imposes upon a city the duty to keep its streets in a reasonably safe condition for use by the public, and for a neglect of that duty it will be answerable. They are plainly distinguishable from those to which we have referred, since the duty of the city with reference to its streets is a corporate duty. As said by Judge Folger, in Mazmilian v. New York, supra: "It is a duty with which the city is charged for its own corporate benefit, to be performed by its own agents, as its own corporate act." This distinction is made also in Ehrgott v. New York, 96 N. Y. 274, 48 Am. Rep. 622, one of the cases cited by plaintiff. To the extent that the exemption of a city from liability for acts of officers herein enumerated affects the general rule of liability for obstruction of the streets of the city, it must be held to be an exception thereto,—an exception based upon a public policy which subordinates mere private interests to the welfare of the general public.

The judgment is right and is affirmed.

The other Judges concur.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT

William A. TAPPAN
v.
BOSTON WATER POWER CO.

Edward L. BROWNE et al.
v.
SAME.

(.....Mass.....)

1. The boundary line between owners of land on opposite sides of a channel not more than 200 rods wide into which the tide flows, but from which it wholly ebbs and through which a fresh water stream flows is the middle of the tidal channel and not affected by the fresh water stream, although the Colonial Ordinance of 1641-7 which extends the ownership of the land on tidal waters to low water mark, if not more than 100 rods, furnishes no guide for the division, since the land to be divided is all above low water mark.

2. Flats in the bed of a fresh-water stream into which the tide flows, but from which it wholly ebbs at low water where they are between separate channels of the stream are to be divided between riparian owners by straight lines from the points where the division lines of the owners end on the bank drawn to and at right angles with the center line of the tidal channel at the ordinary stage of the waters.

3. An objection that a disclaimer in an action by writ of entry was not filed at the same time with a plea of nul disseisin comes too late when first made at the argument.

4. Disclaimers in an action by writ of NOTE.—Ownership of flats, or land below high-water mark.

Although the common-law rule limiting the title of an owner of lands upon navigable waters to high-water mark is changed in Massachusetts, the decision in the above case that this statutory change is 16 L. R. A.

does not apply to the conflicting rights of owners on opposite sides of a fresh-water stream in which the tide flows but from which it wholly ebbs at low water, makes the further decision as to the ownership of flats in the bed of such a fresh-water stream one of general application, while the question as to whether the low-water entry are conclusive as between the parties and their privies as to the right and title of the demandants to the lands included in the disclaimers.

(Field, Ch. J., and Knowlton and Lathrop, JJ., dissent from propositions 1 and 2.)

(June 24, 1892.)

REPORT from the Superior Court for Suffolk County for the opinion of the Supreme Judicial Court of two actions by writ of entry, brought to recover possession of certain mud flats, in each of which there had been a finding in favor of the tenants. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. W. G. Russell and H. W. Putnam, for demandants:

The demandants' title extends to the center of the creek at high water, i. e., to the line midway between the ordinary high-water lines or lines of marsh.

"The low-water mark" under the ordinance is the mark or line where the sea, at its lowest ebb, touches the land. A tidal stream is—where the tide ebbs wholly from it—simply a tidal creek with a fresh-water stream flowing through it when the tide is out. In such a creek the Commonwealth has no title, the fresh-water stream is not the "low-water mark" of the colonial ordinance; and the opposite proprietors own in severalty, in equal shares proportionally to their frontage, the whole flats of the creek from shore to shore as parcel of their respective upland, as if there were no fresh water stream there,—each owing to the medium flum, or center line of the creek.

Sewall & D. Cordage Co. v. Boston Water Power Co. 6 New Eng. Rep. 820, 147 Mass. 61; Ashby v. Eastern R. Co. 5 Met. 368, 38 Am. Dec. 426; Rust v. Boston Mill Corp. 6 Pick. 158; Boston v. Richardson, 18 Allen, 146; Harlow v. Fisk, 12 Cush. 302; Valentine v. Piper, 23 Pick. 85; Walker v. Boston & M. R. Co. 8 Cush. 1; Gray v. Deluce, 5 Cush. 9; Wenson v. Wenson, 14 Allen, 71.

It is only a depression or channel from which the tide does not ebb at low water that determines the direction and extent of the riparian proprietor's flats.

Walker v. Boston & M. R. Co. supra; Atty-Gen. v. Boston Wharf Co. 12 Gray, 558; Sparhawk v. Bullard, 1 Met. 95; Drury v. Midland R. Co. 127 Mass. 571; Ashby v. Eastern R. Co. supra.

The aim of the court in dividing flats is "to lay down such a line of division as to give to each riparian owner his fair and equal share," upon "the principle of giving an equal division."

Walker v. Boston & M. R. Co. supra.

The outward boundary of flats to which the side lines shall run is the medium flum, or center-line between the banks.

Harlow v. Fisk and Boston v. Richardson, supra.

The rule follows in principle the analogy of non-navigable rivers in which the riparian proprietors own in severalty to the center or middle line between the shores,—the "shores," in the case of a tidal creek or river, being the mean high-water lines of the tide, or edges of the upland, and in the case of a non-navigable river, the ordinary water-lines of the fresh-water stream.

Ingraham v. Wilkinson, 4 Pick. 268, 16 Am. Dec. 342; Bardwell v. Ames, 23 Pick. 333; Trustees of Hopkins Academy v. Dickinson, 9 Cush. 544; Knight v. Wilder, 2 Cush. 199, 48 Am. Dec. 680; Boscawen v. Canterbury, 23 N. H. 188; Plymouth v. Holderness, cited in 28 N. H. 217.

The language of the ordinance, as repeatedly construed and applied by the courts, necessarily leads to the conclusion for which we contend.

Watuppa Reservoir Co. v. Fall River, 1 L. R. A. 466, 147 Mass. 548.

Before the ordinance was passed, i. e., at common law, we bounded not by the fresh-water stream or its thread, but by the mean high-water mark of the sea, and the colony owned the flats from shore to shore.

Com. v. Alger, 7 Cush. 53; Gould, Waters, §§ 27, 42; Porter v. Sullivan, 7 Gray, 441.

The moment the ordinance was passed we bounded by "the [extreme] low-water mark" of the sea, not by the fresh-water stream or its thread. We therefore have never bounded by the fresh-water stream, either at common law or under the ordinance, and consequently, never by its thread. We have never been riparian proprietors on it, but always littoral proprietors on the sea, to speak with exactness. The ordinance grants to each littoral proprietor his "due share" (Wilde, J., in Rust v. Boston Mill Corp. 6 Pick. 186), of the flats in severalty; and the bed of a fresh-water stream within that share,—whether running parallel with his line of upland or at any angle with it,—passes to him as much as it does when it falls within an original allotment of upland made to him in the book of possessions.

Watuppa Reservoir Co. v. Fall River, supra; Rust v. Boston Mill Corp. 6 Pick. 198; Ashby v. Eastern R. Co. 5 Met. 368, 38 Am. Dec. 426.

The dominant purpose of the ordinance is to establish a just, uniform, and definite rule of title in the soil of flats not exceeding 100 rods in extent from the upland, without reference to the rights of navigation or of access to the water.

Walker v. Boston & M. R. Co. 8 Cush. 1.

The demandants' title as riparian proprietors upon a fresh water stream (assuming that they are such in law) extends to the thread of the fresh-water stream.

mark intended by the statutory provision is to be regarded as the point to which the tide water recedes or that to which the fresh water of the stream recedes, is novel and peculiarly interesting.

For notes on the title and riparian rights of the owners of land bounded on navigable waters, see Fulmer v. Williams (Pa.) 1 L. R. A. 608; Par-16 L. R. A.

ker v. West Coast Packing Co. (Or.) 5 L. R. A. 61; Case v. Loftus (Or.) 5 L. R. A. 684; Miller v. Mendenhall (Minn.) 8 L. R. A. 89; Eisenbach v. Hatfield (Wash.) 12 L. R. A. 632.

For note on boundaries of land bordering on a fresh-water stream, see Chandlos v. Mack (Wash.) 10 L. R. A. 207.

B. A. R.

The western branch of the fresh-water stream was the wider and larger in volume.

The law gives us title to the thread of the western channel as the main or principal one, and including the island.

Phear, Rights of Water, 11, 12; Ang. Watercourses, § 45; Claremont v. Carleton, 2 N. H. 369, 9 Am. Dec. 88; Greenleaf v. Kilton, 11 N. H. 530; Kimball v. Schoff, 40 N. H. 190.

If, upon the facts, the two branches of the fresh-water stream are to be treated as substantially equal in width, the thread of the stream will be the center line between the threads of the channels, and will bisect the island.

Ingraham v. Wilkinson, 4 Pick. 268, 16 Am. Dec. 342; Trustees of Hopkins Academy v. Dickinson, 9 Cush. 544; Deerfield v. Arms, 17 Pick. 41, 28 Am. Dec. 276.

Meers. Henry D. Hyde, George F. Richardson, and G. D. Braman, for tenants:

As the demanded premises are situated below the ordinary high water mark, the title of these premises before the Colonial Ordinance of 1347 was passed was in the Massachusetts Bay Company.

Storer v. Freeman, 6 Mass. 485, 4 Am. Dec. 155; Com. v. Roxbury, 9 Gray, 451.

The title of the demandants in this case must depend on the construction to be placed on this ordinance. The two limitations which appear in the ordinance are the low-water mark or 100 rods when the low-water mark is more than 100 rods.

These flats run in the direction of the nearest tidal channel, and such a channel forms the limit of the ownership of flats derived under this ordinance.

The rule is the same whether the water which remains in the channel is salt water or the fresh water of the stream above running through the bed of the fresh-water creek.

See Sparhawk v. Bullard, 1 Met. 95; Ashby v. Eastern R. Co. 5 Met. 368, 38 Am. Dec. 426; Walker v. Boston & M. R. Co. 3 Cush. 1; Atty-Gen. v. Boston Wharf Co. 12 Gray, 553; Drury v. Midland R. Co. 127 Mass. 571.

The burden in this case is on the demandants to show that there was no such channel between the edge or bank of their upland and the center of the westerly channel.

Williams v. Ingell, 21 Pick. 288; Ashby v. Eastern R. Co. 5 Met. 368, 38 Am. Dec. 426.

This they have failed to do, for it was expressly found that, "on the evidence the demandants did not by a fair preponderance of the evidence satisfy me that at any time before the waters of Muddy river were cut off, said waters ceased to flow in the easterly channel at the lowest spring tides." This channel, then, must be the limit of the demandants' flats.

Morton, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

These two actions involve the title to flats in Muddy river, in Boston, lying between marsh lands on the easterly and westerly sides of the river, which belong respectively to the demandants and tenants. Both were tried together, and depend on the same facts. Evidence was introduced by the parties of acts of ownership and possession by themselves and their predecessors in title relating to a part of the demanded premises; but the court was not satisfied that such acts had been exercised. The cases do not depend, therefore, at all upon possessory titles. The demandants also claimed title by accretion. The findings of the court would seem to have disposed of this claim, and it has not been argued.

The titles of the parties depend on the rights which owners of lands on opposite sides of a stream like Muddy river have to the interjacent flats in the natural condition of things under the Colony Ordinance of 1641-47. It appears that Muddy river is a fresh-water stream, and that prior to 1820 it had a large flow in the winter and spring, and a diminished flow in the summer, and ran unobstructed to Charles river. It was navigable at certain stages of the tide to a point above the demanded premises, and the tide ebbed and flowed to a point above them. Between the lands of the demandants in the second action and those of the tenants was an island, which at ordinary high tide was nearly or entirely covered by water, and which the presiding justice treated as flats. This island divided the river into two channels, which united below it,—one called the "easterly channel," which at high water ran nearer the lands of the demandants than the center of the stream; and the other called the "westerly channel," which ran nearer the lands of the tenants than the center of the stream at high water. The demanded premises lie between the edge of the marsh land of the demandants and the center of the westerly channel, and the distance between the two lines is less than 100 rods. At ordinary low water there was no water on the demanded premises except such as came from the flow of Muddy river, and that was confined to the two channels. The presiding justice was not satisfied that the tide ebbed from the easterly channel, before it did from the westerly channel, or that the waters of the river ceased to flow in the easterly channel at the lowest spring tides, or that they did or did not run through the westerly channel at the lowest spring tides. Certain dams were built in Charles river in 1820 and 1821, which thereafter affected the flow of Muddy river. The extent to which they affected it is not material. In 1885, Muddy river was cut off at Brookline avenue, and tide water was cut off by the Back Bay park. It is not stated where the line of low tide was. We do not know whether it was where Muddy river emptied into the Charles, or above or below that point. It is evident that it was below the demanded premises, for it is found that at ordinary low tide the only water that flowed over them was that of Muddy river, flowing in the two channels above named.

At common law the title of the owner of land bounding on tide water only extends to ordinary high-water mark. Com. v. Charles-town, 1 Pick. 182; Porter v. Sullivan, 7 Gray, 441; Com. v. Roxbury, 9 Gray, 477, 483, 491; Com. v. Alger, 7 Cush. 53, 65, 66.

This applies to a stream discharging fresh water, but in which the tide ebbs and flows. The test whether or not it is to be regarded as tide water is whether there is a regular rise and fall under the influence of the tide. Atty-Gen. v. Woods, 108 Mass. 436. 11 Am. Rep. 380; Peyroux v. Howard, 32 U. S. 7 Pet. 843, 8 L. ed. 707; Lapish v. Bangor Bank, 8 Me. 85.

The Colony Ordinance of 1641-47, however, extended the title of all proprietors of land adjoining creeks, coves, and other places where the tide ebbs and flows to low-water mark, if not more than 100 rods. It is under the title thus conferred that the demandants claim. The tenants have disclaimed in both cases as to the land between the edge of demandants' marsh land, and the center of the easterly channel. They contend that that channel is the demandants' boundary, and that their line does not go beyond the nearest tidal channel, whether that be one in which only fresh water flows at low tide, or one from which the tide does not wholly ebb. They rely for this upon certain expressions in cases that have been decided by this court; and they are obliged in effect to concede that under it the title to the land between the channels may still be in the Commonwealth. We do not think the cases to which the tenants have referred us maintain the proposition on which they rely, or show that the low-water mark intended by the ordinance is the low-water mark of the fresh-water stream.

In Sparhawk v. Bullard, 1 Met. 95, 107, there was a question respecting the existence of a creek alleged to have separated the land demanded from the upland and flats belonging to the demandants. The jury was instructed that, "if they should find there was naturally and originally any creek in which the tide ebbed and flowed, and from which it did not ebb entirely at the times when from natural causes it ebbed the lowest, this would constitute a boundary of the flats beyond which the demandants would not by law be entitled to recover." These instructions, which had been given originally by Shaw, Ch. J., and were adopted by Morton, J., in a later trial of the same case, were excepted to, but this court held that they were correct. In Ashby v. Eastern R. Co., 5 Met. 368, 370, 38 Am. Dec. 426, which was decided only two years and a half or thereabouts after Sparhawk v. Bullard, the opinion was given by Chief Justice Shaw, and certainly no intention is manifested to overrule that case. On the contrary, we think it conforms to it. In this case also the question was whether the land of the petitioner went to a channel. In defining what was meant by a channel the chief justice used the following language: "If this part of flats called 'South River' had no channel running through it,—that is, no depression from which the tide did not ebb at low water,—then it must have been a cove. . . ." It is evident that the word "channel" is used in this sense throughout the opinion, and that he does not mean to say that a channel formed by a stream of fresh water, out of which the tide ebbed at low water, would constitute a boundary to flats.

In Walker v. Boston & M. R. Co., 3 Cush. 1, 22, the same rule is laid down as in Sparhawk v. Bullard, and that case is cited 15 L. R. A.

in support of it. Chief Justice Shaw gives the opinion in this case also, and he says: "It appears by the case that the stream running from the tide mills along through the westerly part of these flats is a natural channel or creek, from out of which the tide does not ebb. It must therefore be a terminus to a claim of flats in that direction."

In Atty-Gen. v. Boston Wharf Co., 12 Gray, 558, the rule laid down in Sparhawk v. Bullard is again affirmed in these words: "A natural or original creek, in which the tide ebbed and flowed, and from which it did not ebb entirely at the time when from natural causes it ebbed the lowest, would constitute a boundary of the flats."

In Drury v. Midland R. Co., 127 Mass. 581, the court says that a creek from which the tide does not wholly ebb was a natural boundary, and bounded the claims of all adjacent proprietors of flats. See also Porter v. Sullivan, 7 Gray, 448, 449; Harlow v. Fisk, 12 Cush. 304.

There is no suggestion in these cases that a tidal channel from which the tide ebbs, and through which a fresh-water stream flows at low tide, will constitute a boundary to flats, or that the fresh-water stream will constitute low-water mark. And we think it plain that a channel, to be a boundary to flats, must be one from which the tide does not ebb at low water. It is expressly found in the cases at bar that the tide ebbs from the channel over the demanded premises at low water, and it does not, therefore, constitute a boundary to demandants' flats. It appears that it also ebbs from the other channel. It is immaterial on this point whether the tide ebbed from one channel sooner than the other, or whether there was or was not fresh water flowing in either or neither or both of them at low water, or whether one channel was wider than the other, or whether at one stage of the tide more water flowed in one than in the other, and at another stage of the tide this was reversed. The controlling fact is that the tide wholly ebbed from both channels at low water. The ordinance relates, so far as concerns the point which we are now considering, to land adjoining "creeks, coves, and other places upon and about salt water, where the tide ebbs and flows." It establishes that the proprietor of such land "shall have propriety to low-water mark when the sea doth not ebb above a hundred rods, and not more, wheresoever it ebbs further." By low-water mark is meant the lowest line made by the receding tide with the land; not the lowest line which a stream of fresh water emptying into the sea, or a cove, or tidal river makes with the land. It has nothing to do with a fresh-water stream, or with a tidal channel through which only fresh water flows at low tide. Nothing in the ordinance indicates an intention to preserve the fresh-water stream or channel as a boundary below ordinary high-water mark; and the cases cited show it has not been done in applying it. The channel would not be the boundary, even above high-water mark. The rules of proprietorship on a fresh-water stream may furnish, in a given case, the best analogy for the division of interjacent flats on a stream below a point where the tide ebbs and flows, but beyond that they have no force.

How, then, in these cases, are these flats to be divided? The ordinance itself furnishes no guide. It simply declares a rule of property, leaving the court to make the division in such manner as appears to be just and reasonable. Walker v. Boston & M. R. Co. 8 Cush. 22; Gray v. Deluce, 5 Cush 12. In applying it, the aim has been to secure a fair and equal division of the flats among those to whom they belonged. Walker v. Boston & M. R. Co. 8 Cush. 22. No fixed plan has been or can be adopted which will operate with equal justice in all cases. Certain general rules have been laid down, but even these yield to the circumstances of particular cases. Thus, for instance, it is said that the flats are to extend to low-water mark, (Porter v. Sullivan, 7 Gray, 442, 448; Wonson v. Wonson, 14 Allen, 71; Sewall & D. Cordage Co. v. Boston Water-Power Co. 147 Mass. 64, 6 New Eng. Rep. 820,) that they must be in front of the upland, when practicable, to which they are appurtenant, and also, when practicable, of equal width at the low-water line with the upland at the high-water line, (Gray v. Deluce, 5 Cush. 9, 12; Porter v. Sullivan, 7 Gray, 441-448;) and, in the case of a cove, from which the tide ebbs, and where there is no channel, they are to be divided by straight lines from the external lines of each proprietor's upland to a base line across the mouth of the cove, so as to give each proprietor a distance upon the base line proportioned to the width at the ordinary high-water mark of his upland. Rust v. Boston Mill Corp. 6 Pick. 158.

In the present case the line of low water is below the demanded premises. The flats are in the bed of a stream, which extends some distance below the demanded premises before entering Charles river. It is obviously impracticable to extend the lines of division to low-water mark, or to follow the rules of division laid down for flats in a cove. The most satisfactory analogy would seem to be that presented by a fresh-water stream or river, where the line of division between opposite proprietors is the thread of the stream. Ingraham v. Wilkinson, 4 Pick. 268, 278, 16 Am. Dec. 842; Bardwell v. Ames, 22 Pick. 833, 354; Trustees of Hopkins Academy v. Dickinson, 9 Cush. 544, 552; Knight v. Wilder, 2 Cush. 199, 207, 208, 48 Am. Dec. 660; Boston v. Richardson, 18 Allen, 154. In such a case each proprietor owns an equal share of the bed of the stream in proportion to his line on the margin and in front of or adjacent to his upland. Ang. Watercourses, § 11. The principle of division between them is, as in the case of flats, that of equality, and the division is effected by drawing lines at right angles from the termini of the side lines on the shore to and at right angles with the thread of the stream. Knight v. Wilder, 2 Cush. 209, 48 Am. Dec. 660. In a somewhat similar case respecting this very river it was said that the title of the riparian owners extended to the thread of the stream. Sewall & D. Cordage Co. v. Boston

Water-Power Co. 147 Mass. 61, 64, 6 New Eng. Rep. 820. And it seems to have been the view of the court in cases where the tide wholly ebbed at low water from a tidal creek that a boundary by it would convey the title to the flats to the center of the creek, (Harlow v. Flak, 12 Cush. 802, 806; Boston v. Richardson, 18 Allen, 146, 159;) although in one case the margin of the creek was held to constitute the boundary. Chapman v. Edmonds, 8 Allen, 512. This case, however, depended on the peculiar language used in the deed which was thought to exclude the creek. By the thread of the stream is meant the center line from one bank to the other, not when swollen by floods or diminished by drought, but in its ordinary and natural condition. This may or may not coincide with the channel. That is immaterial. And it is immaterial also whether there is one channel or more than one. Trustees of Hopkins Academy v. Dickinson, 9 Cush. 544, 559; Pratt v. Lamson, 2 Allen, 275, 285; Boscawen v. Canterbury, 28 N. H. 189; Ang. Watercourses, §§ 10, 11; Gould, Waters, § 198. What the result might be if it should appear that the land in the middle of the river between the marsh land of the demandants in the second case and that of the tenants was an island, we need not now consider. For the purposes of the trial it was treated by the presiding justice as flats, and this view seems to have been acquiesced in by all parties. Assuming that it is to be regarded as flats we think the demandants are respectively entitled to recover so much as falls within straight lines drawn from the termini on its banks at the ordinary stage of the water of the side lines of their respective marsh lands to and at right angles with the center line of the stream.

The remaining question is whether judgment should be entered for the tenants on their disclaimers. The tenants first pleaded nul disseisin, more than a year after the disclaimers were filed. The demandants object that they should have been filed as specifications of defense with the plea of nul disseisin. But no objection appears to have been made at the time of filing, or at any time before argument in this court, that they should not be considered as having been filed as specifications of defense under the plea of nul disseisin. We think the objection comes too late, and that they must be regarded as having been so filed. The pleas of nul disseisin put in issue the title of the demandants, but admitted possession by the tenants. Higbee v. Rice, 5 Mass. 352, 4 Am. Dec. 68; Burridge v. Fogg, 8 Cush. 183. The disclaimers admitted the title and right to possession of the demandants of the tracts described in them. Oakham v. Hall, 112 Mass. 539. The effect of the pleas of nul disseisin with the disclaimers was therefore to admit on the part of the tenants the title and right to possession of the demandants to so much of the demanded premises as lies easterly of the center of the easterly channel, and to claim title in themselves as to the rest of the demanded premises. The demandants could thereupon have discontinued these actions as to the parts dis-claimad. Johnson v. Rayner, 6 Gray, 108. They did not do so, and the cases went to trial upon the pleadings as they stood. The tenants having disclaimed as to a part of the demanded premises, the only issue on the disclaimers was not whether they had any right or title to those portions, but whether they had asserted any right or done any act inconsistent with their disclaimers. Merrimack River Locks & Canals Proprs. v. Nashua & L. R. Co. 104 Mass. 10. The finding of the court was generally in favor of the tenants, and there is nothing to show that on this branch of the case it was erroneous. The tenants are therefore entitled to judgment upon their disclaimers, and for their costs from the time of filing them. Pub. Stat. chap. 173, § 9. This does not give them title to the tracts disclaimed. The disclaimers are conclusive as between them and the demandants and their privies as to the right and title of the demandants to the lands included in the disclaimers. Oakham v. Hall, 112 Mass. 539; Prescott v. Hutchinson, 13 Mass. 440; Porter v. Runnery, 10 Mass. 64. If, therefore, the demandants eventually should succeed in also establishing their title to so much of the demanded premises as lies between the easterly channel and the thread of the stream, they will have established their title, as between themselves and the tenants and their privies, to all of the demanded premises that fall within the lines previously described. Stearns, Real Act. 2d ed. 197. While a disclaimer filed as a specification of defense under the present method of pleading in real actions is not, strictly speaking, a plea, it was treated as having the same effect as one in Oakham v. Hall, supra, and the judgments in these cases would have relation to it. In Cole v. Eastham, 124 Mass. 810, the court regarded the pleadings as intending to raise only the question whether the tenant had such possession of the demanded premises as to exclude the demandants, or entitle them to consider themselves disclaimed, and accordingly directed judgment for the demandants for possession, and for the tenant for his costs. We think upon the main question the finding should have been, upon the facts reported, for the demandants to the center of the stream, and that, in accordance with the terms of the report, the findings must be set aside, and a new trial granted, and it is so ordered.

The Chief Justice and Knowlton and Lathrop, JJ., are of opinion that when land bounds on a running stream which is within the ebb and flow of the tide, and out of which the tide wholly ebbs, but which at ebb tide is still a stream with well-defined banks, the Colonial Ordinance of 1641-47 does not extend the boundary of the land of the riparian or littoral owners across the stream or beyond the line of low water of the stream.

OHIO SUPREME COURT.

Charles CRAIG, Pff. in Err.,

STATE OF OHIO.

(.....Ohio St.....)

*The provisions of section 7316, Rev. Stat., which provide that "if the offense charged is murder, and the accused be convicted by confession in open court, the court shall examine the witnesses, and determine the degree of the crime, and pronounce sentence accordingly," are constitutional and valid.

*Head note by the COURT.

(May 10, 1892.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Hamilton County to review a judgment affirming a judgment sentencing defendant to suffer death for having committed murder in the first degree. Affirmed.

Statement by Bradbury, J.:

At the October Term, 1890, of the court of common pleas of Hamilton county, an indictment was found by the grand jury charging the plaintiff in error with the crime of murder in the first degree. He NOTE.—Statute allowing plea of guilty in capital case.

In view of the history of criminal procedure with its strict rules designed for the protection of accused persons, but which in recent times often proves an obstruction of justice, the constitutionality of a statute permitting a plea of guilty in a capital case is a question of much interest.

We know of no direct precedent for the above decision, but it is in line with a tendency which is fortunately growing stronger, both in and out of the legal profession, to secure a simpler and swifter procedure in criminal cases to prevent the frequent miscarriage of justice by reason of technical rules and of the long delays which often nullify the effect of a conviction even if it is finally obtained.

It will be noticed that the question in the above case as to the necessity of a jury arises by reason of the statutory provision making it the duty of the court to hear witnesses and determine the degree of the offense and that the court holds that, except for this, the plea of guilty would warrant the imposition of a capital sentence without any further proceedings.

For notes on the general question of the constitutional right to trial by jury, see Grand Rapids & L. R. Co. v. Sparrow (Mich.) 1 L. R. A. 460; Anderson v. O'Donnell (S. C.) 1 L. R. A. 632.

As to the right of an accused to waive a trial by jury, see note to King v. State (Tenn.) 3 L. R. A. 211.

For note on the constitutional right to jury for assessment of damages on default, see Dean v. Willamette Bridge R. Co. (Or.) 15 L. R. A. 614.

For note as to jury trial on appeal as satisfying the constitutional right to trial by jury, see Miller v. Com. (Va.) 15 L. R. A. 441.

For note on the constitutional right to trial by jury in equitable cases on account of a demand for damages, see Lynch v. Metropolitan Elev. R. Co. (N. Y.) 15 L. R. A. 287.

B. A. R.

was afterwards arraigned, and pleaded not guilty. A jury was drawn, summoned, and in attendance for his trial on November 17, 1890, when in open court, by leave thereof, and by the advice of counsel, he withdrew his plea of not guilty, in the following words: "And thereupon the defendant, Charles Craig, after being fully advised in the premises by his counsel, and being cautioned by the court, pleaded guilty as charged in the indictment herein. . . ." The court thereupon proceeded, under section 7316, Rev. Stat., to hear evidence "and determine the degree of the crime, and pronounce sentence accordingly." After hearing the evidence, the court found the grade of the homicide to be murder in the first degree, and sentenced the prisoner to suffer death. The proceedings and evidence were embodied in a bill of exceptions, and the cause taken to the circuit court on error, where the judgment of the lower court was affirmed. Thereupon proceedings were begun in this court to obtain a reversal of both of said judgments.

Mr. Wade Cushing for plaintiff in error.

Mr. D. Thew Wright for defendant in error.

Bradbury, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The only question arising on the record is the constitutionality of that provision of section 7316, Rev. Stat., which requires the court, where, upon a charge of murder, the accused confesses his guilt in open court, to "examine witnesses, and determine the degree of the crime, and pronounce sentence accordingly." The record discloses that the plaintiff in error, voluntarily, by the advice of counsel, and after being cautioned by the court, entered a plea of guilty; and then, without objection or protest, permitted the court of common pleas to hear evidence offered by the state, and submitted evidence himself, tending to show the degree of the crime he had committed. That this action of the court was warranted by the statute above quoted, is clear. Counsel for plaintiff in error contends, however, that the General Assembly transcended its constitutional powers in enacting that statute; that the right, upon an indictment for a felony, especially if capital, to be tried by a jury, is so sacred that the accused could not waive it, even when authorized by a statute enacted by the Legislature for that purpose. The denial, in criminal cases, of the power of waiver, has, in many instances, been carried to an extreme, if not absurd, length. The doctrine had its origin at a period in the history of the law of England when offenses that would now be regarded as comparatively trivial were, upon conviction, visited with death, and when the criminal procedure was as crude and imperfect as the Criminal Code was harsh; the accused being allowed, upon the trial of an issue of not guilty, neither counsel nor witnesses to aid him in his defense. The judges, frequently more humane than the law, were reluctant in many instances to pronounce the sentence of death prescribed by the statute, and were ready to seize upon any irregularity occurring in the course of the procedure to save the life of the prisoner, when neither the nature of the offense of which he had been convicted nor the circumstances of its commission, indicated any considerable depravity or viciousness of character. In addition to this the judge was, in theory at least, the counsel for the accused, and if, through the act, advice, or omission of the judge, the accused was induced to omit making an available objection, or consented to relinquish a right, this was deemed not an act of the accused, but of the court, and the law would not permit the party to suffer for it. Bishop, Crim. Proc. 20. In this state, however, the court is no longer, in fact, the adviser or counsel of the accused. Instead, other counsel is guaranteed to him, and, if he is indigent, provided at the public expense. He is entitled to compulsory process to secure the attendance of witnesses in his behalf, and may, under the sanction of a judicial oath, if he so chooses, detail to the court and jury every fact or circumstance known to him that may bear on the question of his guilt or innocence. Every reasonable facility is thus provided for a complete and thorough investigation of the charge against him, which is the surest shield of innocence. Also the penalties prescribed for violations of our criminal laws are more humanely and reasonably apportioned according to the character and magnitude of the crime to which they are respectively attached. Under this state of the law there can be but little sound reason for maintaining a doctrine, defensible mainly, if not solely, by the circumstances under which it originated, and which have long since ceased to exist; and therefore, as might be expected, courts and Legislatures view with diminishing respect that strict ancient doctrine on the subject of waiver in proceedings and trials of even the higher grades of crimes.

A plea of guilty is not an unusual proceeding in criminal prosecutions. The accused is arraigned to afford him an opportunity either to admit or deny the truth of the accusation. The subsequent proceedings are within his control, and depend upon his plea. By a plea of not guilty, he denies and puts in issue every material fact alleged in the indictment, thus imposing upon the prosecutor the burden of proving them. 1 Bishop, Crim. Proc. 799; 1 Chitty, Crim. Law, 471; Wharton, Crim. Pl. 408; People v. Aleck, 61 Cal. 137. On the other hand, a plea of guilty, from an early period in the history of criminal procedure, both in England and in the several states of the Union, has been regarded as an admission of every material fact well pleaded in the indictment dispensing with the necessity of proving them, and authorizing the court to proceed to judgment. 4 Bl. Com. 329; 1 Chitty, Crim. Law, 429; Crow v. State, 6 Tex. 334; 1 Bishop, Crim. Proc. 795.

It may be true that a court of common pleas, in the exercise of its discretion, may refuse to accept a plea of guilty of a capital or other infamous offense, or even in a prosecution for a misdemeanor, until it has ascertained, by an examination of witnesses, whether or not the accused is of sound mind, and free from the influence of promises and hopes unduly raised on the one hand, and of threats and intimidation wrongfully made or used upon the other. This course was pursued in Massachusetts at an early day in at least one capital case. Com. v. Battis, 1 Mass. 94. But the exercise of this humane discretion by the court before permitting a plea of guilty to be entered in no way detracts from the force or effect of the plea when it has been finally accepted. In the case before the court, the indictment charged upon the accused both deliberation and premeditation. The plea of guilty was, in its nature, as much a judicial confession of the truth of those two allegations as of any other contained in the indictment, and but for the provisions of section 7816, Rev. Stat., making it the duty of the court to hear witnesses and determine the degree of the offense, would have warranted a capital sentence. That provision, therefore, confers upon the accused a benefit, instead of depriving him of a right, by forbidding that extreme sentence which would otherwise follow his plea, until the court hears evidence, and ascertains that it is warranted by the facts as well as by the plea.

The contention made on behalf of the plaintiff in error as we understand it goes, however, a step further. It is insisted that the framers of the Constitution of 1851 intended to make the punishment for crime, at least in its higher grades, an act of society, to be accomplished only through the intervention of a jury, the special representatives of society. This doctrine would exclude a plea of guilty, and force upon the accused as well as the state a trial by jury to establish facts about which there was no dispute. It was, no doubt, competent for the framers of the Constitution to provide that no person shall be convicted or punished for an offense by his own confession, or in any other mode than by a trial by jury; but the history of the struggle by which the right to trial by jury was established does not afford sufficient ground to require us to construe a constitutional provision, that in terms merely guarantees to the accused a right to a trial by jury, as absolutely prohibiting any other mode of trial, even with the consent of the accused. The only provisions in the Constitution of 1851, of this state, relating to trial by jury, are found in sections 5 and 10 of the Bill of Rights. Section 5 provides simply that "the right of trial by jury shall be inviolate," while section 10 provides that "in any trial, in any court, the party accused shall be allowed to appear and defend in person and with counsel; to demand the nature and cause of the accusation against him, and to have a copy thereof; to meet the witnesses face to face; and to have compulsory process to procure the attendance of witnesses in his behalf, and a speedy public trial by an impartial jury." The same provisions of the Constitution that secure a trial by jury to the accused in capital cases also secure it to one charged with a misdemeanor punishable with imprisonment. Section 10, art. 1. The constitutional guaranty in the one case is no stronger than in the other, and this court very soon after the adoption of the Constitution held that, in a prosecution for a misdemeanor, "the constitutional right of trial by jury is not infringed when the option is given to the accused to have the issue tried by the court or the jury, and he submits the cause to the court." Dillingham v. State, 5 Ohio St. 280; Dailey v. State, 4 Ohio St. 57. There is no necessary conflict between these cases and that of Williams v. State, 12 Ohio St. 622. In the latter case the plaintiffs in error were indicted for altering bank notes, and, pleading not guilty, they waived a jury trial, and consented to be tried by the court. They were convicted, and sentenced to imprisonment in the penitentiary. The attorney-general submitted to a reversal of the judgment and sentence, upon the ground "that upon the trial of an issue raised by a plea of not guilty, in the higher grades of crime, it is not in the power of the accused to waive a trial by jury, and, by consent, submit to have the facts found by the court, so as to authorize a legal judgment and sentence upon such finding." The court neither gave a reason nor cited an authority for the proposition. The case was no doubt correctly decided, for whether the defendants could or could not waive a trial by jury, in a prosecution of that character, the court of common pleas had no authority to try the case without one. It was a mode of trial unknown to the law. The Legislature had not clothed the court with that form of jurisdiction, and no act or consent of the accused could create or confer a jurisdiction not established by law. The question would have been very different had the General Assembly, by statute, authorized the court, with the consent of the accused, to hear the evidence and render judgment accordingly, and the record had disclosed their consent. The power of the court to hear evidence and determine the degree of the crime is maintained in Pennsylvania. Jones v. Com. 75 Pa. 408. California has a statute similar to the provisions of section 7816, Rev. Stat., now under consideration, and the supreme court of that state has held that the examination after a plea of guilty to an indictment for murder, to ascertain the degree of the crime, is not a trial, and the legality of the inquiry was sustained. People v. Noll, 20 Cal. 164. And in People v. Lennox, 67 Cal. 118, it was held that a plea of guilty in a prosecution for murder is a waiver of trial by jury.

But, whatever may be the rule elsewhere, in this state all legislative power is, by the Constitution of 1851, vested in the General Assembly, (sec. 1, art. 2,) subject, of course, to any limitations that may be found in other parts of that instrument. It is only necessary, therefore, in order to determine whether in any particular instance the General Assembly has transcended its power, to inquire (1) if the act is, in its essential character, legislative; and, (2) if so, whether it is prohibited by the Constitution; and if it is found to be legislative in its nature, and not prohibited by the Constitution, it must be held to be within the power of the General Assembly. The power to clothe the courts of the state with jurisdiction to hear and determine causes is in its character legislative; and, as we have already seen, there is no constitutional prohibition against vesting in the court of common pleas the power to examine witnesses, and ascertain the degree of the crime, where, in an indictment for murder, the defendant enters a plea of guilty. Therefore it necessarily follows that the proceeding, whether it possesses the essential attributes of a trial or not, authorized by the provisions of section 7816, Rev. Stat., now under consideration is constitutional and valid.

Judgment affirmed.

CALIFORNIA SUPREME COURT.

R. T. DUNLAP, Recept.,

v.

John STEERE, Appt.

(.....Cal.....)

A suit in equity will lie to set aside a judgment quieting title to real estate which was taken by default after notice by publication where defendant had no actual notice of the action until the time for making a defense therein had elapsed and plaintiff had no title to the property but knowingly set out a false statement of cause of action in his complaint and in the affidavit for publication.

(December 14, 1891.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for Los Angeles County in favor of plaintiff and from an order denying a motion for a new trial in an action brought to quiet title to real estate and to annul a judgment which had adjudged the title to be in defendant. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinions.

Messrs. Wells, Monroe & Lee, for appellant:

The judgment roll in Steere v. Dunlap, No. 8281, of the superior court of the county of Los Angeles, which is in evidence, works an estoppel in favor of the defendant in this case.

Equity will not take cognizance on the same grounds of the very point which a court of competent jurisdiction in the case has considered and decided.

Sweetman v. Stratton, 74 Tex. 76; Simpson v. Hart, 1 Johns. Ch. 91, 1 L. ed. 70; Ross v. Wood, 70 N. Y. 11; Greene v. Darling, 5 Mason, 207.

A decision of a court of competent jurisdiction is res adjudicata.

Simpson v. Hart, supra; Beecher v. Bennett, 11 Barb. 881; Greenup v. Orooms, 50 Ind. 419; Shepardson v. Cory, 29 Wis. 89.

NOTE.—Relief from judgments rendered on publication of process.

The statute authorizing constructive service usually provides that a defendant against whom a judgment is rendered upon such service may apply within a certain period to open the same and make his defense under certain restrictions. Applications for relief under these statutes are not included here.

Where it appears from the judgment roll that the judgment is void by reason of defective publication of process, the judgment will be set aside on motion at any time. People v. Greene, 74 Cal. 400, (in this case fourteen years after entry of the judgment). People v. Pearson, 78 Cal. 400 (eleven years). See People v. Harrison, 84 Cal. 607.

Where the judgment is void by reason of a defective order for the publication of process, it may be vacated upon motion after the expiration of the term at which it was rendered, when the rights of third parties have not intervened. Park v. Higbee (Utah) July 12, 1890.

Where the judgment is not void on its face it will not be vacated upon motion, after the time limited by statute, but a separate action must be resorted to. People v. Harrison, supra; People v. Goodhue, 80 Cal. 199. Hanson v. Hanson (Cal.) March 11, 1889, although not mentioned in People v. Harrison, 84 Cal. 607, is in effect overruled by it on this point.

Equitable jurisdiction to cancel and set aside or restrain judgments and decrees of any court which have been obtained by a fraud practiced upon the court and the losing party, is well settled and familiar. Pom. Eq. Jur. 2d ed. § 819.

16 L. R. A.

Where a husband by falsely representing that his wife's residence was unknown, obtained an order for publication of process in an action for divorce and by willfully depriving her of actual notice and opportunity to defend secured a judgment of divorce, equity will annul such judgment (Johnson v. Coleman, 28 Wis. 452), or it will be set aside on motion. Everett v. Everett, 60 Wis. 200.

Equity will relieve against a judgment and grant a recital, where it was fraudulently procured by publication of process and concealed from the defendant until the time fixed by statute for opening a judgment so obtained has elapsed. Clark v. Ellsworth (Iowa) Feb. 3, 1892.

Equity will grant relief against a judgment in an attachment suit obtained by a creditor against his nonresident debtor upon service by publication and compel a restoration of property held by the creditor by virtue of a sale under such judgment, where it appears that jurisdiction of the person of the debtor could have been easily obtained or actual notice of the suit given him, but that the intent of the creditor was, by keeping the debtor in ignorance of the suit, to prevent a defense and thus get a judgment upon an outlawed claim. Herbert v. Herbert (N. J.) Oct. 26, 1891; Herbert v. Herbert, 47 N. J. Eq. 11.

The New York statute fixing the time within which a defendant, "except in an action for divorce" may come in and defend, where service of summons was by publication, does not deprive the court of power to open a judgment by default in a divorce case where service is by publication but places such judgment on the same footing as one rendered upon personal service of process. Brown v. Brown, 58 N. Y. 609.

J. G. G.

Where a court has jurisdiction ejusdem generis, its judgment in any case is not void, because its invalidity cannot appear without an inquiry into the facts; an inquiry which the court itself must be presumed to have made, and which will not therefore be permitted to be reviewed collaterally.

Fisher v. Bassett, 9 Leigh, 119, 33 Am. Dec. 232; Brittain v. Kinnaird, 1 Brod. & B. 482; Grignon v. Astor, 48 U. S. 2 How. 819, 11 L. ed. 283; Wyatt v. Steele, 26 Ala. 649; Stoddard v. Johnson, 75 Ind. 30.

It must be conclusively presumed that the pleadings and evidence sustained the judgment and the judgment having passed it must be executed, unless it be an absolute nullity upon its face, by reason of showing affirmatively a want of jurisdiction.

Dickson v. Wilkinson, 44 U. S. 3 How. 61, 11 L. ed. 493; Robbins v. Bacon, 1 Root, 548; Vredenburg v. Snyder, 6 Iowa, 89.

Equity will not entertain a bill to set aside a void judgment.

Chipman v. Brown, 14 Cal. 158; Logan v. Hillegas, 16 Cal. 200; Murdock v. De Vries, 87 Cal. 527; Gates v. Lane, 49 Cal. 266.

Where the court of original jurisdiction has decided the jurisdictional fact, the order and judgment based upon it will be valid until reversed by an attack by some direct proceeding. It cannot be questioned collaterally.

Little v. Chambers, 27 Iowa, 523; Forbes v. Hyde, 81 Cal. 848; Ligars v. California S. R. Co. 76 Cal. 618.

Nowhere throughout the complaint has plaintiff averred that he has a defense to the claim upon which the judgment which he seeks to set aside was rendered, and inasmuch as such an averment is necessary to give a court of equity jurisdiction for the purpose of setting aside a judgment, the complaint states no cause of action for the purpose of setting aside a judgment.

Rolan v. Springer, 58 Ark. 80; Osborne v. Gehr, 29 Neb. 661; Freem. Judgm. § 498; 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1864, note 1; Colson v. Leitch, 110 Ill. 504; Gregory v. Ford, 14 Cal. 188, 73 Am. Dec. 639; Taggart v. Wood, 20 Iowa, 236; Secor v. Wood, 8 Ala. 500; Saunders v. Abritton, 37 Ala. 716.

Where fraud is relied upon for the purpose of impeaching and setting aside a judgment, it must be an intentional concealment or intentional act of fraud, done for the purpose of misleading and taking an undue advantage of the opposite party.

Ward v. Southfield, 3 Cent. Rep. 196, 102 N. Y. 287; Verplanck v. Van Buren, 76 N. Y. 247; Hunt v. Hunt, 72 N. Y. 217, 28 Am. Rep. 129; Ross v. Wood, 70 N. Y. 8; Smith v. Nelson, 62 N. Y. 286; Bigelow, Fraud, ed. 1888, p. 87; Freem. Judgm. § 844; United States v. Throckmorton, 98 U. S. 61, 25 L. ed. 93.

The complaint does not suggest fraud, and without it the facts in the sheriff's return and the affidavit of Steere must be taken as true, and so taken, they gave the court jurisdiction even if false.

Taylor v. Lewis, 2 J. J. Marsh. 400, 19 Am. Dec. 135; Thomas v. Ireland, 88 Ky. 581; Sargeant v. Ct. App. v. George, 5 Litt. 199.

The judgment debtor is precluded by the judgment of the court from calling in question 16 L. R. A.

the sufficiency of the publications, and the affidavits on which they are based.

Essig v. Lower, 120 Ind. 239; Jackson v. State, 1 West. Rep. 269, 103 Ind. 250; Evansville, I. & C. S. L. R. Co. v. Evansville, 15 Ind. 395; Riley v. Waugh, 8 Cush. 220; Cooper v. Sunderland, 8 Iowa, 114, 66 Am. Dec. 52; Henderson v. Brown, 1 Cal. 92, 2 Am. Dec. 164; Vail v. Owen, 19 Barb. 22; Youngman v. Elmira & W. R. Co. 65 Pa. 278; Sheldon v. Wright, 5 N. Y. 497.

The judgment in Steere v. Dunlap must be held to include an adjudication that the taxed deed was valid.

Marion County Comrs. v. Welch, 40 Kan. 767; Freem. Judgm. § 830; Bradford v. Bradford, 5 Conn. 127; Gates v. Preston, 41 N. Y. 118.

The acts for which a court of equity will, on account of fraud, set aside or annul a judgment or decree between the same parties, rendered by a court of competent jurisdiction, have relation to frauds, extrinsic or collateral to the matter tried by the first court, and not to a fraud in a matter upon which the decree was rendered.

Re Griffith, 84 Cal. 107; Perkins v. Waksham, 86 Cal. 580; Allen v. Currey, 41 Cal. 321; Amador Canal & Min. Co. v. Mitchell, 59 Cal. 176; Edle v. Hazen, 61 Cal. 380; Zellerbach v. Allenberg, 67 Cal. 298; Mastick v. Thorp, 29 Cal. 447; Boston v. Haynes, 83 Cal. 82; Phelps v. Peabody, 7 Cal. 52; Pico v. Cohn, 18 L. R. A. 336, 91 Cal. 129.

A mistake or ignorance of law is not sufficient to authorize the setting aside of a judgment taken against a party through his mistake, excusable neglect, etc.

Skinner v. Terry, 107 N. C. 103.

Messrs. Chapman & Hendrick, for respondent:

If a judgment has been obtained through fraud, mistake, or accident, and the defendant in the action, having a valid defense on the merits, has been prevented from maintaining it by fraud, mistake, or accident, and there has been no negligence on his part, equity will grant relief against it.

3 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1864, and note 1, p. 400.

When the remedy by motion is lost by lapse of time, without the laches of the party, equity will freely grant relief although a new trial would have been granted or the judgment vacated in the court in which it was begun upon motion.

Guy v. Ide, 6 Cal. 101.

There are many cases which show that where there is a judgment by default, without personal service or actual notice of the pendency of the action, a meritorious defense and the lapse of such time as to preclude the remedy by motion are all that is necessary to show in a bill in equity for relief against the judgment.

Gregory v. Ford, 14 Cal. 141; Gibbons v. Scott, 15 Cal. 286; Logan v. Hillegass, 16 Cal. 201; Peterson v. Weissbein, 65 Cal. 42; Farrington v. Brown, 65 Cal. 320; Harnish v. Bramer, 71 Cal. 155; Freem. Judgm. 3d ed. § 100.

De Haven, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The action is one in equity, and is in effect to set aside a former judgment between the parties, wherein the alleged title of the defendant herein to the land described in the complaint was quieted as against all claims of the present plaintiff. The findings of the court below show that this judgment was obtained by default, and upon a service of the summons therein by publication, and that the present plaintiff had no knowledge of the pendency of that action, or of the rendition of said judgment, until more than one year after its date. The court also finds, and the evidence is sufficient to sustain these findings, that in point of fact the plaintiff here was the owner of the property involved in that action, and that not only was the defendant here without title, but that he knew that the allegations of the complaint filed by him for the purpose of obtaining the judgment referred to were wholly false. The question, therefore, presented, is whether a judgment thus obtained is beyond the reach of successful attack in a court of equity. The legal effect of this judgment, if permitted to stand, is to divest plaintiff of all title to his property, in favor of one who has succeeded by a compliance with the mere forms of law in obtaining such judgment, and that, too, without the knowledge of plaintiff, and therefore when it was morally impossible for him to defeat it. We think the plaintiff is entitled to the relief which he asks, not only upon authority, but upon the plainest principles of justice. "In general, it may be stated that in all cases where, by accident or mistake or fraud or otherwise, a party has an unfair advantage in proceedings in a court of law, which must necessarily make that court an instrument of injustice, and it is therefore against conscience that he should use that advantage, a court of equity will interfere, and restrain him from using the advantage which he has thus improperly gained." Story, Eq. Jur. § 885. In order to justify the application of this rule, it must appear not only that the judgment against which relief is sought is unjust and unconscionable in itself, but that the person against whom it was rendered was not guilty of negligence in omitting to make his defense in the original action. The facts as found by the court below bring this case fully and clearly within the operation of the rule of equity just cited. In the first place the defendant practiced a fraud upon the court, as well as the defendant, in procuring the order for the publication of the summons in the action referred to. Under section 412 of the Code of Civil Procedure, a plaintiff is entitled, under certain circumstances, to procure such an order; but, in order to be so entitled, he is required by that section to first present to the court or judge, either in the form of a verified complaint or an affidavit, a statement of facts showing that a cause of action exists in his favor against the defendant. Such an affidavit was presented in this case, but it necessarily results from the findings of the court that not only was the defendant's affidavit false in this respect, but that defendant knew that it was false. An affidavit of this character is always ex parte. The absent defendant is not present to impeach it, and if it is sufficient in form the court cannot disregard it, but is compelled to accept its statements as true, and make the order which is demanded. Under such circumstances a plaintiff who seeks to avail himself of the statutory mode for a constructive service of summons must at least exercise good faith in his representations to the court or judge. He must at least believe that the affidavit which he presents is true. The presentation of a willfully false affidavit for the purpose named is itself an act of fraud; and when the judgment which rests upon it is itself unconscionable, and was obtained without the knowledge of the defendant therein, it should be set aside.

It is claimed, however, that the fraud here complained of is concluded by the judgment itself; that whether the defendant had a good title to the land in controversy was the very matter involved in the former action, and the judgment therein is conclusive upon the plaintiff; and in support of that the case of United States v. Throckmorton, 98 U. S. 61, 25 L. ed. 93, and other similar cases, are cited. But the rule there announced is only applicable where the former judgment was the result of a trial between the parties, or where the one against whom the judgment was rendered had actual notice of the pendency of the action, and neglected to submit his proofs. The case of United States v. Throckmorton was one where a retrial was sought of a case which had been once fully tried, and can have no kind of bearing here, where the plaintiff never had his day in court, or any opportunity to make his defense to the false and fraudulent claim upon which the judgment against him was based. Not having any knowledge of the pendency of that action, it was an absolute impossibility for him to protect his rights therein, and his failure to defend was not a negligent omission on his part. It is this difference in the cases which brings the plaintiff here within the protection of the exception to the general rule which was acted upon in United States v. Throckmorton, supra, and the existence of which exception was not only admitted in the opinion of the court in United States v. Throckmorton, but was applied in the later case of United States v. Minor, 114 U. S. 238, 29 L. ed. 112. In the case of Adams v. Secor, 6 Kan. 542, it was held by the supreme court of that state that a judgment based upon a false and fraudulent claim should be set aside where the defendant therein had only been served by publication, and did not have actual notice of the pendency of the action. In the case of Tomkins v. Tomkins, 11 N. J. Eq. 512, the court, while refusing relief upon the facts before it, recognized the justice of relieving a defendant from an unjust judgment obtained without his knowledge. It is there said: "The usual ground upon which a court of equity refuses to interfere with a judgment is because the defendant should have protected himself in the court where the judgment was obtained. In a case like the present, of foreign attachment, where the proceeding is in rem, and the judgment is obtained without the knowledge of the defendant, and the proceedings are all necessarily ex parte, it would be hard, indeed, if this court could not interpose to protect a party against the fraud of the plaintiff. The propriety of this court's interfering in such cases is too obvious to require its vindication." In the case of Irvine v. Leyh, 102 Mo. 200, 209, the supreme court of Missouri states what we deem the true rule to be applied here. After referring to the case of United States v. Throckmorton, supra, the court says: "The principle thus so strongly stated in the cases cited proceeds upon the ground that the party had an opportunity to appear and interpose the defense in the suit in which the judgment complained of was rendered. The cases before cited are those in which the defendant in the first suit appeared, or had actual notice of the suit, and might have interposed the fraud as a defense. In all such cases the issues made by the pleading, or which might have been made, are justly regarded as settled and merged in the judgment, leaving collateral matters only open to investigation. But in our opinion the rule of the cases cited cannot be applied in all of its strictness to a case where the defendant has been brought in by newspaper notice only, and had no actual notice of the suit, and as a consequence had no real opportunity to defend. The rule must be applied to those cases where the reason upon which it is founded admits of its application. But to entitle the plaintiffs to the relief which they asked and procured in the case, it is not enough for them to simply show that Leyh had no valid cause of action against them. They must at least show that the claim was founded upon or conceived in fraud, and that the machinery of the law was resorted to for the purpose of enforcing what was known to be a fraudulent demand." The facts found by the court here fully satisfy the rule as held in the case just cited. That rule, it seems to us, gives to one obtaining a judgment against another without a trial, and without his knowledge, sufficient protection. Its application to the facts of this case must result in an affirmance of the order appealed from.

Appeal from judgment dismissed; order denying motion for new trial affirmed.

We concur: Sharpstein, J.; Harrison, J.

Beatty, Ch. J.:

I concur. It appears that Dunlap was, without any fault of his own, deprived of the opportunity of interposing a perfect defense to the action of Steere v. Dunlap, and it is alleged in the complaint herein, and found by the court, not only that the allegations of the complaint in the former action were untrue, but that Steere at the time knew they were false. The evidence is sufficient to sustain this finding, at least so far as the complaint in the former action counted upon a title by prescription; but there is nothing to show that Steere in fact knew that his tax-title was void, though such knowledge is by the law imputed to him. The case, then, presents these features: Steere sues Dunlap upon a claim which he knows to be false. He obtains an order for publication of summons based upon the two grounds that Dunlap has departed from the state, and cannot after due diligence be found within the state. His affidavit is in itself sufficient to justify a finding that these grounds exist; and a judgment entered upon Dunlap's default, after publication of summons, is not void, and cannot be set aside upon motion unless the motion is made within a year. Code Civ. Proc. § 473. Can it, then, be annulled by suit in equity after the year? I think it clear, on principle, that in a case where no rights of innocent third parties are involved a judgment so obtained ought to be set aside upon the ground that it was fraudulently obtained; the fraud consisting in taking a default judgment upon a claim made in bad faith against a defendant who, without any fault on his part, is prevented from interposing a perfect defense. The findings of the superior court, therefore, which are supported by the evidence, are themselves sufficient to support the judgment; and the order denying defendants' motion for a new trial should be affirmed.

McFarland, J.:

I dissent, and concur in the opinion of Commissioner Vanciel, prepared in department, a copy of which is hereto attached; and I desire to say further that, in my opinion, there is no sufficient evidence to support the latter part of the following finding of the court: "And the said John Steere was not then the owner of the said property, nor any part thereof, and had no right, title or interest of any sort therein, all of which he well knew." In Steere's complaint in the original action, he first averred ownership and possession of the land, and afterwards also averred adverse possession in himself and grantors for five years; and it fully appears that he relied upon paper title founded on a certain tax-deed, as well as upon adverse possession,—if, indeed, he introduced any evidence at all about adverse possession, which does not appear. In the present action, Dunlap avers that the only claim which Steere had was a certain tax-deed, which he sets out in full in his complaint together with the certificate of purchase which preceded it, in order to show that it did not, in law, convey title; the contention being that the deed, although good on its face, did not accomplish its purpose, because it did not follow the recitals of the certificate, and the recitals of the certificate showed an irregularity in the assessment. Assuming this to be the law, the attack upon Steere's deed is, at least, extremely technical; and it does not support the finding of fraudulent personal intent against him, viz., that "he well knew" that "he had no right, title, or interest of any sort" in the property described in his deed. The only other evidence tending to support the said finding relates to Steere's possession; and, assuming that it shows a want of adverse possession, under the views above expressed, there was no warrant for the general finding that he well knew that he had no right or interest of any sort. There are other reasons, why, in my opinion, the former judgment should not be disturbed, but I consider further discussion unnecessary.

The following is the opinion of Vanclef, C., in department:

"Action to quiet plaintiff's title to two lots in the town of Santa Monica, in the county of Los Angeles, and for this purpose to annul a former judgment of the same court between the same parties as to the same lots, and to enjoin its execution. Judgment passed for the plaintiff, and the defendant appeals from the judgment, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial. The judgment was rendered September 24, 1888, and the appeal from it was taken July 18, 1890, and should, therefore, be dismissed; but the appeal from the order was taken within sixty days from the time the order was made.

"The principal question, and the only one that need be considered, is, Was the former judgment conclusive of the rights of the parties to the land in question? This question arises on the appeal from the order by defendant's exception to the sufficiency of the evidence. The former action was by the present defendant, Steere, against the plaintiff here, to quiet the alleged title of Steere to the lots in question; and the judgment therein was rendered against the defendant (plaintiff here) by default. The service of summons in that action having been made by publication, it is contended that the affidavit upon which the order of publication was made is defective and untrue in material particulars. The following is a copy of that affidavit: 'John Steere, being duly sworn, says: That he is the plaintiff in the above-entitled action. That the complaint in said action was filed with the clerk of said court on the 25th day of June, 1884, and summons thereupon issued. That said action is brought to obtain a decree of said court quieting the plaintiff's title to that certain tract or parcel of land lying and being situate in the county of Los Angeles, state of California, and particularly described as lots X and W, in block 193, in the town of Santa Monica, as designated on the map of said town. That in said decree it be declared and adjudged that plaintiff is the owner of said premises, and that the defendants, or either of them, have no estate or interest whatever in or to said land and premises. And affiant further says that said plaintiff is the owner in fee of said premises, and said plaintiff and his grantors have been for more than five years continuously in the open, notorious, and adverse possession of said premises claiming the same adversely to all the world. That the defendants claim some interest in said premises adverse to plaintiff, but the said claims of defendants are without any right whatever, and that the said defendants, or either of them, have no right, title, or interest in said land or premises, or any part thereof. Reference is had to the verified complaint of plaintiff on file herein, in which the cause of action is fully set forth. That said defendant R. T. Dunlap, cannot, after due diligence, be found within this state. That the said R. T. Dunlap has departed from this state, and cannot after due diligence, be found within this state, and this affiant, in support thereof, states the following facts and circumstances: That the summons which was issued in said action was given to the sheriff of Los Angeles county, and said sheriff made diligent search for said defendant, R. T. Dunlap, but could not find him, and said sheriff informed affiant that he did not know where said defendant Dunlap was or where he could be found; that affiant has searched for said defendant, R. T. Dunlap, and has inquired of a great many of the citizens and residents of Los Angeles county—among them, M. B. Boyce, Wm. Flores, and John Milner—as to the whereabouts of said defendant, R. T. Dunlap, and as to his residence; that each of said persons so inquired of informed affiant that they did not know where said defendant, Dunlap, was, where he resided, or where he could be found; that said M. B. Boyce claims to be the agent of said R. T. Dunlap, but even he informed this affiant that he did not know where said Dunlap was, or where he could be found; that affiant does not know where said R. T. Dunlap resides, where he is, or where he can be found; that affiant has made diligent inquiry to find said defendant, but cannot, after due diligence, find him within this state; that this affiant therefore says that personal service of said summons cannot be made on said defendant, R. T. Dunlap, and prays for an order that service of the same may be made by publication. John Steere.' The order of publication was in the usual form, requiring the summons to be published two months in a proper newspaper, and it was published as required by the order. More than one year after the rendition of the former judgment the defendant (plaintiff in this action) moved the court in which it was rendered to set it aside, and for leave to answer, upon his affidavit, stating substantially the same facts alleged in his complaint herein. This motion was denied, and no exception was taken to the order denying the same, and no appeal has been taken therefrom. As one of the express objects of this action is to set aside the former judgment, and to enjoin its execution, that judgment is fully set out in the complaint, and the judgment roll in that action was introduced as evidence in chief by the plaintiff. The defendant also pleaded the former judgment as a bar to this action.

"1. It appears that the former action was commenced by H. K. S. O'Melveny, as attorney for plaintiff, and that his name was indorsed on the summons as attorney for plaintiff; that before the order of publication was made an order substituting Messrs. Wells, Van Dyke & Lee as attorneys for plaintiff was made; but that the summons was published as originally issued, with the name of O'Melveny indorsed thereon as attorney for plaintiff. It is contended by respondent that the name of Wells, Van Dyke & Lee should have been indorsed on the summons as published, and that the omission so to indorse them is a fatal defect in the publication. The provision of the Code requiring the name of plaintiff's attorney to be indorsed on the summons relates to the summons as issued by the clerk, and was complied with in this case. As there is no requirement that the names of attorneys afterwards substituted for or added to the original attorney for plaintiff shall be indorsed on the summons, I think the summons was properly published in the form in which it was issued.

"2. No other defect in the form or substance of the affidavit is pointed out by counsel, and none is perceived; but it is alleged that the statements therein that Dunlap had departed from this state, and that, after due diligence, he could not be found within this state, are not true; and the court so found. The only evidence to sustain this finding is the testimony of the plaintiff, Dunlap, to the effect that, although he departed from this state in 1879, he returned to Inyo county, in this state, in the spring of 1881, where he openly and publicly resided and worked as a miner and farmer from that time until 1887; that he never during that time saw the newspaper in which the summons was published, nor had any actual notice of the publication of summons, or of the pendency of the former suit; that he left Mr. Boyce in charge of the lots when he departed from the state, but did not inform Boyce that he intended to leave, or where he was going; and that he never communicated with Boyce or any other person in Los Angeles county during his absence until 1887. This testimony has no tendency to prove that the affidavit was not made in good faith. The affidavit is sufficient to show that, 'after due diligence,' Dunlap could not be found 'within the state.' This, with the other facts therein stated, justified the order of publication. Code Civ. Proc. § 412; Forbes v. Hyde, 81 Cal. 348; Ligare v. California S. R. Co. 76 Cal. 610. The publication of the summons according to the order was service of it upon the defendant, having the same effect as if served by either of the other modes prescribed by the Code, (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 413, 416), except that in case of service by publication alone the defendant, on a proper showing, may be allowed to answer to the merits of the action at any time within one year after the rendition of the judgment. Id. § 478. After the expiration of one year the judgment by default, upon service of summons by publication, is just as conclusive as if it had been rendered upon personal service, and will not be opened or set aside by a court of equity except on the ground of fraud, accident, mistake, or surprise by which, without any fault or negligence on his part the defendant was prevented from making a meritorious defense. United States v. Throckmorton, 98 U. S. 68, 25 L. ed. 96; Zellerbach v. Allenberg, 67 Cal. 298; Amador Canal & Min. Co. v. Mitchell, 59 Cal. 179; Mastick v. Thorp, 29 Cal. 448; Boston v. Haynes, 33 Cal. 32; Phelps v. Peabody, 7 Cal. 52. Upon a sufficient affidavit the court found and determined that the defendant in the former action could not, 'after due diligence, be found within the state,' and so recited in the order of publication. This judicial determination of the fact is conclusive as against the mere testimony of the plaintiff that he was in Inyo county in this state at the time the former action was commenced, and when the order of publication was made, and that in his opinion personal service might have been made upon him there by the exercise of due diligence. There is no pretense that the plaintiff in the former action knew or had any reason to believe that the defendant was in Inyo county. Nor is there any evidence tending to prove that the acts of diligence stated in the affidavit were not performed, or to show fraud or bad faith on the part of the plaintiff in that action in procuring the order of publication. Nor is there any averment or evidence of any mistake, accident, or surprise, in the legal sense of those terms, by which the plaintiff herein, without fault or negligence on his part, was prevented from making his defense in the former action. That service of summons by publication is proper in an action to quiet title to land in this state was expressly decided in the late case of Perkins v. Wakeham, 86 Cal. 580.

"It follows that, for aught that appears by the record in this case, the former judgment is conclusive evidence that the appellant is the owner of the lots in question, and that the findings of the trial court to the contrary are not justified by the evidence. I think the appeal from the judgment should be dismissed, that the order denying a new trial should be reversed, and a new trial granted."

Paterson, J.:

I dissent on the ground that the evidence does not justify the decision.

I recognize the correctness of the rule stated in the cases cited by Mr. Justice De Haven; but, to make it applicable, it should clearly appear from the evidence that the party charged with fraud deliberately commenced and prosecuted his action with the intent to defraud his adversary, and knowing that his claim was baseless in law and in fact. In this case the evidence, in my opinion, fails to show that the defendant, in prosecuting his action against Dunlap, acted in bad faith. His complaint was filed on June 25, 1884. Summons was issued on the same day, but the affidavit for publication was not made until February 7, 1885. This does not show great activity on the part of Steere in attempting to consummate the fraud with which he is charged. No wrong can be predicated upon the fact that the summons was published in the Weekly Censor. The judge decided the question as to the paper in which the summons should be published. The default of the defendant in that action was entered on May 18, 1885. This action was not commenced until November 30, 1887. Mr. Dunlap testified that he left Boyce in charge of the property at Santa Monica, as his agent, in January, 1878. There was a house on the property at the time, and the land was fenced. Plaintiff testified, also, that he received rent for the property only one year, and the reason why he made no inquiries about it was because he had lost the address of Boyce. This is a singular excuse, and shows great negligence. The town of Santa Monica is so small that probably every man in the town knows every other inhabitant thereof; and it would have been easy to discover the whereabouts of his agent, if he had made any inquiry. Boyce testified that the plaintiff left the property in his charge to sell, and meantime to collect the rents; that the last time he saw Dunlap was in January, 1878; that Steere took actual possession of the property, and made improvements on the house, in the fall of 1885. He testified further that Steere called upon him several times, and inquired very earnestly where Dunlap could be found; that he came to see about getting service on him; that Steere was inclined to push matters, and that he (Boyce) was a little indifferent about the matter; that Steere claimed to have a tax-deed for the property, and asked him (Boyce) how soon he could hear from Dunlap, and that he told him he thought he would hear from him in three, four, or five weeks, probably. Milner, under whom Steere claims, paid the taxes on the property for the years 1879-80, 1880-81, 1882-83, 1883-84; and, when the defendant purchased from him, he repaid the amount of taxes which Milner had thus paid. Milner's certificate of sale from the tax collector was dated March 4, 1879. The evidence is entirely consistent with the theory of the good faith of Steere in the prosecution of his suit. The circumstances show that he believed himself to be the owner of the land. He paid a valuable consideration for the tax-title, and he and his grantor paid the taxes assessed upon the land every year, except two, after 1878. If he had desired to perpetrate a fraud upon Dunlap, it is not at all probable that he would have importuned Boyce so often to discover the very fact which would have effectually prevented him from making the affidavit, and procuring the order for publication. It is said that it must be presumed he knew his tax-deed was invalid. I do not think any such presumption should be indulged; but, if it can, it certainly is not sufficient to convict him of a willful and deliberate attempt to defraud, when it is admitted or appears that he paid a valuable consideration for the tax-title, and endeavored in good faith to give the defendant in the action personal notice of the claim set up. The worst construction that can be fairly put on the conduct of Steere is that he had a doubt as to the validity of his title, and sought the aid of the court to settle the matter in his favor. This he had the right to do. He knew that plaintiff was claiming through his agent the right of possession, and to collect the rents. There is no evidence that any one ever advised Steere that his tax-deed was invalid. Probably not one man in a thousand, outside of the profession, would have known that the deed was void. The question of ownership, and the question whether one has held adverse possession, are questions so mixed with law that a statement in relation thereto by a layman should not be regarded with great strictness.

I concur: Garoutte, J.

RHODE ISLAND SUPREME COURT.

Charles U. COTTING, Exr., etc., of Mary M. Bourne, Deceased,

v.

Anna D. DESARTIGES et al.

(..... R. L.)

- 1. The law of the domicil of the donor of a power given by will must govern as against the law of the domicil of the donee in determining whether or not the will of the latter is an execution of the power.
- 2. The establishment by express statute both in England where a will was made and in New York where the testator was domiciled of the rule that a general devise is sufficient to execute a power of appointment cannot prevail in respect to a trust fund held under the will of the donor whose domicil was in Rhode Island as against the contrary rule which in the absence of a statute prevails in the latter state.
- 3. An intent to execute a power of appointment does not appear in a will which makes no reference to the power although the bequests somewhat exceed the amount of the testator's estate and his relations with the donor are so intimate as to raise a presumption that he knew of the power.

(March 23, 1892.)

BILL in equity by Charles U. Coting for instructions as to the disposition of the residuary estate which had been given by Mary M. Bourne, deceased, to Charles Allen Thorndike Rice, for life, and which remained after his death.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. William P. Sheffield and John E. Parsons as trustee of Mrs. Bourne's estate.

Messrs. H. B. Closson and John E. Parsons, for complainant, as executor of Rice:

According to the rules formerly prevailing in England and built up by various decisions of their chancery courts chiefly since our Revolution, Mr. Rice's will is not upon its face a sufficient execution of the power.

4 Kent, Com. p. 834; Blagge v. Miles, 1 Story, 426.

2 Chance, Powers, § 1597, states that it appears quite clear, however, at this day [1881], and a reference to the authorities will, it is apprehended, show that it has been considered clear for nearly two centuries, that the rule is not thus confined. Indeed, it may well be asked why, admitting that the intention can be discovered to pass all, the intention should not prevail in the one case as well as in the other. What rule of law or construction would be thereby violated?

NOTE.—For note on execution of power to appoint by will, see Patterson v. Lawrence (Ga.) 7 L. R. A. 143.

For note on what law governs wills, see Cook v. Winchester (Mich.) 8 L. R. A. 82.

16 L. R. A.

The will must be construed with reference to the condition of testator's estate at the time of his death.

Wigram, Wills, § 108; O'Hara, Wills, § 7; Gold v. Judson, 21 Conn. 616.

It is immaterial whether or not Mr. Rice at the time when he made his will knew of the existence of the power of the appointment.

The will speaks the testator's wishes and intentions at the time of his death. Whatever the language required to execute the power, if the will contains it the power is executed, and the relative dates of the creation of the power and the execution of the will are wholly immaterial.

Boyes v. Cook, L. R. 14 Ch. Div. 53; Redf. Wills, § 80, fol. 14, p. 387; 1 Jarman, Wills, *676, Bigelow's note; Stillman v. Weedon, 16 Sim. 26; Livingston v. Gordon, 84 N. Y. 136.

The question, What constitutes a sufficient execution of a power of appointment? is an open one in Rhode Island, and in this case the court is free to announce which rule is the law of this state.

See Phillips v. Brown, 6 New Eng. Rep. 710, 16 R. I. 279.

The court is enabled therefore, in announcing the rule to be followed here, to range itself on what is now on all hands admitted to be both the right and the victorious side in one of the most interesting struggles known to the law.

At a time subsequent to the American Revolution, prior to which time the law had been much more liberal, there were made in the English chancery courts a series of decisions which resulted in establishing for the first time the rule that a will was a good execution of a power only when the power or the subject of the power was referred to in explicit terms.

In 1837 an Act of parliament declared that a general residuary devise should, in the absence of anything to indicate a contrary intention, be held to have been intended to execute a power of appointment as well as to dispose of what alone was technically the testator's own property. The Act has been since followed with the utmost liberality of construction.

Boyes v. Cook, L. R. A. 14 Ch. Div. 53; Coffield v. Pollard, 3 Jur. N. S. 1203; Patch v. Shore, 2 Drew. & S. 589; Hodsdon v. Dancer, 16 Week. Rep. 1101.

In most of the states in which the courts declared themselves irremediably committed to the early English rule, the Legislatures came to their relief with statutes similar to the Act of parliament (1 Vict. chap. 26, § 27) already referred to.

It was in Massachusetts that the most interesting and successful struggle against the English doctrine took place.

Judge Story, sitting in the federal courts, had in the oft-cited case of Blagge v. Miles, 1 Story, 426, been disposed to bow to the weight of the English decisions.

In the Massachusetts courts, however, the 16 L. R. A. question did not arise until Amory v. Meredith, 7 Allen, 397, and the court, in an elaborate opinion, refused outright to acknowledge the doctrine of the English cases to be the law of Massachusetts, and since that time in a most interesting series of decisions, has without any assistance from the Legislature, firmly established the law of Massachusetts on the subject of powers to be as liberal as that of England or New York to day.

In Connecticut alone it has happened that there having been an early case, in which, as the court said in a later one, "the rule was enforced without protest," and which the court, when in the later case the question came up for discussion reluctantly felt itself bound to follow, the Legislature has so far neglected to interpose its relief.

And even in this case (Hollister v. Shaw, 46 Conn. 248), the decision to adhere to the earlier one was by three judges only of the five, the other two dissenting.

The following are some of the authorities which are relied upon to substantiate the foregoing statements:

1 Vict. chap. 26, § 27; Boyes v. Cook, L. R. 14 Ch. Div. 53; Re Comber, 11 Jur. N. S. 969; Re Mason's Will, Id. 885; Earle v. Barker, 11 H. L. Cas. 280; Wilkinson's Trust, L. R. 8 Eq. 487, L. R. 4 Ch. App. 587; Hawthorn v. Shadden, 8 Sm. & G. 293; Stillman v. Weedon, 16 Sim. 26; 1 N. Y. Rev. Stat. 731, § 126; White v. Hicks, 33 N. Y. 383; Hutton v. Benkard, 92 N. Y. 295; Mott v. Ackerman, Id. 539; Van Wert v. Benedict, 1 Bradf. 114; Hawkins, Wills, 2d ed. p. 27, Sword's note; Aubert's Appeal, 1 Cent. Rep. 105; 1 Jarman, Wills, p. 676, Bigelow's note; 1 Redf. Wills, § 21, pl. 82, p. 271; Schouler, Wills, § 526; Willard v. Ware, 10 Allen, 263; Sewall v. Wilmer, 132 Mass. 181; Oumston v. Bartlett, 149 Mass. 243; Punk v. Eggleston, 92 Ill. 515, 84 Am. Rep. 186; Andrews v. Brumfield, 33 Miss. 108; Bredell v. Collier, 40 Mo. 287.

It must be by the law of New York, the testator's domicile, that his will must be construed to determine what was his intention in regard to the execution of the power.

1 Jarman, Wills, 5th Am. ed. p. 2, Bigelow's note; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 671; Lapham v. Olney, 5 R. I. 415; Enochin v. Wylie, 10 H. L. Cas. 1; Ford v. Ford, 70 Wis. 19.

The execution of a power of appointment which is sufficient according to the law of the testator's domicile is sufficient everywhere.

D'Huart v. Harkness, 11 Jur. N. S. 633; Re Alexander, 6 Jur. N. S. 354; Ela v. Edwards, 16 Gray, 92; 1 Redf. Wills, § 300, pl. 25, *411; Story, Conf. L. 9th ed. p. 655, § 473, note a.

Messrs. Francis B. Peckham, Middleton S. Burrill, John E. Burrill and George Zabriskie for respondents, heirs of Mrs. Bourne.

Stiness, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The complainant, trustee under the will of Mary M. Bourne, late of Newport, deceased, brings this bill, practically a bill for instructions, for the distribution of the trust fund, and the case is submitted on bill, answer, and proofs. The will was dated September 30, 1879, and admitted to probate in Newport, January 16, 1882. The testatrix bequeathed one sixth of her residuary estate to the complainant in trust for the benefit of her grandson Charles Allen Thorndike Rice during his life, and upon his decease to transfer and pay over the same to his issue, if he should leave any, as he should appoint "by will, or instrument in the nature thereof, executed in the presence of three or more witnesses; and, if he leaves no issue, to and among such persons, and upon such uses and trusts, as he shall so appoint;" and, in default of such appointment and issue, to and among those who should then be heirs-at-law. The grandson died in New York, May 16, 1889, without issue, leaving a will executed in England, September 17, 1881, which was duly probated in New York, where he was domiciled at his death. The will did not specifically dispose of the trust fund, which was subject to Mr. Rice's appointment, nor make any mention of it. The complainant is both trustee under the will of Mrs. Bourne and executor of the will of Mr. Rice. In the latter capacity he claims the right to receive and distribute the fund, as one which passes by appointment to the legatees under Rice's will. On the other hand, the heirs of Mrs. Bourne contend that there is a default of appointment, and so, under her will, the fund goes to them. The issue now raised, therefore, is whether there has been an execution of the power by the general residuary clause of Mr. Rice's will. Upon this issue our first inquiry must be by what law the execution of the power is to be determined. It is admitted that both in England, where the will was executed, and in New York, where the donee of the power was domiciled, there are statutory provisions to the effect that a general devise or bequest will include the property over which the testator has power of appointment, and will operate as an execution of such power, unless an intention not to execute the power shall appear by the will. If, therefore, the question is to be determined either by the law of England or New York, the power has been executed. Clearly, the mere accident that Mr. Rice's will was executed in England while he was temporarily there awaiting a steamer cannot control its operation by impressing upon it the law of the place where it was made. It was neither the domicile of the testator, nor the situs of the property nor the forum where the question comes for determination. Caulfield v. Sullivan, 85 N. Y. 158. The property in dispute being personal property, which, strictly speaking, has no situs, the question must be decided either by the law of New York, the domicile of the donee of the power, or of this state, the domicile of the donor. The will is a Rhode Island will. It disposes of property belonging to a resident of Rhode Island. The trustee under the will is, in effect, a Rhode Island trustee, and jurisdiction over the trustee and the fund is here. The fund in question belonged to Mrs. Bourne, and never belonged to Mr. Rice. True, he had the income from it for life, and power to dispose of it at death,—practically the dominion of an owner,—and yet it was not his.

The fund, then, being a Rhode Island fund, disposable under a Rhode Island will, it follows, naturally and necessarily, that the fact of its disposition must be determined by Rhode Island law. The question is not what intent is to be imputed to the will of Mr. Rice, but what intent is to be imputed to the will of Mrs. Bourne. She authorized a disposition of her property by an appointment, and it is under her will that the question arises whether an appointment has been made. Her will is to be adjudged by the law of her domicile. So far as assumptions of intent may be made, it is to be presumed she intended the appointment to be made according to the law of her domicile, and not by the law of New York or England, or any other place where the donee of the power might happen to live. It is not the fact of Mrs. Bourne's ownership of the property, which points to the law of this state as the criterion, but the fact that her will is the controlling instrument in the disposition of the property. Precisely this question arose in Sewall v. Wilmer, 182 Mass. 181, where Judge Gray remarked that the question is singularly free of direct authority. In that case a Massachusetts testator gave to his daughter a power of appointment of certain property. The daughter lived in Maryland, where she died leaving a will devising all her property to her husband, but making no mention of the power. In Massachusetts this was an execution of the power, but in Maryland it was not; and the question arose, which law should govern? It was held that the will of the father was the controlling instrument, and hence that the law of his domicile was to apply. The same decision was made in Bingham's App., 64 Pa. 845, which is cited in Sewall v. Wilmer with approval. In England, also, it has been held that the validity of the execution of a power is to be determined by the law of the domicile of the donor of the power. Tatnall v. Hankey, 2 Moore, P. C. 842; Re Alexander, 6 Jur. N. S. 854.

The principle on which these cases proceed is that to which we have already alluded, viz., that the appointer is merely the instrument by whom the original testator designates the beneficiary, and the appointee takes under the original will, and not from the donee of the power. The law of the domicile of the original testator is therefore the appropriate test of an execution of a power.

The case of D'Huart v. Harkness, 84 Beav. 824, 828, apparently holds the contrary, but, we think, only apparently. In that case property was held under an English will, with power of appointment, by will, in a woman domiciled in France. She died leaving a holograph, which was valid as a will in France, but not in England. Under the Will Act, it was admitted to probate in England, as a foreign will, which gave it all the validity of an English will. The probate in England was held to be conclusive that it was a good will, according to English law; and, being a will, it executed the power. The case was really decided by the law of England. While there are numerous decisions upon the general rule that a will is to be governed by the law of the testator's domicile, such decisions are not to be confounded with the present question,—which testator is the one to be considered in the case of a testamentary power? We know of no case which applies the law of the domicile of the donee of the power without reference to that of the donor. For these reasons we think the law of the domicile of the donor of the power should control, and hence that the law of Rhode Island must govern in this case.

What is the law of Rhode Island relating to the execution of a power? In Phillips v. Brown, 16 R. I. 279, 6 New Eng. Rep. 710, the general rule of construction, laid down by Kent, both as to deeds and wills, that if an interest and a power coexist in the same person, an act done without reference to the power will be applied to the interest, and not to the power, was examined and followed. The same rule was also followed in Grundy v. Hadfield, 16 R. I. 579, and in Brown v. Phillips, 16 R. I. 612. In Matteson v. Goddard (R. I.) Index, HH. 98, it was held that a general residuary clause in a will did not execute a subsequently created power of appointment. While those cases are not decisive of this one, the reasoning upon which they rest is equally applicable, viz., where nothing appears to show an intent to execute a power the court cannot infer an intent to do so. This was the almost uniform rule prior to the adoption of statutes upon this subject. In New York and in England it was thought that the rule often defeated the intention of testators, who probably intended to dispose of everything they had power to dispose of; and so Acts were passed which carried property over which one had a power of appointment, by a general gift of his own property, unless an intention not to execute the power appeared. We do not see that the reason upon which such statutes are based is conclusive. It is equally open to conjecture that one who means to execute a power will signify in some way an intention to do so. If a computation could be made, it would doubtless appear that in the execution of powers a large majority of wills make proper reference to the power. The statute gives an arbitrary direction, against which, it seems to us, the reason is stronger than for it. The rule already recognized in this state is as applicable to wills as to deeds, and, in our opinion, it should be so applied. The same rule is laid down in Mines v. Gambrill, 71 Md. 30; Hollister v. Shaw, 46 Conn. 248; Funk v. Eggleston, 92 Ill. 515; Bilderback v. Boyce, 14 S. C. 528; and cases cited in our previous opinions.

The same rule also prevailed in England, New York, and Pennsylvania prior to the passage of statutes. In Massachusetts alone was a contrary rule adopted by the court. The law, therefore, has been practically uniform, except as it has been changed by statutes. It is urged that these statutes show a tendency of opinion which the court should follow by adopting the rule of the statutes. The opportunity to make law is alluring, but it tempts beyond the judicial path. As our province is to declare law, rather than to make it, we deem it our duty to adhere to the rule which is commended to us by reason and precedent, until, as elsewhere, it shall be changed by legislative authority. If such a rule be the wiser one, the Legislature can enact it; but, outside of a statute, it is hard to see upon what ground a court can decree an intention to execute a power, when in fact no such intention is in any way evinced.

Applying to this case, then, the rule that to support an execution of a power something must appear to show an intent to execute it, we come to the inquiry whether such an intent appears. To solve this, we must look to the will itself, and not to extrinsic facts, except as they enter into and give color to the will. In the will there is no reference to the power, but it is urged that an intention to execute the power is to be inferred from its contents and the circumstances of its execution. It is claimed that Rice's relations with his grandmother were so intimate as to raise a presumption that he knew the contents of her will, especially in view of the fact that his bequests exceeded the amount of his own estate. Rice's will was made at Liverpool, pursuant to a suggestion from the complainant that, owing to the will of his grandmother, he ought not to cross the ocean without making his will. He received $625,000 outright under his grandmother's will, besides the income of one sixth of the residuary for life, with the power of appointment. If he knew of this power, it is most natural that he would in some way have referred to it. If he knew the amount absolutely bequeathed to him, or expected a large bequest, it would account for all the legacies in his will. After he knew of the power of appointment, he did not change his will. Perhaps his mind so dwelt upon the legacy of $625,000 that he gave no thought to a possible appointment of one fifth of that amount in the residuary clause; or perhaps, after hearing of the power, he intended some time to make a disposition of it. But, however it was, he gave no sign as to the power. The fact that at the time of his death his estate was somewhat less than his bequests is not significant; for evidently he was not a close financier, and gave little heed to the depreciation of his estate. The deficiency, however, is not so marked as to raise a presumption in favor of the execution of the power, even if we could properly look to that fact for that purpose. This and several other interesting legal questions have been raised and ably presented upon the point of intention, but we do not deem it necessary to pass upon them, inasmuch as we do not find from the facts any sufficient or satisfactory evidence of an intention to execute the power. We therefore decide that the fund in question did not pass so by appointment under the will of Mr. Rice, and therefore belongs to the heirs of Mrs. Bourns, according to the terms of her will.

Decrees accordingly.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT.

Theodore S. NICHOLS et al., Appts.,ANN ARBOR & YPSILANTI STREET
R. CO.

(.....Mich.....)

1. Mere usurpation of corporate authority to construct a street railway will not entitle an abutting owner to maintain an injunction suit to prevent such construction.
2. On the question whether or not a railway operated by a steam motor in a public street is an additional burden which an abutting owner may enjoin, the court is divided, two in the affirmative, two in the negative, and one holding that it is not settled.
3. Compensation must be made to the owner of the fee before a railway can be constructed along a highway by cutting and filling, using ties and T-rails, and leaving a ditch on each side so as to practically block up for ordinary uses the portion of the highway where it is located.

(July 28, 1891.)

APPEAL by complainants from a decree of the Circuit Court for Washtenaw County in favor of defendant in a suit brought to enjoin the laying of rails in the street in front of complainants' premises unless compensation was made to them for the taking of their rights therein. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. A. J. Sawyer, for appellants:

Where a compliance with the statute is a condition precedent to the formation of the corporation, then a corporation does not exist until it has complied with the statute, and the court will not recognize it as a corporation.

New York Cable Co. v. New York, 6 Cent. Rep. 56, 104 N. Y. 1.

No authority to form a corporation can be derived from a statute of this nature until the conditions upon which the authority is offered by the state have been complied with.

2 Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 737; 1 Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 57; New York Cable Co. v. New York, supra; Mansfield C. & L. M. R. Co. v. Drinker, 80 Mich. 124; Peninsular R. Co. v. Tharp, 28 Mich. 506; Tuttle v. Michigan A. L. R. Co. 35 Mich. 247; Atty-Gen. v. Hanchett, 42 Mich. 436; Doyle v. Mizner, 42 Mich. 332; Burton v. Schilddach, 45 Mich. 504; Mok v. Detroit Bldg. & Sav. Asso. No. 4, 30 Mich. 511.

The dedication of a street to the public does not authorize it to be used for an ordinary railroad track, and the municipal representation cannot authorize it to be so used without compensation to adjacent owners.

Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Heisel, 38 Mich. 62, 47 Mich. 893, 81 Am. Rep. 306; Reidinger

NOTE.—For notes on the right of abutting owners to damages for interference with their right of access to streets, see Egerer v. New York Cent. & H. R. Co. (N. Y.) 14 L. R. A. 331; Selden v. Jacksonville (Fla.) 14 L. R. A. 370.
16 L. R. A.

v. Marquette & W. R. Co. 62 Mich. 29; Reichert v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 51 Ark. 490; Imlay v. Union Branch R. Co. 26 Conn. 249; Nicholson v. New York & N. H. R. Co. 23 Conn. 73, 56 Am. Dec. 890; Indianapolis, B. & W. R. Co. v. Hartley, 67 Ill. 439, 16 Am. Rep. 624; Kucheman v. C. O. & D. R. Co. 46 Iowa, 866; Gray v. First Division of St. Paul & P. R. Co. 13 Minn. 315; Phipps v. Western Maryland R. Co. 66 Md. 319; Chamberlain v. Elizabethport S. C. Co. 41 N. J. Eq. 43; Williams v. New York Cent. R. Co. 16 N. Y. 97, 69 Am. Dec. 651; Lawrence R. Co. v. Williams, 35 Ohio St. 163; Ford v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 14 Wis. 609; Southern Pac. R. Co. v. Reed, 41 Cal. 256.

If the track runs in the traveled track of the highway, and is made to conform to the grade of the street, and its ties and timbers are beneath the surface of the road, and its iron is on a level with the surface of the highway, then, in its mode of construction, it is a street railway.

C. L. §§ 8552, 8553.

The purpose is to operate this road, and it is operated with a steam motor, drawing trains of cars, running at twenty miles an hour, making regular hourly trips of sixteen to twenty miles each. We submit that does not come within the lines of a street railway, but is a steam commercial railway in all the essential features which constitute a commercial railway an increased burden.

East End Street R. Co. v. Doyle, 88 Tenn. 747; Strange v. Hill & W. D. St. R. Co. 54 Iowa, 669; Stanley v. Davenport, Id. 463; Lahr v. Metropolitan Elec. R. Co. 6 Cent. Rep. 371, 104 N. Y. 268; Hot Springs R. Co. v. Williamson, 136 U. S. 121, 34 L. ed. 355.

An injunction is proper to restrain the continuous unlawful use of complainant's land by a railroad company until it has paid the damages.

Murdock v. Prospect Park & C. I. R. Co. 73 N. Y. 579; Riedinger v. Marquette & W. R. Co. 62 Mich. 29.

Mr. B. M. Thompson for appellee.

Long, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The bill is filed in this cause to restrain and enjoin the defendant from placing ties and laying rails, and operating its railway, over and along the complainants' land, situate in the public highway, and running cars and trains of cars propelled by steam, or any other motive power, upon said highway, along and in front of complainants' premises. The bill sets forth substantially that two of the complainants reside in the township of Ann Arbor, Washtenaw county, and the complainant, Lucy L. Granger, resides in Bay City; that they are the children and only heirs-at-law of Erasmus D. Nichols, deceased, who was the owner in his lifetime of certain lands situate in that township, having a frontage on the highway of about 40 rods, and that complainants, as such heirs-at-law, are the owners of said lands; that on the 30th day of August, 1890, the defendant railway company filed in the office of the secretary of state a paper purporting to be the articles of association of the Ann Arbor & Ypsilanti Street-Railway Company, and that said company purposed to run a railroad from Ann Arbor to Ypsilanti, upon and along the south side of the public highway between said cities, called the "Ann Arbor & Ypsilanti Road," and that it has graded along the south side of said road from the terminus of said road, in the city of Ypsilanti, to the city limits of the city of Ann Arbor, and is laying the ties and railroad track or iron thereon, excepting a few rods along and in front of premises owned by one John A. Bohnet in the township of Pittsfield, and the premises of the complainants, which lie adjacent to the city of Ann Arbor; that said grading and placing ties, and laying of the iron, is on the south side of said highway nearly the whole distance, except from what is known as the stone school-house to the limits of said city of Ann Arbor, over which last distance it is on the westerly side of said highway; that said grading along the line of said highway comes within three or four feet of the fence on the south and west sides of the same; that said defendant has completed the construction of said road, except along the premises of the complainants and said Bohnet, and purposes and intends, when the same is completed, to run trains of cars thereon, drawn by steam-engines, for the purpose of conveying passengers and freight upon and along and over said railway.

Complainants show by their bill, and charge, that the defendant, under its articles of association, if the same are valid, has the right to use on said railroad an engine or motor to be operated by steam; that under the said articles, if the same are legal and binding, the said company is not only permitted to carry passengers, but is authorized to use the said road for the transportation of freight and property. The complainant, Theodore S. Nichols, shows and charges in the bill that one William Campbell, claiming to act for the defendant or some other corporation, applied to him for his consent and permission to build its said road upon and along said highway, and that he signed some paper which was then and there presented to him by the agent of said company, giving his consent to the building of some railway; but avers that the said agent falsely and fraudulently represented to him that the proposed road was simply a street railway, and that the motive power to be used thereon was to be either electricity or animal power; and, in reliance upon the statements so made by the agent of the defendant, he subscribed the paper presented to him, the contents of which he is now unable to state, but avers that by reason of said false and fraudulent representations the said paper is and of right ought to be null and void, and of no binding force and effect whatever. The complainants Ella E. Nichols and Lucy L. Granger charged that they have given the defendant no consent or permission to construct and operate said railway in said highway in front of their premises, and that said railway has obtained no lawful consent of the supervisor and commissioner of highways of said township, but that the same was obtained upon false and fraudulent representations; that the motive power to be used by said street-railway company was to be either animal or electricity, and that therefore, whatever consent was given by said commissioner or supervisor was of no binding force or effect whatever; that the paper purporting to give the consent of said supervisor and commissioner does not in any particular comply with the statute requiring the consent of the supervisor and commissioner; and that the acts and doings of the defendant, as set forth, have been done without warrant of law, and are not only an invasion of the rights of the complainants, but are also an unlawful appropriation of the public highway for railroad purposes; that the statute under which said pretended company was organized is no longer in force, and that there is no statute in this state which authorizes the formation of any such corporation as the said defendant claims to be; that the defendant, as a corporation, has no legal existence, and has no right to enter upon any of the highways of this state, and build thereon a railroad of any description; that the paper purporting to be the consent of said supervisor and commissioner to build said road was not executed in accordance with any action theretofore taken by the township board of said township, nor was the same made and executed at any meeting of said township board. Complainants claim by their bill that the construction and operation of said railway will cause a serious and lasting damage and injury to the said real estate, and that the corporation is not personally responsible for any judgment for damages; that the location of said track within two or three feet of the road fence, upon the west line of said highway, makes it necessary for them, in order to get into their fields or to their houses and barns situate thereon, to cross the track of said railway; that their houses front upon said highway, and are only a distance of ninety feet from the line of said highway, and that it will be impossible to hitch horses or other animals in front of their said premises without danger of their being killed or injured by the cars of the defendant; that the construction and operation of said railway will largely decrease the value of their real estate, and, if allowed to be constructed and put into operation, will occasion them irreparable injury to their use of the road over which said railway runs; that they are forced to come to Ann Arbor or Ypsilanti to market all the produce and crops from said farm; that the only highway over which they can pass to either city is this highway, and, if defendant is permitted to complete the construction and continue the operation of said road along said highway, it will be and remain a continuous cause of injury and damage to the complainants, and a permanent obstruction in said highway, and an object of fright to their teams while engaged in marketing their produce and crops from said farm; that the construction and operation of said railroad will decrease the value of complainants' property at least $3,000. Complainants further charge that the defendant intends to proceed at once to the construction of said road along said highway, and to place thereon ties and railroad iron, and to run over and upon the same steam-engines and cars for the transportation of passengers and freight thereon, drawn by steam-engines, as often as one train every hour.

Defendant demurred to part of this bill, and answered as to the remainder. The causes of demurrer are: (1) That it appears upon the face of the bill that the defendant has been and is duly incorporated. (2) That this court has no jurisdiction in the cause to hear and determine the question of the incorporation of the defendant.

By way of answer, the defendant admits that it has graded its road-bed from a point in the city of Ypsilanti near the Michigan Central Railroad to the south boundary line of the city of Ann Arbor; that all of said road within the city of Ypsilanti is completed, and nearly the whole of said road from Ann Arbor to Ypsilanti has been tied and ironed, and is now ready to be operated as a street railway. The defendant denies by its answer that its said railroad is in any correct sense a commercial railroad for the transportation of passengers and freight upon which ordinary steam-engines operate, and passenger-cars are to be used and operated, and says it is strictly and simply a street railroad for the conveying of passengers to and from the cities of Ann Arbor and Ypsilanti and intermediate points, and that the insertion in its articles of incorporation of authority to carry freight was designed merely to authorize defendant to carry light articles of merchandise for the benefit and accommodation of its passengers and others who may desire to have light articles of merchandise, purchased in Ann Arbor or Ypsilanti, transported to their homes in said city, or on the line of said road; that the motor to be used on said road is no larger than a street-railway car, makes a less noise in operation than the electric car with overhead wires, emits little or no steam or smoke, and is as unobjectionable in every way as an ordinary street railway propelled by animal power. Defendant further claims by its answer that it has obtained the right to use said highway from the proper authorities; that it has also obtained a right of way from all the persons owning land upon the said highway on the south and west sides thereof, except for a distance of about 40 rods across lands owned by one John A. Bohnet; that it admits that it obtained said right of way for the construction and operation of a street railway, and not for a commercial road. Defendant further says by its answer that it obtained the right of way and consent to construct and operate its said road in said highway across the lands described in said bill as complainants' lands from the said complainant, Theodore S. Nichols, and it denies that in obtaining such consent and right of way it made any false representations whatever to said Theodore S. Nichols; that said complainant, Theodore S. Nichols, in 16 L. R. A. giving the defendant such right of way and consent to construct and operate its said road, did so without restriction or limitation as to the rights of any other person who was an owner of said premises in common with himself; and that under and by virtue of such consent and right of way so given by the complainant, Theodore S. Nichols, it has a right of way for the construction and operation of its said road as to all of the complainants. The defendant denies by its answer that the construction and operation of said road will cause any damage whatever to the lands in said bill of complaint, but says that they will be greatly increased in value by the construction and operation of said road. Defendant further claims that it has expended in grading its road, tying and ironing the same, or become liable for, over $50,000, and that all of such expense has been incurred by the defendant, acting upon the consent and agreement of the said Theodore S. Nichols, giving defendant the right of way across the premises described in the bill, and that, unless it is permitted to complete and operate its said road, it will thereby suffer great loss and damage, and that said loss and damage will amount to over $10,000.

The testimony in the case was taken in open court before his honor, Judge Peck, then sitting in that court, who, upon the conclusion of the case, entered a decree dismissing complainants' bill, but without prejudice to the right of the complainants to proceed in an action for damages. From this decree complainants appeal.

The defendant corporation was organized under chapter 94, How. Ann. Stat. Its articles of association recite that the corporators desire to become incorporated under the provisions of chapter 94, How. Ann. Stat., being Act No. 148, Sess. Laws 1855, as amended by Act No. 91, Pub. Acts 1871, entitled "An Act to Provide for the Construction of Train Railways," as added to by Act No. 14, Sess. Laws 1861, as amended by Act No. 188, Sess. Laws 1867, which provides for "the incorporation of persons for the constructing, owning, maintaining, and operating of train railways or roads for the conveyance of persons or property to be operated by horse or other animal power, or by electric or other motive power, or by any combination of them, or by steam, as shall be determined by the board of directors, and for the purpose of constructing and operating railways through the streets of any town or city in this state, and to fix the duties and liabilities of such corporation."

Chapter 94, as it originally stood prior to the amendments, was Act No. 148, Sess. Laws 1855. As it originally was passed, it provided for the incorporation of train railway companies. In 1861, the Legislature, by Act No. 14 of that session, so amended the chapter that it provided for the organization of companies under the Act to construct and operate railways in and through the streets of any town or city within the state. The Act was again amended in 1867 by adding three new sections, to stand as sections 38, 39, and 40. Act No. 188, Sess. Laws 1867. By section 40 it was provided "that cars on the street railway of any company organized under this Act may be operated by steam, or by any power other than animal power, whenever the municipal authorities of the city where such railway is situated shall authorize the same."

The question of the incorporation of street railways under this Act came before this court in Taylor v. Bay City Street R. Co. 80 Mich. 79, and in Detroit City R. Co. v. Mills, 85 Mich. 634. In the last-named case the constitutionality of this chapter and the several amendments was questioned, and the Act upheld. We shall not, therefore, discuss the constitutional questions raised as to the Act, or the proper and legal organization of the defendant company. If the defendant company is not legally and properly organized under the Act, or if the company is attempting to exercise corporate franchises not conferred by the Act, it is a matter between the defendant company and the state. The mere usurpation of corporate authority does not confer upon an individual the right to bring suit, to restrain an unlawful exercise of authority. If the state chooses to waive it, or permit the action, no others can complain, so long as personal or property rights of the individual are not invaded or affected.

The two principal questions raised by complainants' counsel are: (1) That the use of steam as a motive power is an additional burden or servitude upon their lands. (2) That the mode or manner of construction of the road-bed constructed by the defendant company is also an additional burden or servitude upon their lands.

The testimony shows that the motor used is what is known as "Porter's Noiseless Motor;" that it is operated by steam, and inclosed like an ordinary street-car, and about the same size, and makes less noise than an ordinary electric street-car with overhead wires. It is so arranged that the steam makes a continuous circulation, making no noise by emission of steam, and that the smoke is consumed. It was held in Detroit City R. Co. v. Mills, supra, that an ordinary street railway is not an additional burden or servitude where the fee of the street is in the abutting owner, and there is almost a consensus of judicial opinion in this direction. People v. Kerr, 27 N. Y. 188; Clinton v. Cedar Rapids & M. R. R. Co. 24 Iowa, 455; New Albany & S. R. Co. v. O'Daily, 18 Ind. 353; Dill. Mun. Corp. 723. It was also held in that case by this court that the use of electricity as a motive power did not create an additional servitude or burden upon the lands of the abutting owners. The manner in which the road of the defendant company is to be operated by the use of this steam-motor, as it is, is no more of a burden or servitude upon the lands of the abutting owners than an electric car with its overhead wires. It is no more obstruction to the street, and no more of an object calculated to frighten horses passing and repassing upon the highway. Section 40, Act 1867, above quoted, expressly provides for the use of steam as a motive power upon street railways operated in cities, whenever the municipal authorities authorize it.

16 L. R. A.

In Briggs v. Lewiston & A. Horse R. Co., 79 Me. 363, 4 New Eng. Rep. 546, the use of steam as a motive power upon street railways was expressly recognized. We think the complainants are not entitled to the relief asked for by their bill, by reason of the use of steam as a motive power in the manner in which it is shown the defendant used it. It appears that before the defendant company was organized a company known as the "Ann Arbor, Ypsilanti & Detroit Street-Railway Company" had procured from the township board of the township of Ann Arbor the right and privilege to construct, maintain, and operate this street railway by reason of permission granted to it in writing by the supervisor and commissioner of highways of that township, granting permission and right to locate, establish, construct, and maintain its road over that highway, and to use thereon animal, motor, or electric power. Some question is raised by complainants' solicitor in this record as to the authority thus granted. Without entering upon that question at length, it is sufficient to say that we are satisfied that there was proper authorization by the township to construct, maintain, and operate this road by the defendant, and, unless the complainants are in some manner affected in their private and property rights, the defendant cannot be interfered with by them in the operation of its road.

The second question raises the important point in this case, and that is the manner or mode in which the defendant's road is constructed in and along the highway. A street railway, the rails of which are laid to conform to the grade of the surface of the street, and which is otherwise so constructed that the public is not excluded from the use of any part of the street as a public highway, carrying passengers, stopping at street crossings to receive and discharge them, is a street railway, whether it be operated by horses or electric power, or by steam-motor, such as is shown to be used by the defendant in this case. The testimony shows, however, that since issue was joined in this case, the defendant company has completed the construction of its road, which had been mostly completed at the time the bill was filed; that the road, as constructed, runs along upon the highway within two or three feet of the road fence upon complainant's land; that the roadbed does not conform to the grade of the street, nor pass over and along the surface of the ground next to the fence, but that the grade for the roadbed is made by cuts and fills. In some places the cuts are two feet in depth, and the fills as great. Ditches are dug along the side of the roadbed on either side. Upon the roadbed so constructed ties are placed to the number of from 2,000 to 2,800 to the mile. Upon these ties is placed a T-rail, such as is ordinarily used in the construction of a railroad for commercial purposes, except that the T-rail is somewhat lighter. The complainants claim that this is a use of their property not warranted by the Act under which the company is organized, and a taking of their private property for public uses without compensation; that it depreciates the value of their lands, in that they are unable to pass over from the highway to their lands without crossing this roadbed at great inconvenience; and that they are unable to hitch horses or other animals along the highway fence. The complainants' lands have a frontage on the highway of about forty rods. The Act under which the defendant is incorporated confers no powers upon it to construct, maintain, and operate such a road without compensation to the property owners abutting thereon, and the township authorities could confer upon the defendant no such power. It is from its mode of construction in all essentials a commercial road, and not an ordinary street railway. It is not constructed as street railways are usually constructed, on a level with the surface of the street, so that vehicles may pass and re-pass over it. As constructed, it blocks up the highway so far as the complainants' use of it is concerned in going to and from their premises, and is an additional burden upon their lands. The rule is well established in this state that the dedication of a street to the public does not authorize it to be used for an ordinary railroad track and the municipal authorities cannot authorize it to be so used without compensation to the adjacent owners. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Heisel, 38 Mich. 62, 47 Mich. 898, 31 Am. Rep. 306; Riedinger v. Marquette & W. R. Co. 62 Mich. 29. It was said by Mr. Justice Cooley in Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Heisel, supra: "A street railway for local purposes, so far as constituting a new burden, is supposed to be permitted because it constitutes a relief to the street; it is in furtherance of the purpose for which the street is established, and relieves the pressure of local business and local travel, instead of constituting an embarrassment. It is enough that the use of the street for a city railway is a proper use and therefore a lawful use." Brooklyn City & N. R. Co. v. Coney Island & B. R. Co. 35 Barb. 864; Brooklyn Cent. & I. R. Co. v. Brooklyn City R. Co. 33 Barb. 420; People v. Kerr, 27 N. Y. 188; New Albany & S. R. Co. v. O'Daily, 12 Ind. 551; Brown v. Duplessis, 14 La. Ann. 842; Elliott v. Fair Haven & W. R. Co. 82 Conn. 579; Hobart v. Milwaukee R. Co. 27 Wis. 194. Speaking further in that case, the learned justice said: "But we cannot say the same in the case of the ordinary railroad. In such case it cannot be questioned that the laying of the railroad track in the highway without first legally appropriating the land for the purpose, and without making compensation, is a legal wrong to the adjacent owner; the track to him is wrongfully laid."

In Riedinger v. Marquette & W. R. Co. supra, a bill was filed to restrain the defendant company from constructing a railroad over and across Front and Superior streets in the city of Marquette. The bill was dismissed in the court below, and complainants appealed to this court, where, upon a hearing, a decree was entered for perpetual injunction against this use of the street, unless within six months measures should be taken to condemn the complainant's rights in the street, and compensate them therefor. Defendant contends, however, that the complainant Theodore S. Nichols is estopped from making this claim by reason of a release of the right of way over complainant's premises. The writing is not put in evidence, and complainant contends that it was procured by fraudulent representations; that at the time of its execution the defendant company represented to him that they were to build a street railway similar to that in the city of Ann Arbor; and upon this understanding he consented to the construction of the road in front of his premises. We think the complainant borne out by this record in that claim, and that the complainants are not estopped from insisting upon their rights here to have a road—if one is to be built at all by defendant—such as was represented to him would be built; that is, an ordinary street railway, conforming to the grade of the street. In view of these facts as to the mode in which the road is constructed, we are satisfied that the complainants are entitled to the injunction prayed.

16 L. R. A.

The decree of the court below will be reversed, and decree entered in this court granting a perpetual injunction to the complainants, enjoining and restraining the defendant corporation from maintaining and operating its road in the manner in which it is constructed across the complainant's premises. Complainants will recover the costs of both courts.

Grant, J., concurred with Long, J.

Morse, J.: I think this case should be reversed, but I do not think that the law, as yet, has been settled in this state that an electric street railway is not an additional burden to the highway, and I am satisfied that a steam railway is such a burden. The injunction should be granted as prayed.

McGrath, J., concurred with Morse, J.

Champlin, Ch. J.: I concur in the reversal upon the ground stated in the opinion of Mr. Justice Long, but I do not concur in that part of the opinion which states that it is settled law in this state that a street railway, operated by steam or electricity, is not an additional servitude upon a street or highway.

Petition for rehearing and modification of opinion denied.

MINNESOTA SUPREME COURT.

George JOANNIN et al., Appts.,

v.

David OGILVIE et al., Repts.

(.....Minn.....)

*1. There may be duress with respect to real property as well as personal, so as to render a payment on account of it involuntary, so that the money may be recovered back.

2. So held where a party filed a mechanics' lien against property upon an unfounded claim which the owner paid under protest, in order to clear the title of record, so that he might consummate a loan upon the property which he had negotiated in order to raise money to pay a prior overdue mortgage and other pressing debts, he having no other available means of raising the money.

(May 20, 1892.)

APPEAL by plaintiffs from a judgment of the District Court for St. Louis County in favor of defendants, in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on a promissory note. Affirmed.

Defendants in their answer admitted the execution of the note and set up as a counterclaim that plaintiffs were indebted to defendant, Ogilvie, the principal debtor in the note, in a sum greater than the amount due on it, and stated as a ground for such indebtedness that Ogilvie was the owner of a lot of land in the City of Duluth, against which plaintiffs filed an illegal claim to a mechanics' lien; that because of the necessity upon defendant to clear up the title he paid the amount of the claim and that therefore he had a right to recover back the amount so paid. The trial court made the following finding of facts:

"1. That defendant, David Ogilvie, executed the note in words and figures set forth in plaintiffs' reply to defendant's answer, and that said note had the signature of defendant, F. H. Barnard, on the back thereof, when received by plaintiff. And that no part of the same has been paid.

"2. That said note was given for the sole and undivided debt of the defendant Ogilvie to the plaintiff, and that defendant, Barnard, received no consideration for his indorsement thereof and was in said transaction merely surety for Ogilvie.

"3. That the materials sold by the plaintiffs

*Head notes by MITCHELL, J.:

NOTE.—Duress by lien on real property.

The instances in which duress by exercise of authority over real estate is recognized are rare. One of the most common arises in cases of tax assessments and liens for a collection of authorities as to which, see State v. Nelson, 4 L. R. A. 300, and note, 41 Minn. 25.

The principal case presents a state of facts so peculiar that no similar decision has been discovered.

In Gates v. Dundon, 42 N. Y. S. R. 660, a contract for building a house was let to one who abandoned it before its completion. Persons who had furnished materials for it then threatened that if their to A. H. Thompson, which were used in the contracts of buildings of defendant, Ogilvie, were sold on the sole and individual credit of said A. H. Thompson, to be resold by him as retail dealer, and with no understanding on plaintiffs' part as to whom they were to be resold by said Thompson, or as to where they were to be used.

"4. That the said materials, furnished by Thompson to Ogilvie, were sold on open accounts, as called for, and at retail, with no understanding as to any particular price, or quantity to be sold, or time of delivery, or place in which they were to be used, and same were fully paid for by defendant, Ogilvie, prior to time of filing plaintiffs' lien statement, and without any knowledge on Ogilvie's part of any claim of plaintiffs on account of said material.

"5. That A. H. Thompson was neither contractor nor agent for defendant Ogilvie in the furnishing of any of said materials.

"6. That on January 31, 1890, plaintiffs filed in the office of register of deeds of St. Louis county a lien statement duly verified claiming lien against Lots 98 and 95, Block 47, Duluth proper third division for the said materials in the sum of $682.50 and interest thereon from November 25, 1889, at seven per cent per annum, said lien statement being fully set forth in the answer of defendant herein.

"7. That on or about March 19, 1890, defendant Ogilvie paid to the plaintiffs $698.50 for the purpose of procuring a release from the said records of said lien which sum was the full account of plaintiffs' claim.

"8. That defendant Ogilvie at the time of said payment was indebted in large sums of money to different persons on notes and accounts aggregating not less than $20,000. What accounts were not due had been extended for a short time, on promise of payment out of loans then being negotiated by Ogilvie on the property against which said lien was filed. Those premises were incumbered by a past-due mortgage for $10,000, the owner of which was threatening foreclosure on default of immediate payment.

"Other of Ogilvie's creditors were threatening suit. Ogilvie had no available means or property by which to meet these various demands, except the property against which the said lien was filed. Prior to the filing thereof Ogilvie had perfected arrangements and executed mortgages for permanent loans on said property in the total sum of $15,000, to be com-claims were not paid they would file liens against the building and that if they did so others would do the same which would embarrass the owner in procuring money to finish it. He therefore gave his note for the amount of the claim which in fact included materials used in other buildings. When suit was brought on the note a verdict was returned for defendant on the ground that the note was procured by duress and on appeal this verdict was permitted to stand.

For notes on what constitutes duress, see Shattuck v. Watson (Ark.) 7 L. R. A. 551; De La Cuesta v. Insurance Co. of North America (Pa.) 9 L. R. A. 631.

H. P. F.

pleted when title to the property appeared clear of incumbrance. Of these sums only $2,000 had been advanced thereon and further sums were refused to defendant until and unless the plaintiffs' lien should first be cleared from the records. Defendant could not get the money anywhere else. These permanent loans were the only available resources defendant had with which to meet his said obligations and avoid suits and foreclosures of his property.

"9. Defendant, Ogilvie, protested to plaintiffs against the payment of their claim as unjust, illegal, and groundless, and demanded release of their lien as aforesaid, and plaintiffs refused to release same unless their claim was first paid in full. Defendant never admitting the justice of plaintiffs' claim, but solely to avoid greater and threatened losses to his property interests, and serious financial injury to himself, paid the same.

"10. Plaintiffs knew before filing their lien statement that Ogilvie was negotiating loans on said property, and that the same were not at that time completed, and that Ogilvie could not complete the same while their lien was of record or without payment thereof.

"11. That as security for the payment of the said note of defendant to plaintiffs, defendant Ogilvie transferred to plaintiffs thirty shares of the capital stock of the Northwestern Investment Company, certificate No. 287, dated March 25, 1891, and same is held by plaintiffs and is of the value of three hundred (300) dollars.

"That defendant Ogilvie otherwise transferred to plaintiffs two shares of the capital stock of the St. Louis Investment Company, dated May 28th, 1891, as security for payment of said note, and said stock is held by plaintiffs, and is of the value of two hundred (200) dollars."

As conclusions of law the court finds:

"1. That plaintiffs' said claim of lien against lots 93 and 95, block 47, Duluth Proper, third division, as in answer set forth, was invalid, and that they had no just or legal claim against defendant, Ogilvie, or his property.

"2. That the payment of plaintiffs' claim by defendant Ogilvie, was made under such stress and necessity as amounted to compulsion and made it involuntary, and that he is entitled to recover back the money so paid, and to offset against plaintiffs' claim on their note, the said sum of $698.50, with interest thereon of seven per cent per annum from March 19th, 1890, and to have a judgment against plaintiffs for the sum of two hundred and sixty-four dollars, being the balance due after deducting the amount due on said note. Also for his costs and disbursements in this action, and for the cancellation of said note and the assignment and delivery to defendant, Ogilvie, of said stock, or for its value if not delivered on demand.

"3. Defendant, Bernard, is entitled to judgment against plaintiffs dismissing their action against him, and for his disbursements herein. "Let judgment be entered accordingly."

Messrs. John H. Brigham and H. P. Greene for appellants.

Mr. J. B. Richards for respondents.

Mitchell, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The findings in this case are so specific as to 16 L. R. A.

constitute a sufficient statement of the facts, and an examination of the record satisfies us that, on all material points, they are fully justified by the evidence. That plaintiffs' claim of a lien on the land of the defendant Ogilvie was wholly unfounded is conceded. Merriman v. Jones, 43 Minn. 29. Therefore the only question is whether the payment of the claim was voluntary, or whether it was made under such compulsion or constraint that it is to be deemed in law involuntary, so that the money may be recovered back. In examining the authorities upon the question as to what pressure or constraint amounts to duress justifying the avoiding of contracts made, or the recovery back of money paid, under its influence, one is forcibly impressed with the extreme narrowness of the old common-law rule on the one hand, and with the great liberality of the equity rule on the other. At common law, "duress" meant only duress of the person, and nothing short of such duress, amounting to a reasonable apprehension of imminent danger to life, limb, or liberty, was sufficient to avoid a contract, or to enable a party to recover back money paid. But courts of equity would unhesitatingly set aside contracts whenever there was imposition or oppression, or whenever the extreme necessity of the party was such as to overcome his free agency. The courts of law, however, gradually extended the doctrine so as to recognize duress of property as a sort of moral duress, which might, equally with duress of the person, constitute a defense to a contract induced thereby, or entitle a party to recover back money paid under its influence. And the modern authorities generally hold that such pressure or constraint as compels a man to go against his will, and virtually takes away his free agency, and destroys the power of refusing to comply with the unlawful demand of another, will constitute duress, irrespective of the manifestation or apprehension of physical force. The rule is that money paid voluntarily, with full knowledge of the facts, cannot be recovered back. If a man chooses to give away his money, or to take his chances whether he is giving it away or not, he cannot afterwards change his mind; but it is open to him to show that he supposed the facts to be otherwise, or that he really had no choice. Pollock, Cont. 556.

In Fergusson v. Winslow, 34 Minn. 384, this court held that "when one in order to recover possession of his personal property from another, who unjustly detains it, is compelled to pay money which is demanded as a condition of delivery, such payment, when made under protest, is deemed to have been made compulsorily or under duress, and may be recovered back, at least when such detention is attended with circumstances of hardship or of serious inconvenience to the owner."

Again, in De Graff v. Ramsey County, 46 Minn. 319, it was said: "There is a class of cases where, although there be a legal remedy, a person's situation, or the situation of his property, is such that the legal remedy would not be adequate to protect him from irreparable prejudice; where the circumstances and the necessity to protect himself or his property otherwise than by resort to the legal remedy may operate as a stress or coercion upon him to comply with the illegal demand. In such cases his act will be deemed to have been done under duress, and not of his free will."

Fergusson v. Winslow, supra; State v. Nelson, 41 Minn. 25, 4 L. R. A. 800, and Mearkle v. Hennepin County, 44 Minn. 548,—are instances where the danger of irreparable or serious prejudice was considered so great and the legal remedy so inadequate as to practically leave the party no choice but to comply with the illegal demand, and hence to render the payment involuntary. It may be stated generally that whenever the demandant is in position to seize or detain the property of him against whom the claim is made without a resort to judicial proceedings, in which the party may plead, offer proof, and contest the validity of the claim, payment under protest, to recover or retain the property, will be considered as made under compulsion, and the money can be recovered back, at least where a failure to get or retain immediate possession and control of the property would be attended with serious loss or great inconvenience. Oceanic Steam Nav. Co. v. Tappan, 16 Blatchf. 297.

As was said as long ago as Asiley v. Reynolds, 2 Strange, 915, "plaintiff might have such an immediate want of his goods that an action of trover would not do his business. Where the rule volenti non fit injuria is applied, it must be when the party has his freedom of exercising his will, which this man had not. We must take it he paid the money relying on his legal remedy to get it back again."

It has been said that, to constitute a payment under duress, "there must be some actual or threatened exercise of power possessed, or supposed to be possessed, by the party exacting or receiving the payment, over the person or property of the party making the payment, from which the latter has no other means of immediate relief than by advancing the money." Brumagim v. Tillinghast, 18 Cal. 265; Radich v. Hutchins, 95 U. S. 210, 24 L. ed. 409. Beyond these and similar statements of general principles, the courts have not attempted to lay down any definite and exact rule of universal application by which to determine whether a payment is voluntary or involuntary. From the very nature of the subject, this cannot be done, as each case must depend somewhat upon its own peculiar facts. The real and ultimate fact to be determined in every case is whether or not the party really had a choice,—whether "he had his freedom of exercising his will." The courts, however, by a gradual process of judicial exclusion and inclusion, have arranged certain classes of cases on one or the other side of the line. For example, payment of an illegal tax, in order to prevent issuing a warrant of distress in the nature of an execution, and upon which the party has no day in court or opportunity to defend, is held not voluntary. Such were the cases of Dakota County Comrs. v. Parker, 7 Minn. 267 (Gil. 207), and Preston v. Boston, 12 Pick. 7. So, also, the payment of an illegal demand in order to obtain possession of personal property detained otherwise than by judicial process, and where the immediate want of the property was so urgent that an action of replevin "would not do the owner's business."

16 L. R. A.

Such was the case of Fergusson v. Winslow, supra. Also the payment of an illegal tax in order to get a deed on record, as in the case of State v. Nelson, supra; or the payment of illegal fees in order to secure the exercise of its jurisdiction by the probate court in the administration and settlement of an estate, where the delay was liable to result in serious loss, as in the case of Mearkle v. Hennepin County, supra. On the other hand, it is well settled that the mere refusal of a party to pay a debt or to perform a contract is not duress, so as to avoid a contract procured by means of such refusal, although the other party was influenced in entering into it by his financial necessities. Such was the case of Cable v. Foley, 45 Minn. 421; also Miller v. Miller, 68 Pa. 486; Hackley v. Headley, 45 Mich. 569; Goebel v. Linn, 47 Mich. 489, 41 Am. Rep. 723, and Silliman v. United States, 101 U. S. 465, 25 L. ed. 987,—cited by plaintiff. It will be noted that in the last case referred to the party entered into the new contract, not for the purpose of obtaining possession of his property (the barges), but to secure payment of money due him from the government. So, also, the fact that a lawsuit is threatened or property has been seized on legal process in judicial proceedings to enforce an illegal demand will not render its payment compulsory, at least in the absence of fraud on the part of the demandant in resorting to legal process for the purpose of extorting payment of a claim which he knows to be unjust. The ground upon which this doctrine rests is that the party has an opportunity to plead and test the legality of the claim in the very proceedings in which his property is seized. Under this class fall the following cases cited by plaintiffs: Forbes v. Appleton, 5 Cush. 115; Benson v. Monroe, 7 Cush. 125, 54 Am. Dec. 716; Taylor v. Board of Health, 81 Pa. 78; Oceanic Steam Nav. Co. v. Tappan, supra. Also the payment of an illegal license to follow a particular business, where the party could not have been subjected to any penalties without judicial proceedings to enforce them, in which he would have an opportunity to contest the legality of the license, or where the license was exacted for a business the pursuit of which was not a natural right, but a mere privilege, which might be granted or withheld, at the option of the state. To this class belong the following cases cited by plaintiffs: Cook v. Boston, 9 Allen, 893; Emery v. Lowell, 127 Mass. 138; Mays v. Cincinnati, 1 Ohio St. 268; Custin v. Viroqua, 67 Wis. 814. The same has been held as to money paid under threats of distress for rent, in the absence of fraud or any other fact, except that no rent was due. The theory seems to be that the party's remedy is to replevin, and try the question of liability at law. Such was the case of Colewell v. Peden, 3 Watts, 327, also cited by plaintiffs.

But all these cases in which the payment was held voluntary are clearly distinguishable from the case at bar. The distinguishing and ruling fact in this case was the active interference of plaintiffs with defendant's property by filing the claim for a lien, which effectually prevented the defendant from using it for the purposes for which he had immediate and imperative need. It was this active interference with the property, and not the necessities financial condition of the defendant, which constituted the controlling fact. The latter was only one, and by no means the most important, of the circumstances in the case. Counsel for plaintiffs seems to assume that the filing of the claim for a lien was the commencement of a judicial proceeding for its enforcement, and therefore, within the doctrine of cases cited by him, that the subsequent payment of the claim was voluntary, because defendant might have interposed his defense in these proceedings. But this is clearly wrong. Filing a lien is in no sense the commencement of judicial proceedings. The only remedies open to defendant were either to commence a suit himself to determine the validity of plaintiffs' claim, or wait, perhaps a year, until the latter should commence a suit to enforce it. But with a large indebtedness hanging over him, an overdue mortgage on this very property upon which foreclosure was threatened, with no means to pay except money which he had arranged to borrow on a new mortgage which he had executed on this same property, $13,000 of which was withheld and could not be obtained until plaintiffs' claim of lien had been discharged of record, it is very evident that neither of the remedies suggested "would do defendant's business." He was so situated that he could neither go backward nor forward. He had practically no choice but to submit to plaintiffs' demand. Had it been goods and chattels which plaintiffs had withheld under like circumstances, there would be no doubt, under the doctrine of Fergusson v. Winslow, supra, but that the payment would be held to have been made under duress. But while filing the lien did not interfere with defendant's possession of the land, yet it as effectually deprived him of the use of it for the purposes for which he needed it as would withholding the possession of chattel property. It has been sometimes said that there can be no such thing as duress with respect to real property, so as to render a payment of money on account of it involuntary. But this is not sustained by either principle or authority. In view of the immovable character of real property, duress with respect to it is not likely to occur as often as with respect to goods and chattels. But the question in all cases is, Was the payment voluntary? and for the purpose of determining that question there is no difference whether the duress be of goods and chattels, or of real property, or of the person. Fraser v. Pendlebury, 81 L. J. C. P. 1; Pemberton v. Williams, 87 Ill. 15; Cloze v. Phipps, 7 Man. & G. 586; White v. Heylman, 84 Pa. 143; State v. Nelson, supra. Considerable stress is placed upon defendant's silence and apparent acquiescence for a considerable time after he paid plaintiffs' claim. This might have some bearing upon the question whether the payment was voluntary or involuntary; but if it was in fact the latter, and a cause of action to recover back the money accrued to defendant, it would be neither waived nor barred by his subsequent silence or delay in asserting his right of action.

Judgment affirmed.

16 L. R. A.

Frederick W. STEEG, Resp't.,

v.

ST. PAUL CITY R. CO., App't.

(.....Minn.....)

- *1. The servants of a street-car company who control the movements of its cars are bound to use due care in starting the same so as to allow passengers a reasonable opportunity to get safely on board, regard being had to the circumstances of each case.
2. Evidence held sufficient to warrant the submission of the case to the jury and to sustain the verdict rendered.

(June 10, 1892.)

APPEAL by defendant from an order of the District Court for Ramsey County overruling its motion for a new trial after verdict in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by the negligence of defendant's servants. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Henry J. Horn for appellant.

Mr. O. E. Holman, for respondent:

As a carrier of passengers for hire the defendant was bound to exercise the highest degree of care and diligence consistent with the nature of his undertaking, and it is responsible for the slightest neglect.

Smith v. St. Paul City R. Co. 32 Minn. 2.

A carrier must allow his passengers a reasonable time in which to get on and off; and a person who is feeble or infirm is entitled to more than the ordinary time for this purpose, taking into account also the distance and other difficulties of access to the vehicle. As soon as a passenger has fairly entered the vehicle the carrier may start, without waiting for him to reach a seat, unless there is some special reason for doing so, as in the case of a weak or lame person, or of a passenger on the outside of a coach. The carrier must also use prudence in starting, and not set off with a sudden and violent jerk.

2 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. 4th ed. § 508.

The instruction was proper.

2 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. §§ 508, 520; Nichols v. Sixth Ave. R. Co. 38 N. Y. 131, 97 Am. Dec. 780; Bucher v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 98 N. Y. 128; Eppendorf v. Brooklyn City & N. R. Co. 69 N. Y. 195, 25 Am. Rep. 171.

Vanderburgh, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action is for damages for the alleged negligent management of a street-car, by reason of which plaintiff claims to have suffered personal injuries. The accident occurred while the plaintiff was in the act of getting on, or just after he had got on, to the car, and before he had taken his seat, and he claims that he was thrown off, or caused to slip off, the car, by a sudden and premature movement of the car caused by the carelessness of defendant's servants in charge of it. The accident occurred on the Selby avenue cable line in the city of St. Paul, and on the "grip car," with which was connected a passenger coach or "trailer." The grip car in question was provided with a step or foot-board running lengthwise of the car, by means of which passengers could reach the platform at each end of the car or the seats between. On this occasion the plaintiff attempted to reach the platform upon the front end of the car, so as to take an empty seat there. The plaintiff's hands were both incumbered with packages, and his testimony shows that as soon as he stepped upon the foot-board the car started, and, feeling his footing insecure, he hastily laid down the packages on the platform and caught hold of the front post of the grip car, when, through a sudden jerk of the car, he lost his balance and slipped off, and was dragged a short distance along the side of the car, whereby he received the injuries complained of. The plaintiff testifies that he did not have an opportunity to reach the platform before the car started, and he was unable to save himself from falling off. He is substantiated in the main by other witnesses; but witnesses on the part of the defendant, who observed the accident, testify to a different state of facts, and their evidence is in sharp conflict with that of the plaintiff, and tended to prove that the plaintiff had actually reached the platform, and, after the car was in motion, of his own accord stepped down upon the foot-board to arrange his tools, and while so doing slipped and fell off. The question whether the car was started up before the plaintiff had time to get safely on board the car was then one for the jury. It appears that the conductor and the "grip man" who had control of the movements of the train observed plaintiff before and while he was getting on, and knew the circumstances attending his attempt to board the car, and the fact that his hands were full. The question whether they exercised due care in starting and handling the cars to assure his safety was one for the jury. This disposes of the first and most important assignment of error.

*Head notes by VANDERBURGH, J.

NOTE.—As to duty to see that passenger reaches a place of safety before starting street-car, see Akerslot v. Second Ave. R. Co. (N. Y.) 15 L. R. A. 489.

The counsel for defendant asked the court to charge the jury that passengers riding on the platforms or steps of a street-car assume the additional risk of any accident therefrom. There was no prejudicial error in the court's refusal to give the instruction as asked, because the court had already clearly charged the jury on the subject, and the instruction given was specially pertinent to the evidence presented to the jury. The instruction also asked, that the sudden movement or "jerk" of a street-car in starting was not negligence if it necessarily resulted from the appliance of the grip, had no basis in the evidence, as there was no evidence tending to show that it was necessary or usual, and defendant's witnesses denied that it in fact took place in this instance.

The court also instructed the jury that "the trainmen were bound to allow plaintiff a reasonable time to get safely upon the car, and, the plaintiff having packages in his hands, they were bound to conduct themselves in starting the train in reference to that fact. These trains are not, of course, ordinarily expected to make long stops. But if anything is apparent in the condition of the passenger, so that he would be likely to be thrown or injured by a motion of the car, then proper regard for his safety might require a train to be held in position to avoid it. Care and negligence, in any case, depend upon the circumstances of the particular case. The care, both by the plaintiff and defendant, must depend largely upon the circumstances." There was no error in the instruction as given. The defendant, as a common carrier, was legally obliged to exercise extreme diligence and care, and was bound to allow the plaintiff a reasonable time and opportunity to get safely on board, and it was negligence to start the train sooner. The fact that his movements were somewhat incumbered by packages in his hands might reasonably require more delay and care in starting the train in order to assure his safety, as in the case of aged or infirm persons. 2 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 508. No further questions in the case require to be noticed.

Order affirmed.

OHIO SUPREME COURT.

PITTSBURGH, CINCINNATI & ST.
LOUIS R. CO., Piff. in Err.,

v.

STATE OF OHIO.

(.....Ohio St.....)

*The Act of April 15, 1869 (Rev. Stat. § 251a), requiring "every corporation or company oper-

*Head note by the COURT.

NOTE.—Constitutionality of laws charging the expense of police regulations on the business to be regulated.

A very recent decision of the United States Supreme Court decides that electric companies are not deprived of due process of law by requiring them to pay the salaries of the sub-way commissioners as provided in the New York statutes, and that such a requirement does not violate the 14th ating a railroad or any part of a railroad within this state," to pay to the commissioner of railroads and telegraphs a "fee" of $1 per mile for each mile of track operated by it within this state, contravenes sections 2 and 5 of article 12 of the Constitution of this state.

(March 2, 1892.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Franklin County to review a judgment affirming a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas, in favor of the state in a proceeding brought to compel payment by defendant of certain statutory fees. Reversed.

Statement by Bradbury, J.:

On May 1, 1890, the state of Ohio by its attorney-general, in an action theretofore begun and then pending in the court of common pleas of Franklin county, filed the following amended petition:

"The plaintiff says: That the defendant is a corporation duly incorporated under the laws of the state of Ohio, having its principal office in the city of Columbus, in said state, and that on the first day of September, 1889, it operated two hundred and seventy-four and sixty-three hundredths (274.63) miles of railroad within the state of Ohio.

"That on the 16th day of October, 1889, said defendant filed its annual report, duly verified, for the year ending on the 30th day of June, 1889, in the office of the commissioner of railroads for this state.

"That it was the duty of the defendant to have filed said report on the first day of September, 1889, and to have paid on that day to the commissioner of railroads, a fee of one dollar ($1) per mile for each mile of track operated by it within the state of Ohio; but that the defendant failed and refused, and still fails and refuses, to make said payment, or any part thereof, to the commissioner or anyone for him.

"Plaintiff says that by reason of the failure of the defendant to make said payment, or any part thereof, there is due it from the defendant the sum of $274.63, for which it asks judgment, with interest from the first day of September, 1889.

"David K. Watson, Attorney-General."

To this amended petition a demurrer was interposed by the railway company which was overruled by the court, and the railway company not desiring to plead further, a judgment was rendered against it for the amount claimed with interest, which judgment was affirmed by the circuit court in a proceeding brought in that court by the railway company to obtain its reversal; whereupon the present proceedings were begun in this court to reverse the judgment of both of said courts.

Messrs. Watson, Burr & Livesay and J. H. Collins for plaintiff in error.

Mr. David K. Watson, Atty-Gen., for defendant in error.

Bradbury, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The constitutionality of the Act of the General Assembly of the state of Ohio, passed

April 15, 1889 (86 Ohio Laws, 351), is involved in the determination of the case. That Act reads as follows:

"Section 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the state of Ohio, That section 251 of the Revised Statutes be supplemented as follows:"

"Sec. 251a. At the time of filing the report required by section 251, every corporation or company operating a railroad, or any part of a railroad, within this state, shall pay to the commissioner a fee of $1 per mile for each mile of track, whether main, branch, double or side track, operated by them within this state. Any corporation or company failing to pay such fee at the time prescribed shall forfeit and pay a sum of not less than $1,000 and not more than $5,000. All fees received by the commissioner under this section shall be paid by him into the state treasury, upon an order from the auditor of state."

Section 251, Revised Statutes, to which the section above quoted is supplementary, requires the president, etc., of any railroad situate in whole or in part within this state, to file in the office of the commissioner of railroads and telegraphs, a report containing a minute and elaborate account of its business and transactions for the preceding year.

The constitutionality of the section imposing a fee of $1 per mile of track, is assailed on two distinct grounds: (1) That it contravenes section 2, article 13, of the Constitution of this state, which provides that "laws shall be passed, taxing by a uniform rule, all moneys, credits, investments . . . and also all real and personal property, according to its value in money. . . ." (2) That it violates section 5 of the same article (12) which provides that "no tax shall be levied, except in pursuance of law; and every law imposing a tax shall state, distinctly, the object of the same, to which only it shall be applied."

If this exaction from railroad companies imposed according to trackage, is a tax, within the meaning of the Constitution, then it falls within the inhibition of both of those sections of our Constitution. Within the inhibition of section 2, because the railway property, including tracks, within the state, is taxed by the general taxing laws of the state, at its true value in money, and the tracks of a railroad, being part of its property, is subjected to a burden not imposed upon any other property within the state, and not imposed "according to its true value in money;" and within the inhibition of section 5, because it fails to state the object for which the tax is levied. The question of the constitutionality of the section, Amendment of the United States Constitution. People v. Squire, 145 U. S. 175, 38 L. ed. 686.

This was an affirmance of the decision of the New York Court of Appeals in 10 Cent. Rep. 437, 107 N. Y. 698.

So it was held by the same court that charging the expenses of a railroad commission upon the several railroads within a state according to their gross income proportioned to the number of miles in the state did not violate such constitutional provisions. Charlotte, C. & A. R. Co. v. Gibbes, 145 U. S. 386, 38 L. ed. 1051.

The same court had previously held that a statute requiring railroad companies to pay the fees for the examination of railroad employes in respect to color blindness did not deprive them of property without due process of law as it merely imposed upon them the expenses necessary to ascertain whether their employes possessed the physical qualifications required by law. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Alabama, 128 U. S. 96, 32 L. ed. 352.

So the requirement by state law of a fee from each vessel passing a quarantine station to pay for examination as to her sanitary condition is lawful and is not a tonnage tax in violation of the Federal Constitution nor a regulation of commerce. Morgan's L. & T. R. & S. Co. v. Louisiana Board of Health, 118 U. S. 455, 30 L. ed. 237.

B. A. S.

therefore must depend upon whether it shall be held to levy a tax or not, within the meaning of the Constitution, and counsel direct their argument in great measure, to the discussion of this point.

Counsel for the state contends at one stage of his argument, that the exaction is not a tax, but, instead, partakes more of the nature of, and should be treated as, an assessment levied according to benefits, which, it is claimed, accrue to the railroads operated within the state, by the provisions of the Act creating the office and prescribing the duties of the commissioner of railroads and telegraphs.

We are so accustomed to associate the doctrine of assessments, levied upon property according to the benefits that may accrue to it, with its usual subjects of application, some improvement of a local character, such as side-walks, grading and paving highways, and constructing and maintaining ditches and the like, that the two are with difficulty separated in our mental operations; but, nevertheless, there may be no such necessary connection between them as to forbid a far wider extension of the principle, and its application to many other and perhaps widely variant subjects. But, however this may be, it is not necessary to pursue the speculation further, for the sum exacted is an arbitrary one, having no apparent connection with any benefits conferred by the Act itself, or that to which it is supplementary, and the law fails to attempt, in any manner whatever, to provide a method by which any relation between the benefits and burdens that it confers or imposes can be ascertained; but simply provides for the payment of a fixed sum which is to be applied solely to swell the general revenues of the state. None of the features heretofore present, in all Acts of the Legislature which provide for assessments upon property according to the benefits it receives from the operation of law, are discernable in the Act under review, and it cannot be assigned a place in that class of legislation.

The power of the Legislature to levy special exactions to be applied in payment of the expense of governmental supervision over certain lines of business, which the state in the exercise of its police powers may supervise, was maintained by this court in the case of Cincinnati Gas Light & C. Co. v. State, 18 Ohio St. 237. That case involved the constitutionality of an Act of the General Assembly of this state, passed April 6, 1866, 63 Ohio Laws, 164, (Swan & S. Stat. 158), providing for the inspection of gas-meters. The Act provided for the appointment of an inspector, and prescribed his salary; provided also for the purchase of such apparatus as might be required in the performance of the duties of his office, and for the purpose of paying the salary of the inspector and the cost of the necessary apparatus to enable him to perform his duties; provided that a sufficient sum therefor should be assessed against the several gas companies of the state according to their respective appraised valuation. In 18 Ohio St. 237, the power of the Legislature to levy the exaction imposed upon gas companies by the Act above-mentioned was assailed, upon the ground that it contravened the constitutional rule of equality in levying taxes, prescribed by section 2, of 16 L. R. A. article 12, of the Constitution. This court, however, sustained the Act. The opinion of the court was delivered by Judge Brinkerhoff, and while it may be contended that some illustrations are found in the opinion of that learned judge, not strictly apposite to the case, yet the opinion, taken as a whole, clearly shows that the decision was put upon the ground that the exactions levied upon the several gas companies were not a tax within the constitutional meaning of that term. This view is supported by the following quotation from that opinion: "It is settled by the repeated decisions of this court, in Hill v. Higdon, 5 Ohio St. 243, 67 Am. Dec. 289; Reeves v. Wood County Treasurer, 8 Ohio St. 333, and Baker v. Cincinnati, 11 Ohio St. 594,—that the section of the Constitution just referred to is only applicable to, and furnishes the governing principle for, all laws levying taxes for general revenue, whether for state, county, township, or municipal corporation purposes.

"Now, although the assessment or charge upon the gas companies of the state imposed by the statute in question may be a tax, in the widest import of the word, it certainly is not a tax for purposes of general revenue. It is the assessment of a charge for a special purpose growing out of the exercise of the supervisory power of the government over the business in which these companies are engaged."

It is true that an examination of the Act above-mentioned, providing for the inspection of the gas meters, will disclose provisions highly beneficial to the gas companies, and it is contended that therein it differs from the Act providing for a commissioner of railroads and telegraphs; the latter Act, it is said, imposes burdens on the railroads of the state instead of conferring benefits. An inspection of this latter Act will disclose provisions, some of which are burdensome while others are beneficial; but whether the one or the other predominate, we do not think it material to inquire in this connection, for we apprehend that the question whether the Act before-mentioned, relating to the inspection of gas-meters, etc., was upon the whole beneficial, rather than burdensome, to the gas companies of the state, did not bear materially upon the decision of the court in 18 Ohio St. 237. The ground upon which that decision was put, we think, was that the business of manufacturing and selling gas was one that fell within the police, or supervisory, powers of the state, and that the expense necessarily attending upon its supervision could lawfully be charged against the gas companies, because the exaction made for that purpose was not a tax within the constitutional meaning of that word.

It cannot, we think, be denied that the business of transporting passengers and freight by the railroads within this state is as clearly within the supervisory, or police powers, of the state as is that of making and vending gas; but while this is so, it does not aid in upholding the statute now under consideration, for that statute does not attempt, as the gas inspecting statute did, to provide a fund to be directly applied to liquidate the expenses attending the supervision.

What is this statute? Its constitutionality must be determined by its operation. It provides in terms that there be placed upon each mile of railroad track within this state an exaction of $1 per annum; the statute calls it a "fee," but its nature is not affected by the name that may be assigned to it. It is an exaction levied upon railroad tracks, and railroad tracks are property. It does not differ in principle from a fixed sum, levied upon all the farmers of the state, for each acre of land of which they may be seised, or each head of horses or other live stock that they may own. In both instances the tax is levied upon property, but it is neither levied "according to its true value in money" nor uniformly upon all property; both of which are constitutional requirements (sec. 2, art. 12), if it is a tax within the constitutional meaning of that word. That it is such a tax, we think, there can be little, if any, doubt. A tax is "a pecuniary burden imposed for the support of the government. . . . Burdens or charges imposed by the legislative power of a state upon persons or property to raise money for public purposes." 2 Bouvier, Law Dict. 705. The money raised by this section under consideration is directed to be paid into the state treasury; it becomes a part of the funds of the state applicable to any conceivable public purpose. There is not a word in the section under consideration, or in the Act to which it is supplementary, to indicate a purpose that the fund raised shall be limited, or even in any way specially applied, to the expenses incurred in supervising the railroads of the state. A law like this—the direct and only purpose it can accomplish, being to create a fund by an exaction on property to be paid into the state treasury to be used indiscriminately for any and all public purposes—must be regarded as creating a tax. It bears no resemblance to, and should not be confounded with, that class of laws enacted by the Legislature, the immediate object of which is to call into active operation the police powers of the state, but which, incidentally or indirectly, may cause the production of public revenue.

Judgment of the circuit court and court of common pleas reversed, and petition dismissed.

WEST VIRGINIA SUPREME COURT OF APPEALS.

C. T. DANIEL, Admr., etc., of Robert Daniel, Deceased,
v.
CHESAPEAKE & OHIO R. CO., Plff. in Err.

(.....W. Va.....)

- *1. When a conductor, in charge of a railroad train, with a right to command and to control its movements, leaves his engine and train standing on the track of the main line, along which a train, due, and expected by him, has a right at that time to pass, and such conductor fails to use ordinary care to warn or notify in any way the expected train of such obstruction in its way, whereby a collision takes place, and a brakeman on the coming train is injured, and such negligence of the conductor is the direct and proximate cause of such injury, such brakeman being without fault or the means of preventing such negligence, or of avoiding its consequences, such brakeman is not the fellow servant of the conductor, and the company will be held responsible for the injury to the brakeman, caused by the negligence of the conductor in such manner.
2. A yard master, in lawful command and control of a train as a conductor for the occasion, is a conductor within the meaning of the rule.

(April 2, 1892.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Summers County to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries resulting in death and alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

*Head notes by Holtz, J.

NOTE.—For notes on the question who are fellow servants as affected by the superior rank of one of the servants, see Hill v. Northern Pac. R. Co. (N. Dak.) 12 L. R. A. 97; Hunn v. Michigan Cent. R. 16 L. R. A.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Simms & Enslow and J. E. Chilton for plaintiff in error.

Mr. William R. Thompson for defendant in error.

Holt, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a suit in the circuit court of Summers county, brought the 31st of March, 1890, by plaintiff below against the railway company, defendant below, for causing the death of Robert Daniel, plaintiff's intestate, by its negligence, while the decedent was a servant in the railway company's employ, which resulted in a verdict for $3,750 damages, which the court refused to set aside, but gave judgment thereon. To this ruling and various other rulings made on the trial the defendant company excepted, and has obtained this writ of error.

The suit is based on section 5, chap. 103, Code, p. 725, ed. 1891: "Whenever the death of a person shall be caused by wrongful act, neglect, or default," etc.,—the West Virginia form of the Lord Campbell Act. The declaration contains three counts. The first charges that plaintiff's intestate was in the railway company's employ as a brakeman, and while in discharge of his duties, defendant, by its recklessness, carelessness, and negligence, then and there caused the death of plaintiff's intestate. The second count alleges as the defendant's act or neglect and default that it carelessly left standing on its line, one mile from any station or side track, a train of cars, into which the deceased brakeman's train, without warning, was run, without any fault on the part of the running train, which caused the brakeman's death, etc. Third count sets out the facts of the accident in great detail, aver-ring that they resulted in the brakeman's death, directly caused by the wrongful act, neglect, and default of defendant; thus giving plaintiff, by reason of the premises, a right of action for $10,000, the damages sustained (the maximum fixed by law). The demurrer was properly overruled, because the court could have given judgment on either count according to the very right of the cause, and according to law; the case as alleged being proved. On the plea of "not guilty" the issue was made up and tried by the jury.

Co. (Mich.) 7 L. R. A. 500; Murray v. St. Louis Cable & W. R. Co. (Mo.) 5 L. R. A. 735; Hussey v. Coger (N. Y.) 8 L. R. A. 559; Muhlman v. Union Pac. R. Co. (Colo.) 2 L. R. A. 192.

The facts are as follows: Robert Daniel, plaintiff's intestate, was at the time of the accident a brakeman in the employ of defendant on section 2 of No. 78, a freight train on defendant's road. His run was from Sewell to Hinton and back. Freight train No. 78, between these points, was run in two sections. J. W. Spease was assistant yardmaster of the railway company at Hinton. On the 26th day of March, 1890, section 1 of defendant's freight train had reached Hinton. Spease took charge of it, to break up the train, distribute the cars, etc., according to his duty, and for this purpose the cars were at some point uncoupled. On these cars, thus left to stand until Spease had disposed of the others, Sweno, the brakeman, had neglected to set the brakes; so that, when Spease uncoupled and moved off with engine and front cars, the four rear cars ran back by gravity down the tracks to the mouth of Tug creek, a mile and a half west of Hinton towards Sewell. Here they stopped. Spease was engaged in shifting the front part of section 1 about fifteen or twenty minutes, and when he returned with his engine he found that the rear portion of the train, which had been left, had escaped, and run back down to Tug creek, as already described,—a point between one and a half and two miles from Hinton, on the main line. As soon as Spease found the cars had escaped, he started with the engine in pursuit, having with him the engineer-man of the yard shifter locomotive, and a brakeman, and workman, all under Spease's control. They found the runaway cars at Tug creek. It was proven that J. M. Spease had as full command and charge of section 1 of No. 78, and of the part which escaped and ran back to Tug creek, as a conductor has while in charge of his train and running it on the road, and the like power of control and command over the escaped part while it stood at Tug creek. Spease also knew that section 2, on which Daniel was engaged as brakeman, was following section 1 of No. 78, and was then due at Hinton. When Spease reached the escaped cars at Tug creek, Spease's brakeman immediately began to try to couple up the escaped cars to the cars brought down with the engine from the yard at Hinton; that he had two couplings to make, and attempted to make one of them some 15 times, but the link was bent, and he failed, and was still attempting to couple them when the engineer on the coming section No. 2 of No. 78 blew down brakes just before the collision occurred. The time was 3:30 in the morning. It was dark and foggy. There were two brakemen,—Robert Daniel, the one killed by the collision, and another on said second section of train No. 78,—and, if both had been standing at the brakes and applied them immediately when the signal sounded down brakes, the accident could not have been averted. The train was a freight train, running at the rate of eighteen or twenty miles an hour. Spease had charge of the train, including the escaped cars, and had with him under his control the engineer, brakeman, and a workman from the roundhouse, and no one else was present. Spease, as the rules of the company required, went back in the direction from which section 2—the coming train—was expected, for the purpose of flagging or to signal it to stop, but he went back from the rear of his own train standing on the track at Tug only some 50 or 100 yards, instead of 1,200 yards, as required by the rules of the company. He had ample time to have gone back the distance required to flag, if he had desired to do so, before the expected train came. A red light is used and required by the rules for the purpose of flagging; but Spease on this occasion had a white light. He overtook the escaped cars more than thirty minutes before the accident occurred, and had at least thirty minutes in which to have gone back to flag the expected train, and if it had been flagged 600 yards from the rear of Spease's train, the expected train could have been stopped, and the accident averted. It was also proved that at the time of the collision and wreck it was the duty of the conductor to flag between stations, and the duty of the brakeman to flag at stations, and that, when a train was stopped by accident or obstruction, the flagman must immediately go back with danger signals, to stop any train moving in the same direction. At a point 600 yards he must place one torpedo on the rail. He must then continue to go back at least 1,200 yards from the rear of his train, and place two torpedoes on the rails, ten yards apart; then return to a point 900 yards from the rear of his own train, and there remain until recalled by the whistle of his own engine; but if a passenger train is due within ten minutes he must remain until it arrives, etc. See Rule 99 in Schedule 357. Instead of this, the conductor for the occasion—the yardmaster—went back but 50 or 100 yards, with a white light instead of a red one. The morning (3:30) was dark and foggy. The coming train rushed on at a speed of eighteen or twenty miles an hour. The engineersounded down brakes, reversed his engine, and sprang off just in time to save himself. All escaped by jumping off except front brakeman Daniel, who was at the time of the collision standing at the rear of the tank attached to the rear of the locomotive, and had no duty to perform in the engine cab except to keep out of the weather, and by the rule he was not permitted to ride on the engine cab, except when called there by some duty, without a written order from the proper authorities, and it does not appear whether he had such permit or not. Daniel was caught in the wreck and killed; the others escaped by jumping off the train. Seven or eight of the front cars of the second section were by reason of the collision shattered, broken up, and derailed. If the expected train had been flagged at a point 700 or 800 yards from the obstructing train standing on the main line, the train could have been stopped in time to avoid the collision. The deceased was a young man of good habits, sober, frugal, and industrious, 21 years old, and earning from $50 to $65 per month. Thereupon the following instructions were given for the plaintiff:

No. 1 given for plaintiff: "The court instructs the jury that if they believe from the evidence that on the 26th day of March, 1890, one Spease was in the employ of the defendant as assistant yard master at Hinton, and that as such assistant yard master said Spease was in charge of a train of cars, or part of a train of cars, belonging to the defendant, known as the 'First section of No. 78,' at a point on the line of the said railroad of defendant between one and two miles west of Hinton; and that said Spease, as to such train of cars then in his charge, had all the rights and authority, and was charged with all the duties of a conductor in charge of one of the trains of cars of the defendant; and that the plaintiff's decedent, R. Daniels, was in the employ of the defendant on one of the defendant's trains of cars known as 'Second section of No. 78,' and that said Spease knew that at the time he was in charge of said train of cars known as 'First section of No. 78,' standing on the main line of defendant's railroad at Tug creek, that said train of cars known as 'Second section of No. 78' was liable at any moment to come along said railroad on its way to the yards at Hinton on the same track upon which the train of cars of which said Spease was then in charge was standing; and the said Spease also knew that said train of cars, or part of the train of cars, of which he, the said Spease, was then in charge as aforesaid, could not be moved immediately in the direction of the yards at Hinton because of the said train of cars not being coupled together, and that said Spease undertook to flag said second section of train No. 78, upon which plaintiff's decedent, R. Daniels, then was as a brakeman, and failed to go back in the direction from which said second section of No. 78 was approaching, more than 50 or 100 yards, and that said Spease had ample time, and could have gone back a sufficient distance to have warned said section of No. 78 of the obstruction of the railroad track in time for said second section of No. 78 to have been stopped, and to have prevented the accident which did occur; and, if the jury further believes that this conduct on the part of Spease was negligence, and was the immediate and proximate and direct cause of the accident and the death of plaintiff's decedent, R. Daniels,—then the negligence of said Spease is the negligence of defendant, and the jury must find for the plaintiff."

Instruction No. 2 given for the plaintiff: "The court instructs the jury that if they believe from the evidence that plaintiff's decedent, R. Daniels, was in the cab of the engine attached to the second section of train No. 78 on the morning of March 26, 1890, at the time the accident occurred, and that said R. Daniels had no right to be there, but should have been at the brakes on the cars in said train, and that his being in said cab contributed to the accident which occurred and resulted in his death, yet, if the jury further believe that said conduct upon the part of said Daniels was not the direct, immediate, and proximate cause of said accident and his death, and that the defendant could, by the exercise of ordinary care and diligence, have avoided the accident, and prevented the death of said R. Daniels, and that defendant failed to exercise and use such ordinary care and diligence to avoid said accident and prevent said killing of said R. Daniels, then the defendant is liable for said killing, and plaintiff is entitled to recover in this case."

The following instructions were given for defendant: Instruction No. 1 given for defendant: "The court instructs the jury that a servant entering the employment of a master assumes all the ordinary risks of such employment and service, and one of such ordinary risks so assumed by the servant is that of liability to negligence of a fellow servant in a common employment of such master." "No. 4. The court instructs the jury that, if they believe from the evidence that Robert Daniels and Frank Sweno were fellow servants in the defendant's employ, then the defendant is not liable in this suit for any injury done the said Robert Daniels by the negligence of the said Sweno in discharging his duties as such fellow-servant." "No. 10. The court instructs the jury that if they believe from the evidence that Frank Sweno and R. Daniels were brakemen in the employ of the defendant, and had the same duties to perform, and did the same work for the defendant, except they ran on different trains, and neither had any authority over the other, and neither had any duty to perform for the other which should have been performed by the defendant, and that the negligence of the said Sweno in the performance of his duties as such brakeman was the immediate cause of the death of said Daniels while in the discharge of his duties as such brakeman, and that the negligence of D. W. Spease, another employe of the defendant, was the remote cause of said Daniels' death, then the jury will find for the defendant." "No. 12. The court further instructs the jury that before they can find for the plaintiff in this case they must find from the evidence that the plaintiff's decedent, Robert Daniels, came to his death by reason of the negligence of the defendant, or some of its employes, who were not fellow servants of said Daniels in the defendant's employ, and that, if the jury believe that the negligence of the defendant or some of its employes was the remote cause of the death of said Daniels, and contributed to his death, and that the negligence of the said Daniels was the proximate, direct, and immediate cause of his death, then the defendant is not liable, and the jury will find for the defendant." "No. 16. The court instructs the jury that they cannot in this case assess against the defendant vindictive or punitive damages; and by such 'punitive damages' is meant damage to punish the defendant for any wrong; and by 'exemplary damages' is meant damages which may be assessed to make an example of the defendant, and set it on example. Damages for neither of said purposes can be assessed against the defendant in this case. No. 17. The court instructs the jury that in case they find for the plaintiff, they will assess plaintiff's damages at any sum, so as not to exceed $10,000, which, in the judgment of the jury, may be 'just and right,' and that in assessing such damage to the plaintiff they cannot take into consideration the sorrow of his relatives because of the death of R. Daniels, or the loss of his society and company from the plaintiff and his relatives, and that the true measure of damages in this case is the pecuniary loss to the estate of R. Daniels, by reason of his death. No. 18. The court instructs the jury that, in case they should find for the plaintiff, they will assess his damage at such sum as they may deem just and right, so as not to exceed $10,000, and they may assess said damage at any sum under $10,000 which they may deem just and right, and that in assessing such damages the true measure of the plaintiff's damage is the pecuniary damage to the estate of R. Daniels, by reason of his death, and that such pecuniary damage is what should govern the jury in assessing the plaintiff's damage in this case. No. 19. The court further instructs the jury that in assessing the damage in this case they cannot take into consideration the sorrow of R. Daniels' friends and relatives because of his death, or their sorrow at his loss; nor can the jury in this case assess damages for the purpose of making an example of the defendant, or teaching the defendant a lesson."

Instructions Nos. 3 and 8, as modified by the court, and then given for defendant, are as follows: "No. 2. The court further instructs the jury that all servants of the same master, engaged in a common employment, and who have no authority or superiority over each other, and who are working together, and have equal opportunities to control and influence the conduct of each other, and to none of whom has been delegated the performance of any duty owing by the master to such servant, are all fellow servants in such employment." "No. 8. The court instructs the jury that if the defendant had in its employ one Frank Sweno as a brakeman on one of its trains, and that it was the duty of such brakeman to assist in running said train from Sewell to Hinton, and that the defendant also had plaintiff's decedent, R. Daniels, in its employ as a brakeman on another of its said trains running between said points, and that the duties of said Daniels and said Sweno were the same, and they performed the same work and were in the same service for the defendant, but on different trains, and that the negligence of said Sweno in the performance of his duty as such brakeman on his train caused the death of the said Daniels while engaged in his duties as such brakeman, and that the said Sweno had no authority over the said Daniels, and had no duty to perform, due from the defendant to said Daniels, which the said Daniels did not likewise have to perform for him, the said Sweno, and were so far working together as to be practically co-operating, and to have opportunity to control and influence the conduct of each other, and had no superiority the one over the other, then the jury will find for the defendant."

And the court refused the following instructions, asked for by the defendant. "No. 3. The court instructs the jury that all brakemen in the employment of the defendant company, whether on the same or different trains, are fellow servants, and that one brakeman of the defendant cannot recover damage from the defendant because of any injury sustained by him by reason of the negligence of any other brakeman in discharging his duties as such brakeman." "No. 5. The court instructs the jury that the assistant yard master in the defendant's employ on its yard at Hinton and all brakemen on the defendant's trains are fellow servants. No. 6. The court further instructs the jury that, if they believe from the evidence that one Spease was employed by the defendant company as the assistant yard master on its yards at Hinton, and that his duties as such required him to receive and take charge of all trains run on to such yards, and to overlook and care for such trains, and to have control of them while on such yards, and that plaintiff's decedent, R. Daniels, was a brakeman on one of defendant's trains, which run to and from the said yards, and that said Spease and said Daniels were both engaged in their respective positions in running and caring for defendant's trains, and that the said Spease had no authority over the said Daniels, and that the defendant had not delegated to the said Spease the performance of any duty it owed the said Daniels as its servant, then the said Spease and the said Daniels were fellow servants of the defendant; and, if the said Daniels was killed while in the service of the defendant as such brakeman by reason of the negligence of the said Spease in the performance of his duties as such assistant yard master, the defendant is not liable for the death of said Daniels, and the jury will find for the defendant. No. 7. The court further instructs the jury that if they believe from the evidence that one Frank Sweno was in the employ of the defendant company as a brakeman on the first section of one of its freight trains, and as such brakeman it was a part of his duties to set sufficient brakes on such first section of said train before leaving it on the yards at Hinton to hold it thereon, and that he neglected such duty, and failed to set any brakes on said train, and that by reason of the failure of said Sweno to set the said brakes a part of the cars in said train got loose, and run on the main line of defendant's railway, on which main line there was another train of the defendant, about two miles below where such cars got loose, and thereby caused a collision of such other train, and in such collision the plaintiff's decedent, R. Daniels, was killed, and that at the time said R. Daniels was so killed he was on such other train in the defendant's employ as a brakeman thereon, and that the direct and immediate cause of the said collision and the said killing therein of said Daniels was the negligence of the said Sweno in failing to set the said brakes on said first section, then the jury will find for the defendant." "No. 9. The court instructs the jury that if they believe from the evidence that Frank Sweno and R. Daniels were employed by the defendant as brakemen on its trains, and were employed as such brakemen on different trains of the defendant running between Hinton and Sewell, and that their duties as such brakemen were the same, and one had no authority over the other, and that the defendant had in its employ one D. W. Spease as an assistant yard master on its yards at Hinton, and that the duty of said Spease was to care for and look after all trains while on said yard, and that the said Spease had no control or authority over either the said Sweno or Daniels, and had no duty to perform which the defendant owed the said Daniels, and all of said parties were engaged by the defendant in handling, caring for, and running its trains on its said road, and that the said Daniels, while so employed as such brakeman, was killed by reason of the joint negligence of the said Sweno and Spease in each failing to perform his duties in his respective position, then the jury will find for the defendant." "No. 11. The court instructs the jury that if plaintiff's decedent, R. Daniels, was killed by the negligence of D. W. Spease, and that at the time said Daniels and Spease were in the defendant's employ, and the duties of the said Daniels were that of brakeman on one of defendant's trains running between Cannelton and Hinton on defendant's railway, and the duties of the said Spease was to take the control, care, and management of defendant's trains while on its yard at Hinton, and that by reason of the carelessness of the said Spease in discharging his duties in taking care of and managing the trains and cars on said yard, certain cars got away from him, and caused the death of said Daniels, and that the death of said Daniels was caused by the negligence of said Spease, then the jury will find for the defendant, unless the jury further find that the defendant owned the said Daniels some duty which it had delegated the said Spease to perform, and which he failed to perform, and that by reason of such failure to perform such duty the said Daniels was killed. And the jury are the judges from all the facts and evidence before them whether or not the defendant had so delegated the said Spease to perform any duty it owed said Daniels as its servant, and, if he did fail to perform such duty, if such failure caused the said Daniels' death." "No. 18. If the jury believes from the evidence that Robert Daniels was in the employ of the defendant as a brakeman on one of its freight trains, and that as such brakeman it was the duty of such Daniels to be on the cars and attending to his duty as such brakeman, and the said Daniels, in violation of the rules of the defendant, left his place as such brakeman, and went into the cab of the locomotive of such train, and by reason of his being in said locomotive received injuries which resulted in his death, then the plaintiff cannot recover in this suit. No. 14. The court instructs the jury that if they believe the plaintiff's decedent, R. Daniels, was a brakeman in the defendant's employ, and as such brakeman there was a rule of the defendant 'that prohibited the said Daniels from going into the cab of the locomotive, excepting when necessary,' and that said Daniels knew of such rule, and that he was engaged on one of defendant's trains as such brakeman, he went into the cab of the locomotive pulling such train when it was not necessary; and, further, that the said Daniels violated the said rule when he so went into said cab, and that the said Daniels was killed while so in said cab, and that the fact that the said Daniels was in said cab contributed to causing his death,—then the jury can take such action of the said Daniels in going in said cab in consideration in assessing the damage against the defendant 16 L. R. A.

for the death of said Daniels. No. 15. The court instructs the jury that if they believe from the evidence that the plaintiff's decedent, R. Daniels, was in the employment of the defendant as a brakeman on one of its freight trains, and that the said Daniels' place as such brakeman was at the brakes on the cars in such train, and that said Daniels, in violation of the rules of the said defendant, left his place on said cars, and went into the cab of the locomotive pulling such train, and that the said Daniels at such time knew it was a violation of the rules of the defendant to go in said cab, and that while the said Daniels was in said cab he was injured and killed by reason of the negligence of the defendant or its servants, and that the said Daniels being in said cab contributed to his injuries and death, then the jury may consider the said fact that said Daniels was in said cab in assessing the damage they may give in this case against the defendant, and may consider such fact in mitigation of the damages they may assess herein against the defendant."

It is not necessary to discuss the question whether the injury was the direct result of the negligence of his fellow servant,—the brakeman at the yard by whose neglect to set brakes the cars escaped and ran down to Tug creek, where they were found. That was the occasion of the accident,—the negligence of the yard master in charge and conduct of the train at Tug creek was the cause, direct and proximate; so that the only real question is, Was such yard master, under the circumstances, a vice-principal of the master, or only a fellow servant of the deceased brakeman? Upon this point the main controversy seems to turn, and the arguments on both sides are directed to the question, What are the test or tests to be applied to the breach of duty complained of, to determine whether it is violation of a personal duty of the master to the servant, and done by his vice-principal, in which case he would be liable, or a violation of a nonpersonal duty, in which case he would not be liable? because the yard master as a conductor, would then be a fellow servant with the deceased brakeman, and the risk of injury by him one of the risks assumed by the brakeman as incident to the employment. The counsel have concentrated their arguments around four cases, treated as a group, which have attained much more than a local consideration, especially the "Madden Case." These, taken in the order of time, are Cooper v. Pittsburgh, O. & St. L. R. Co. 24 W. Va. 87; Riley v. West Virginia Cent. & P. R. Co. 27 W. Va. 145; Madden v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 28 W. Va. 610; Criswell v. Pittsburgh, St. L. & O. R. Co. 30 W. Va. 798. We are also referred to Hoffman v. Dickinson, 31 W. Va. 142; Humphreys v. Newport, N. & M. V. R. Co. 33 W. Va. 185; and especially the case of Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Ross, 112 U. S. 877, 28 L. ed. 787, called the "Ross Case." See also Unfried v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 34 W. Va. 261.

We are referred to two text-books, and two only. I mention them because of the reference to them, and quotations made from them. (1) Bishop, Non-Cont. Law, chap. 32, "Master to Servant, Fellow Servants," where the author, under the subhead of "Fellow-Servants," has brought together a vast array of cases on this perplexing and tangled subject, and within a narrow compass has treated the doctrine with his usual orderly arrangement, and in his clear and condensed style. I mention him now because I know his books to be reliable, and have drawn largely on his useful labors, even when not citing him or quoting literally. (2) The recent work of McKinney on Fellow Servants, whose former labors in editing and annotating American & English Railway Cases, and in contributing the article on fellow servants in 7 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 821, has well qualified him to give the profession this useful work.

In this day reliable text-books have become an indispensable help to the courts as well as to the bar. The touchstone we apply to the act of the employé to determine whether it is the negligent act of a vice-principal, and, therefore, of the master, or the act of a fellow servant of the injured party, is the nature of his duties. See Bishop, Non-Cont. Law, 665. He who engages in the employment of another for the performance of specified duties and services for compensation takes upon himself the natural and ordinary risks and perils incident to the performance of such services, including the perils arising from the carelessness and negligence of those who are in the same employment as fellow servants. But there are certain duties which the master owes to the servant. These he must perform in person, or by his agent, appointed for the purpose, called a "middle-man" or "vice-principal." For the breach of these duties by the vice-principal, no matter what his place or grade of service, high or low, the master is responsible to the injured servant who has not directly contributed to and in part caused the injury. Now we have reached the test, What are these personal duties which the master owes the servant as distinguished and set apart from the nonpersonal duties which comprehend the residue, and which Dr. Bishop calls the "assignable duties?" So far these personal duties have no well-defined common earmark of an inherent kind, and so far can only be safely ascertained for practical use by enumeration and analogy; and that has produced discord. All we can say is that the personal duty depends upon its own nature, and not upon the agent or servant who performs it.

In the cases already mentioned we have for us an authoritative enumeration of most, if not all, the well-settled personal (nonassignable) duties which the master owes his servant, no matter by whom performed. In the Madden Case, 28 W. Va. 610-617, (1898), Judge Snyder, delivering the opinion, says: "The duties of the master or employer may be summed up as follows: (1) To provide safe and suitable machinery and appliances for the business, (including a safe place to work). This includes the exercise of reasonable care in furnishing such appliances, and the exercise of like care in keeping the same in repair and in making proper inspections and tests. (2) To exercise like care in providing and retaining sufficient and suitable servants for the business, (and instructing those who, from newness or age, evidently need it). (3) To establish proper rules and regulations for the service, and, having adopted such, to conform to them."

In Bishop, Non-Contract Law, § 688, he defines the liabilities of the master by giving connectedly and with certain qualifications the following statement of these personal duties of the master: "The doctrine is that the master is not the insurer of his servants against accident in his service; yet he owes to them the duty of carefulness to a degree reasonable in the particular instance in providing for them, and keeping in safe repair, appliances, and a safe place to work, in selecting suitable fellow servants, and in giving the needed instruction to those who are new to the business, or of immature capacity; and for an injury which, through negligence in this duty, comes to a servant who is not himself contributively negligent he is responsible, but not for injuries from defects in the appliances or place not discoverable on due examination, or for the negligence of carefully selected servants, or for injuries from situations and appliances the risks whereof the servant has assumed." Again, in § 691 the author says: "The leading principle around which the others cluster is that the master shall exercise in the carrying on of his business all the watchfulness over his servants, and employ all the safeguards, which a reasonable and considerate prudence may dictate. For any violation of this duty resulting in an injury to a servant, he (the master) is answerable to him. But for casualties not traceable to any neglect or to any other wrong in the master he is not responsible." So that we see that the doctrine of fellow servant, as far as it has gone, where no statute prevails, has been built up, we are to presume, by the application of the common-law principles of common sense, common justice, common convenience, public policy, and private right, by gathering together the points of law thus adjudged by the application of these principles to particular facts, into rules more or less general, to be applied to new cases as they arise. So that in the formative process of any branch of the law they are not mere glittering generalities, incapable of useful application. One of the best illustrations of the locality of this dividing line, as far as ascertained between the personal and remaining nonpersonal duties of the master, is furnished by the case of Collins v. St. Paul & S.O. R. Co., 30 Minn. 81: "If a railroad servant is injured because there is no headlight, the road is responsible; if because the headlight is not lit, it is not responsible." Bishop, Non-Cont. Law, § 672. The personal duties of the master are due in supplying the ways and means and appliances, keeping them safe and in repair by constant watchfulness and supervision. The residue of his duties—the nonpersonal—relate to the execution of the work, and breaches thereof by co-servants are included in the risks incident to the employment.

This brings us to the point involved called the "Ohio and Kentucky Doctrine," to some extent adopted (by a divided court) by the Supreme Court of the United States in the Ross Case, found also in the English Employer's Liability Act, and in the Acts of some of our states, and understood to be sanctioned and adopted in this state, especially in the Madden Case. This may be also regarded as cognate with the master's personal duty of superintendence. A superintendent is defined in the English Act as a person whose sole or principal duty is that of superintendence, and who is ordinarily not engaged in manual labor. See McKinney, Fellow Servants, p. 226. It is what we may call the "commanding (superior) servant," personal duty of the master, or limitation of the master's nonpersonal duties. The same English Act enumerates these vice-principals as follows: "Any person in the service of the employer who has the charge or control of any signal points, locomotive engine, or train upon a railroad." See McKinney, Fellow Servants, p. 220. In these particulars the Massachusetts Act of 1887 corresponds with the English Act. It is significant as tending to show that both regard themselves as having gone astray in holding the conductor of the railway train as a mere fellow servant. They put it upon no expressed ground, but impliedly upon the ground that it is the duty of the master to conduct the train in person or by agent, making a vice-principal of the servant or agent who has charge or control of the locomotive engine or train upon a railroad, each making the employé thus injured one not in the service of the master quoad his right of recovery against the master.

This brings us to the Ross Case and Madden Case. In the Ross Case, 112 U. S. 377-390, 28 L. ed. 787-792, (1884.), Justice Field says: "A conductor having the entire control and management of a railway train occupies a very different position from the brakeman, the porters, and other subordinates employed. He is in fact, and should be treated as, the personal representative (vice-principal) of the corporation for whose negligence it is responsible to subordinate servants. . . . In no proper sense of the terms is he the fellow servant with the fireman, the brakeman, the porters, and the engineers;" seeming to put it on the ground of control. But he returns to the duty of having a vice-principal present as the only means of having the company (the master) present, regarding his presence in some way on a running train as a thing to be taken for granted. "We agree with them [the Ohio and Kentucky cases] in holding, and the present case requires no further decision, that the conductor of a railway train, who commands its movements, directs when it shall start, at what stations it shall stop, at what speed it shall run, and has the general management of it and control over the persons employed upon it, represents the company, and therefore that for injuries resulting from his negligent acts the company is responsible." But, again returning to the idea of the personal duty of the master to be in some way present, he adds: "If such a conductor does not represent the company, then the train is operated without any representative of its owner." The Cooper Case, 24 W. Va. 37, (1884,) gives a full enumeration of the personal duties of the master already given; that the master cannot render such duty nonpersonal, no matter to what servant it may delegate this duty by vesting him with controlling or superior authority in regard thereto. The negligence of such servant is the negligence of the company, giving the nature of the duty as the test of its being the personal or nonpersonal duty of the master, and holding that the instructor and master mechanic, charged with the duty of keeping the appliances in repair, is the vice-principal of the master as to such duty, and not the fellow servant of the brakeman. But the importance of the case for the matter in hand is the distinct personal duty of the master to exercise continued supervision over the appliances, and keep them in good and safe repair, which of course implies the presence in some way of the master.

In Riley's Case, 27 W. Va. 145, the court still deals with the performance of some personal duty of the master by some superintendent, foreman, or other employé of the company; a duty "which the master has impliedly contracted, or which rests upon him as an absolute duty." Here the personal duty of the master of continued supervision and to keep the same in good and safe repair and condition is this time applied to the railway and track for the use of its employés. The brakeman on a train consisting of one engine and tender was struck by a stump standing by the side of the railway. It was the negligence of a foreman who was intrusted with the personal duty of the master in keeping the road in repair. The Criswell Case, found in 30 W. Va. 798, was decided in 1888. Here the plaintiff's intestate who received the injury was at work for defendant in repairing defendant's railroad, and when killed was on a hand-car, going to the place of work. Foutz was his foreman in repairing the track, who stood in the place of the master in controlling and discharging those working under him. It was by his negligence that the deceased was injured. In the opinion the liability is placed on the ground of the Madden Case: "That two servants of the same master are not fellow servants when one acts in a superior capacity to the other in regard to some duty of the master." There was collision of a hand-car on the track, moving under the control of the foreman, with an extra train, by the negligence of such foreman, which caused the death of plaintiff's intestate. Here the foreman was in fact clothed by the master with the power to perform its duties to the servant injured, and the power conferred on the foreman was determined by the rules of the company.

We now return to our leading case upon the point here involved, — Madden v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co., 28 W. Va. 610, (1886). An engineer upon one train of a railway company was injured by the negligence of a conductor of another train running in an opposite direction. Held, the engineer is not the fellow servant of said conductor. The court put it distinctly on the ground that the conductor, in controlling and running his train, is the vice-principal of the master; and the master is liable for injury to its servants, caused by the negligence of the conductor in running and conducting its train. But Snyder, J., delivering the opinion of the court, on page 618 says: "The rule deduced from these principles and authorities would seem to be that two servants of the same master are not fellow servants when one acts in a superior capacity to the other in regard to some duty due from the master; and the master is liable for any injuries to the subordinates caused by the carelessness or negligence of the superior." Reading the head note as given above with this deduction given in the body of the opinion, the conclusion may be drawn that the conductor in control of the railway train is, as to certain duties, the vice-principal of the master, and not the fellow servant of the brakeman and other employes of the common master. The negligence in this case was by negligently obstructing the track with his own train, so as to cause a collision with another train, causing the injury of its engineer.

We have now looked briefly at the Ross Case and at the group of which the Madden Case may be regarded as the center, severally and separately, with reference to their peculiar bearing on the case in hand. Before I go back and put together the details I have been in search of, and put into juxtaposition this group represented by the Madden Case and the Case of Ross, I wish to preface it with a matter of common observation. I have seen a few among the very many criticisms on the Ross Case. The leading one is based not on a denial of one of the principles impliedly put by the majority at the bottom of the ruling, but upon a misapplication of it, based upon a mistake, it is said, in the matter of common observation. It is a matter of common observation,—the care they take, (the railroad company,) the extreme and continual care and watchfulness, to make and keep the way safe before the coming and going trains. The moving train and the way are by eminence, literally as well as in figure of speech, "the ways and the means" to which their personal, as distinguished from their general, nonpersonal energies and efforts are directed. In the Cooper Case, the first of the group, the learned judge in his opinion takes continual supervision and watchfulness as the keynote of the railway company's duty in regard to the appliances. The same thing, in the common law proper, as compared with statute law proper, to some extent justly made the subject of animadversion, may be of advantage during growth; and all living things must grow. The common-law rule is not tied down and hampered by a fixed phraseology, so that time need not be wasted in quibbling over words; but that is within the rule which is within the meaning of the rule, and the meaning is determined by common reason and common justice. In a word, the spirit is not killed by the letter. Hence, in the Madden Case, the safe way, as well as the safe appliances, were adjudged to be within the rule requiring continued supervision and watchfulness. Dr. Bishop, as any one familiar with his method may see who will take the time and trouble to examine with some care his chapter on fellow servants, entered the maze of fellow servant cases, and marshaled them over and over again to find the leading string, and a test of a rule which would not offend our common reason and our common sense of right and wrong, which would do right by the company, the master, as well as by the servant. His last word upon the subject is: Watchfulness of ways and appliances is the central duty around which cluster all the personal (nonassignable) duties due the servant from the master.

Returning now to the Ross Case and Madden Case, and leaving out of view the reason of the rule as resting alone on the fact of superiority and subordination in control, if we take the facts of the case and the reason given impliedly by Justice Field and by Justice Miller (a venerable name, we may now say) and others who concurred, we find it to be the duty of constant watchfulness of the way and appliances, especially at the moving time and place, at the very moment of its supreme importance, when the great danger to the appliance was the running of it, and the great danger of the serious obstruction of the way was from the trains themselves, monsters of power when moving with the momentum of 500 tons and more, multiplied by more than the speed of the race horse, and a fearful obstruction to encounter when standing still, or when, as in these two cases, they were running together, one or both out of time or out of place by the fault of somebody. Justice Field seems to take it as a concession that in these supreme needs of watchfulness and care as they arose from second to second in passing time, and from foot to foot in change of place, the master was surely present; and, if present, why not select the conductor as the one in control as his personal representative, and, in subordination to him, the engineer, too, if need be, both helping for the occasion, together with the operator at the distance, in the constant careful watchfulness in general; the one with his cunning hand on the lever, and his steady eye to the front; the other, passing through the appliances from end to end constantly. And Judge Snyder, in the Madden Case, and Judge Green, quoting it with approval in the Oriswell Case, held the conductor to be the one in authority, discharging the personal duty of the master, and by that test also, as well as by the test of "superior servant," the doctrine of fellow servant did not come into play. In both cases there was negligence; in the Ross Case on both trains. Justice Field takes the negligence found on the going train, and restricts the head note to that. Judge Snyder applies it in effect to both.

This brings us to the case in hand, the facts of which do not require for the solution of the point of law involved that we shall put the rule of the Madden Case upon the one ground or the other,—superiority in isolated commands, or the nature of the duty to be discharged. Both existed in the Madden Case, as there held, and both exist here. Whether we call the yardmaster a conductor simply, or a conductor pro hac vice, is not important. He was on the ground in command of the train. It was his duty to remove it, as dangerously barring the way of the coming train, which he knew must be close at hand; and to warn and give notice of the dangerous obstruction to the expected train, according to the rules. We have already shown, and it is not necessary to repeat, the railway master cannot, by the requirement of its rules, shift the burden of a personal duty to other shoulders, and thus make the doctrine of fellow servant apply, because it has no power to amend the general law. How far it may be regulated by contract, express or implied, the facts of this case do not require us to inquire. This, I take it, is the least settled of all. See Bishop, Non-Cont. Law, § 674. "If in words or by implication the servant has undertaken to assume a risk, he cannot have compensation of the master for an injury resulting therefrom."

In the case of Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Spangler, 44 Ohio St. 471, 5 West. Rep. 785, Owen, Ch. J., says: "The policy of our law (as to the superior servant rule) being well settled, it only remains for us to inquire whether the railroad companies may ignore or contravene that policy by private compact with their employes, stipulating that they (the railroad company) shall not be held to a liability for the negligence of their servants which public policy demands shall attach to them. The answer is obvious. Such liability is not created for the protection of the employes simply, but has its reason and its foundation in public necessity and policy, which should not be asked to yield or surrender to mere private interests and agreements."

This brings us to the instructions respectively given and refused.

Plaintiff's No. 1. This instruction states hypothetically, but correctly, what the evidence certified tended to prove, with the rule of the Madden Case correctly applied.

Plaintiff's No. 2. This proceeds upon the supposition, and the facts and nature of the circumstances show the facts supposed to be true,—that is, if plaintiff's intestate had been right at his brake he could not possibly have prevented the collision, and that, if his thus being out of place did not directly contribute to the injury, then plaintiff's right to recover, if any, was not thereby barred. This is the law, as laid down in the Riley Case, 27 W. Va. 145, and in many other cases.

Defendant's No. 1. This was properly given for defendant, and there is no one to complain.

Defendant's No. 2. This was properly refused, because it is not in accordance with the law laid down in the Madden Case, and, if the court in that case put the master's liability, not upon the single fact that the conductor of the train, as such, was performing a personal duty of the master as the superior in control, but also required that the conductor should be in discharge of some other personal duty, then it at the same time held that, so far as by running his train he obstructed the track to the hurt of another and subordinate servant, he was, as vice-principal pro hac vice, in discharge of the master's duty of watchfulness and care in keeping the track clear. Besides, the instruction given by the court in amendment of No. 2 was all that defendant could ask on this head.

Defendant's No. 3. This instruction may or may not be correct, and it was properly rejected, there being no evidence fairly tending to show that the injury directly and proximately resulted from the negligence of the other brakeman; and even if it did, it did not do so without the direct, intervening, proximate help of the negligence of the conductor.

Defendant's No. 4. This is No. 3 in another form.

Defendant's No. 5. This is abstract in one view and incorrect in the other, as already shown.
16 L. R. A.

Defendant's No. 6. In the Madden Case the engineer on one train was injured by the negligence of the conductor of another train.

Defendant's No. 7. This, in one part, assumes the fact in dispute,—that the negligence of the other brakeman caused the collision,—while the evidence shows that it was but the occasion, nor is there any evidence tending to show that it was the cause.

Defendant's No. 8. This instruction is based on the theory that the negligence of the brakeman on the other train was the one direct, efficient, proximate cause of the injury. It was properly refused as abstract if for no other reason; and, as amended by the court, and then given, defendant has no ground to complain of it.

Defendant's No. 9. This is based on the theory that, upon the facts such as there was evidence tending to prove, the two brakemen and the conductor were fellow servants. If there had been any evidence tending to support this theory, it would have been enough, whether the transgressors acted jointly or severally.

Defendant's No. 10. This has been already disposed of. There is no evidence tending to show that the negligence of the other brakemen was the immediate cause of the death of plaintiff's intestate, and the negligence of Spease, the conductor, the remote cause. The tendency of all the evidence is to show the reverse.

Defendant's No. 11. The uncontradicted evidence shows that it was the duty of yardmaster Spease to take and conduct a train down to Tug creek, and bring back the runaway cars, and that brings him, for at least the only occasion here material, within the rule in the Madden Case. The latter clause of this instruction may have been correct, but it need not be examined, because the court was not asked to consider it separately.

Defendant's No. 12. The ground of the first branch of this instruction was sufficiently covered by instruction No. 1 given for plaintiff, and that of the second branch by plaintiff's instruction No. 2.

Defendant's No. 13. This one, also on contributory negligence, was covered in a practical, concrete way by instruction No. 3 given for plaintiff.

Defendant's No. 14. The evidence shows affirmatively that the death of the brakeman on the coming train was not caused contributorily or otherwise by Daniels' violation of any rule, whether he knew it or not, but by the negligence of the conductor in not observing the rule which required him to give Daniels' expected train warning that the track was obstructed by his, the conductor's, own train.

Defendant's No. 15. This was properly disposed of by instruction No. 2 given for plaintiff, which covered the same point of law, which has been held to be correct in substance. Besides, it is abstract, there being no evidence that the brakeman's own conduct contributed in any degree to his death.

Defendant's Nos. 16, 17, 18, and 19 were given. If either of them should happen to be wrong in any particular, (they seem to be correct,) plaintiff is not to blame for it.

In conclusion, although counsel should have full liberty to manage their cases in their own way, present all points of law for instruction that may arise, and the same point in different phases out of abundant caution, still they should consider that the time of the circuit court is precious, and that too much caution might tire out the most patient temper.

Judgment affirmed.

RHODE ISLAND SUPREME COURT.

Paul LAVALLE

SOCIÉTÉ ST. JEAN BAPTISTE DE
WOONSOCKET.

(.....R. L.....)

The unlawful expulsion of a member of a mutual benefit society will not give him a right of action for damages as such action is based on an acquiescence in the expulsion and a waiver of the illegality which must be counted a waiver of the entire cause of action. Other reasons against the action are found in the lack of any fund from which damages can be paid and in the impossibility of measuring the damages. The proper remedy is mandamus to restore him to membership.

(April 23, 1902.)

EXCEPTIONS by plaintiff to a ruling of the Court of Common Pleas for Providence County sustaining a demurrer to his declaration in an action brought to recover damages for his alleged illegal expulsion from membership in defendant society. Overruled.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Livingston Scott, for plaintiff:

The fact that mandamus lies does not preclude the existence of a remedy by action.

The existence simply of another remedy will not defeat mandamus unless it is such a remedy as will place the party demanding it in the same situation as he was in before the act complained of, or will give him relief substantially equivalent to the specific relief that mandamus affords.

Ritheridge v. Hall, 7 Port. (Ala.) 47; McCullough v. Brooklyn, 23 Wend. 461; Re Trustees of Williamsburgh, 1 Barb. 34; Fremont v. Crippen, 10 Cal. 211, 70 Am. Dec. 711; Ang. & A. Corp. 712.

If these interests in the insurance funds were the only interests of the plaintiff in the corporation, the case could not then be distinguished from the ordinary case of interference by a corporation with the rights of a shareholder in a moneyed stock company.

In the case of a stock company, when the corporation refuses to transfer stock to a purchaser, the courts refuse to restore by mandamus on the ground that a remedy by action will give him relief substantially adequate and equivalent to the specific remedy of mandamus.

Wilkinson v. Providence Bank, 8 R. I. 22; Hart v. Frontino & B. S. A. G. Min. Co. L. R. 5 Exch. 111; Smith v. Maine Boys Tunnel

Co. 18 Cal. 111; Bond v. Mount Hope Iron Co. 99 Mass. 505, 97 Am. Dec. 49

In this case the court can give relief in damages in this action for the loss of interest in the two insurance funds, entirely adequate and equivalent to specific relief by mandamus, and it ought not to refuse to do it simply because the right of the plaintiff in the general property of the corporation cannot be exactly estimated in the same action.

The nature of the plaintiff's right in the general property is the same as that of a stockholder.

As respects the membership rights, irrespective of the rights in the insurance funds, the plaintiff has suffered legal damage by the interference with his rights as a member by the act of expulsion.

Ashby v. White, 2 Ld. Raym. 955; Washington Ben. Soc. v. Bacher, 20 Pa. 425.

And he may waive his right as a member to reinstatement, and elect to consider these rights as lost, and sue for damages for such loss and injury.

State v. Lipa, 28 Ohio St. 665; Ludowski v. Polish R. O. St. S. K. Ben. Soc. 29 Mo. App. 337; Grosvenor v. United Society of Believers, 118 Mass. 78; Hardin v. Second Baptist Church, 51 Mich. 187, 47 Am. Rep. 555.

The existence of this remedy by action has been often recognized and alluded to by courts in other cases as an existing remedy concurrent with mandamus.

Sperry's App. 8 Cent. Rep. 215, 116 Pa. 391; Com. v. Pike Ben. Soc. 8 Watts & S. 247; Black & W. S. Soc. v. Van Dyke, 2 Whart. 309.

It does not lie in the mouth of the defendant to say that the plaintiff has suffered no damage because the action of the society was illegal.

Delacy v. Neuse River Nav. Co. 8 N. C. 274, 9 Am. Dec. 686; Medical & S. Soc. of Montgomery v. Weatherly, 75 Ala. 248; McLafferty v. Sweeney (Pa.) 7 Cent. Rep. 695; Harman v. Tappenden, 1 East, 562; Washington Ben. Soc. v. Bacher, 20 Pa. 425; Webb v. Portland Mfg. Co. 3 Sumn. 197; Paul v. Sloan, 22 Vt. 235, 54 Am. Dec. 75; Embrey v. Owen, 6 Exch. 368; Wadsworth v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 86 Tenn. 695.

If the plaintiff cannot maintain the action for damages for the loss of his membership rights for the reason that, the act of the society being illegal, he is to be considered still a member, volens volens, and therefore has not lost his right of membership, yet he certainly may as a member maintain the action for damages for the interference with his rights and his exclusion from the enjoyment of them, and for the injury to his reputation which his expulsion has caused, and for the public disgrace and mental and bodily distress which the unlawful act of the society has inflicted upon him.

NOTE.—The opinion and briefs seem to exhaust the authorities on the exact question involved in the above case.

For notes on power of court to review suspension of member of mutual benefit association, see Connelly v. Masonic Mut. Ben. Assn. (Conn.) 9 L. R. A. 428; Cannfield v. Knights of Maccabees (Mich.) 13 L. R. A. 626.

Washington Ben. Soc. v. Bacher, supra; People v. German U. E. St. S. Church, 53 N. Y. 103; Ludowski v. Polish R. O. St. S. K. Ben. Soc. and McLafferty v. Sweeney, supra.

Mr. Edwin Aldrich, for defendant:

The vote of expulsion is invalid and altogether void.

Ang. & A. Corp. § 420, and note, § 422, and cases cited; Rez v. Faversham Fishermen, 8 T. R. 856; Harman v. Tappenden, 1 East, 562; Fuller v. Plainfield Academic School, 6 Conn. 532; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Davenport, 97 U. S. 369, 24 L. ed. 1047; Pratt v. Taunton Copper Co. 123 Mass. 112, 25 Am. Rep. 87; Com. v. Pennsylvania Ben. Inst. 2 Serg. & R. 141; Loubat v. LeRoy, 40 Hun, 546.

Such a vote is a mere nullity, and does not expel the plaintiff. He is therefore upon his own showing still a member of defendant society, and has been deprived of no rights or privileges therein.

See People v. German U. E. St. S. Church, 53 N. Y. 103; Innes v. Wylie, 1 Car. & K. 257; State v. Milwaukee Chamber of Commerce, 47 Wis. 670.

If the plaintiff still remains a member of the defendant society, and has been deprived of no rights or privileges of membership, he cannot maintain this action, because he has suffered no damage.

See Wood v. Wood, L. R. 9 Exch. 190.

No action of the case can be maintained for any act however tortious which does not occasion "temporal damage."

Oliver, Precedents, 847, and cases cited; Fuller v. Plainfield Academic School, supra.

Where a member has been wrongfully expelled from a society or corporation, mandamus is the proper remedy to compel the society or corporation to restore him to membership.

See Am. L. Rev. July-August, 1890, p. 551, § 18, and cases cited; 1 Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 277, and cases cited; Fuller v. Plainfield Academic School, supra; Sibley v. Carteret Club, 40 N. J. L. 295; People v. Fire Department of Detroit, 81 Mich. 458, Savannah Cotton Exchange v. State, 54 Ga. 668; People v. Medical Soc. of Erie County, 32 N. Y. 192; Com. v. Pike Ben. Soc. 8 Watts & S. 247; Sleeper v. Franklin Lyceum, 7 R. I. 527; People v. New York Ben. Soc. 3 Hun, 361.

Stiness, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff seeks in this action to recover damages for an illegal expulsion from membership in the defendant corporation. The declaration sets out that the corporation is a benevolent organization, of the kind now generally known as a "mutual benefit society," having a relief fund for the benefit of its sick members; that the plaintiff was a member in good standing, and had performed all his duties and obligations as such member, yet the defendant, at a regular meeting, in the absence of the plaintiff, without lawful cause, without notice of any charges against him, without any trial or examination of any charges, and without affording him any opportunity to be heard, expelled the plaintiff from membership, whereby he lost his privileges as a member and his right and interest in and to the property of the corporation, and was also greatly injured in reputation. To this declaration the defendant demurred in the court of common pleas, where the demurrer was sustained, and the case comes before us on exception to the ruling of the court below in sustaining the demurrer. It is obvious, if the defendant is liable to suit at all on such a cause of action, that the declaration sets out the cause of action with sufficient fullness. The elements of an illegal and highbanded violation of the plaintiff's rights are fully stated. Indeed, the defendant takes the ground that the declaration sets forth an act so clearly illegal that it is void ab initio, and so there has been no expulsion, and consequently there is no damage and no right of action. No society should be admitted to shield itself in such a way. If the position is taken in good faith, a proper acknowledgment of the error will be evidenced by a restoration of the injured member to the privileges of the society; otherwise, continuing to hold out a member who has been wrongfully expelled is as bad as the original wrong itself. It amounts to saying to the member: "We have illegally expelled you; but so long as you do nothing about it we will let the expulsion stand and keep you out, but if you call us to account for it we will say we have not done it at all, because we did not do it right." Such a defense cannot commend itself to a court of justice. Cases which lay down such a doctrine cannot be followed by this court. The demurrer cannot be sustained on this ground. As the case stands upon the demurrer, a corporation for benevolent purposes has expelled a member without a trial, who thereupon sues for damages for the illegal expulsion, and the issue raised is, Can such an action be maintained? There is no question that a member who has been illegally expelled has the right to apply to the court to be restored to membership by a writ of mandamus.

There is also no question that while a corporation like this is not one which gives a member an indefeasible interest or property right, like shares of stock, still the benefits are a sort of money interest, in regard to which the member is entitled to protection. If he is lawfully expelled he loses these benefits altogether. If he is not lawfully expelled he is entitled to be restored to them; but is he also entitled to maintain an action for damages for the pretended expulsion? It is manifest that the most exact and complete remedy is by restoration, for in this way one is not only vindicated in his character and standing, but also re-established in the very rights which belong to him, without being obliged to take something else as a substitute for them. And evidently he cannot have both remedies at the same time, for restoration implies a correction of the error, and damages, compensation for it. They are incompatible; they cannot stand together.

Thus, in State v. Lipa, 28 Ohio St. 665, it was held that bringing an action for damages was a waiver of the right to a mandamus for restoration to membership. It is now well settled in cases of this kind, involving, as they do, a sort of right in property, that mandamus will lie; and we have only to consider whether an action may lie in lieu of mandamus. Decisions of this question have not been numerous, owing to the fact that the multiplication of these societies is of recent date, and the decisions that have been given are diverse. We have been referred to one case only, and we have found no other, which squarely sustains the right of action. Ludowski v. Polish R. C. St. S. K. Ben. Soc. 29 Mo. App. 387. It is to be regretted that the court in that case simply declares that the right of action exists, without stating the ground upon which it rests. In other cases there are dicta that an action may be maintained for illegal expulsion, but these, too, lack a discussion of the right of action. It is assumed to be in compensation for an injury caused by a violation of right. Washington Ben. Soc. v. Bacher, 20 Pa. 425; People v. German U. E. St. S. Church, 58 N. Y. 108.

State v. Lipa, supra, was a petition for mandamus, which was refused on account of a pending action in error, on which a judgment had been recovered. On the other hand is the recent case of Peyre v. Mutual Ben. Relief Soc., 90 Cal. 240, which denied the right of action upon the ground that it would punish those who voted against the expulsion as well as the majority who voted in favor of it. The question cannot yet be regarded as settled upon authority. Upon principle we do not think the action should be sustained. It assumes an illegal expulsion, for which, the wrong being waived, compensation is demanded. If the illegality is waived and the expulsion acquiesced in by the member, we see no reason why it should not be taken for what it implies. The waiving of illegality implies and recognizes a legal expulsion. There is no escape from this. But if the member has been legally expelled there is no ground of action. The waiver of the illegality, therefore, is a waiver of the entire cause of action; for, if the action be not illegal and in violation of the plaintiff's rights, there is nothing to complain of. There are cases in which a tort can be waived and an action of assumpsit for damages sustained, but those cases are radically different from the case at bar. They rest upon the principle that an act done, which is in itself a tort, may be treated by the injured party as having created a contract upon which he may recover; this remedy being of a milder character, and so no disadvantage to the defendant. But no case can be found where a plaintiff is allowed to waive a tort for the purpose of putting the defendant in a worse position than he would be in for the tort itself. Much less should one be allowed to waive a tort for the purpose of maintaining an action which, without the tort, would have no foundation. For example, suppose one wrongfully takes the goods of another. He may be sued in trover; or the tort being waived, and the taking considered as lawful and so carrying the title, a promise to pay may be implied. Here, outside of the tort, there is something upon which the implication of a contract may act, namely, the payment for the plaintiff's goods which the defendant has in possession. But in the case at bar there is no chance for the implication of a contract. There is no right to the fund except in a member; and a member may be lawfully expelled, and thereby lose that right altogether. In the ordinary case of waiving a tort one simply foregoes an advantage which he might press by reason of the wrongful act; but, in the matter of expulsion, if he foregoes the wrong he foregoes everything. Suppose, in an action for assault and battery, one could waive the tort, what would be left to sue for? Yet such a case would be analogous to the case at bar. The reasonable view is that if one waives the illegality of an act, and acquiesces in it as a legal and accomplished fact, he must take it with its consequences; and the consequences of an expulsion, with the element of illegality dropped out of it, would be a valid deprivation of membership, for which no action could lie. See Cooley, Torts, 2d ed. 108-111.

There is another reason why an action like this should not be maintained. Ordinarily these societies have no fund except that which is contributed for the benefit of the members, according to the regulations agreed upon. Each society is a sort of trustee of such a fund, and has no right to apply it to any other purposes. If one can take it on a judgment for damages he diverts it from the benevolent objects for which it was contributed, and that, too, possibly, to the injury of members who have not been in fault. Irrespective of the question of jurisdiction over such a fund as trust fund or a charity, a court ought not to make such a diversion possible if it can be reasonably avoided. If resort cannot be had to such a fund, a judgment against a corporation which accumulates only such a fund, and acquires no other property of account, would be a barren remedy to offer. The more difficult question of the measure of damages shows the impropriety of allowing the action.

In Ludowski v. Polish R. C. St. S. K. Ben. Soc. supra, only nominal damages were given. To establish a right of action for the mere purpose of allowing one to recover nominal damages is a course not to be commended. But what rule can be laid down by which to gauge a larger measure of damages? The members of these benefit societies have no severable interest in the fund. They can receive no benefit from it except as members who continue to pay their assessments, and then only in case of sickness. How can it be determined whether any member would continue to pay dues in the future; whether he would be sick during his membership, so as to derive benefit from the fund; whether the amount which he would be required to pay in may not exceed the amount he might receive as a benefit, and thus prove to be no loss at all? All of these questions enter into the determination of the amount of damage sustained by expulsion. They are incapable of proof. They are matters of pure speculation and guess, and too uncertain to form the basis of a judgment. If a member wrongfully expelled desires to enforce his rights, exact justice can be done by reinstating him. Great injustice may be done by an award of damages based upon conjecture or possible prejudice.

But the plaintiff urges that, if the action cannot be maintained for the loss of membership rights, yet he may recover for the exclusion from the right to enjoy the use of the common property and the privileges of membership. While such a recovery would not be objectionable for inconsistency, and would be less objectionable for uncertainty in the elements of damage, we nevertheless think that an action is not maintainable on this ground. The plaintiff had the right to an immediate restoration to participation in the affairs of the society. What he has suffered by exclusion therefrom is due to his own neglect to seek his remedy. Upon no principle of justice can he allow the exclusion to run on for the purpose of accumulating damages. There might be a brief interval of exclusion between the vote of the society and the enforcement of the remedy, but that would be too small a matter for a court to allow as a ground of action. Mistakes and illegalities are liable to occur in all sorts of societies, and the remedy which a court can give cannot always be absolutely adequate. Courts must deal with these matters sensibly, and to recognize every error which may to some extent infringe the rights of a member, as a cause of action, when that error can be speedily corrected, would be a manifest stretch of the administration of the law. The grievance may be regarded as an incident to membership in a society, and, at any rate of too trivial a character to require compensation in damages when the substantial remedy of restoration is at hand. In our opinion the plaintiff is not entitled to maintain this action, and the demurrer to the declaration is sustained.

Exceptions overruled.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

Thomas A. SCANLON, by Next Friend,

v.
Benjamin M. WEDGER.

Willis E. BURNHAM, by Next Friend,

v.
SAME.

George MASON, Admr., etc.,

v.
SAME.

Henry AR FOON, by Next Friend,

v.
SAME.

(.....Mass.....)

A voluntary spectator of a display of fireworks in a highway must be held to assume the risk of injury from accident without negligence although the show is unauthorized.

(Morton and Knowlton, JJ., dissent.)

(June 21, 1892.)

REPORT from the Superior Court for Suffolk County for the opinion of the Su preme Judicial Court, after verdict in favor of defendant, of actions brought to recover damages for injuries inflicted by the bursting of a mortar which was being used in displaying fireworks, and which was alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Judgments for defendant.

The facts are stated in the opinions.

Mr. C. W. Turner, for plaintiffs:

As defendant was not protected in firing said bombs by any license, his acts in so firing them were unjustifiable and wrongful and a public nuisance, and independent of any question of care on his part, he was liable for the trespass so committed by him to such persons as, being lawfully near and in the exercise of due care, suffered from the consequences of such acts.

Vosburgh v. Moak, 1 Cush. 453, 48 Am. Dec. 618; Cole v. Fisher, 11 Mass. 137; Moody v. Ward, 18 Mass. 299; Barker v. Com. 19 Pa. 418.

The act of exploding fire-crackers in a public highway is held to be wrongful and unlawful, independently of any statute, in Conklin v. Thompson, 29 Barb. 218; Thompson, Highways, 4th ed. 287.

In Jenns v. Sutton, 43 N. J. L. 257, 39 Am. Rep. 578, which is in its facts very similar to the case at bar, it was held that the use of a NOTE.—Liability for injuries caused by the discharge of fireworks.

Contrary to the doctrine of the main case it was held in a Missouri case not to be contributory negligence for a person to be present to witness a display of fireworks in a public square. Dowell v. Guthrie, 99 Mo. 658.

So in Bradley v. Andrews, 51 Vt. 530, the presence of a person on a public street in a crowd which had been invited there by an exhibition of fireworks was held, in direct conflict with the main case, not to be contributory negligence.

The decisions of the subject of liability for injuries by fireworks present quite a variety. The above Missouri decision holds that the discharge of fireworks at suitable places when not prohibited by statute or municipal regulation is not unlawful, but that the circumstances may be such as to make the act of discharging fireworks culpable negligence. Dowell v. Guthrie, supra.

It was there held that it was not unlawful or 16 L. R. A. wrongful to shoot off sky-rockets from a courthouse in the center of a public square where the troughs were so arranged that the rockets would pass over the people assembled. Ibid.

There was evidence, however, in that case of negligence in the way the fireworks were scattered about so that they caught fire and were shot off accidentally. Ibid.

But in a New Jersey case the court declared that the explosion of fireworks in a public street constituted a public nuisance per se. In that case the president of a political club who ordered a display of fireworks in a public street in front of a building where a meeting of the club was being held, and who paid for the fireworks from money raised by individual subscriptions, was held liable for injuries occasioned by the discharge of fireworks by a person whom he hired to explode them. Jenns v. Sutton, 43 N. J. L. 257, 39 Am. Rep. 578.

The same principle has been decided in several other cases. Thus in New York the explosion of public highway as a place in which to fire a bomb was illegal and per se constituted a public nuisance, and that all persons concerned in such an act were responsible for the injuries done to an innocent person.

Every person who indulges himself, even on the Fourth of July, in the discharge of fireworks in a highway or in any place to which he has not a private right, is liable for an injury caused to another.

Shearm. & Redf. Neg. 8d ed. p. 670.

Bombs belong to the class of articles denominated in the text-books "dangerous things," the use of which even when in a lawful place subjects the actor to strict responsibility.

Pollock, Torts, 407.

Mr. A. D. Bosson for plaintiff Ar Foon.

Mr. S. Z. Bowman for plaintiff Mason.

Messrs. Charles S. Lincoln and Charles P. Lincoln, for defendant:

The defendant, in firing off the mortar, was in the prosecution of a lawful act. The license of the board of aldermen under which he acted gave the right to display the fireworks, and a place was designated for the purpose by the police.

Mass. Pub. Stat. chap. 103, § 55.

In Cushing v. Boston, 122 Mass. 178, it was held that a special Statute of 1884, chap. 16, § 8, which provided that no door-steps shall project into any street more than one twelfth of the width thereof, and in no case more than three feet, though negative in form, implied authority to occupy the street to the extent indicated, and that steps so constructed did not constitute a defect or nuisance. This defendant, therefore, was lawfully engaged and cannot be liable prima facie without some proof of negligence or fault on his part.

Brown v. Collins, 53 N. H. 443, 16 Am. Rep. 873; Searles v. Manhattan R. Co. 2 Cent. Rep. 442, 101 N. Y. 661; Brown v. Kendall, 6 Cush. 292; Willett v. Rich, 2 New Eng. Rep. 672, 143 Mass. 856, 56 Am. Rep. 684; Tourtelot v. Rosebrook, 11 Met. 463; Rockwood v. Wilson, 11 Cush. 226; Nitro Glycerine Case, 82 U. S. 15 Wall. 587, 21 L. ed. 206.

The liability of the defendant does not depend on the illegality of his act, but upon his want of due care.

Steele v. Burkhardt, 104 Mass. 61; Shearm. & Redf. Neg. 37.

In order to hold this defendant liable for the alleged injuries, there must be some evidence of want of reasonable care on his part.

Pollock, Torts, *120, 121; Stanley v. Powell, 89 Week. Rep. 76.

It is true that the courts have held persons using dangerous things to a greater degree of care than in the use of ordinary things. Yet it is still a question of reasonable care (a relative phrase) for a jury, who, having all the facts before them and the instructions of the court to guide them, will determine their ver-fire-crackers by a boy on a public street of a city on the 4th of July, which so frightened a horse that he died, was held to be wrongful and to make the boy, although a minor, liable for the damages. Conklin v. Thompson, 20 Barb. 218.

So in Vermont a boy thirteen years old who shot off a roman candle on a Saturday evening for the purpose of amusement and the celebration of the 4th of July, which came the next day, was held liable for injuries thereby resulting to another person. Bradley v. Andrews, 51 Vt. 530.

And in Louisiana a father was held liable for an injury caused by the negligent discharge of a roman candle by his 6-year-old boy who discharged it downward from the gallery of his house in the direction of children in the street during a Christmas celebration. Mullins v. Blaise, 37 La. Ann. 92.

In a Massachusetts case the fact that plaintiff, who was injured by the negligent discharge of a sky-rocket, belonged to the same political club with the defendant, and that both had contributed to defray the expenses of the display, was immaterial. Fisk v. Wait, 104 Mass. 71.

But one on whose grounds an exhibition of fireworks is given for a 4th of July celebration was held not liable for an injury to a spectator by a ball from a roman candle in the hands of his son which was supposed to have been exhausted, where it is not shown that he procured the fireworks or invited any spectators, although he did prevent the firing of them from one place on his grounds and pointed out another from which the display could be made and was present at the display. Walzel v. Harrison, 37 Ill. App. 323.

In the old and well-known Squib Case (Scott v. Shepherd, 2 W. Bl. 962), a person who threw a lighted squib into a covered market place where a large concourse of people were assembled was held liable for the loss of an eye by a person whom it finally struck after being thrown about by several other persons in self-defense. The only question on which the court had any difficulty was as to the form and not the substance of the action.

In King v. Ford, 1 Starkie, 421, it was said by Lord 16 L. R. A.

Ellenborough that a school-master would be liable for injury to a scholar by the use of fireworks if he was negligent in not preventing their use when he knew they were to be used. But in that case it was decided that under the pleadings there could be no recovery on the facts shown.

On the principle that a municipal corporation is not liable for lack of diligence in enforcing police regulations it has been held that a town is not liable for an injury by the discharge of fireworks in violation of an ordinance, although the council and officers and a majority of the citizens actively participated therein and no attempt was made by the officers to prevent it. Ball v. Woodbine, 61 Iowa, 83, 47 Am. Rep. 805.

A city is not liable for injury such as the destruction of property by fire caused by an explosion of fireworks, although it had expressly suspended a general ordinance prohibiting such explosions within the city. Hill v. Charlotte, 72 N. C. 55.

In a Massachusetts case, without determining the question whether a city could be held liable if it authorized a display of fireworks, the city was held not responsible to a person wounded by a sky-rocket which was bought by a committee of the city council appointed to celebrate the 4th of July, and which was negligently fired under their direction during the celebration. Morrison v. Lawrence, 98 Mass. 219.

In a later Massachusetts case it was held that a city, in celebrating the 4th of July exclusively for the gratuitous amusement of the public, is not liable for personal injuries sustained by a person from the discharge of fireworks during the celebration. Tindley v. Salem, 137 Mass. 171, 50 Am. Rep. 239.

In this case the fact that a statute authorized appropriations of money for such purposes to a limited amount was regarded as implying an intention not to impose a further liability growing out of the celebration.

But, on the contrary, the city court of Brooklyn has just held that a city is liable for damages from fireworks for which it has given a permit. Speir v. Brooklyn, 46 N. Y. S. R. 561.

B. A. R.

dict upon all the circumstances and exigencies of the case.

Sullivan v. Scripture, 3 Allen, 566; Brown v. Kendall, and Stanley v. Powell, supra; Cunningham v. Hall, 4 Allen, 276; Holly v. Boston Gas Light Co. 8 Gray, 181, 69 Am. Dec. 238.

The plaintiffs, in attending the exhibition, voluntarily exposed themselves to its risks, and in the absence of negligence on the part of the defendant he cannot be liable.

Pollock, Torts, *143, 144; Cooley, Torts, pp. 589, 594; Smith, Neg. 158, Appendix, B.

Allen, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The several plaintiffs were injured by the explosion of a bomb or shell during a display of fireworks in Broadway square, which was a public highway in Chelsea. This display was made by the defendant Wedger, who acted under a license from the mayor and aldermen of Chelsea for a display of fireworks in Broadway square on that evening, under Pub. Stat., chap. 102, § 55. A verdict was returned for the defendant, and the jury made a special finding that the defendant, in firing the bomb, exercised reasonable care. The case comes to us on a report, which states that if, on the facts contained therein, and on said finding, the plaintiffs are entitled to recover, the case is to be remitted to the superior court for the assessment of damages; otherwise judgments are to be entered for the defendant. It is therefore to be considered whether it appears affirmatively that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover.

The plaintiffs apparently were present at the display of fireworks as voluntary spectators, and were of ordinary intelligence. No fact is stated in the report to show the contrary, nor has any suggestion to that effect been made in the argument. The plaintiffs have not rested their claims at all upon the ground that they were merely travelers upon the high way, or that they were unaware of the nature and risk of the display. The report says: "A considerable number of persons were attracted to said square by said meeting, and said bombs and other fireworks which were being exploded there. A portion of the center of the square about 40x60 feet was roped off by the police of said Chelsea, and said bombs or shells were fired off within the space so inclosed, and no spectators were allowed to be within said inclosure. . . . The plaintiffs were lawfully in said highway at the time of the explosion of said mortar, and near said ropes, and were in the exercise of due care." The bombs or shells are described in the report, and they were to be thrown from mortars into the air, it being intended that they should explode in the air, and display colored lights. They were apparently a common form of fireworks, such as has long been in use. The ground on which the plaintiffs place their several cases is that Pub. Stat., chap. 102, § 55, did not authorize the mayor and aldermen of Chelsea to license the firing of anything but rockets, crackers, squibs, or serpents, and that, therefore, the act of the defendant in firing bombs or shells was unauthorized and unlawful. It is not contended that it was at the time supposed either by the defendant or by anybody else that the license was insufficient to warrant the display which was actually made. The licensee was the chairman of a committee which had a political meeting in charge, and the defendant acted at the request of the committee, and was directed by them as to when and where to fire off the fireworks. Under this state of things, it must be considered that the plaintiffs were content to abide the chance of personal injury not caused by negligence, and that it is immaterial whether there was or was not a valid license for the display. If an ordinary traveler upon the highway had been injured, different reasons would be applicable. Vosburgh v. Moak, 1 Cush. 453, 48 Am. Dec. 618; Jenne v. Sutton, 43 N. J. L. 257, 39 Am. Rep. 578; Conradt v. Clauve, 93 Ind. 476, 47 Am. Rep. 388. But a voluntary spectator, who is present merely for the purpose of witnessing the display, must be held to consent to it, and he suffers no legal wrong if accidentally injured without negligence on the part of any one, although the show was unauthorized. He takes the risk. See Pollock, Torts, 138-144. In the opinion of a majority of the court, the entry must be, judgments for the defendant.

Morton, J., dissenting:

I dissent from the opinion of the majority of the court. The majority regard as immaterial the question whether the license was valid or not. It may be treated, therefore, as void, as I think it was. If it is void, then the defendant, Wedger, was using the highway for a purpose that was dangerous, unlawful, wrongful, and unjustifiable as against anybody lawfully in the highway and in the exercise of due care, as it is expressly found that the plaintiffs were, and is liable for any injury caused to them by the explosion, whether they were travelers or not, unless they participated or aided in the display, or contributed by their own conduct to their injuries, or assumed the risk of injury. It is not claimed that there is any evidence that they participated or aided in the display. There is no evidence that they were guilty of contributory negligence. It is said, however, that they assumed the risk. What are the facts? Merely that a political meeting was being held in the square, to which a considerable number of persons had been attracted, and that bombs and other fireworks were being discharged there; and that at the time of the explosion the plaintiffs were near the rope that inclosed the space that had been roped off for discharging the fireworks, but were lawfully there, and in the exercise of due care. There is no evidence that they knew or had any reason to suppose that such mortars were liable to explode and injure bystanders, or that they were familiar with their construction, or the manner in which they were fired, or were aware that the bombs were charged with an explosive more powerful than ordinary gunpowder. There is nothing to show that they had any knowledge or suspicion that they were incurring any risk by being where they were. An inference or a conclusion that they were not unaware of the risk rests, it seems to me, entirely on assumption. The most that can be said of them is that they were voluntary spectators of the display. But be.

fore they can be held to have assumed the risk it must appear that they knew all the facts material to the risk, and appreciated and understood it. Fitzgerald v. Connecticut River P. Co. (Mass.) 29 N. E. Rep. 464; Anderson v. Clark (Mass.) 29 N. E. Rep. 589; Mahoney v. Dore (Mass.) 30 N. E. Rep. 866. It is carrying the doctrine of assumption of the risk further than I think it has ever been carried to say that one who, being lawfully on the highway, and in the exercise of due care, observes as a spectator an unlawful and dangerous exhibition in it, assumes the risk. The exhibitor is bound at his peril to see that he has a valid license. If he selects the highway for an unlawful and dangerous display designed or calculated to attract the public, he, and not the spectators, assumes the risk of injury. It is of no consequence that the defendant exercised reasonable care in firing the bomb. It is a contradiction of terms to say of one engaged in an unlawful, dangerous, wrongful, and unjustifiable business that he used due care in it. Due care is predicated of something which a person may lawfully do, but which by his negligent manner of doing it may become injurious to others; not of something which he has no right whatever to do. Further, the question of assumption of the risk is ordinarily one of fact for the jury. Cases supra. The plaintiffs are not bound to show that they did not assume the risk. Unless it appears that they did, they are entitled to recover. This court cannot say as matter of law upon the facts stated that the plaintiffs assumed the risk. Nothing is disclosed as to the circumstances under which the plaintiffs were present. For aught that appears, they might have been travelers stopping for a moment on their way through the square, or detained by the crowd. It is difficult to see what the plaintiffs' supposition (if they did suppose it) that the exhibition was a lawful one had to do with their assumption of the risk; and still more difficult to see it if the exhibition was, as it proved to be, unlawful. I understand the question submitted to this court by the report to be whether, upon the facts therein stated, and upon the finding of the jury as to reasonable care on the part of Wedger, the plaintiffs were entitled to recover. I think they were, and that no other conclusion is warranted on principle or by authority. Vosburgh v. Moak, 1 Cus. 453, 48 Am. Dec. 618; Cole v. Fisher, 11 Mass. 187; Moody v. Ward, 18 Mass. 299; Congreve v. Smith, 18 N. Y. 79; Congreve v. Morgan, Id. 84, 72 Am. Dec. 495; Cohen v. New York, 118 N. Y. 582, 4 L. R. A. 406; Jenne v. Sutton, 43 N. J. L. 257, 39 Am. Rep. 578; Fletcher v. Rylands, L. R. 1 Exch. 265, 279 et seq.

As the opinion of the majority does not consider the matter of the release set up by the defendant Wedger, I have not done so, but have assumed that nothing which occurred operated to release him. I think, therefore, that, in accordance with the terms of the report, the entry should be, cases remitted to the superior court for the assessment of damages.

Knowlton, J., concurs in this opinion.

16 L. R. A.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL, ex rel. BOARD OF GAS & ELECTRIC LIGHT COMMISSIONERS,

v.

WALWORTH LIGHT & POWER CO.

(.....Mass.....)

A statute forbidding any other electric company to "lay or erect wires" for the purpose of carrying on its business over or under any street without consent of the authorities in any city or town in which a company is already engaged in furnishing electric light impliedly forbids the maintenance or use as well as the laying or erection of such wires in streets, and the prohibition extends to wires in a street which were lawfully laid by a predecessor of the company, to those laid by a company and sold to its customers as well as to those which were laid and owned by the customers themselves, where these are mere devices to evade the statute and the wires outside of the street lines are owned by the company.

(June 24, 1892.)

R EPORT by the Supreme Judicial Court for Suffolk County (Morton, J.,) for the opinion of the full bench of information filed by the attorney-general to enjoin defendant from maintaining certain electric wires. Injunction granted.

This was an information in equity filed by the attorney-general at the relation of the board of gas and electric light commissioners, against the defendant corporation, to compel it to desist and refrain from maintaining or using certain wires for electric lighting over and under the streets of the city of Boston, and from laying or erecting any wires over such streets, and to compel it to take down and remove all wires heretofore laid or erected by it over or under the streets of Boston.

The defendant was organized for the purpose of furnishing electric light and steam heating and power to customers in Boston, and it was so organized after the passage of chapter 882 of the Statutes of 1887, which provides that "in any city or town in which a company is engaged in or organized for the purpose of the manufacture and sale of electric light, no other company shall lay or erect wires over or under the streets, lanes, and highways of such city or town for the purpose of carrying on its business, without the consent of the mayor and aldermen of such city or selectmen of a town, after a public hearing and notice to all parties interested."

The defendant had never obtained any consent or authority of the mayor and aldermen of Boston pursuant to the provisions of this statute. At the time of the organization of the defendant, as well as at the time of the hearing, two other electric light companies were engaged in business in Boston. At the time of the hearing, the defendant was furnishing electric light or electricity for lighting over a considerable number of wires crossing the streets of Boston.

NOTE.—This case is interesting as a novel construction of a statute which is likely to be enacted in other jurisdictions as time goes on and the demand for electricity for domestic use increases, and which would be of little value if it could be evaded in the manner shown in this case.

The defendant succeeded, by purchase, to a business that had already been established. Two wires lying under Hawley street were placed in a tunnel which the predecessors of the defendant had been authorized by the mayor and aldermen to construct for the purpose of carrying a shaft and steam through, and were placed in the tunnel by such predecessors, who sold them to the defendant. No permission had ever been given by the mayor and aldermen to the defendant, or its predecessors, to lay wires for electric lighting in the tunnel or to lay them under or erect them over Hawley street. Of the wires over which, at the date of the hearing, the defendant was furnishing electricity for lighting, it appeared that only two, through their entire length,—those in the tunnel under Hawley street,—belonged to it. Of the others, several lines belonged, through their entire length, where they crossed the streets and where not, from the station to the lamps, to customers who had put them up at their own expense. All the other wires except where they crossed the streets, belonged to the defendant. When these last-named wires crossed the streets they belonged to customers from the fixture on one side of the street to that on the other, or from eave to eave of the buildings on the opposite sides of the street. In some cases, the treasurer of the defendant corporation, acting for and on behalf of the corporation, at the request of the customers, procured the wires to be erected across the street and the customers paid the defendant therefor; and in other cases, the customer himself procured the wire to be erected across the street.

In the case of arc lights, the defendant owned the lamps used by its customers and took care of them and replaced the carbons as they burned out. In the case of the incandescent lamps, the practice varied. In some instances the defendant owned and furnished everything, except so much of the wires as crossed the streets; and in others, where the customers owned the entire line, the defendant only furnished the globe-bulbs, the customer buying them of the defendant as he would of any other party having them to sell.

The defendant had erected no poles in the streets, and the wires in question crossed the streets at heights varying from 80 to 90 or 100 feet. There were many other wires also crossing the streets in the same localities not belonging to or used by the defendant or its customers.

The information was filed by the attorney-general after a written notice to him and the defendant from the Board of Gas & Electric Light Commissioners, pursuant to the provisions of the Statutes of 1885, chap. 814, § 12, and the Statutes of 1887, chap. 882, § 2.

Messrs. Everett W. Burdett and Charles A. Snow, for petitioner:

The wires as maintained by defendant are within the prohibition of the statute.

An information is the appropriate remedy in this case.

Atty-Gen. v. Metropolitan R. Co. 125 Mass. 16 L. R. A.

515, 28 Am. Rep. 264; Atty-Gen. v. Woods, 108 Mass. 496, 11 Am. Rep. 380; Eastern District Atty. v. Lynn & B. R. Co. 16 Gray. 242; Atty-Gen. v. Cambridge, 16 Gray. 247; Atty-Gen. v. Boston Wharf Co. 12 Gray. 533; Rouev v. Granite Bridge Corp. 21 Pick. 347; Atty-Gen. v. Tudor Ice Co. 104 Mass. 239, 6 Am. Rep. 227; Haskell v. New Bedford, 108 Mass. 208, 215; Atty-Gen. v. Jamaica Pond Aqueduct Corp. 183 Mass. 861; Atty-Gen. v. Tarr, 2 L. R. A. 87, 148 Mass. 809; Atty-Gen. v. Bay State Brick Co. 115 Mass. 481; Atty-Gen. v. Consumers Gas Co. 2 New Eng. Rep. 816, 142 Mass. 417; Atty-Gen. v. Algonquin Club, 11 L. R. A. 500, 153 Mass. 447, and cases cited.

Injury to the public from a nuisance may be redressed by information in equity as well as by indictment at law. "The fact that keeping a nuisance is a crime does not deprive a court of equity of the power to abate the nuisance."

Carlton v. Rugg, 5 L. R. A. 193, 149 Mass. 530; Haskell v. New Bedford, 108 Mass. 208, 215; Atty-Gen. v. Tarr, 2 L. R. A. 87, 148 Mass. 809; Atty-Gen. v. Jamaica Pond Aqueduct Corp. 183 Mass. 861; Atty-Gen. v. Woods, 108 Mass. 496, 11 Am. Rep. 380; Com. v. King, 18 Met. 115; Dillon, Mun. Corp. § 660, note 4.

It cannot be objected that the Statute of 1887 is unconstitutional upon the ground that, in effect, it tends to create a monopoly or monopolies in the use of the streets for electric-lighting purposes.

That the creation of such a monopoly is within the constitutional powers of the Legislature is well established.

New Orleans Gas Light Co. v. Louisiana L. & H. P. & Mfg. Co. 115 U. S. 650, 29 L. ed. 516.

Such a statute is a valid exercise of the police powers of the state.

Western U. Telegr. Co. v. New York, 88 Fed. Rep. 552; Oushing v. Boston, 188 Mass. 380, 35 Am. Rep. 388; Budd v. New York, 148 U. S. 517, 36 L. ed. 247, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 45, and cases cited; People v. Squire, 10 Cent. Rep. 437, 107 N. Y. 598; Sawyer v. Davis, 136 Mass. 239, 49 Am. Rep. 27.

No valid objection to the constitutionality of the statute can be urged upon the ground that it delegates the regulation of the use of the streets to the mayor and aldermen, or to a state board.

Com. v. Plaisted, 2 L. R. A. 142, 148 Mass. 875.

Holmes, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an information by the attorney-general, under Stat. 1887, chap. 882, and Stat. 1885, chap. 814, § 13, to restrain the defendant from maintaining or using certain wires over which the defendant furnishes electricity for lighting. The defendant was incorporated since the passage of Stat. 1887, chap. 882. By section 8 of that Act, "in any city or town in which a company is engaged in . . . the manufacture and sale of electric light, no other company shall lay or erect wires over or under the streets, lanes, and highways of such city or town, for the purpose of carrying on its business, without the consent of the mayor and aldermen," etc. There were companies in Boston engaged in the manufacture and sale of electric light at the date of the Act, and the defendant has not obtained the consent required by it. The wires in question are of three classes—First, two wires in a tunnel under Hawley street, laid without license by a predecessor of the defendant, and now belonging to the defendant, second, wires put up by the defendant, and still belonging to the defendant throughout their entire length, except where they cross the streets; the portions which cross the streets having been sold by the defendant to its customers, or put up by the defendant for its customers in some instances, in others having been put up by the customers, these devices being intended by the parties to evade the statute; third, wires put up by customers, and belonging to them, the intent presumably being the same as in the last case. The question is whether these wires fall within the statute.

The Legislature may think that a business like that of transmitting electricity through the streets of a city has got to be transacted by a regulated monopoly, and that a free competition between as many companies and persons as may be minded to put up wires in the streets, and to try their luck, is impracticable. Without wasting time upon useless generalities about the construction of statutes, it is enough to say that the statute before us had that consideration in view, and must be construed accordingly. We agree that we cannot supply a casus omissus. But the fair scope and meaning of the words used and the number of cases included will vary more or less according to the purpose of the Act. To take an example a little different from those before us, we think it plain that, if somebody else put up a wire, and then the company bought it and used it for the business of furnishing and selling electric light, the case would be within the meaning of the words used, although the company did not erect the wire in a literal sense, or cause it to be erected. In other words, the reason why the statute forbids laying or erecting wires is to prevent wires being maintained in the streets. If they vanished as soon as erected, the Legislature never would have prohibited the mere act of putting them there. But when the Legislature forbids erecting wires for the express purpose of preventing their being maintained, it impliedly forbids their being maintained. We are of opinion that the case is not changed by the wires having been laid by a predecessor who was not within the prohibition of the statute, if that be the fact as to the wires in Hawley street.

We are of opinion that similar reasoning applies with greater force to the use of the second class of wires by the defendant. It seems to us quite out of the question to say that a company may escape the prohibition of the statute by turning over to a customer so much of each wire as crosses a street, and then continuing to use the wire. If it is forbidden to erect, it is forbidden to use wires which it has erected. And it is within the words of the Act, as well when it erects a wire technically, as a servant of its customer, with intent to use the wire for the purposes of its business, but to evade the Act, as when it erects it on its own behalf. We agree that we cannot order wires to be taken down, the owners of which are not before us. But we can order the defendant not to use them.

With much more hesitation we have come to the same conclusion about the wires put up by customers. If a use of them by the company for the purposes of its business is permitted, the statute is made nugatory by an easy evasion. It was suggested that in some of these cases the company did not sell electric light, because it did not own the device at the customer's end by which the electricity furnished took the form of light; that the company only sold electricity. We think it quite clear that the Legislature took no such nice distinctions, and that a wire which is prohibited when used to furnish electric light is prohibited equally when used to furnish electricity for the purpose of conversion into light at the end of the wire.

Injunction accordingly.

COMMONWEALTH of Massachusetts

v.

Marcy F. ROBERTS.

(.....Mass.....)

1. The placing and maintenance of water-closets in buildings which are designed for habitation and are so situated that they can be connected with public sewers, may be compelled by the state under its police power, although the buildings were lawfully erected without them.
2. An Act providing that buildings designed for habitation shall have sufficient water-closets connected with the public sewers, and imposing a penalty on "any person violating any provision" of it, applies to violations which continue after its passage as well as to those which then come into existence.
3. A water-closet within the meaning of an Act providing that every building designed for habitation shall have sufficient water-closets connected with the sewer and shall not have a cess-pool or privy, is an arrangement with a permanent water supply which can be used systematically and regularly for carrying whatever is deposited therein to the sewer and does not include a privy vault which although connected with the sewer can be flushed only by a rain-storm or from a hydrant.

(January 6, 1892.)

REPORT from the Superior Court for Suffolk County for the opinion of the Su-

NOTE.—While the constitutionality of the statute involved in the above case does not seem to be open to serious question, the case is worthy of notice as presenting an advanced exercise of police power. With the increasing size of cities and of closely crowded districts where poverty and degradation seem to make either bodily or moral health impossible, the necessity increases for legislation which will compel a comparatively decent and safe mode of living. The modern advance in legislation concerning boards of health and their powers is recognized everywhere as a constitutional exercise of police power. And mere hazard, danger, or peril to health from an alleged nuisance is held enough to bring it within the powers of such a board without an absolute certainty that it preme Judicial Court of a prosecution against defendant for the maintenance of a nuisance after a verdict of conviction had been rendered. Judgment on the verdict.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Lund, Jewell & Welch for appellant.

Messrs. A. E. Pillsbury, Atty. Gen., and C. H. Harris, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the Commonwealth.

Lathrop, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a complaint under the Statutes of 1885, chap. 382, § 2, as amended by the Statutes of 1889, chap. 450, § 2, charging that the defendant on May 15, 1890, kept and maintained a dwelling-house on a certain street in Boston, in which street there was a public sewer, and that said dwelling-house "did not then and there have sufficient water-closets connected with the sewer in said street as aforesaid, nor any water-closets connected with any sewer whatever." The Statute of 1885, chap. 382, § 1, provides that "every building in the city of Boston used as a dwelling, tenement, or lodging-house, or where persons are employed, shall have at all times good and sufficient water-closets, earth-closets, or privies, as the board of health of said city may determine." Section 2 of the same chapter, as amended by the Statutes of 1889, chap. 450, § 2, reads as follows: "Every such building situated on a public or private street, court, or passageway, in which there is a public sewer, and every building connected with any sewer, shall have sufficient water-closets connected with the sewer, and shall not have a cess-pool or privy, except where, in the opinion of the board of health, it can be allowed to remain temporarily, and then only as said board shall approve." At the trial in the superior court on appeal it was admitted that the defendant's house was a dwelling-house situated on a public street in Boston, and was built in 1861 or 1862; that there was a public sewer through said street, built in 1861; and that there was no water-closet in the house. It was further admitted that at the time the house was built a small wooden building was erected in the yard of the house, and about twenty-five feet distant therefrom; that in this building was a seat, with a hole in it, and beneath the building was an excavation in the earth, about six feet deep and five feet square, bricked up, and connected with the public sewer by a 6-inch pipe, which pipe had a trap; that water from the roof of one half of the house and from the yard flowed into this excavation when it rained; and that the excavation could be flushed by a hose attached to a hydrant in the house, and was flushed from time to time by a man sent by the defendant for that purpose; and that the hose was accessible to the defendant's tenants on application to her or to the man. This excavation was also admitted to have been made in accordance with the ordinances of Boston then in force, and which now are in force, unless they have been modified by the statutes above referred to.

1. There can be no doubt that the statute in question is within the constitutional powers of the Legislature as a police power. It is an Act for the preservation of the public health, and relates to the disposal of one of the most dangerous forms of sewage. As said by Morton, J., in Nickerson v. Boston, 181 Mass. 306: "It belongs to that class of police regulations to which private rights are held subject, and is founded upon the right of the public to protect itself from nuisances, and to preserve the general health. The authority of the Legislature to pass laws of this character is too well settled to be questioned." See also Com. v. Certain Intoxicating Liquors, 116 Mass. 155, and cases cited; Bancroft v. Cambridge, 126 Mass. 438.

2. The defendant contends that the Act was not intended to apply to houses already built when the Act went into operation. But while the Act is broad enough to apply to all buildings, the language of the section imposing a penalty on "any person violating any provision of this Act" (Stat. 1885, chap. 382, § 22) is prospective in its operation, and applies to violations which continue after its passage, or which then come into existence. Fickett v. Durham, 119 Mass. 159; Com. v. Homer, 153 Mass. 843, and cases cited. The defendant, however, contends that, as her structure was lawful when built, an Act of the Legislature which would render its use unlawful would be unconstitutional,—citing Com. v. Alger, 7 Cush. 58, 103. The statutes there in controversy related to harbor lines in Boston, and were not police regulations affecting the public health; and the language of Chief Justice Shaw in that case does not apply to a case like that now under consideration. Salem v. Eastern R. Co. 98 Mass. 441, 443, 96 Am. Dec. 650; Watertown v. Mayo, 109 Mass. 815; Train v. Boston Disinfecting Co. 144 Mass. 528, 530, 4 New Eng. Rep. 437; Rideout v. Knox, 143 Mass. 365, 374, 2 L. R. A. 81.

3. The only other question argued by the would cause disease. State v. Neidt (N. J.) Jan. 7, 1890.

The same principle manifestly applies to laws for preventing adulteration of food which are clearly established to be within the police power by numerous decisions among which are State v. Marshall, 1 L. R. A. 51, and note, 64 N. H. 549; Powell v. Pennsylvania, 127 U. S. 673, 32 L. ed. 253; Walker v. Pennsylvania, 127 U. S. 669, 32 L. ed. 261; Com. v. Miller, 6 L. R. A. 633, and note, 181 Pa. 113.

Somewhat similar to the main case above is the English case of St. James & St. John Vestry v. Feary, L. R. 24 Q. B. Div. 708. An order of the vestry was enforcing requiring proper doors and coverings to a water-closet. Boards of health have 16 L. R. A.

been often called upon in this country to take action in reference to such closets, but for the most part at least on the ground that they were nuisances to neighbors.

Certainly the constitutional powers of the Legislature according to the whole current of decisions concerning the police power allow, and the public welfare demands, much new legislation touching many particulars of life in crowded districts which will prevent the overcrowding not only but also many other vicious conditions which threaten the public morals and health in almost equal degree. For note on supremacy of police power see State v. Schlemmer (La.) 10 L. R. A. 153 B. A. R.

defendant is whether the structure existing in the defendant's yard is a water-closet, within the meaning of the Act. We are of opinion that it is not. The Legislature, by the use of the word "water-closet," intended an arrangement then in common use, connected with a sewer, and having a permanent water supply, which can be used systematically and regularly for carrying whatever is deposited therein to the sewer, and not a privy-vault, which, although connected with a sewer, has no water supply for flushing it, except such as depends on chance. The case comes before us on the report of a justice of the superior court, after a verdict of guilty, and the entry must be, judgment on the verdict.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT.

Theron F. GIDDINGS, Relator,

Robert R. BLACKER, Secretary of State.

(.....Mich.....)

1. An objection that a private citizen as relator in a petition for mandamus has not made any application to the attorney-general to institute the proceeding is not valid where the attorney-general is shown to be adverse to the application by his appearance for the respondent.
2. The discretion of the Legislature in making an apportionment of senatorial districts must be honestly and fairly exercised so as to preserve the equality of representation as nearly as may be, otherwise the apportionment will be unconstitutional.
3. In holding an apportionment of senatorial districts unconstitutional where the prior apportionment which had been acquiesced in for three elections was also subject to the same constitutional objections and was brought in question by the petition asking that notices be ordered to be given under it, the notices were ordered to be given under a still earlier Apportionment Act the validity of which was not brought in question in those proceedings.

(July 23, 1892.)

PETITION for a writ of mandamus to compel the secretary of state to give out notices for election of state senators under the Apportionment Act of 1885 and to disregard the Act of 1891. Relief granted.

The facts are stated in the opinions.

Mr. F. A. Baker, with Mr. Moses Taggart, for relator:

The question presented to the court is not one of a political character, but of constitutional construction.

State v. Cunningham (Wis.) 15 L. R. A. 561. Jurisdiction to examine and pass upon such questions is expressly recognized in State v. Newark, 40 N. J. L. 299; State v. Campbell (Ohio) June 16, 1891; State v. Van Duyn, 24 Neb. 588, and Prouty v. Stover, 11 Kan. 285.

And in Opinion of Justices, 18 Me. 468, it is held by Judge Shepley, that legislative apportionment, "if made in manifest disregard of the constitutional provision, would, like other unconstitutional enactments, be void, and not binding upon the people or a subsequent Legislature."

NOTE.—As to the power of the court to set aside a legislative gerrymander, see State v. Cunningham (Wis.) 15 L. R. A. 561, and note.
16 L. R. A.

We make no question that certain discretion is given to the Legislature, where it is fairly a matter of opinion as to the best method of arrangement of senatorial districts, and that such discretionary action of the Legislature is conclusive. The apportionment may vary the basis of population in different districts, but when it is apparent that the constitutional provision has been ignored, we might say defied, in many of the districts created by the action of the Legislature, then it is not only the right but the imperative duty of the court to intervene and declare such action unconstitutional and void.

State v. Cunningham (Wis.) 15 L. R. A. 561; State v. Bixford, 24 Wis. 484; State v. Newark and State v. Van Duyn, supra.

When an Act can only operate by violating a provision of the Constitution, it cannot be replied to on the ground that the object contemplated by the Legislature was different.

People v. Holihan, 29 Mich. 116.

When the Constitution defines the circumstances under which a right may be exercised, the specification is an implied prohibition against legislative interference to add to the condition.

Cooley, Const. Lim. p. 78.

The record shows, however, that many districts have been formed in violation of the fundamental law of the state. The object of the legislation being to provide a system for the state, and the formation of one senate district being dependent upon the formation of others, it must stand or fall as a whole.

Skinner v. Wilhelm, 6 West. Rep. 367, 63 Mich. 568; Brooks v. Hill, 1 Mich. 118; Campau v. Detroit, 14 Mich. 276; Cooley, Const. Lim. 5th ed. p. 218.

The right to take full and equal part with other electors, in the selection of a state senator is, under the 14th Amendment of the Federal Constitution, a "privilege" which the state is prohibited from abridging in whole or in part.

Virginia Cases, 100 U. S. 339, 25 L. ed. 676.

M. A. A. Ellis, Atty-Gen., for respondent:

The 14th Amendment of the Constitution was passed and finally ratified in 1868. It has no reference or application whatever to extending the right of suffrage, and does not attempt in any manner to bestow the right of suffrage on any person.

Minor v. Happersett, 88 U. S. 21 Wall. 163, 22 L. ed. 627. See 2 Story, Const. 678.

The power of Congress to legislate at all upon the subject of voting at state elections rests upon the 15th Amendment, and can be exercised by providing a punishment only when the wrongful refusal to receive the vote of a qualified elector at such election is because of his race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

United States v. Reese, 92 U. S. 215, 23 L. ed. 568.

It is not necessary that every state law should have equal force and effect in every district in the state. The right to stand equal before the law does not mean that each citizen of a state shall have the same rights and privileges of every other citizen who resides in some other locality.

Missouri v. Lewis, 101 U. S. 31, 25 L. ed. 992; Richmond, F. & P. R. Co. v. Richmond, 96 U. S. 529, 24 L. ed. 787; Hayes v. Missouri, 120 U. S. 71, 30 L. ed. 580; Crowley v. Christensen, 137 U. S. 86, 34 L. ed. 620; Kentucky R. R. Tax Cases, 115 U. S. 321, 29 L. ed. 414; Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 32, 28 L. ed. 925.

The clause that "no state shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of the citizens of the United States," has no application whatever to the controlling of the elective franchise of the citizens of a state, or to the abridgment in any manner of the rights of a citizen of the state.

Minor v. Happersett, 88 U. S. 21 Wall. 162, 22 L. ed. 627; Slaughter House Cases, 83 U. S. 16 Wall. 74, 21 L. ed. 408.

If Act 175 of the Public Acts of 1891 is unconstitutional and void because it does not divide the territory equitably among the several counties and districts of the state, by the same reasoning and for the same assumed equity the Apportionment Act of 1885 is also unconstitutional and void, and likewise the Apportionment Act of 1891 is unconstitutional and void.

Courts will take judicial notice of the census whether taken under the authority of the state or the United States.

State v. Cunningham (Wis.) 15 L. R. A. 561; State v. Jackson County Ct. 89 Mo. 237; Temple v. State, 15 Tex. App. 804, 49 Am. Rep. 201, note; Gerahty v. Ashland County (Wis.) Dec. 15, 1891; State v. Keaough, 68 Wis. 142.

The court will take judicial notice of the location, general boundaries, and juxtaposition of the several counties, towns, and wards mentioned in the Act in question, and of the Acts of 1885 and 1891, and of matters of common knowledge.

Brown v. Piper, 91 U. S. 37, 23 L. ed. 200; King v. Gallun, 109 U. S. 101, 27 L. ed. 871.

Hence the equity and constitutionality of all of these Acts are before the court.

It is held by some courts that the matter of apportionment belongs to the legislative department of the government, that it is vested in them, and they are accountable only to the people for the abuse of that authority.

Wise v. Bigger, 79 Va. 282; Opinion of Judges, 10 Gray, 618; Opinion of Justices, 18 Me. 458.

And this court in the case of Wellman v. Chicago & Grand Trunk R. Co. 83 Mich. 592, held in substance that where a question of reasonableness was left to the Legislature, it was a legislative not a judicial question.

16 L. R. A.

In State v. Campbell (Ohio) June 16, 1891, the court said: "Hence it is not sufficient in this proceeding that we might be of the opinion that we could make a better apportionment than has been made by the board. To authorize this court to interfere and command the board to make another apportionment, the apportionment made must so far violate the rules prescribed by the Constitution as to enable us to say that what has been done is no apportionment at all, and should be wholly disregarded."

An apportionment cannot be overthrown because the representatives are not distributed with mathematical accuracy according to the population.

Proulx v. Stover, 11 Kan. 261. See also State v. Francis, 26 Kan. 737.

There is no showing or pretense in the application in this cause that the relator has ever made application to the prosecuting attorney of his county or any other public officer to apply to this court for mandamus touching the matter here at issue, and he has no standing in this court.

State v. Cunningham (Wis.) 15 L. R. A. 561. See People v. Regents of University of Michigan, 4 Mich. 98; People v. State Prison Inspectors, 4 Mich. 187; People v. Kent County Supra, 38 Mich. 423; Whiting v. Butler, 29 Mich. 122.

With the question of the motive which influenced the Legislature in making the apportionment, this court has nothing to do.

Ex parte McCordle, 74 U. S. 7 Wall. 514, 19 L. ed. 265; Dorr v. Continental Ins. Co. of New York City, 94 U. S. 541, 24 L. ed. 151; Soon Hing v. Crowley, 113 U. S. 708, 28 L. ed. 1145.

Grant, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The Constitution of Michigan contains the following provisions, found in article 4: "Section 1. The legislative power is vested in a Senate and House of Representatives. Sec. 2. The Senate shall consist of thirty-two members. Senators shall be elected for two years, and by single districts. Such districts shall be numbered from one to thirty-two, inclusive, each of which shall choose one senator. No county shall be divided in the formation of senate districts, except such county shall be equitably entitled to two or more senators." "Sec. 4. The Legislature shall provide by law for an enumeration of the inhabitants in the year 1854, and every ten years thereafter, and at the first session after each enumeration so made, and also at the first session after each enumeration by the authority of the United States, the Legislature shall rearrange the senate districts according to the number of white inhabitants and civilized persons of Indian descent not members of any tribe." Acting under these constitutional provisions the Legislature passed the Senatorial Apportionment Act, No. 175, Pub. Acts 1891. By the census of 1890, the population was 2,093,889. The ratio of each district would therefore be 65,434. Eight of the districts under this Act contain populations as follows: Seventh, 91,420; tenth, 82,697; fourteenth, 88,678; eighteenth, 86,129; twentieth, 84,694; twenty-fifth, 82,556; twenty-seventh, 97,880; thirty-first, 82,218. These are the eight largest districts. Eight other districts contain populations as follows: Twelfth, 41,245; eleventh, 42,110; sixteenth, 46,626; twenty-second, 42,546; twenty-third, 89,727; twenty-eighth, 43,701; twenty-ninth, 40,033; thirtieth, 53,088. Under this apportionment eight senators would represent constituencies numbering in all 695,717, while eight other senators would represent constituencies numbering in all only 349,056. The county of Saginaw is given two senators, although it contains a population of only 82,278. The twenty-seventh district is composed of nine counties, with a population of 97,880, while the twenty-ninth, with eight counties, five of which adjoin a like number of counties of the twenty-seventh, contains a population of only 40,038.

The relator is a citizen and an elector in the seventh district, composed of the counties of Kalamazoo, St. Joseph, and Branch, with a population of 91,420, and prays for the writ of mandamus to restrain the respondent, the secretary of state, from giving notice of the election of senators, under the Act of 1891, and to compel him to give notice under the Apportionment Act of 1885. The petition also contains a prayer for general relief. The basis upon which relief is sought is that the power delegated by the above provisions of the Constitution to rearrange the senatorial districts is limited; that this limitation was wholly disregarded by the Act in question, and the Act is therefore unconstitutional and void. It appears conceded by the learned attorney-general that the Legislature is not in the exercise of a political and discretionary power when acting under these constitutional provisions, for which it is only amenable to the people, and that this court has jurisdiction, in a case properly before it, to determine the constitutionality of the Act in question. The Constitution of this state provides: (art. 6, § 8.) "The supreme court shall have a general superintending control over all inferior courts and shall have power to issue writs of error, habeas corpus, mandamus, quo warranto, procedendo, and other original and remedial writs, and to hear and determine the same. In all other cases it shall have appellate jurisdiction only." The general jurisdiction of this court to determine the constitutionality of legislative enactments is not limited so as to exclude laws involving political rights. The Constitution of Wisconsin, in conferring jurisdiction upon its supreme court, is nearly identical in language with the Constitution of this state. The Supreme Court of Wisconsin has recently most ably and thoroughly discussed and determined the jurisdiction of the court in a case similar in principle and its facts to the present one. State v. Cunningham (Wis.) 15 L. R. A. 561. The authorities in support of the jurisdiction are there collated, and citations made from them. Were the power conferred upon the Legislature one of absolute discretion, then the express mandate, "shall rearrange according to the number of inhabitants," would be void of any force or meaning, except that it 16 L. R. A.

might be regarded as expressive of the opinion of the framers of the Constitution that such method would be equitable and fair. We have no doubt of the jurisdiction of the court.

But it is insisted by the attorney-general that, inasmuch as the relator is a private citizen, having no interest in the matter above every other citizen, he has no standing in court, because, prior to filing his petition, he made no application to the prosecuting attorney of his county, the attorney-general, or other public officer, to apply to this court for a mandamus touching the matter here at issue. In support of this claim he cites People v. Regents of University of Michigan, 4 Mich. 98; People v. State Prison Inspectors, Id. 187; People v. Green, 29 Mich. 121; People v. Kent County Supra. 38 Mich. 423.

In People v. Regents of University of Michigan the application was to compel the regents to appoint a professor of homeopathy in the medical department of the university. The court expressed its conviction that that was a case in which the action of the attorney-general would have been proper and necessary, at the same time saying: "We do not intend to say that a case may not arise in which this court would allow an individual to file such a complaint, particularly if the attorney-general were absent, or refused to act without good cause."

In People v. State Prison Inspectors a private citizen applied for the writ of mandamus to restrain the respondents from teaching to convicts in the state prison the mechanical trade of wagonmaking. The main question was disposed of upon its merits, the court expressing some doubt whether the relator had such clear legal right and special interest as to entitle him to make the application.

In People v. Green the application was to compel the county clerk and register of deeds to keep his offices at a certain place to which he claimed the county seat had been lawfully removed. His convenience in having access to the office was the ground of his petition. It was held that he had shown no such special interest as to authorize him to proceed without application to the proper officer.

In People v. Kent County Supra. the application was to compel the allowance of claims alleged to be owing from the county to the city. The city authorities were of course the proper party to institute the proceedings.

In People v. State Auditors, 43 Mich. 423, this precise objection was made, and the court said: "In the present case the officer whose duty it usually is to enforce the rights of the state in this court has, in the performance of his official functions as adviser of the state officers, placed himself in an adverse position, and appears for the respondents on this application." The present case comes directly within that decision. The law does not require unnecessary things to be done. When the attorney-general appears for a respondent it certainly follows that he is adverse to the position of the relator, and that an application on the part of the relator to him to commence the proceedings would be met with noncompliance. This court, as appears from the authorities above cited, has taken care to prevent officious intermeddling by the use of this discretionary writ, and at the same time has swept away technicalities where public interests are involved, and prompt action is necessary. We have quite uniformly overruled this objection in cases of the latter class. The unconstitutionality of the Act is clear. The county of Saginaw, with only 16,839 inhabitants in excess of the ratio, is divided into two senatorial districts, one having 24,189 less than the ratio, and the other having 23,834 less than the ratio. There is no basis, constitutional or otherwise, for such an apportionment. It is contemplated by the Constitution that the ratio shall govern as far as it is practical. This is apparent from the provision that "each county hereafter organized, with such territory as may be attached thereto, shall be entitled to a separate representative when it has attained a population equal to a moiety of the ratio of representation." The Constitution of the United States provides that "the number of representatives shall not exceed one for every 30,000, but each state shall have at least one representative." Under the first census, which showed the total number of free persons, with three fifths of the slaves, to be 3,606,897, Congress fixed the number of representatives at 120, being one for every 30,000. In the apportionment, Massachusetts was entitled to 15 representatives, with an excess of 25,327, for which she was given an additional representative. Other states with a similar large excess were treated likewise, while those states which had a small excess received no additional representation therefor. President Washington, by the advice of Jefferson, Randolph, and Madison, vetoed the bill as unconstitutional, giving the following reasons: "First. The Constitution has prescribed that representatives shall be apportioned among the several states according to their respective numbers; and there is no one proportion or divisor which, applied to the respective members of the states, will yield the number and allotment of representatives proposed by the bill. Second. The Constitution has also provided that the number of representatives shall not exceed one for every 30,000, which restriction is by the context and by a fair and obvious construction to be applied to the separate and respective numbers of the state, and the bill has allotted to eight of the states more than one for every 30,000."

A county having an excess of only about one fourth of the ratio is not, in the language of the Constitution, "equitably entitled to two or more senators," while the district composed of eight counties, and containing nearly two and a half times the population of each district into which the former county is divided, receives but one senator. Equity has no definition applicable to such a case. It was never contemplated that one elector should possess two or three times more influence, in the person of a representative or senator, than another elector in another district. Each, in so far as it is practicable, is, under the Constitution, possessed of equal power and influence. Equality in such matters lies at the basis of our free government. It is guaranteed, not only by the Constitution, but by the Ordinance of 1787, organizing the territory out of which the state of Michigan was carved. State v. Cunningham, supra.

Aside from considerations of equity and justice, it is apparent that the framers of the Constitution understood that a county, to be entitled to two senators, must have a ratio, and a moiety of a ratio, of population. Constitutional Debates of 1850, pp. 119, 123, 361, 368, 374, 386, 113. The state cannot be divided into senatorial districts with mathematical exactness, nor does the Constitution require it. It requires the exercise on the part of the Legislature of an honest and fair discretion in apportioning the districts so as to preserve, as near as may be, the equality of representation. This constitutional discretion was not exercised in the Apportionment Act of 1891. The facts themselves demonstrate this beyond any controversy, and no language can make the demonstration plainer. There is no difficulty in making an apportionment which shall satisfy the demand of the Constitution. It is not the purpose or province of this court to inquire into the motives of the Legislature. Courts will not discuss the motives of legislative bodies except as they appear in the public acts or journals of such bodies. The validity of an Act does not depend upon the motive for its passage. The duty of a court begins with the inquiry into the constitutionality of the law, and ends with a determination of that question. The petition prays that the respondent be directed to give notice of the election under the Apportionment Act of 1885. The constitutionality of this Act is therefore directly involved in the controversy, unless it be held to be removed from question by the fact that the people have acquiesced in its validity by acting under it for three elections. It must be conceded that this Act is affected with the same constitutional infirmity as the Act of 1891. It is unnecessary to determine whether such infirmity exists to an equal or a greater or less degree. It is sufficient to say that it is not in accord with the Constitution, and for the same reasons which apply to the Act of 1891. It is therefore insisted with great force by the attorney-general that no election should be ordered under the former Act, and he also urges in consequence that no relief can be granted. It is also said by him that, so far as he has examined other Apportionment Acts, they are all subject to the same objection. Under his reasoning it would follow that, if the Act of 1891 is held to be void, there is no remedy except the executive of the state decides to call a special session of the Legislature. In such case there would be no apportionment law under which the people might elect a Legislature. While the Constitution requires the Legislature to rearrange the districts at the next session after each enumeration, yet we are of the opinion that each Apportionment Act remains in force until it is supplanted by a subsequent valid Act. It was my opinion that the respondent should be directed to give notice under the Act of 1885, inasmuch as the people have acquiesced in its validity by so long acting under it. But I yield my opinion to that of my brethren, who are of the opinion that the notice should be given under the Law of 1881, the validity of which is not here brought in controversy, unless the executive should call a special session of the Legislature.

Our conclusions therefore are:

1. That the petition is properly brought into this court by the relator.
2. The court has jurisdiction in the matter.
3. The Apportionment Acts of 1891 and 1885 are unconstitutional and void.
4. The writ of mandamus must issue restraining the respondent from issuing the notice of election under the Act of 1891, and directing him to issue the notice under the Apportionment Act of 1881, unless the executive of the state shall call a special session of the Legislature to make a new apportionment before the time expires for giving such notice. No costs will be allowed.

Long and Montgomery, JJ., concurred with Grant, J.

Morse, Ch. J., concurring:

It is evidently contemplated by the Constitution that the county shall be the essential factor in the formation of senatorial districts. "No county shall be divided in the formation of senatorial districts unless such county shall be equitably entitled to two or more senators," is the prevailing idea of the organic provision. It is further contemplated that such districts shall be arranged according to the "number of white inhabitants and civilized persons of Indian descent, not members of any tribe." This equality of representation, however, is secondary to and hampered by the fact that no county can be divided, and a part of it attached to another county, or the part of another county, in order to make the districts equal, or nearly so, in population. This express inhibition against the division of a county gives, necessarily, great latitude to the legislative discretion, and the senatorial districts must of necessity not be as equally divided as to population as might be done if county lines could be disregarded. The Legislature undoubtedly could take a partisan advantage by making choice of different counties, and joining them together in one senatorial district, when such counties were contiguous; so that one Legislature of one political complexion might put, for instance, Macomb and St. Clair in one district, while another of a different political complexion might join Macomb with Lapeer, and St. Clair with some other adjoining county, and not violate any constitutional rights of the electors of such districts. But, as shown by Mr. Justice Grant, the Legislature in the senatorial apportionment of 1891 went far beyond any legitimate discretion, and violated the rules of equity when it was not necessary, or even proper, to do so, because of the fact that a county could not be divided. The twenty-seventh and twenty-ninth districts lie contiguous to each other, so that there was no excuse for putting 97,830 in one and only 40,038 in the other. The senatorial apportionment of 1891 and 1885, which are before us, so that we are compelled to examine them, were neither of them arranged in view of the Constitution or the rights of the electors of this state.

While it is true that the motive of an Act need not be inquired into to test its constitutionality, I believe that the time for plain speaking has arrived in relation to the outrageous practice of gerrymandering which has become so common, and has so long been indulged in, without rebuke, that it threatens, not only the peace of the people, but the permanency of our free institutions. The courts alone, in this respect, can save the rights of the people and give to them a fair count and equality in representation. It has been demonstrated that the people themselves cannot right this wrong. They may change the political majority in the Legislature, as they have often done, but the new majority proceeds at once to make an apportionment in the interests of its party, as unequal and politically vicious as the one that it repeals. There is not an intelligent school boy but knows what is the motive of these legislative apportionments, and it is idle for the courts to excuse the action upon other grounds, or to keep silent as to the real reason, which is nothing more nor less than partisan advantage taken in defiance of the Constitution, and in utter disregard of the rights of the citizen. Take our own state for example. In the election of 1884, the Republican candidate for secretary of state had a plurality of 4,883 out of a total vote of 401,308. The Republican majority in the Legislature of 1885 arranged the senatorial districts so that upon the vote of 1884, twenty-one were Republican and eleven were Democratic. In eight districts a population of 316,578 were given the same representation in the Senate as are 582,222 people in eight other districts. The upper peninsula, with Emmet and Mackinac counties added, is given three senators, when it is only entitled to two; the population of the three districts—thirtieth, thirty-first, thirty-second—combined, being 124,580, and the ratio 61,125. In 1890 the Democratic candidate for secretary of state received a plurality of 2,704 over the Republican candidate in a total vote of 396,611, and the Democratic majority in the Legislature of 1891 apportioned the senatorial districts so that on the basis of the vote of 1890, 21 were Democratic and 11 Republican. As shown by Mr. Justice Grant, these districts were so divided that in eight of them a population of 849,056 has the same representation as 695,717 in eight other districts, and in order to aid this inequality, the county of Saginaw is divided into two districts, when it was only entitled to one under the Constitution. It will thus be seen that upon a plurality of less than 5,000 in a total vote of about 400,000, each of these political parties has so gerrymandered these senatorial districts that each has twenty-one senatorial districts to eleven of the other. If permitted to continue in this kind of business, the next Legislature, to apportion senators, if its political complexion should be different from the last, following in the footsteps of its predecessors, will easily change the figures about again, and give its party twenty-one senators and the other the eleven. It is time to stop it. And the citizen has the right to appeal to the court in defense of his most sacred rights under the Constitution. He cannot be obliged to wait for prosecuting attorneys or the attorney-general. It is as well a public as a private grievance, and the individual elector can invoke the aid of the court in his own behalf, and call attention also to the existence of a great public wrong. There is no higher privilege granted to the citizen of a free country than the right of equal suffrage, and thereby to an equal representation in the making and administration of the laws of the land. Under our state Constitution the right of the elector is fixed. To him equal representation is a right, as well as a privilege, of which the Legislature cannot deprive him. These wrongs have been committed for partisan purposes. Their object and effect have been to deprive the majority of the people of their will in the administration of the government. The greatest danger to our free institutions lies to-day in this direction. By this system of gerrymandering, if permitted, a political party may control for years the government, against the wishes, protests, and votes of a majority of the people of the state, each Legislature, chosen by such means, perpetuating its political power by like legislation from one apportionment to another. We have been obliged, under the issue here made, to investigate but two apportionments—those of 1891 and 1885. Both are tarred with the same stick. We do not care to go further, since there is a remedy in the hands of the executive and Legislature. The consequences of this decision are not for us. It is our duty to declare the law, to point out the invasion of the Constitution, and to forbid it. I agree with the result as announced in the opinion of Mr. Justice Grant.

McGrath, J., concurring:

I desire to express my hearty concurrence in the views expressed by my brethren. The purpose of the constitutional enactment is to secure as nearly as possible equality of representation. Any apportionment which defeats that purpose is vicious, contrary not only to the letter, but to the spirit, of our institutions and subversive of popular government. Power secured or perpetuated by unconstitutional methods is power usurped, and usurpation of power is a menace to free institutions. The greatest danger to the republic is not from ignorance, but from machinations to defeat the expression of the popular will. The population of the state, according to the last enumeration made by the authority of the United States, is 2,089,889. The ratio for each senator is 65,434. The following is a sketch of the division of the lower peninsula into senatorial districts by the Act of 1891: [See page 408.]

16 L. R. A.

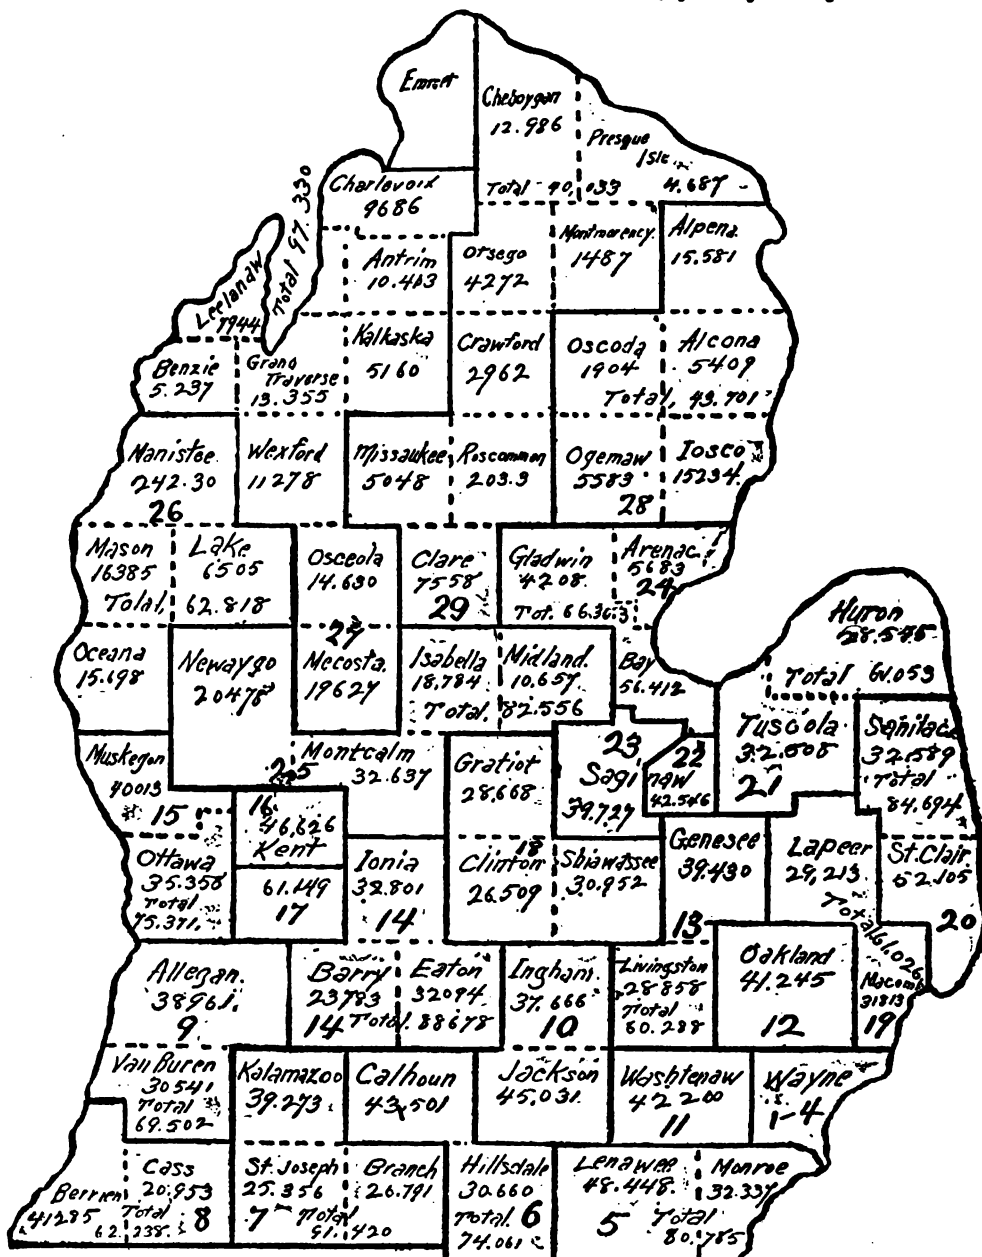

The population of each county is given with the total population of each district. The county of Wayne has a population of 257,114, and is divided into four districts. Emmet county is attached in the apportionment to the upper peninsula. It will be seen that eight of the districts so formed are populated as follows: 97,830, 91,420, 88,678, 86,129, 84,694, 82,697, 82,556, 82,218; making a total population of 695,717. Thus but 1,912, less than one third of the population of the state, have but one fourth of the total number of senators.

Eight other districts have a population of 849,056, and with but a little over 16½ per cent of the population they have 25 per cent of the representation in the Senate. Four of the first named have a total population of 868,557, while four of the last named have but 168,115. Any one of the first five named have more than double the population of any one of four of the last named. The first four have a population of 868,557, or 14,501 more than the last-named eight, yet the 849,056 persons have eight representatives in the Senate while 868,557 have but four. Why should the twenty-two contiguous counties forming the twenty-seventh, twenty-eighth, and twenty-ninth districts be so divided that five, having a population of but 43,701, are given one senator, and eight, having a population of but 40,088, are given another, while nine having a population of 97,320, or 18,586 more than both of the other districts, is given but one? Why should the twenty-eighth or twenty-ninth districts, having, respectively, a population of 40,088 and 43,701, be each allotted one senator, and St. Clair, with a population of 52,105, be united with Sanilac, so as to make a population of 84,694, or more than both of said districts; or Jackson, with 45,031, be united with Ingham, making a population of 82,697; or Kalamazoo and St. Joseph, with an aggregate population of 64,629, be united with Branch, so as to make a population of 91,420; or Ionia and Eaton, with 64,895, be added to Barry, making a total of 88,678; or Berrien, with 41,285, be united with Cass; or Bay, with 56,412, be united with Gladwin and Arenac; or Muskegon, with its 40,013, be united with Ottawa? Why should Saginaw be divided so as to give two senators to 82,278 persons, and nine counties be joined—as in the twenty-seventh district—to restrict 97,320 persons to one representative in the Senate; or three be joined, as in the seventh, to restrict 91,420 persons to one; or six be united, as in the thirty-first, to restrict 82,218 to a single senator; or three be joined, as in the eighteenth, to restrict 86,129 to one senator; or three, as in the fourteenth, to restrict 88,678; or four, as in the twenty-fifth, to confine 82,556 persons to a single senator; or why should Bay, with 56,412, or St. Clair, with 52,105, be joined with another county? Any two of the counties in the seventh or fourteenth or twenty-fifth have a population in excess of either of the Saginaw districts, yet in each case those counties are joined.

But the law of 1885 is equally vicious. [See page 409.] The population of the state was 1,853,658, and the ratio 57,526. Under that apportionment 41 per cent of the population electd sixteen senators, or half the whole number. Eight districts had a population of 601,488 distributed as follows: 84,000, 78,076, 76,918, 75,047, 74,795, 78,799, 69,246, 69,007. Eight others had 805,929 as follows: 81,617, 82,324, 85,875, 88,454, 88,688, 41,100, 48,783, three senators, were accorded five; while Wayne county, with a population of 189,000, was given but three. St. Clair had a population of 46,788, Calhoun of 41,585, Jackson of 45,282, and Washtenaw of 41,694, or a total of 175,294, yet they were joined with 49,584. Sixteen districts had a population of 1,094,685, and the other sixteen had 758,973. Thirty-three contiguous counties in the upper peninsula and the northern part of the lower peninsula, with a total population of 275,758, which would entitle them to four senators, were given seven. Twenty-seven of these counties, with a population of 176,458, entitling them to four other counties with a population of 123,998, making a total of 299,287, and the eight counties given four senators. The eight counties, averaging 84,410 each, were accorded four senators, while the five districts averaging 85,291, were each given one senator. The twenty-two counties in the twenty-sixth, twenty-seventh, twenty-eighth, and twenty-ninth districts, with a were each joined with another county and denied the right of sole representation. The eighteen counties in the twenty-sixth, twenty-seventh, and twenty-ninth districts had 102,895 inhabitants, or one ratio and 76 per cent of a second, and were accorded three representatives in the senate; while St. Clair, Macomb, Jackson, Hillsdale, Monroe, and Washtenaw, with 280,041 inhabitants, were accorded but three. Such laws breed disrespect for all law, for law-makers become law-breakers.

MISSOURI SUPREME COURT (1st Div.).

Eugene C. TITTMAN, Public Administrator in Charge of the Estate of Michael Carroll, Recept.,

v.

John THORNTON et al., Appls.

(.....Mo.....)

1. Suit in a foreign state on a judgment recovered by an administrator in the state of his appointment may be maintained by him in his own name.
2. After the death of an administrator suing in his own name in a foreign state upon a judgment obtained in the state of his appointment, the suit may be revived in the name of his administrator appointed under the laws of the foreign state.
3. To entitle a bill of sale to admission in evidence its execution must be proved according to the laws of the state where it is offered, notwithstanding it purports to have been executed in a state whose laws make acknowledgments of instruments of its class which have been recorded valid and it is proved to have been recorded.
4. That a bill of sale was acknowledged before a notary public there or elsewhere does not prove its execution in Missouri.
5. A transcript of a record from another state properly authenticated by certificates of the judge and clerk of court as required by Act of Congress, which shows that the record is among those of the court of which they are officers, is prima facie admissible in evidence although the record itself purports to belong to another court; it will be presumed to be in the right office until the contrary is made to appear.
6. Insolvency is shown prima facie so as to justify a suit in equity in a foreign state to reach property of a judgment debtor, by testimony of one of his neighbors that he owned a homestead of five acres on which he resided, a cow or two, and was reported to have a legacy in the foreign state, and of his attorney that he knew of no property owned by the debtor where the suit was brought.
7. Surprise occasioned by the refusal to admit a bill of sale in evidence because not proved to have been properly executed is not a good cause for new trial where such proof could have been procured by the use of ordinary diligence.

(December 7, 1891.)

APPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Circuit Court for the city of St. Louis in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to compel payment of a judgment out of a fund held in trust for the judgment debtor. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. A. J. P. Garesche and Edmond A. B. Garesche, for appellants:

By the death of Michael Carroll the administrator, his letters are revoked and the suit must be revived in the name of the real party in interest, the representative of the estate of John Carroll.

Hill, Trustees, Am. Notes, p. 462, § 303, note; Shook v. Shook, 19 Barb. 656.

Executors or administrators have only a title to the possession which right expires on the revocation of their letters, by death or otherwise, and on this revocation the possessory title passes to the successor in the administration and, under exceptional cases, to the heirs.

Hill, Trustees, Am. Notes, p. 65; Lessing v. Vertrees, 32 Mo. 436; Chandler v. Stevenson, 63 Mo. 450; Re Ames, 52 Mo. 298; Hanenkamp v. Borgmier, 32 Mo. 570; State v. Thornton, 56 Mo. 324; McCarty v. Hall, 18 Mo. 480.

The administrator of Michael Carroll has no standing in court.

2 Wms. Exrs. Perkins' Am. Notes; Fletcher v. Sanders, 7 Dana, 345; Lea v. Hopkins, 7 Pa. 385; Russell v. Erwin, 41 Ala. 262; State v. Murray, 8 Ark. 199.

Upon the death of a plaintiff suing as executor or administrator a revivor should be in the name of the administrator d. b. n. and not of the plaintiff's own personal representative. And in general an action brought to recover assets by a general executor or administrator, who afterwards dies, resigns, or is removed, may be revived in the name of his successor.

Schouler, Exrs. & Adms. § 409, bottom p. 480, citing notes 6, 7; Brasfield v. Cardwell, 75 Tenn. 252; Russell v. Irwin and State v. Murray, supra; Harbin v. Levi, 6 Ala. 408; Sherts v. Peabody, 6 Blackf. 122, 38 Am. Dec. 132; Morse v. Clayton, 13 Smedes & M. 390; King v. Green, 2 Stew. (Ala.) 135; Cummings v. Edmunson, 5 Port. (Ala.) 145; Gamble v. Hamilton, 7 Mo. 469; State v. Hunter, 15 Mo. 490; Scott v. Crews, 72 Mo. 263; Morehouse v. Ware, 78 Mo. 100.

The ancient authorities cited by plaintiff are inapplicable by reason of two statutory changes:

1st. That abolishing the restriction of administrator d. b. n. and leaving him absolute right to recover every asset of the estate even those in the hands of former administrator not accounted for.

2d. That requiring every suit to be in name of real party in interest. In this instance the party interested is the estate of John Carroll, deceased, and the claim to be reclaimed by an administrator—here properly appointed in lieu of Michael Carroll, deceased, the former administrator.

Burdyné v. Mackey, 7 Mo. 374.

The transcript of the record of the deed was valid according to our own statute, and the presumption was that the law of Iowa was alike.

Johnston v. Gawtry, 33 Mo. 339.

Mr. Edward Cunningham, Jr., for respondent:

When an executor or administrator has sued

NOTE.—The right of a foreign executor or administrator to sue on a judgment which he has recovered in another jurisdiction may be well regarded as established by the decisions although 16 L. R. A.

denied in Georgia. See Buck v. Johnson, 67 Ga. 82.

The decisions supporting the right are most of them cited in the report of the main case.

upon a debt or liability due his testator or intestate and has recovered judgment, he may, in his individual name and capacity, sue upon that judgment in a foreign state.

Woerner, Am. Law of Administration, § 162; Freem. Judgm. 3d ed. § 217; Talmage v. Chapel, 16 Mass. 71; Barton v. Higgins, 41 Md. 546; Rucks v. Taylor, 49 Miss. 580; Lewis v. Adams, 70 Cal. 407, 59 Am. Rep. 428; Nichols v. Smith, 7 Hun, 580; Biddle v. Wilkins, 26 U. S. 1 Pet. 686, 7 L. ed. 815; Moeman v. Bender, 80 Mo. 584; Hall v. Harrison, 21 Mo. 230, 64 Am. Dec. 225; Thomas v. Relfe, 9 Mo. 878; Lacompte v. Seargeant, 7 Mo. 351; Wilkinson v. Culver, 25 Fed. Rep. 689; Newberry v. Robinson, 36 Fed. Rep. 841; Cherry v. Speight, 28 Tex. 520; Rittenhouse v. Ammerman, 64 Mo. 199, 27 Am. Rep. 215.

There was no error of the trial court in reviving the suit in the name of Michael Carroll's administrator.

Abbott v. Miller, 10 Mo. 141; Harney v. Dutcher, 15 Mo. 89, 55 Am. Dec. 131; Cook v. Holmes, 29 Mo. 61, 77 Am. Dec. 548; Block v. Dorman, 51 Mo. 81; Brooks v. Mastin, 69 Mo. 58; Snider v. Adams Exp. Co. 77 Mo. 528.

The trial court was right in overruling defendants' motion for a new trial notwithstanding counsel's affidavit of surprise and mistake. There was no surprise or mistake within the meaning of section 8704, Rev. Stat. 1879.

Fretwell v. Laffoon, 77 Mo. 26.

Black, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This was a suit in equity, brought by Michael Carroll against John Thornton and others to subject certain funds in the hands of Archbishop Kenrick, belonging to Thornton, to the payment of a judgment which Carroll recovered against Thornton in the state of Iowa. The following are the principal facts: Michael Carroll recovered a judgment against John Thornton in the circuit court of Dubuque county, Iowa, on the 16th June, 1881, for the sum of $4,499. The pleadings in that case show that the cause was carried on in the name of Michael Carroll, as if it had been a suit in his own right; but it appears from the body of the petition that the cause of action was based upon an indebtedness of Thornton as guardian of his ward, John Carroll. An amendment to the petition states that Michael Carroll was the administrator of the estate of John Carroll. In May, 1886, Michael Carroll commenced this suit in this state against John Thornton and Peter Richard Kenrick. The petition, among other things, sets up the Iowa judgment as one recovered by Michael Carroll in his own right. It is alleged that another John Thornton, at the city of St. Louis, the uncle of the defendant Thornton, bequeathed to the defendant Kenrick the sum of $20,000, in trust to pay to defendant Thornton the interest thereon during his life, and prays that Kenrick, the trustee, be decreed to pay to the plaintiff the interest then accrued and thereafter to accrue on said fund until the judgment so recovered by the plaintiff in Iowa should be satisfied. Thornton, having been notified by publication, appeared, and by his answer disclaimed any interest in the fund, and on the suggestion of Kenrick one Duggan was made a defendant. Duggan, by his answer, claims to be the owner of the income accrued and to accrue on said fund by virtue of an assignment of the same by Thornton to May Thornton, and a bequest of the same by her to him. The plaintiff died while this cause was pending in the circuit court, and by consent of the defendants it was revived in the name of Tittman, public administrator, having in charge the estate of Michael Carroll. The circuit court found the issue for the plaintiff, and entered a decree as prayed for, and the defendants appealed.

1. The first complaint is that the circuit court erred in admitting in evidence the transcript of the Iowa judgment. The objections made to the transcript are (1) that it shows a judgment in favor of Michael Carroll as administrator of John Carroll, while the petition declares upon a judgment in favor of Michael Carroll in his own right; (2) that this cause should have been revived in the name of the representative of John Carroll, and not in the name of the administrator of Michael Carroll. Looking to the judgment only as it appears in the transcript, it is one in favor of Michael Carroll in his own right. Still the transcript as a whole shows that he recovered the same in the capacity of administrator of John Carroll, and we shall treat it as a judgment in favor of Michael Carroll as administrator of John Carroll. It has been held by this court on several occasions that when one takes a note, payable to himself as executor or administrator, he may sue upon the note in his own name, and that a suit may be maintained thereon by his executor or administrator. Rittenhouse v. Ammerman, 64 Mo. 197, 27 Am. Rep. 215; Cook v. Holmes, 29 Mo. 61, 77 Am. Dec. 548; Block v. Dorman, 51 Mo. 81. The theory of these cases is that when one takes a note or other obligation payable to himself as executor or administrator, he thereby makes himself a trustee of an express trust, and under the Code may sue thereon in his own name. Should such a person die, resign his letters of administration, or be removed, and the note or other obligation be turned over to the administrator de bonis non, the latter may, of course, sue thereon. But there are many cases where the suit may be maintained either by the trustee or by the beneficiary. Moeman v. Bender, 80 Mo. 579; Chouteau v. Boughton, 100 Mo. 406, and cases cited. But here the administrator appointed in Iowa recovered the judgment against the defendant Thornton, and then brought this suit, based on that judgment, in his own name, in this state, and this he had a right to do. Hall v. Harrison, 21 Mo. 227, 64 Am. Dec. 225. An administrator who has recovered a judgment in the state where he received his appointment may sue upon the judgment in his own name in a different state. Says Freeman: "There can scarcely be a doubt that a judgment rendered in favor of an administrator so merges the debt that it may be treated as his personal effect, so far as to authorize him to maintain suit thereon in a foreign country without there taking out letters of administration." Freem. Judgm. 3d ed. § 217. The following cases are to the same effect: Lewis v. Adams, 70 Cal. 403, 59 Am. Rep. 428; Rucks v. Taylor, 49 Miss. 552;

Barton v. Higgins, 41 Md. 589. Michael Carroll could not prosecute a suit in this state as administrator appointed under the laws of Iowa, but, having recovered a judgment as administrator in that state, he may sue upon the same in this state in his individual capacity. His right to recover here does not depend upon proof of his letters of administration. As he may sue here in his individual capacity, it must follow that the suit may be revived in the name of his administrator, appointed under the laws of this state. The court, therefore, did not err in admitting the transcript in evidence.

2. The next complaint is that the court erred in excluding the assignment from John Thornton to May Thornton, and the transcript of the will of May Thornton, both of which were offered in evidence by the defendants. It is upon this evidence the defendant Duggan depends for title to the income arising from the trust fund. This assignment, excluded by the court, is in the form of a deed executed by John Thornton, of Dubuque county, Iowa, on the 1st March, 1864, and was acknowledged on the same day before a notary public of that county and state. It professes to transfer to May Thornton, who was the wife of John Thornton, his interest in the income arising from the fund before mentioned, held by the defendant Kenrick in this state, and several horses, cows, and wagons. The court excluded the deed, on the objection that the signature of Thornton had not been proved. Thereupon the defendant read in evidence a single section of the statute law of Iowa, which provides, in substance, that acknowledgments of deeds, mortgages, and other instruments in writing, taken prior to the 18th of April, 1872, and which have been recorded, are declared "to be legal and valid," any law to the contrary notwithstanding. The defendants then again offered the instrument in evidence, but it was then discovered that the recorder had not signed the certificate indorsed thereon, stating that the instrument had been recorded. The defendants then read in evidence part of the deposition of Mr. Graham, which deposition had been taken and filed by the plaintiff, in which he, in substance, says: "Am an attorney at law at Dubuque, Iowa. Have never seen the assignment, but have seen what purports to be a copy of it on the records in the recorder's office. The instrument, if properly acknowledged according to the Laws of 1864, was entitled to be recorded, and is properly recorded." The defendant then for the third time offered the instrument in evidence, but it was excluded on the objection that there was no proof of its execution by Thornton. It is to be observed, in the first place, that defendants did not produce a copy of the Iowa record, certified either under the Act of Congress or under section 4844, Rev. Stat. 1889, of this state. Nor did they produce or offer in evidence a sworn copy of such record. The statutes just mentioned make records and exemplifications of office-books kept in any public office of a sister state, not appertaining to a court, evidence, when certified as therein specified. These statutes, however, have reference to the records of a sister state and exemplifications of such records. They do not, as we understand them, make the original instrument evidence; for the original instrument is no more than a private document, so that a copy of it would not be evidence under either of the before-mentioned statutes. Karr v. Jackson, 28 Mo. 316. Concede, therefore, that the evidence of Graham is sufficient to show that this instrument was recorded in Iowa, still that does not help the defendants. The defendants offered in evidence, not a record of a sister state, but the original bill of sale, assigning the income of a trust fund which is located in this state. The original bill of sale must be proved according to the laws of this state. The fact that it had been recorded in Iowa does not dispense with proof of its execution. We have no statute which authorizes the acknowledgment of such a document, and the fact that it is acknowledged before a notary public here or elsewhere does not prove its execution. The appellants have not cited us to a statute or single authority which has the least tendency to show that this assignment should have been admitted in evidence without proof of its execution. The court, we conclude, did not err in excluding it.

3. The next complaint is that the court erred in excluding the transcript of the will, and the probate thereof, of May Thornton. It seems to have been excluded on the ground that the certificates were made by a clerk and a judge of a court other than that in which the will was probated. The transcript does show that the will was admitted to probate by the circuit court of Dubuque county, Iowa, on the 26th of October, 1880. To this transcript there are attached the following certificates: First. A certificate of the clerk of the district court of that county and state, in which he says "that the foregoing is a true copy of the last will and testament of May Thornton, deceased, and the certificate of probate thereof, as the same appear of record and on file in my office at Dubuque, Iowa." This certificate is dated 26th January, 1887. Second. A certificate of the judge of the district court to the effect that the certificate of the clerk is in due form. Third. Another certificate of the clerk, of the same date as the first, to the effect that the person who signed the second certificate is judge of the district court, and his signature genuine. Fourth. A further certificate of the clerk of the district court of date the 18th February, 1887, to the effect that the circuit court was abolished on the 1st January, 1887, and the jurisdiction and records thereof transferred to the district court. The only authentication required by the Act of Congress is the certificate of the clerk and that of the judge; and when the court in which the proceedings were had has been abolished, and the records transferred to the custody of another court, the certificates of the clerk and judge of the court to which the records have been transferred will be sufficient. Manning v. Hogan, 26 Mo. 570. Had the clerk, in his first certificate, followed by the certificate of the judge as it is, stated the fact that the circuit court had been abolished, and the records transferred to the district court, we think the certificates should be received as prima facie evidence of the fact thus stated. But the first certificate, as it is, shows that the will and the probate thereof constituted part of the records of the district court, and from this it should be presumed that they were there of right, and belonged to that office, until the contrary is made to appear. The trial court therefore erred in excluding this transcript.

4. It is insisted that there is no sufficient proof of the insolvency of the defendant Thornton, and hence no foundation laid for this proceeding in equity. The plaintiff produced the only evidence offered on this issue. It shows that Thornton was a nonresident of this state, and that he resided in Dubuque county, Iowa. A Mr. Carson, of that place, testified that he had known Thornton for thirty years. That Thornton owned a homestead of five acres, on which he resided; a cow or two; and was reported to have a legacy in St. Louis. That he did not know of any other property, real or personal, owned by him. The attorney for the defendants in this case, being called by the plaintiff, testified that he did not know the defendant Thornton until called into the present case; that he knew of no property owned by Thornton in this state. We think this evidence is prima facie sufficient, to show the insolvency of Thornton, or at least to show that the legacy is the only property out of which the plaintiff's debt can be made.

5. Finally it is insisted in the brief of the appellants that a new trial should have been awarded on the ground of surprise in excluding the assignment, due to the mistakes of counsel in not discovering the fact that the recorder had not signed the certificate indorsed thereon. We have before treated this assignment as if the certificate had been duly signed, and have held that the certificate, properly signed, would not have made the assignment evidence without proof of its execution by Thornton. There could, therefore, have been no surprise arising from the fact that the certificate was not signed by the recorder. The exclusion of the assignment is due to the failure to make any proof of its execution. This proof could have been procured by the use of ordinary diligence. This court in Fretwell v. Lafoon, 77 Mo. 26, approved the following statement made in 8 Graham & Waterman on New Trials: "If the surprise was owing to the least want of diligence, the applicant will be without sufficient excuse, and his motion will be denied. It is a condition precedent to his attaining relief that he shall be wholly free from blame." Page 949. Surprise produced by the laches of a party is never a good cause for new trial. These rules applied to the case in hand, it must follow that there was no surprise for which a new trial can be awarded.

6. Without this assignment, the will becomes immaterial, and we cannot see any ground upon which this court can, of right, award a new trial.

The judgment is therefore affirmed.

Sherwood, Ch. J., not sitting. The other Judges concur.

Rehearing denied.

SOUTH DAKOTA SUPREME COURT.

STATE of South Dakota, ex rel. A. E.
HITCHCOCK,

v.

Ed. F. HEWITT et al.

(.....S. Dak.)

1. Where an officer is appointed for a definite term, subject to removal for specified causes, he can be so removed only after notice to him of the cause assigned, and an opportunity given him to defend.
2. A trustee of the state agricultural college appointed by the board of regents of education, as provided by section 4, art. 14, of the Constitution, is not a "state officer," within the meaning of section 3, art. 16, of the Constitution, providing that "state officers" are liable to impeachment.
3. The Constitution, sec. 4, art. 16, having specified the causes for which such trustee may be removed, section 5, chap. 6, Laws 1890, authorizing the board of regents to remove trustees for "sufficient cause," must be understood to mean by "sufficient cause" one or more of the causes so enumerated in the constitutional provision referred to.

(July 12, 1892.)

*Head notes by KELLAM, P. J.

NOTE—For note on the validity of a summary removal of an officer, see Trainor v. Wayne County Board of Auditors (Mich.) 15 L. R. A. 95.
16 L. R. A.

APPPLICATION for a writ of mandamus to compel defendants as members of the Board of Regents of Education to restore relation to the office of trustee of the Agricultural College, from which they had made an alleged illegal attempt to remove him. Granted. The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. A. E. Hitchcock, for relator:

Mandamus is the proper form of proceeding to correct a wrongful removal from office, and to restore to the enjoyment of his office a person who has been improperly deprived thereof.

High, Extr. Legal Rem. 2d ed. p. 68; 8 Dak. C. L. § 5517; Kennedy v. San Francisco Board of Education, 82 Cal. 483; Driscoll v. Jones (S. Dak.) March 1, 1890; State v. Shakespeare, 43 La. Ann. 92; State v. Atlantic City, 8 L. R. A. 697, 52 N. J. L. 332.

The power of removal conferred upon an executive officer on board cannot be exercised summarily, ex parte, without notice, charges, and an opportunity for defense.

Ex parte Ramshay, 18 Q. B. 173; Reg. v. Canterbury, 1 El. & El. 545; Capel v. Child, 2 Crompt. & J. 558; Dullam v. Willson, 53 Mich. 392, 51 Am. Rep. 128; Ham v. Boston Board of Police, 2 New Eng. Rep. 642, 142 Mass. 90; State v. St. Louis, 6 West. Rep. 464, 90 Mo. 19; Com. v. Skifer, 25 Pa. 23, 64 Am. Dec. 680; Biggs v. McBride, 5 L. R. A. 115, 17 Or. 640; People v. Board of Fire Comrs. 72 N. Y. 445.

The statute giving authority to the regents board to remove trustees is in conflict with the state Constitution; the Constitution fixes definitely the term of a trustee for five years; removal can only be made under impeachment proceedings by the Legislature.

S. Dak. Const. art. 14, § 4; art. 16, §§ 1, 3, 4.

The construction of these sections in reference to the question under consideration raises two inquiries:

1st. Does the office of trustee come under the classification of "the governor and all other state officers" found in section 8, article 16?

2d. Is the provision found in the same section which says the various officers "shall be liable to impeachment" a prohibition upon the Legislature providing other means for removing state officers?

The words "all other state officers" includes the office of trustee, and a trustee is liable to impeachment.

2 Tomlin, Law Dict.; United States v. Hartwell, 78 U. S. 6 Wall. 885, 18 L. ed. 890; United States v. Lockwood, 1 Pinn. 363; 5 Wait, Act. & Def. p. 1; Removal of Public Officers, 25 Am. L. Rev. 201.

The office was created to manage certain affairs of a state educational institution. The institution is the property of the state, and is supported by state funds; the trustee is paid his compensation as are other certain state officers, by presenting his vouchers to the state auditor and receiving a warrant drawn upon the state treasury.

Laws 1890, chap. 6, § 7.

Under all recognized language and terms the board of trustees are state officials.

Dullam v. Willson, 53 Mich. 392, 51 Am. Rep. 128.

Being classed as a state officer a trustee becomes liable to impeachment under the express terms of the Constitution.

The Constitution having created the office, fixed definitely its tenure and provided the manner by which the officers could be removed, by implication the Legislature is prohibited from enacting any other manner of removal than that prescribed by the Constitution.

Removal of Public Officers, 25 Am. L. Rev. 201; State v. Com. 3 Met. (Ky.) 237; Page v. Hardin, 8 B. Mon. 648; Brown v. Grover, 6 Bush, 1; Com. v. Gamble, 62 Pa. 342, 1 Am. Rep. 422; State v. Draper, 50 Mo. 353; State v. Thoman, 10 Kan. 191; State v. McNeely, 24 La. Ann. 19; 5 Wait, Act. & Def. p. 12; Com. v. Sutherland, 8 Serg. & R. 145; Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. p. 78. See also People v. Draper, 15 N. Y. 533; State v. Williams, 5 Wis. 306; State v. Baker, 38 Wis. 71.

Mr. Robert Dollard, Atty-Gen., for respondents:

While it is probably true, as contended by the relator, that the preponderance of authority is against the removal of an officer for cause, whose term of office is fixed by law, without formal charges and a hearing thereon on timely notice, it is held otherwise in Illinois.

People v. Mays, 5 West. Rep. 141, 117 Ill. 257. And our own Supreme Court in Territory v. Cox, 6 Dak. 501, held to the contrary. 16 L. R. A.

In the same case as well as in People v. Stuart, 74 Mich. 411; State v. Olson, 15 Neb. 247, and Donahue v. Will County, 100 Ill. 94, it was held that the exercise of such power was not judicial in its character.

The legislative department has decided the question of its power to make such a provision and until this court is satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that in doing so it transgressed the constitutional limitation, its action cannot be set aside.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 221.

Kellam, P. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an original application to this court for a writ of mandamus; the attorney-general, in behalf of the state, resisting the application on the merits, but filing a written expression of his opinion that the questions involved are of such public interest, and their early settlement so important, that they should be entertained and determined by this court in the first instance. The affidavit of the relator recites the following facts as the foundation of his application for the writ: That in the month of March, 1891, at a regular and lawful meeting of the board of regents of education of the state of South Dakota, he then being eligible, relator was duly and legally appointed and elected a member of the board of trustees for the South Dakota Agricultural College, located at Brookings, for the term of five years; that he immediately qualified, and entered upon the discharge of his duties as a member of said board, and has ever since so continued; that on or about the 7th day of January, 1892, at a regular meeting, the said board of regents passed and adopted a resolution and order summarily removing said relator from said office of trustee of said agricultural college; that relator was not notified in any manner that said board would take action upon any such resolution or order, nor that any charges or complaint had been made against his official conduct; that the first and only notice relator received that such action was contemplated, or would be or had been taken, was a written notice thereof, signed by the secretary of said board of regents, informing this relator that he had been "relieved from duty as a trustee of said agricultural college by dismissal by authority of law and for cause," that said board of regents has ever since refused, and still refuses, to recognize this relator as a member of said board of trustees of the agricultural college, or to allow him to further perform the duties of said office; that there is no incumbent of the office from which this relator was thus removed, and this relator desires to continue and perform the duties of said office; and that there is no plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law. Upon this affidavit relator asks a writ of mandamus requiring the said board of regents of education to restore him to the use and enjoyment of the office of trustee of said agricultural college. The attorney-general, upon the part of the state, filed a demurrer to this affidavit, on the ground that it did not state facts constituting a cause of action, or which entitled relator to relief.

The plaintiff, or relator, contends that the resolution and action of the board of regents were unauthorized and illegal for at least two reasons: (1) Conceding the authority of the board of regents to determine whether cause for removal existed, and then to act upon such conclusion, it could not legally exercise the power of removal, ex parte, or without investigation, after notice to plaintiff, and (2) that the statute authorizing the board of regents to remove trustees is in conflict with the Constitution, and is therefore void.

Both the board of regents of education and the board of trustees for the several educational institutions are constitutional boards. Section 3, art. 14, of the Constitution, provides that "the state university, the agricultural college, the normal schools, and all other educational institutions that may be sustained in whole or in part by the state, shall be under the control of a board of nine members, appointed by the governor and confirmed by the Senate, to be designated the 'regents of education,' etc. Section 4 provides that "the regents shall appoint a board of five members for each institution under their control, to be designated the 'board of trustees.' They shall hold office for five years, one member retiring annually," etc. Chapter 6 of the Law of 1890 is supplementary to these constitutional provisions, and designed to carry them into execution. Section 5 of said chapter 6 provides: "Said board of regents shall have power to remove any or all of such trustees for sufficient cause." Section 8, in enumerating the powers and duties of said board of regents, gives them "full power at all times . . . to inquire and examine into . . . the official conduct of the trustees," etc. Section 11 authorizes such regents, or any one of them, "to administer oaths, and examine any person or persons in relation to any matters connected with the inquiries authorized by this Act."

The relator's alleged grievance is that the board of regents, assuming to act under these provisions of said chapter 6, determined upon, and, so far as they could do so, effected, his dismissal and removal from his said office of trustee, without any notice to him, or knowledge on his part that such action was contemplated, and without any opportunity given him to be heard in his defense. The attorney-general concedes that the preponderance of authority is against the power to remove for cause an officer whose term of office is fixed by law, without notice to him and an opportunity to be heard, but suggests that this question was very thoroughly discussed by Chief Justice Tripp in Territory v. Cox, published in appendix to 6 Dak. 501; and the conclusion reached by that learned judge was in favor of the power of removal without notice, unless the law authorizing removal required notice. Not being the judgment of the supreme bench, the opinion is not claimed to govern under the rule of stare decisis. We have examined the opinion with great interest, both because of the acknowledged ability of its author, and because we found it a very thorough and elaborate discussion of questions closely connected with the one now presented to us. In the Cox Case, however, the question was whether or not, under the statute involved, the governor had the power of removal. It was a question of power rather than of the manner of its exercise. The statement of facts does not show whether the removed trustees had previous notice, and opportunity to appear before the governor, or not, but it does affirmatively appear that such executive action was only taken after investigation. Besides, in the decision of that case much importance was attached to the phraseology of the law under which the governor acted in making the removal. By it he was authorized, "at his discretion, to take such action for the public security as the exigency may demand." So that whatever authority was conferred was to be exercised at his discretion, and the case did not present the same question in this respect as would have been presented if such removal were only authorized to be made for cause shown. At all events, the controlling question in this case was not even an important question in that, if, indeed, a question at all.

We do not think it necessary, or even important, upon the first branch of this case, to discuss the abstract question whether, under statutes like this, the power of removal, or the proceedings by which its accomplishment is reached, are more distinctly judicial or executive. Such provisions have been a part of the statute law of England and of the American states for a century, and we shall at present confine our effort to ascertaining, if possible, how such provisions have usually been construed with respect to the exercise of the power of removal summarily, and without notice to the officer proceeded against, and, if we find that any particular construction or meaning has with great uniformity been given to such statutes, it will be entirely fair and reasonable to conclude that our own Legislature enacted this law intending and expecting that it would and ought to be so construed. The history of judicial proceedings in England affords numerous examples of the attempted exercise of this power of removal in an ex parte manner.

The Ramsday Case, 18 Q. B. 173, was one in which the Lord Chancellor undertook to summarily remove a judge of a county court under a statute authorizing him to make such removal for inability or misbehavior. The court, by Lord Campbell, Ch. J., said: "The chancellor has authority to remove a judge of a county court only on the implied condition, prescribed by the principles of eternal justice, that he hears the party accused."

The case of Reg. v. Canterbury, 1 El. & El. 545, arose under an Act of parliament providing that a curate whose license had been revoked by the bishop might appeal to the archbishop, who should confirm or annul such revocation as to him should appear just and proper. An appeal was taken to the archbishop, who, without giving the appellant an opportunity to be heard, confirmed the revocation. The court said: "No doubt the bishop acted most conscientiously, and with a sincere desire to promote the interests of the church, but we all think he has taken an erroneous view of the law. He was bound to hear the appellant, and he has not heard him. It is one of the first principles of justice that no man should be condemned without being heard."

In Williams v. Bagot, 3 Barn. & C. 785, Mr. Justice Bayley said: "It is contrary to common justice that a party should be concluded unheard." Capel v. Child, 2 Cromp. & J. 558, is in the same line. The court said: "A party has a right to be heard, for the purpose of explaining his conduct." The same views are expressed in Bagge's Case, 11 Coke, 98, and in Gaskin's Case, 8 T. R. 209. In this country, while the adjudications of the courts have not been absolutely uniform, they clearly preponderate in the same direction as the English authorities already noticed.

In his work on Municipal Corporations, (vol. 1, 4th ed. § 250,) Judge Dillon expresses the following opinion: "When an officer is appointed during pleasure, or where the power of removal is discretionary, the power to remove may be exercised without notice or hearing. But when the appointment is during good behavior, or where the removal can only be for certain specified causes, the power of removal cannot . . . be exercised unless there be a formulated charge against the officer, notice to him of the accusation, and a hearing of the evidence in support of the charge, and an opportunity given to the party of making defense."

In the early case of Page v. Hardin, 8 B. Mon. 648, where the governor of Kentucky undertook to decide that the secretary of state had abandoned his office, the tenure of which was good behavior during the term for which he was appointed, and commissioned another person in his place, no notice was given to Hardin, the incumbent, previous to the action of the governor. Chief Justice Marshall, in delivering the opinion of the court, said: "The secretary being removable for breach of good behavior only, the ascertainment of the breach must precede the removal. In other words, the officer must be convicted of misbehavior in office, and we shall not argue to prove that, in a government of laws, a conviction whereby an individual may be deprived of valuable rights and interests, and may moreover be seriously affected in his good name and standing, implies a charge, and trial and judgment, with the opportunity of defense and proof."

In Com. v. Slifer, 25 Pa. 23, 64 Am. Dec. 680, an adjutant-general had been appointed for a specified term, subject, however, to a statute providing that "whenever in the opinion of the governor, the adjutant-general fails and neglects faithfully to perform the duties of his office, the governor shall remove him from office." During such term the governor appointed another to the office and this action was an application by the first ap pointee for a mandamus to compel payment of his salary. No notice was given to him of any claimed neglect of duty prior to the appointment of his successor, and the court said: "We are unwilling to believe the governor intended without cause to remove an officer appointed for a term of years, before the term had expired. That he possessed the power of removal is conceded, but the power is to be exercised upon cause shown. It exists only where the officer 'fails and neglects faithfully to perform the duties of his office.' It is true that the executive is made the judge, and that his opinion or judgment is conclusive as far as relates to the question of removal. But that judgment is not to be pronounced without notice, without any charge or specification, and without any opportunity given to the officer to make his defense. The reputation and the right of the incumbent to the office for the term specified in his commission are involved, and he has a right to know the accusation, and to be heard in his defense." The same court reiterated the same rule as to necessity for notice, where the removal could only be made for cause, in Field v. Com. 32 Pa. 478.

In State v. St. Louis, 90 Mo. 19, 6 West. Rep. 464, the general rule as to removal of public officers is thus stated: "Where an officer is appointed during pleasure, or where the power of removal is discretionary, the power to remove may be exercised without notice or hearing. But where the appointment is during good behavior, or where the removal must be for cause, the power of removal can only be exercised when charges are made against the accused, and after notice, with a reasonable opportunity to be heard before the officer or body having the power to remove." And again, in the same opinion, the court says: "When the removal is not discretionary, but must be for a cause, as is the case here, and nothing is said as to the procedure, a specification of the charges, notice, and an opportunity to be heard are essential."

Dullam v. Willson, 53 Mich. 392, 51 Am. Rep. 128, was a case where the governor undertook to summarily remove without notice one of the trustees of the state institution for educating the deaf and dumb, on the ground of official misconduct and habitual neglect of duty, as stated in a paper filed with the secretary of state, and served on such officer after such removal. A statute authorized the governor to remove certain officers, including the one involved, for "official misconduct, or habitual or willful neglect of duty." The Constitution of the state also imposed upon the governor the duty of examining into the condition and administration of public officers, and authorized him to remove any such officer for gross neglect of duty, or for corrupt conduct in office, or other misfeasance or malfeasance therein. The question was whether the governor had legally exercised the power of removal. While the court held that the power of determining whether any of the specified causes of removal existed or not was judicial in its nature, still such power properly belonged to and might be exercised by the gov-error because expressly conferred upon him by the Constitution; but it was further distinctly held that such power could not be properly exercised without notice to the officer to be proceeded against, and an opportunity given him to be heard in his defense. The court said: "Unless it is the manifest intention of the section under consideration that the proceedings should be ex parte, as well as summary, a removal without charges, notice, and an opportunity for defense could not be upheld. . . . The officer is entitled to know the particular acts and neglect of duty, or corrupt conduct, or other acts relied upon as constituting malfeasance or misfeasance in office. And he is entitled to a reasonable notice of the place and time when an opportunity will be given him for a hearing, and he has a right to produce proof on such hearing."

Ham v. Boston, 142 Mass. 90, 2 New Eng. Rep. 642, declares the same rule. Under a statute authorizing the board of police to remove any officer or member of the department for cause, the court held that such power could not be exercised by the board without assigning a cause for such removal, and giving to such officer or member an opportunity to be heard thereon. The court granted the mandamus restoring the petitioner to office, on the ground that "he was improperly removed, no hearing having been accorded him."

In the recent case of Denver v. Darrow, 18 Colo. 460, the court held that, where an alderman had been elected for two years, and had qualified, the board of aldermen, which by law was made the sole judge of the qualifications of its members, could not remove such incumbent from office, upon the ground of disqualification, without notice to him, and an opportunity afforded him to make defense against such charge. The same rule, requiring notice and investigation preliminary to the valid exercise of the power of removal for cause, was maintained or recognized in the following cases: State v. Bryce, 7 Ohio, pt. 2, 82; Carter v. Durango City Council (Colo.) 27 Pac. Rep. 1057; Hallgren v. Campbell, 82 Mich. 255, 9 L. R. A. 408; Murdock v. Phillips Academy, 12 Pick. 244.

It will be observed, from examination of these cases, that the importance of notice and opportunity to defend does not at all depend upon whether the power of removal is regarded as judicial or executive. Notice is declared to be essential by courts holding either view. In Biggs v. McBride, 17 Or. 640, 5 L. R. A. 115, the court declined to decide whether such power was judicial or executive, but said: "It is believed under either view, and by whomsoever the power of removal for cause may be exercised, it must be done on notice to the delinquent of the particular charges against him, and an opportunity given him to be heard in his defense." While the courts of Illinois, and possibly other states, have not concurred in this rule, but held that, in the absence of any procedure prescribed by statute, the removal may be summary and ex parte, we are satisfied the weight of authority is in favor of the right of the incumbent holding office for a definite term, but subject to removal for cause, to be notified of proceedings for his removal, of the cause assigned therefor, and to have an opportunity for defense. The Constitution fixes the term of office of the trustee in this case at five years, subject only to the condition that he is removable for certain specified causes enumerated in section 4, art. 16; and when section 5, chap. 6, of the Laws of 1890, authorizes the board of regents to remove trustees for "sufficient cause," it must be understood that "sufficient cause" means one or more of the causes so enumerated in the constitutional provision referred to. It being admitted in this case that no notice or information was given relator by which he could then, or can even now, know whether the reasons for his removal were such as might legally be considered "sufficient cause," and no opportunity given him to disprove or explain what might otherwise appear to be sufficient cause, but that the action of the board of regents was entirely ex parte, we hold such action invalid and void, and that the relator is entitled to a peremptory writ of mandamus as prayed for.

This conclusion, of course, disposes of this case; but we are asked by both sides to express an opinion upon petitioner's second proposition, that the Act of the Legislature authorizing the board of regents to remove trustees for cause is in conflict with the Constitution, and that the removals can only be made by impeachment and trial thereunder. With reference to impeachment, the Constitution (art. 16, § 3) provides that "the governor, and all other state and judicial officers, except county judges, justices of the peace, and police magistrates, shall be liable to impeachment," etc.; and section 4: "All officers not liable to impeachment shall be subject to removal for misconduct . . . or gross incompetency, in such manner as may be provided by law." Is a member of the board of trustees of one of the educational institutions of the state a "state officer," within the meaning of section 3, so that he is only removable by impeachment and trial by the Senate? We think not. We are of the opinion that the term "state officers," as used in said section, includes only such general officers as immediately belong to one of the three constituent branches of the state government. "Impeachment in the United States being a matter of constitutional provision, (repeated in the Constitutions of all the states,) is held to apply not only to the chief executive magistrate, but to other civil officers. In relation to the last named, however, it has never been extended to any not belonging to one of the three constitutional departments." Ord. Const. Leg. 448. The Constitutions of many of the states contain the same language as our own, defining what officers are subject to impeachment, but, so far as we have observed, such language has not been taken to include officers who hold by appointment either by the governor or some supervising board, authorized to make such selection and appointment. For instance, the Constitution of Iowa makes "the governor, judges of the supreme and district courts, and other state officers" liable to removal by impeachment; and then provides, as does ours, that "all other civil officers" may be tried and removed in such manner as the General Assembly may provide. Their statute then provides that the state penitentiary shall be governed by a warden, elected by joint ballot of the General Assembly, and fixes his term of office at two years. Now, no reason is readily apparent that would make one of a board of trustees, selected and appointed by the board of regents, a state officer, that would not make the warden of the penitentiary selected and appointed by ballot in the state Legislature, a state officer; and yet the warden is not regarded by the law-making department of Iowa as a "state officer," within the meaning of the constitutional article on impeachment, for it is expressly provided by statute that the governor may remove him for official misfeasance or malfeasance. Similar conditions exist in other states, demonstrating the fact that trustees or superintending officers of state institutions, receiving their office not directly from the people, but by appointment from other officers or boards for subordinate administrative purposes, are not understood to be included in the term "state officers," as used in the constitutional article on impeachment. We think this view is both reasonable and fortunate. In nearly every state Constitution, as in the Federal Constitution, the causes for which a public officer may be impeached are criminal offenses only. This may be as far as it is prudent to go in the case of the heads of distinct departments of the government, but, in the case of subordinate administrative officers, the understanding has been very general, judging from the legislation of the different states, which appears to have been unchallenged, where provisions respecting impeachment are like our own, that it is not only wise, but allowable under such constitutional provisions, to make such officers removable for incompetency, and perhaps other causes not constituting criminal offenses. Whether the power to remove is essentially judicial or executive in its nature was not discussed by counsel, nor do we express any opinion upon that question generally. It would seem, however, that such question could not be practically important in this case, for the reason that the Constitution itself, by which alone it must be determined when and by whom either the judicial or executive power may be exercised, has expressly committed to the Legislature the whole subject of the removal of all officers not liable to impeachment. Section 4, art. 16. Acting under this general authority, the Legislature has provided for the removal of such officers, and it could not well be objected that in so doing judicial functions had been committed to nonjudicial officers, for the Constitution has expressly authorized it, if the Legislature in its judgment shall so provide. The power of the Legislature to provide in what manner nonimpeachable officers may be removed is plenary, and is just as definitely and authoritatively announced as is the division of the aggregate powers of the state into judicial, executive, and legislative, and their distribution among different officers and agencies of the state for execution. All of these constitutional provisions must be construed together, and each is qualified by the other.

Let the peremptory writ of mandamus issue,
as asked for by relator.

All the Judges concur.

ARKANSAS SUPREME COURT.

BOARD OF IMPROVEMENT OF STREET GRADING AND PAVING
DISTRICT NO. 46, of the City OF LITTLE ROCK, App't.,

v.

SCHOOL DISTRICT OF LITTLE ROCK.

(.....Ark.....)

1. A constitutional exemption of property used exclusively for public purposes such as churches, schools, buildings, etc., applies only to taxes for general purposes of revenue, and has no reference to special taxes as assessments for local improvements.
2. Public school-houses are not liable to assessment for local improvements under the general provision in a statute for the assessment of "all the real property situated in the district."

(Cockrill, Ch. J., dissents.)

NOTE.—The review of the authorities on the question of an implied exemption of public property from local assessments seems to be very fully made by the opinion and briefs of counsel above reported.

16 L. R. A.

(June 11, 1892.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a decree of the Chancery Court for Pulaski County in favor of defendant in an action brought to enforce payment of a street improvement assessment. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. William G. Whipple, for appellant:

The only exception to the generality of our statute, which, in terms, includes "all real property within the district," is that of public property used for governmental purposes.

Mansf. Dig. § 825.

Exemption from ordinary taxation does not carry with it exemption from local assessments.

Const. art. 19, § 27; Cooley, Taxn. 1st ed. p. 147; Adams County v. Quincy, 6 L. R. A. 156, 180 Ill. 566; First Presby. Church v. Ft. Wayne, 36 Ind. 328, 10 Am. Rep. 36, and cases cited.

Statutes of exemption, even from ordinary taxation, are to be strictly construed.

2 Dillon, Mun. Corp. §§ 776, 777.

Churches, though by the statute exempt from general taxation, are liable to local assessment.

Cooley, Taxn. 1st ed. p. 458; First Presby. Church v. Ft. Wayne, supra; Re City of New York, 11 Johns. 77; Elliott, Roads & Streets, p. 408; 1 Desty, Taxn. p. 121; Northern Liberties v. St. John's Church, 18 Pa. 104; Second Universalist Soc. v. Providence, 8 R. I. 235; Le Fevre v. Detroit, 2 Mich. 587; Methodist E. Church v. Ellis, 38 Ind. 8; Broadway Baptist Church v. McAtee, 8 Bush, 508; Atlanta v. First Presby. Church (Ga.) 12 L. R. A. 852.

Hospitals, asylums, and other charitable institutions come under the same head, and are held liable to local assessments, though they may be exempted from general taxation.

Cooley, Taxn. p. 458; Ovininnati College v. State, 19 Ohio, 110; Lafayette v. Male Orphan Asylum, 4 La. Ann. 1; Sheehan v. Good Samaritan Hospital, 50 Mo. 158, 11 Am. Rep. 412; Chicago v. Baptist Theological Union, 8 West. Rep. 96, 115 Ill. 245; Re St. Joseph's Asylum, 69 N. Y. 353; Boston Seaman's Friend Soc. v. Boston, 116 Mass. 181, 17 Am. Rep. 153; Elliott, Roads & Streets, p. 408.

Even cemeteries are brought within the same rule, and held subject to local assessments, and they are "cities of the dead" as completely denuded of all possible secular uses and purposes as it is possible for anything earthly to be. But such is the rule.

Elliott, Roads & Streets, p. 40; Cooley, Taxn. p. 458; Baltimore v. Green Mount Cemetery Co., 7 Md. 517; Buffalo City Cemetery v. Buffalo, 46 N. Y. 506.

The same doctrine applies to institutions of learning.

Elliott, Roads & Streets, p. 408; Cooley, Taxn. p. 458; Re College Street, 8 R. I. 474.

Exemption from all taxation in the charters of schools will not exempt them from assessment for local improvements.

Desty, Taxn. p. 121.

While a school district is a public corporation in some senses it is not a municipal corporation.

1 Dillon, Mun. Corp. § 22; Elliott, Roads & Streets, p. 408; Fitzgerald v. Walker, 55 Ark. 149.

The school-master is not a public officer invested in the government of the school with public authority.

Lander v. Seaver, 32 Vt. 114, 76 Am. Dec. 157.

What court or text-writer has ever spoken of schools as "local instrumentalities of government?"

Cooley, Taxn. p. 458.

A city may levy and collect a special tax upon the property of a school district situated within its limits for the purpose of building a sidewalk in front of such property.

1 Desty, Taxn. p. 121; St. Louis Pub. Schools v. St. Louis, 26 Mo. 468; Sioux City v. Ind. School Dist., 55 Iowa, 150.

Taxation is the rule, and exemption the exception, and, therefore, strict construction of the statute under which the exemption is claimed is the rule.

Griswold College v. State, 46 Iowa, 275; Cooley, Taxn. 146.

Mr. Morris M. Cohn, for appellee:

Under our statutes the property held by school districts is not owned by them, but is held by the city. All property and revenues 16 L. R. A.

which may come into the possession of the school district are held in trust for specific purposes which are designated, and the same cannot be used for any other purpose, however unnecessary the purpose designated may be, and however meritorious the unauthorized object may be.

It was certainly not the purpose of the Act relating to the creation of local improvement districts to change these principles. Nor did said Act provide a separate and distinct fund from which the state, county, the city, or the school district could meet any payment for local improvement which might incidentally benefit property owned or held by any of these in any local improvement district.

The failing to make such provision for a fund rendered any attempt of the Legislature (if such had been made), to subject the property of the state and its subdivisions to assessment for such local improvements, unconstitutional and abortive.

The Constitution (art. 14, §§ 1, 8), provides that "the General Assembly may authorize school districts to levy a tax not to exceed five mills on the dollar in any one year for school purposes. Provided, further, that no such tax shall be appropriated to any other purpose, nor to any other district, than that for which it is levied."

Manuf. Dig. § 6120.

In the absence of any statutory provisions, upon general propositions of law, it is anomalous to speak of taxing or assessing the property of a public political body.

An exemption from taxation in the case of eleemosynary or religious corporation, and the like, may not refer to local assessments; as little as a constitutional provision against special taxation may relate to the license exacted by a municipal corporation.

See Washington v. State, 18 Ark. 752; McGhee v. Mathis, 21 Ark. 40, 50 et seq., and authorities cited. See also Worcester Agr. Soc. v. Worcester, 116 Mass. 189.

But local political sub-divisions, like the state, are not subject to taxation, unless expressly made so.

Cooley, Taxn. 1876, p. 180; Louisville v. Com. 1 Duv. 295; Boons County v. Keck, 31 Ark. 887.

School districts are by statute quasi public corporations.

School District No. 11 v. Williams, 38 Ark. 454; Granger v. Pulaski County, 26 Ark. 37. See also 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. §§ 24, 25; Harris v. Canaan School Dist. No. 10, 28 N. H. 58; Dartmouth Soc. Bank v. School Dist. Nos. 6 & 31, 6 Dak. 832; Elliott, Roads & Streets, 408, 404.

While an assessment for improving a street is not in a strict sense a tax, yet it so far partakes of the nature of a tax as makes it operative only upon property subject to taxation.

Lowe v. Howard County Comrs. 94 Ind. 554; Leonard v. Brooklyn, 71 N. Y. 498, 27 Am. Rep. 80.

In the present case but one course of procedure is given, to enforce a statutory lien; that remedy is exclusive.

Cairo & F. R. Co. v. Turner, 31 Ark. 509; Cooley, Taxn. 1876, pp. 13, 300; Lane County v. Oregon, 74 U. S. 7 Wall. 80, 19 L. ed. 105, and authorities there cited; Burroughs, Taxn. § 105; Bridewell v. Morton, 46 Ark. 73; Worcester County v. Worcester, 116 Mass. 198, referred to hereafter.

In Worcester Agr. Soc. v. Worcester, 116 Mass. 189, and Worcester County v. Worcester, Id. 198, we have by contrast, two cases, before the same court, relative to the same local improvement assessment, one referring to a corporation which owed its exemption from taxation to a law, and the other referring to a public political body which was not among taxable creations unless made expressly amenable to taxation by law. Here, if ever adjudged cases amounted to anything, is, then, a decision directly in point, of the persuasive character.

In Atlanta v. First Presby. Church, 12 L. R. A. 852, the Supreme Court of Georgia in February, 1891, had before it the question whether a law empowering municipal corporations to impose assessments for local improvements, that is, to grade, pave, macadamize and otherwise improve a street, applied to church property. It was held that such property, though exempt by law as to general taxation, was subject to this local assessment. The terms of the law were general, sufficient to embrace every character of individual or corporation. The court ruled: "That the public property of the United States, the state, the county or the city, was intended to be dealt with thus, is so improbable that we can have no hesitation in holding that an implied exception as to all public property can and should be engrafted upon the Act by construction."

See also United States v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 34 U. S. 17 Wall. 829, 21 L. ed. 600 et seq.; Rochester v. Rush, 80 N. Y. 302; Schuykill County Poor Directors v. North Manheim Twp. School Directors, 42 Pa. 21; People v. Salmon, 51 Ill. 87; West Hartford v. Hartford Water Comrs. 44 Conn. 890.

School property is not liable to assessment for a street improvement; nor can a judgment be rendered against the board of education for the payment of the assessment out of its contingent fund.

Toledo v. Toledo Board of Education, 25 Ohio L. J. 81. See also Edgerton v. Huntington School Twp. 126 Ind. 261.

Hemingway, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This case involves the question of the liability of a public schoolhouse to assessment under the provisions of the digest with reference to "assessing property for local improvements in cities of the first class." Mansf. Dig. § 825 et seq. The school board contends that the schoolhouse is not liable to such assessment, while the board of improvement contends that it is. It is conceded that the improvement district was regularly organized, and that the schoolhouse is embraced within it; the contention is that because it is a schoolhouse, belonging to a public school board, it is not liable to the assessment. The claim of exemption is placed—First, upon the 5th section of the 16th article of the Constitution of 1874, which provides that "public property, used exclusively for public purposes, churches used as such, cemeteries used exclusively as such, school buildings and apparatus, libraries, and grounds used exclusively for school purposes, and buildings and grounds and materials used exclusively for public charity, shall be exempt from taxation;" and, second, upon the terms of the Act that regulates the assessment of property for local improvements, and describes the property to be assessed simply as "all the real property situated in the district." We have found no difficulty in disposing of the first ground relied upon. The rule established by a consensus of authorities—text-writers and adjudged cases—is that the constitutional exemption refers alone to taxes for general purposes of revenue, and has no reference to special taxes or assessments for local improvements. If the case of Peay v. Little Rock, 82 Ark. 31, is an authority against it, that of Davis v. Gaines, 48 Ark. 370, is in support of it; and, if there be any conflict between these cases, we approve the latter, as right upon principle and in line with the authorities. Cooley, Taxn. 2d ed. p. 207, and cases cited.

As to the second ground relied upon to sustain the claim of exemption, we find the authorities divided. The argument in favor of the exemption is that as the statute in defining the property to be assessed does not expressly mention public property, nor include it by any necessary implication, the presumption is that it was not intended to be assessed. A leading case in support of the contention is Inhabitants of Worcester County v. Worcester, 116 Mass. 198. The question there arose upon the liability of a court-house to assessment by a sewer district. The court held that although it was not exempt by the statute, which had reference to general taxes only, it was free from taxation, because, being public property, acquired by public funds, managed by public authorities, constituting a instrumentality for the performance of public functions, it was not to be deemed a subject of taxation, either general or special, unless the intent of the Legislature to render it so clearly appeared. In the case of Atlanta v. First Presbyterian Church, (Ga.) 12 L. R. A. 852, the question of the liability of a church to assessment was presented to the Supreme Court of Georgia. The statute provided that all real estate abutting on the street improved should be assessed, and the contention was that churches were expressly exempted from taxation, and that, if the exemption applied to general taxes only, it implied an exemption from special taxes or assessments. The court held that the statutory exemption furnished no immunity from the special taxes, and that there was no implied exemption in favor of churches; but, in discussing the latter question, Judge Bleckley said: "We can be morally certain that they (the terms of the Act providing for the assessment) comprehend more than the Legislature intended they should; for they cover by their letter public as well as private property, and subject the whole alike to assessment, lien, levy, and sale. That the public property of the United States, the state, the county, or the city was intended to be dealt with thus is so improbable that we can have no hesitation in holding that an implied exception should be engrafted upon the Act by construction."

In the case of Baltimore County Comrs. v. Maryland Hospital, 62 Md. 127, the question arose upon the assessment of property held by the board of managers of the state hospital for street construction. The court said "that to bind the land of the state in any way that may divest it from the state, or destroy or impair one of its established agencies or means of carrying on one of its functions, the Legislature must unequivocally give its sanction. . . . It is not material whether the state's property may be taken from it by a tax in the nature of assessment for benefits or in some other way. The danger exists in taking that which belongs to and is essential to the state; and it cannot be exposed to this danger without its direct sanction." A like conclusion has been reached by other courts. Toledo v. Toledo Board of Education, 25 Ohio L. J. 81; Edgerton v. Huntington School Twp. 126 Ind. 261; Connecticut v. Hartford, 49 Conn. 89.

Although a special tax or assessment is not usually embraced within the meaning of the general term "tax," the rule under which public property is presumed to be exempt from one justifies the presumption as to the other. In speaking of the latter, Judge Cooley says: "Some things are always presumptively exempted from the operation of general tax laws, because it is reasonable to suppose they were not within the intent of the Legislature in adopting them. Such is the case with property belonging to the state and its municipalities, and which is held by them for governmental purposes. All such property is taxable if the state shall see fit to tax it; but to levy a tax upon it would render necessary new taxes to meet the demand of this tax, and thus the public would be taxing itself in order to raise money to pay over to itself, and no one would be benefited but the officers employed, whose compensation would go to increase the useless levy. It cannot be supposed that the Legislature would ever purposely lay such a burden upon public property, and it is therefore a reasonable conclusion that, however general may be the enumeration of property for taxation, the property held by the state and by all its municipalities for governmental purposes was intended to be excluded, and the law will be administered as excluding it in fact." Cooley, Taxn. 2d ed. p. 172. It is uniformly conceded that this rule is correct when applied to general taxation. The reason sometimes given for it is the improbability that the Legislature would levy a tax upon that which results from a tax and must be replaced by a tax, and which is used for governmental purposes; another reason is found in the rule of statutory construction which presumes that the Legislature never intends to affect or transfer any governmental right or property, unless it expresses its intention to do so in explicit terms, or makes the inference irresistible. Whichever be the true reason of the rule, it is well settled, and we think it should apply alike to special and to general laws. 16 L. R. A.

If it be argued that the reasoning upon which the rule is placed does not apply to special taxes for local improvements, because the levy would fall upon one public body for the benefit of a smaller one, or because the entire school district would pay the tax while the small improvement district must bear the loss from the exemption, the answer is that the same is the case with regard to general taxes. Exemption of the state-house and other state institutions relieves every taxable subject in the state from the burden of taxation, but it deprives the particular county or school district in which they are situate of the entire county or school tax; and so the exemption of county property from state taxes benefits the county only, and deprives the entire state of revenue; still, in all such cases, it is held that exemption is implied wherever liability is not expressed or necessarily inferred. If the disparity of burden and benefit does not prevent the operation of the rule as to general taxes, we see no reason why it should as to special assessments. See Endlich, Interpretation of Statutes, §§ 161-163; Sedgw. Stat. & Const. L. pp. 28, 387, 521; Suth. Stat. Constr. p. 421; Galveston Wharf Co. v. Galveston, 63 Tex. 14; Rochester v. Rush, 80 N. Y. 302; People v. Brooklyn Board of Assessors, 111 N. Y. 505, 2 L. R. A. 148; Jones v. Tatham, 20 Pa. 398; Schuylkill County Directors of Poor v. North Mannheim Twp. School Directors, 42 Pa. 21; 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. § 773; People v. Doe, 36 Cal. 220; West Hartford v. Hartford Water Comrs. 44 Conn. 360.

It is argued that, upon the authorities, exemption of public property for local assessments is denied, and cases to sustain the argument are to be found decided by high and learned courts. See St. Louis Pub. Schools v. St. Louis, 26 Mo. 468; Sioux City v. Sioux City School Dist. 55 Iowa, 150; McLean v. Bloomington, 106 Ill. 209; Adams County v. Quincy, 130 Ill. 568, 6 L. R. A. 156. But in our opinion they are based upon error. The reason upon which they rest, as stated by the Supreme Court of Iowa, is that "taxation is the rule and exemption the exception," and that statutes under which exemptions are claimed must be strictly construed. To sustain this Cooley is cited. The same reason is given by the Supreme Court of Illinois, and Dillon is cited. Both courts seem to have overlooked the fact that the authors in the citations made were considering the subject with reference to private property, and had stated the rule with reference to public property to be that exemptions would be implied unless otherwise expressed. Cooley, Taxn. 2d ed. p. 172; 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. § 743.

It is argued that, even if public property is exempt, the exemption does not extend to the property of public school districts, inasmuch as they are not, strictly speaking, municipal corporations, and education is not a governmental function. The Constitution provides that the state shall ever maintain free public schools, and in performing this duty it exercises a function strictly public and governmental. It created school districts and imposed upon them in part this duty, and in order to discharge it they own school-houses. They have no other duty than to perform for the state this public function, and only that they may do it is the house held. The state may abolish them, take the property, and undertake directly or through other agencies this public function. The means of controlling the property would thereby be changed, but its use would be unchanged, and there is nothing in the policy of the law to exempt the property while held and controlled by the state, which would deny the exemption while held by the state's agent, and used in the performance of its duties. Green v. United States, 76 U. S. 9 Wall. 655, 19 L. ed. 806, and authorities above cited. There is nothing in the Act to require the inference that it was intended to embrace public property held by the government, the state, or any of the state's subordinate agencies, and used for public purposes. It could not include the first, and this the Legislature no doubt knew; but there is as much reason to suppose that it intended to include the property of the government as that of the state. An exception must be implied as to the property of the government, and, as no appropriate remedy is provided for collecting sums due from the state or any of its agencies, there is no inference that the Legislature intended to include such property, and the presumption is that it was to be exempted.

Affirmed.

Cockrill, Ch. J., dissenting:

I do not concur in the court's judgment in this case, and do not think that the authorities relied upon sustain it. Nor does it seem to me that there is a division in the express adjudications on the question involved. The principle which underlies the difference between a tax for general benefits and a special assessment for the payment of local improvements, recognized in the opinion, should, in my judgment, resolve the present question against the school district. The former is recognized by the authorities as a continuing burden that must be submitted to for the public good, while the latter is in the nature of payment for a direct and immediate local benefit,—a quid pro quo,—as much as the consideration is which is agreed to be paid for the purchase of any other benefit or improvement. It is a principle of natural equity that all who enjoy the benefit shall pay for it. When the improvement is made in accordance with the statute, this obligation becomes a legal one, unless the exemption is found in the written law. No valid reason exists why the state, the county, the city, or the schools should not pay for the benefits derived by them, the same as any other property owners. Hassan v. Rochester, 67 N. Y. 528, 535. There ought to be no presumption that the Legislature intended to violate a principle of natural equity. It may do so when not inhibited by the Constitution, but justice to a co-ordinate department should impel us to establish the rule that inclusion and not exemption will be presumed when the Act is silent in such cases, because the Legislature is presumed to intend to act fairly. The language of the Act is broad enough to include public property, and the only plausible reason, it seems to me, that is given for exempting it is that a governmental agency will be lost or impaired by subjecting the property of the state, county, etc., to sale to satisfy the claim. But a complete answer to that argument is that it is not necessary to resort to that remedy. The property need not be sold. No property used by a city, county, or school district in furthering the design of the origin of the corporation can be sold to satisfy a debt; but it has never been considered that that circumstance was a prohibition against liability. On the contrary, all such corporations are constantly compelled to pay their legal obligations without a sale of the public property owned by them. The cases cited by the court to sustain its judgment go no further than to hold that property, such as that in question, cannot be sold, and they do not therefore reach the question in the case. Thus, the case of Connecticut v. Hartford, 49 Conn. 89, and that of Baltimore County Comrs. v. Maryland Hospital, 62 Md. 127, were both attempts to sell the state's property, which was used for governmental purposes, to pay for a local improvement; and the efforts failed because the sale was not authorized. The case of Worcester County v. Worcester, 116 Mass. 193, was a like effort to deprive the county of its court-house and jail, and met with a like fate. The case of Edgerton v. Huntington School Twp., 126 Ind. 261, does not seem to bear upon the question; and that of Toledo v. Toledo Board of Education, 25 Ohio L. J. 81, does not sustain the point to which it is cited. In the first of the two cases last cited, the court decided only that lands granted by Congress to the state for school purposes could not be subjected to direct or indirect taxation, and that the Legislature had no power to subject them to assessment for local improvement. The court relies upon a similar case in Illinois, which that court had no trouble in reconciling with the opposite of the rule it is now cited to sustain. The question of the power of the Legislature of this state to subject the land in suit to assessment for local improvement is conceded.

The case of Toledo v. Toledo Board of Education, is meagerly reported, and the opinion throws no light on the question at issue. It is there adjudicated, however, that the city in which the school property, which abutted the local improvement, was situated should pay the assessment thereby relieving the other abutting owners of the burden of paying the school property's pro rata. The city, I take it, was coextensive with the school district while the improvement district comprised but one of a large number of streets. The court therefore practically reached the conclusion contended for by the improvement board in this case. The case may then be said to sustain the board's position. Confining the language of the first three cases to the facts before the court the only rule that can legitimately be deduced from them is that public property held for governmental purposes cannot be sold to pay for local improvements unless the sale is expressly authorized and that general language in a statute will not be deemed to be intended to change the law and authorize a sale of such property. In that rule I fully assent. It is in accord with the decisions cited from Illinois and it does not militate against the rule of a liability of the school district to be otherwise enforced as the Illinois opinions explain. All that relates to the subject in the Georgia case cited is confessedly obiter. The authority of Dillon and of Cooley is invoked in the opinion, but it is not and cannot be claimed that either has lent the weight of his name to maintain the judgment in this case. It is true the statute creates no remedy except by sale of the property improved. But when once it is established that there is no intention to exempt the school district from liability, the courts will devise a remedy if the Legislature has provided none, for a right never fails for lack of a remedy.

The Illinois law is the same as ours in that respect, and the question is satisfactorily met in McLean v. Bloomington, 106 Ill. 209, and cases cited. There is nothing in any of the cases cited by the court to militate against the doctrine that the courts will devise a remedy. The first two cases, as I have before said, were against the property of the state. As against the state the courts are powerless, for the suitor can have no remedy against the state unless it is expressly provided by the written law. The moral obligation of the state to contribute its pro rata of the payment due remains nevertheless, and the collection fails only because the courts are without power as against the state. Hasson v. Rochester, 87 N. Y. 528. The case in 116 Mass. was a proceeding by certiorari to quash the illegal levy by which it was sought to divest the county of the title to its court-house. In such cases there is no discretion in the court except to grant or deny the writ. Consequently, no other remedy could have been granted by the court in that case. The doctrine that the intention to exempt public property from taxation will be presumed, because it is not probable that the public will tax itself to raise money to pay over to itself, is manifestly inapplicable to the case of an improvement board. The local improvement board is not the public. It is not a municipality, or a part of the governmental function; it is only an agency of the property holders for the purpose of making the required improvement and collecting the assessments to pay for it. Fitzgerald v. Walker, 55 Ark. 148; Pine Bluff Water & L. Co. v. Sewer Dist. No. 1, (Ark.) 19 S. W. Rep. 576. It is a small part only of the school district, and to collect a tax from the city at large to pay for improving the street in front of the school would not be a case of the public taxing itself to repay itself, any more than if the tax was collected from the public to pay the contractor who built the schoolhouse on the school grounds. It would be just as convincing to argue that no tax should be collected from the contractor's property, because it must be repaid to him.

But in addition to all this there is another view of the subject, which I think ought to control. The Constitution recognizes the difference between a tax and local assessment, and points out the exemptions intended to operate against the first, (art. 16, § 5,) but makes no exemption of liability to pay for the benefit derived from the local improvement, (art. 19, § 27.) Both sections are in the same instrument and were adopted at the same time. It is fair to presume that, as the framers made the exemptions in one case and made none in the other, they intended no exemptions which they did not express. McLean v. Bloomington, 106 Ill. 209; Adams County v. Quincy, 180 Ill. 566, 6 L. R. A. 156; Sioux City v. Sioux City Ind. School Dist. 55 Iowa, 150; St. Louis Pub. Schools v. St. Louis, 26 Mo. 468. Moreover, the command of that instrument is that assessments for local improvements shall be uniform. Where a part is exempt, uniformity is destroyed. Davis v. Gaines, 48 Ark. 870; Monticello v. Banks, Id. 251. When the Constitution has said that the assessment shall be uniform, by what rule of construction shall we say it shall not be? I think the judgment should be in favor of the improvement board.

MINNESOTA SUPREME COURT.

Thomas A. BUCKLEY, Appl.,

v.

Emma A. HUMASON et al., Respts.

(.....Minn.....)

*1. Transactions in violation of law cannot be made the foundation of a valid contract.

*Head notes by VANDERBURGH, J.

2. Where a statute or an ordinance, duly authorized and enacted, makes a particular business unlawful for unlicensed persons, any contract made in such business by one not authorized is void.

3. Where, by a valid city ordinance, it was made unlawful for any person to exercise within the city the business of a real-estate broker without a license, NOTE.—Effect of failure to procure license for business on validity of contract therein.

Some of the statutes are so worded that there can be no doubt as to the effect upon the contract of a failure to procure a license. Some of them in 16 L. R. A.

terms make the contract void and prohibit any recovery upon it. Of course in such cases no recovery would be permitted. Rowdre v. Carter, 64 Miss. 221.

So if the statute prohibits a recovery of commis-—Held, that a person so engaged in negotiating the sale or exchange of real property, in violation of such ordinance, could recover no commissions for his services.

(June 15, 1892.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from an order of the District Court for Ramsey County dissions none can be had. Smith v. Lindo, 4 C. B. N. S. 405.

And the class of contracts which are within the prohibition seems to be large. Thus, a merchant who fails to procure his privilege license cannot recover upon a contract insuring his stock of goods against loss by fire. Pollard v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 63 Miss. 244.

Although, if the contract is entirely outside of the business of the one who should have procured the license it seems that it may be valid. Harness v. Williams, 64 Miss. 600.

Thus a bank which has not taken out a privilege license is not prohibited from recovering upon a bill of lading which has been assigned to it. People's Bank of Meriden v. Alabama G. S. R. Co. 65 Miss. 365.

Where contract prohibited.

No question can arise where the contract is directly prohibited. In such cases the statute will control and no recovery can be had. Bull v. Hargagan, 17 B. Mon. 352.

The first doubt appears where a penalty is imposed simply, without any intimation of the effect which a violation of the terms of the statute will have upon the contract. In such cases it seems to be agreed upon that if the imposition of the penalty was to prohibit a particular act without license no recovery can be had for performing such act without license. Taylor v. Crowland Gas & Coke Co. 10 Exch. 293.

Effect of imposition of penalty.

For the purpose of determining whether or not the imposition of a penalty was intended to be prohibitory certain rules have grown up which seem to be quite uniformly recognized. And it is in the application of these rules that the apparent conflict in the cases arises.

Where the statute has in view the protection of the public health or morals, or the prevention of frauds by the person who is required to procure the license, then, though there be nothing but the penalty, a contract which infringes it cannot be supported. De Allex v. Jones, 37 Eng. L. & Eq. 475.

But if there was no clause making the contract of sale illegal, and the sale was at most a breach of a mere revenue regulation which was protected by a special penalty, the price may be recovered. Johnson v. Hudson, 11 East, 180.

Where the object of the Legislature was not to vitiate the contract, but only to impose a penalty on the person offending for the purpose of the revenue, he may recover the price of the goods sold, but he cannot if a prohibition was intended, although it was merely for the purpose of the revenue. Smith v. Mawhood, 14 Mees. & W. 453.

The general rule is that where the license required is for the protection of the public and to prevent improper persons from acting in a particular capacity, and is not for revenue purposes only, the imposition of the penalty amounts to a positive prohibition of a contract made in violation of the statute. Tallafiero v. Moffett, 54 Ga. 152.

In Aiken v. Blaisdell, 41 Vt. 667, a distinction is taken between a law which is intended to prohibit, prevent, restrict or regulate business, and one which operates merely on the person for the purpose of making him pay a tax, and it is held that in the latter case the contract is not void.

The courts will examine the statute as a whole to see whether or not the intention was to prohibit the act. Solomon v. Dreschler, 4 Minn. 273.

16 L. R. A.

And they do not always agree as to what the intention of the statute really is.

Sales of liquor.

Where the statute provided a penalty for selling liquor without a license, the court held the intention was to make a contract of sale under such circumstances illegal, and that no recovery could be had for the price, saying that there is a distinction between statutes which impose a penalty for the purpose of prohibiting a contract and those where the penalty is imposed for other purposes than that of making the contract illegal. Lewis v. Welch, 14 N. H. 294.

The price of liquors sold without license cannot be recovered. Farrow v. Vedder, 19 Ill. App. 305; Dolson v. Hope, 7 Kan. 164; Glass v. Alt, 17 Kan. 444; Bancroft v. Dumas, 21 Vt. 465; Hamilton v. Grainger, 5 Hurlst. & N. 40; Griffith v. Wells, 3 Denio, 238; Alexander v. O'Donnell, 13 Kan. 603; Moog v. Espalla (Ala.) June 24, 1891.

In contrast with the above it was held in Pennsylvania that although a statute imposes a penalty on any one who shall carry on the business of a liquor dealer without having procured a license, a note given for liquor purchased from one who had no license was not void if there was no express prohibition from engaging in such business without a license. Rahter v. First Nat. Bank of Lancaster, 23 Pa. 366.

Contracts of agents, brokers, etc.

Whether or not the person acting as broker without license can recover his commissions depends on whether the Act requiring the license was to secure revenue or was to protect the public by preventing improper persons from acting as brokers. In the former case he can recover; in the latter he cannot. Cope v. Rowlands, 2 Mees. & W. 149.

Where the statute provided that the business of real-estate broker shall not be "pursued or done" without a license, a broker who without a license negotiates a sale cannot recover his commissions. Stevenson v. Ewing, 37 Tenn. 48.

In that case the court says that the rule that if the sole purpose of the Act is to raise revenue, the courts should so construe it as not to affect the validity of the contract made without a license, is called into requisition only when there is doubt, from the language of the statute itself, whether or not the Legislature intended to prohibit the exercise of the privilege without license.

So where the statute says it shall not be lawful for persons to exercise the business of brokers without a license, one who sold stocks without a license cannot maintain an action for his commissions. Hustis v. Pickands, 27 Ill. App. 270.

So an unlicensed real-estate agent subject to penalty for doing business without license cannot recover compensation under contract for such business. Johnson v. Hulings, 103 Pa. 493, 49 Am. Rep. 131.

Under a statute stating that no person shall without license engage in a business under a certain penalty, he cannot recover his commissions in case he does business without the license, although the act is not expressly forbidden. Costello v. Goldbeck, 9 Phila. 153.

But a conclusion quite the opposite seems to be reached in Justice v. Rowand, 10 Phila. 623.

On the other side, it has been held that an ordinance making it a misdemeanor for anyone to transact business as a house and real-estate agent missing, after the introduction of plaintiff's evidence, an action brought to recover commissions alleged to have been earned in procuring the transfer of certain real estate. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion. Messrs. Stephens, O'Brien & Glenn and Armand Albrecht for appellant. Messrs. Otis & Godfrey for respondents.

without a license therefor will not prevent the enforcement of a contract between an unlicensed agent and a vendor which had been executed by the former. Prince v. Eighth Street Baptist Church, 2 West. Rep. 621, 20 Mo. App. 332.

So a traveling merchant who has subjected himself to a penalty for selling goods without a license may still recover their price if the sale is not expressly prohibited by the statute. Mandlebaum v. Gregovich, 17 Nev. 87, 45 Am. Rep. 433.

Contracts of physicians, surgeons, etc.

Lord Ellenborough thought that a statute requiring surgeons to be licensed was not prohibitory. Gremare v. Le Clerc Bois Valon, 3 Campb. 144.

But in Cope v. Rowlands, 2 Mees & W. 149, that was held not to be a binding authority.

And it is now held that a statute imposing a penalty on a person occupying himself as a surgeon without a license will be regarded as a prohibition and he cannot recover for services rendered. De Allex v. Jones, 37 Eng. L. & Eq. 475.

Where the statute makes it a misdemeanor for a person to practice medicine without a license, he cannot recover compensation for services so rendered. Gardner v. Tatum, 81 Cal. 370.

A contract to pay a fee for services rendered by a physician who is not licensed to practice medicine is void in its inception where a statute prohibits him from practicing as a physician for fee or reward without license. Puckett v. Alexander, 3 L. R. A. 43, 102 N. C. 95.

Unlicensed physicians or apothecaries cannot recover. Leman v. Housley, L. R. 10 Q. B. 63.

United States Revenue Laws.

The courts are not agreed upon the question whether or not the United States Revenue Laws were intended to be prohibitory. On the one side it has been decided that the United States laws requiring a license for the sale of intoxicating liquors were not intended to render a sale without a license void, but were simply for raising revenue. Corning v. Abbott, 54 N. H. 439.

Failure by a real-estate agent to take out the license required by the Internal Revenue Law of the United States will not affect his right to recover compensation. Ruckman v. Bergholz, 57 N. J. L. 437.

On the other side it has been held that the United States Revenue Laws requiring peddlers to be licensed are prohibitory. Best v. Bander, 29 How. Pr. 439.

One who has failed to take out a license under the United States Revenue Laws cannot recover for services performed in the business on which the tax is imposed, although the contract is not expressly declared void by the Act. Holt v. Green, 73 Pa. 200, 13 Am. Rep. 737.

Contracts in other kinds of business.

A statute requiring a license from a public cartman is prohibitory. Ferdon v. Cunningham, 20 How. Pr. 154.

Without a license an innkeeper cannot establish a lien on the goods of his guests. Stanwood v. Woodward, 35 Me. 93.

A person acting as an attorney at law without license cannot recover for his services. Tedrick v. Hiner, 61 Ill. 123.

16 L. R. A.

The statute does not prohibit dealing in bills of exchange without a license although it imposes a penalty for so doing. Lindsey v. Rutherford, 17 B. Mon. 240.

Application and limitation of the rule.

The statutes will be strictly construed and a statute imposing a penalty for "carrying to sell or exposing for sale" without a license does not render void a sale so as to prevent a recovery of the price. Jones v. Berry, 33 N. H. 210.

An agreement to permit an unlicensed person to carry on business under the license of another cannot be enforced. Ritchie v. Smith, 6 C. B. 433.

A license taken by one member of a law firm will not validate contracts made on behalf of the firm by his partner. McIver v. Clark (Miss.) Feb. 1, 1892.

That the broker had no license will not avoid the contract between the principals. Smith v. Lindo, 4 C. B. N. S. 405; Pidgeon v. Burslem, 3 Exch. 456; Jessopp v. Lutwyche, 10 Exch. 614.

A new promise is not sufficient to permit a recovery for the price of liquors sold without license. Melchoir v. McCarty, 31 Wis. 255, 11 Am. Rep. 605.

The repeal of the statute does not validate the contract. Anding v. Levy, 57 Miss. 52, 34 Am. Rep. 425; Decell v. Lewenthal, 57 Miss. 331.

A contract by one who is not a real-estate broker to procure a purchaser for a piece of real estate is not void although such person is not licensed as a broker. Chadwick v. Collins, 23 Pa. 133. See also Shepler v. Scott, 85 Pa. 331.

Absence of license will not avoid a sale made by one who has been a traveling peddler if the sale is not made in that capacity. Brett v. Marston, 45 Me. 401.

Mr. Benjamin has admirably summed up the law upon this subject in his work on Sales (Corbin's ed.) § 826; (Bennett's 1892 ed.) § 583. His rules will in most cases furnish a ready test as to the validity of a contract, and they are therefore inserted here. They are as follows:

First.—That where a contract is prohibited by statute, it is immaterial to inquire whether the statute was passed for revenue purposes only or for any other object. It is enough that parliament has prohibited it, and it is therefore void.

Secondly.—That when a question is whether a contract has been prohibited by statute, it is material, in construing the statute, to ascertain whether the Legislature had in view solely the security and collection of the revenue, or had in view, in whole or in part, the protection of the public from fraud in contracts, or the promotion of some object of public policy. In the former case the inference is, that the statute was not intended to prohibit contracts; in the latter that it was.

Thirdly.—That in seeking for the meaning of the law-giver, it is material also to inquire whether the penalty is imposed once for all, on the offense of failing to comply with the requirements of the statute, or whether it is a recurring penalty, repeated as often as the offending party may have dealings. In the latter case, the statute is intended to prevent the dealing to prohibit the contract and the contract is therefore void; but in the former case such is not the intention, and the contract will be enforced. H. F. F

Vanderburgh, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action is brought by plaintiff to recover commissions for services as a real-estate agent or broker in procuring a purchaser for certain real estate in Chicago. The cause of action is stated as follows in the complaint: "During the year 1890 the plaintiff, at the special instance and request of the defendants, performed services for said defendants in the city of Chicago, in the state of Illinois, in and about procuring a purchaser for certain property in the state of Illinois, which said services were then and there of the reasonable value of $4,375, and which said sum the defendants agreed and promised to pay plaintiff therefor." The plaintiff testified that at the time of the alleged services he resided in the city of Chicago. The transactions referred to occurred there, and the negotiations were there concluded, and the contract and purchase were consummated in that city, and the plaintiff claims to be entitled to the usual commissions charged, and received in Chicago for such services. He also testified that he had been previously engaged in the real-estate business in Chicago, as an agent, and sold and exchanged property for others on commission; and the transaction in question appears clearly enough to have been in the line of his regular business as a real-estate agent or broker. In this connection we must observe that it is admitted in the pleadings that during the year 1890, and prior thereto, an ordinance of the city of Chicago, enacted in pursuance of a statute of that state, was in force, which provided that it should not be lawful for any person to exercise within that city the business of real-estate broker, without a license therefor, and defined a "real-estate broker" as a person who, for commissions or other compensation, is engaged in the selling of or in negotiating sales of real estate belonging to others. A license fee of $25 per annum is required to be paid by such broker, and any person violating the provisions of the ordinance is subject to a penalty of not less than $25, and to the same penalty for every subsequent violation thereof. The testimony shows that the plaintiff was using and exercising the business of a real-estate broker in the city of Chicago during the time in question, and in performing the services for which a recovery is sought in this action. It was made unlawful for him to do so by the terms of the ordinance referred to. It was not at all material that the parties for whom he negotiated a sale agreed to take property in St. Paul in payment or exchange for the Chicago property of which plaintiff negotiated a sale, and for which he found a purchaser. The ordinance, which is set out in full in the answer, was valid, and the case as presented by the evidence clearly falls within it. Braun v. Chicago, 110 Ill. 187. It has the force of law within the city of Chicago. Bott v. Pratt, 83 Minn. 323, 53 Am. Rep. 47. The particular transaction in question was therefore in violation of law, unless he was duly licensed, which was not shown. On the contrary, the answer alleges, and it stands admitted, for want of a reply, that the plaintiff was not duly licensed as a broker. The plaintiff cannot, therefore, recover his commissions. Hustis v. Pickands, 27 Ill. App. 270; Johnson v. Hulings, 108 Pa. 501, 49 Am. Rep. 181; Holt v. Green, 78 Pa. 198, 18 Am. Rep. 737. Business transactions, in violation of law, cannot be made the foundation of a valid contract; and the general rule is that where a statute makes a particular business unlawful generally, or for unlicensed persons, any contract made in such business by one not authorized is void, (Bishop, Cont. §§ 471, 547; 1 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 403;) and the contract being void where it was made and to be performed, will be so held here. (Bishop, Cont. § 1863.) The case was properly dismissed upon the evidence.

Order affirmed.

COLORADO SUPREME COURT.

J. Warren BROWN, Plff. in Err.,
v.

REPUBLICAN MOUNTAIN SILVER MINES, Limited.

(.....Colo.....)

- *1. Directors of a corporation are not entitled to compensation for their services as directors, unless such compensation is provided for or expressly sanctioned by the charter.
2. If a director renders services to the corporation clearly outside of his duties as a director, in pursuance of an antecedent appointment or employment by competent corporate authority,—that is, in pursuance of an express contract entered into in good faith,—and the services be such as the company may legally contract for, he may recover compensation therefor.

*Head notes by ELLIOTT, J.

NOTE.—For note on the subject of the right of a director of a corporation to compensation for his services, see Ten Eyck v. Pontiac, O. & P. A. R.Co. (Mich.) 8 L. R. A. 878.
16 L. R. A.

3. Quere, whether a director may recover at all upon an implied contract; but.—Held, that he certainly cannot recover compensation for services rendered by himself to his corporation upon an implied contract, unless it be established by a clear preponderance of the evidence.—First, that the services were clearly outside of his ordinary duties as a director; and, second, that they were performed under circumstances sufficient to show that it was well understood by the proper corporate officers as well as himself that the services were to be paid for by the corporation.

(May 2, 1892.)

ERROR to the District Court for Clear Creek County to review a judgment of non-suit in an action brought to recover compensation for services alleged to have been rendered by plaintiff as managing director of defendant corporation. Affirmed.

Statement by Elliott, J.:

Action against a mining corporation by one of its directors to recover compensation as managing director. Judgment of nonsuit. From the record it appears that the defendant below, the Republican Mountain Silver Mines, Limited, was a mining corporation organized under the laws of Great Britain, and that it was engaged in the business of mining in Clear Creek county, Colo., between the years 1880 and 1890; and, further, that J. Warren Brown, plaintiff below, was one of the directors, and also the managing director, of said company during most of said period. The plaintiff, Brown, was a resident of Freehold, N. J., and had his place of business in New York city. He first became managing director of the defendant company in 1882. In this action he sues to recover the sum of $15,000 as the value of his services as managing director for the period of five years from May, 1884. He makes no claim for compensation as managing director for the period prior to May, 1884, but admits that he received his share of the £800 per annum provided for the directors. He claims that he did not do as much for the company as managing director prior to 1884 as he did afterwards. He bases his claim to compensation for the five years following May, 1884, upon the ground that his duties as managing director were equivalent to those of general superintendent; that he exercised the combined powers of the board of directors, though subject to the board; that is, that he filled the place of mining superintendent, and, in addition, had the general direction of the affairs of the company. The evidence, however, shows that the defendant company had a mining superintendent residing in Clear Creek county, Colo., who gave special attention to the company's business, subject, of course, to the control and direction of the plaintiff as managing director; that plaintiff generally came twice a year to Colorado to look after the business of the company, particularly to give attention to certain litigation; that he did this prior to May, 1884, as well as afterwards; and that he also made several trips between London and New York on the company's business. The defendant company reimbursed plaintiff for traveling expenses, and all expenditures of money made by him in behalf of the company, so that this suit is based entirely upon his claim for compensation for services rendered as managing director during the five years aforesaid. Plaintiff was one of the largest stockholders of the defendant company, owning about one half the entire stock, and a larger amount of the deferred stock than any other stockholder. The following extracts from the charter of the defendant company were in force during the period covered by this litigation: "Sec. 88. The office of a director shall be vacated if he accepts or holds any other office or place of profit under the company, except that of managing director, manager or agent of the company, or of a member of a local board or local committee of management. . . . Sec. 90. . . . The remuneration of the directors shall be a sum of £800 per annum, to be paid out of the profits of the company, and to be divided amongst them as they shall determine. The said remuneration of £800 to be increased at the rate of £50 for every two per cent of yearly dividends or bonus paid to the shareholders after the first 10 per cent per annum; provided, always, that the said remuneration shall not begin to accrue until the company's mines are being worked at a profit. Sec. 91. If any director shall be called upon to go or reside abroad on the company's business, or otherwise perform extra services, the board may arrange with such director for such special remuneration for such services, either by way of salary, commission, or the payment of a stated sum of money, as they shall think fit."

Messrs. Morrison & Fillius, for plaintiff in error:

The services performed by plaintiff were not those usually performed by directors. They were the active superintending of the opening up of a large and valuable mining property, and took up, practically, the entire time of the plaintiff. In the exact language of the Supreme Court of the United States, in Fitzgerald & M. Constr. Co. v. Fitzgerald, 137 U. S. 111, 34 L. ed. 618: "The character of all these services placed them outside of official duties proper."

In Few v. First Nat. Bank in Gloucester, 130 Mass. 395, the language used is: "That the defendant is liable under an implied promise, if the services were valuable" and "rendered under such circumstances as to raise the fair presumption that the parties intended and understood that they were to be paid for, or at least, that the circumstances were such that a reasonable man, in the same situation with the person who receives and is benefited by them, would and ought to understand that compensation was to be paid for them."

Mr. Charles E. Gast, for defendant in error:

A director or officer of a corporation, in the absence of a by-law fixing his compensation, or of an express agreement to pay for his services, cannot recover the value of them on a quantum meruit. The rule is applicable not only to directors, but to all officers, however they may be styled, who are managers for the stockholders, thus holding a trust relation as distinguished from a mere agency. The rule originated from the common-law doctrine of trusts and has been adhered to by the courts, first, because it is sound in principle, and second, because public policy demands its enforcement for the protection of stockholders.

See Kilpatrick v. Penrose Ferry Bridge Co. 49 Pa. 118; Accommodation Loan Assn. v. Stonemetz, 29 Pa. 534; Merrick v. Peru Coal Co. 61 Ill. 472; American Cent. R. Co. v. Miles, 52 Ill. 174; Cheaney v. Lafayette, B. & M. R. Co. 68 Ill. 570, 18 Am. Rep. 584; Holder v. Lafayette B. & M. R. Co. 71 Ill. 106, 22 Am. Rep. 89; Illinois Linen Co. v. Hough, 91 Ill. 63; Citizens Nat. Bank v. Elliott, 55 Iowa, 104; Wood v. Lost Lake & C. Mfg. Co. (Or.) March 4, 1890; Utica Ins. Co. v. Bloodgood, 4 Wend. 652; Fort Scott First Nat. Bank v. Drake, 29 Kan. 311; Martindale v. Wilson-Cass Co. 134 Pa. 848; McAvity v. Lincoln Pulp & P. Co. 82 Me. 504; Toponce v. Corrine Mill, O. & S. Co. (Utah) July 12, 1890; Mather v. Eureka Mower Co. 118 N. Y. 629; Ellis v. Ward (Ill.) April 8, 1889; Eakins v. American White Bronze Co. 75 Mich. 568.

Elliott, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

At the close of plaintiff's evidence the district court, upon defendant's motion, rendered a judgment of nonsuit, upon the ground that plaintiff had failed to prove a sufficient case for the jury. Code, § 166. This action of the court is assigned for error, and it is the only matter urged in argument for reversal. The ground of defendant's motion for nonsuit was that there could be no recovery in the case, since there was no evidence of an express agreement or arrangement between the plaintiff, Brown, and the defendant company by which he was to have compensation for the services sued for. The doctrine is generally accepted that directors of a corporation are not entitled to compensation for their services as directors unless such compensation is provided for or expressly sanctioned by the charter. Without such authority, the directors cannot lawfully vote compensation to themselves for the performance of their ordinary duties, nor can they accomplish such end indirectly; as by designating one of their number "managing director," and giving him a salary for the performance of such ordinary duties as are devolved by the charter upon the board of directors.

If, however, a director renders services to the corporation clearly outside of his duties as a director, in pursuance of an antecedent appointment or employment by a majority of the board, and the services be such as the company may legally contract for, he may recover compensation therefor. The more stringent rule is that, to justify a recovery of compensation under such circumstances, the employment must be by express contract, as by a resolution of the board duly adopted and recorded before the services are rendered, or by other equally competent and definite evidence. Some modern decisions announce a more liberal rule, to the effect that for services rendered by a director, not embraced in his ordinary duties as such, his employment by the corporation, and its promise to pay therefor, may be implied or inferred from the facts and circumstances of the case, thus allowing a recovery as upon a quantum meruit. There are many reasons for adhering to the more stringent rule. Ordinarily the directors of a corporation are intrusted with extensive powers in the management of its affairs. They occupy positions of trust and confidence with reference to the corporate body and its stockholders. The relation is of a fiduciary character. Hence in the performance of their duties as representatives of the corporation, especially in matters where their individual interests are also concerned, the law exacts of them the utmost good faith and fair dealing. But, even if the more liberal rule may be resorted to in some cases, it certainly should be held that a director cannot recover compensation for services rendered by himself to his corporation upon an implied contract, unless it be established by a clear preponderance of the evidence—First, that the services were clearly outside his ordinary duties as a director; and, second, that they were performed under circumstances sufficient to show that it was well understood by the proper corporate officers as well as himself that the services were to be paid for by the corporation. 1 Morawetz, Priv. Corp. §§ 508, 516; 2 Waterman, Corp. § 265; Taylor, Corp. §§ 612, 646, 647; Loan Association v. Stonometz, 29 Pa. 535; Kilpatrick v. Penrose F. Bridge Co. 49 Pa. 118; Martindale v. Wilson-Cass Co. 184 Pa. 348; Cheaney v. Lafayette, E. & M. R. Co. 68 Ill. 570, 28 Am. Rep. 584; Utica Ins. Co. v. Bloodgood, 4 Wend. 652; Mather v. Eureka Mower Co. 118 N. Y. 629; McAvity v. Lincoln Pulp & P. Co. 82 Me. 504; Eakins v. American White Bronze Co. 75 Mich. 568; Citizens Nat. Bank v. Elliott, 55 Iowa, 104; Pew v. First Nat. Bank in Gloucester, 180 Mass. 395; Fitzgerald & M. Const. Co. v. Fitzgerald, 137 U. S. 98, 34 L. ed. 608; Ten Eyck v. Pontiac, O. & P. A. R. Co. 74 Mich. 226, 3 L. R. A. 378.

It is unnecessary in this case to decide which of the rules above stated is to be preferred. The ruling of the trial court, to the effect that the plaintiff's evidence did not prove a sufficient case for the jury, was, in our opinion, correct, according to either rule. The charter, as offered in evidence, does not provide in terms that the services of a managing director shall be remunerated. The plaintiff does not base his claim upon the contingencies specified in section 90 of the charter; and there is no evidence that the board made any arrangement with plaintiff for his special remuneration, as indicated by section 91. It is not contended that the evidence shows an express contract by the defendant company to pay plaintiff for his services as director or as managing director. It is conceded that plaintiff was not entitled to compensation as managing director prior to May, 1884, though he held that position during 1882, and continuously thereafter, until the bringing of this action. It is admitted that plaintiff was reimbursed for his travelling expenses, and for all expenditures of money out of pocket made in the service of the company. He was a member of the board of directors, and attended their meetings, during the five years for which he now claims compensation, and yet no agreement or arrangement was entered into in respect to such compensation. The evidence may, perhaps, show that he gave more attention to the business of the corporation after May, 1884, than before that time; but it does not show that the character of his duties as managing director were essentially different from and after that date, nor that he at any time rendered services for the defendant company clearly outside of the proper duties of a director or of the board of directors. From all the facts and circumstances shown in evidence, it is clear that the jury would not have been justified in sustaining his claim to recover in the action upon the basis of an implied contract, even if such basis were to be held sufficient in law.

The judgment of nonsuit was therefore proper, and must be affirmed.

ILLINOIS SUPREME COURT.

ILLINOIS WATCH CASE CO., Petitioner,
*v.*Isaac N. PEARSON, Secretary of State, et al.

(.....Ill.....)

1. A license to form a corporation under a certain name issued by the secretary of state gives such corporation the right to that name as against an already existing corporation having a different name which has passed a resolution and given notices for a meeting to vote on a change of its name to that selected by the new corporation, at least where its promoters did not know at the time of their license of the proposed change.
2. The secretary of state cannot revoke a license to form a corporation under a certain name merely because another corporation before the license was issued had called a meeting to vote on the question of adopting such name instead of that which it then had.
3. A writ of mandamus will not be issued to compel the secretary of state to receive and file a certificate of the vote of a corporation to change its name as provided by statute where this would result in the use of the same name by two corporations with a possible conflict of interests and litigation under statutes which show an intention to prevent the use of the same name by two or more corporations.

(March 26, 1892.)

PETITION for a writ of mandamus to compel the secretary of state to receive and file in his office a notice of change of name of the corporation petitioner, and also to compel him to revoke a license which he had issued to certain other persons authorizing them to organize a corporation under the name which petitioner desired to adopt. Writ denied.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Griffin & Wile for petitioner.

Messrs. W. H. & J. H. Moore & Purcell for respondents.

Magruder, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a petition for mandamus, filed in this court on January 13, 1891, by the Illinois Watch Case Company, against the secretary of state, alleging, in substance, that, while it was engaged in taking such steps for the change of its name to the "Elgin Watch Case Company," as required by the statutes of this state, certain persons, to wit, John M. Cutter, J. H. Moore, and J. A. McCormick, made and filed with the secretary of state a statement, under the Corporation Law of this state, for the purpose of forming a corporation by the name of the "Elgin Watch Case Company," and obtained a license to them as commissioners to open books for subscription to the capital stock of the "Elgin Watch Case Company," and that the petitioner, having done all that was required by law to change its name and adopt the name of the "Elgin Watch Case Company," is injured and wronged by the efforts made by such persons, and others subscribing for said stock, to organize a corporation under the same name. The prayer of the petition is that the secretary of state be commanded to file in his office the certificate theretofore presented to him, of the vote of the stockholders of the petitioner in favor of such change of name, and also that the secretary of state be required to revoke the license so issued, to open books of subscription to the capital stock of a corporation to be called the "Elgin Watch Case Company." The secretary of state filed his answer to the petition, and afterwards, upon motion and by stipulation, the said Cutter, Moore, and McCormick, and Walter T. Thompson, Albert J. Perry, and Will J. Vincent, were made defendants to the proceeding, all of whom, except the said Moore, were subscribers to the stock of the proposed new corporation. The new defendants thus brought in have filed a general demurrer to the petition.

The question presented is whether the petitioner has the better right to the use of the name "Elgin Watch Case Company," by reason of the steps taken by it to change its name, or whether the defendants, who are the proposers of the new corporation and subscribers to its capital stock, have the better right to the use of said name, by reason of the license issued, and of the proceedings had under the license. Such of the facts set up in the pleadings as are material in the consideration of the question thus presented will be recited. The steps taken by the petitioner to effect the change of its name were in accordance with the requirements of the Act of March 26, 1872, providing for changing the names of incorporated companies, and of the Act of June 14, 1887, amending section 1 thereof, and of the NOTE.—Unlimited multiplication of corporations in recent years has already given rise to frequent conflicts in respect to names. So far as the change of a name of a corporation does not interfere with the enjoyment by another corporation of its name, it is manifestly a matter of statutory regulation, but when the assumption of a name either on organization or by subsequent change of name is likely to injure another corporation having a similar name, the courts apply substantially the same rules that govern in respect to the conflict of trade-names of individuals or partnerships.

For the name of a business establishment as part of the good-will of the business, see note to Vanderbank v. Schmitt (La.) 15 L. R. A. 462.

16 L. R. A.

For the acquisition and use of a name by an individual, see note to Lafin & R. F. Co. v. Steytler (Pa.) 14 L. R. A. 690.

See also, as to the doctrine of idem sonans, note to Veasey v. Brigman (Ala.) 13 L. R. A. 541.

As to the conclusiveness of the decision of an officer who issues a certificate to a corporation allowing it to use a certain name, see American Order of S. C. v. Merrill, 8 L. R. A. 320, 151 Mass. 558.

For a restriction by statute on the use by foreign corporations of names similar to those of domestic corporations, see International Trust Co. v. International L. & T. Co. 10 L. R. A. 758, 153 Mass. 271.

Act of June 6, 1889, amending sections 1, 3, 4, and 7 thereof. 1 Stat. & C. Stat. p. 624; Laws 1887, p. 132; Laws 1889, p. 95. On January 18, 1890, the directors of the Illinois Watch Case Company passed a resolution expressing a desire to change the name to the "Elgin Watch Case Company," calling a special meeting of the stockholders for February 24, 1890, and providing for the giving of notices of such meeting to the stockholders in person or by mail, and by publication. On January 20, 1890, notices were mailed to all the stockholders of the meeting to be held on February 24, 1890, to vote upon the question of the change of the name. General notice of such meeting and its object was published for three successive weeks in a Chicago newspaper, to wit, on January 21 and 28 and February 4, 1890; on February 24, 1890, a meeting of all the stockholders was held at the company's place of business in Chicago pursuant to the notice, and a resolution that the name be changed as above was adopted, all the stockholders voting for it in the mode required by the statute. The statutory certificate of the vote, verified by the affidavit of the president and under the seal of the corporation, was filed in the recorder's office of Cook county. On May 24, 1890, a like certificate was presented to the secretary of state at his office in Springfield, with a tender of the legal fee for filing the same, and a demand was then and there made upon him that he file the same, but he refused to receive and file said certificate. It is alleged in the petition that petitioner has been prevented from making the further publication required by section 5 of said Act of 1872, by reason of such refusal of the secretary of state. On January 30, 1890, said Cutter, Moore, and McCormick filed with the secretary of state the statement above mentioned, in accordance with section 2 of the Act of April 18, 1872, concerning corporations, for the purpose of forming a corporation for pecuniary profit under the name of the "Elgin Watch Case Company," with a capital stock of $10,000, and having its principal office in Chicago; and thereupon, on the same day, the secretary of state issued the license above mentioned, to open books of subscription to the capital stock of said company. The secretary alleges in his answer that, when he issued the license, no notice had been filed in his office of the proposed change of name of the petitioner, and that he had no notice of such proposed change until he received a letter dated May 7, 1890, from one of petitioner's attorneys, inclosing a certificate of the vote of the stockholders of the petitioner "in favor of such change," and that he "then refused to permit the petitioner to file said certificate . . . solely because the name had been appropriated by other persons for another company." The petition alleges that no organization of any corporation under said license had been completed when the stockholders of the petitioner adopted a resolution for the change of name, on February 24, 1890, and that, when petitioner demanded of the secretary that he file the certificate of the vote upon said resolution, it also demanded of him that he revoke the license so issued by him, to open books of subscription, both of which demands were refused. Accordingly, on June 7, 1890, the petitioner served upon the secretary a written notice that it had taken all the preliminary steps required by law to change its name, and that it claimed the exclusive right to the name of the "Elgin Watch Case Company;" and in which notice the secretary was notified not to issue to any other persons or "concern" any final certificate of the organization of any other incorporation by that name. On September 10, 1890, Cutter and McCormick offered to file in the secretary's office their report, as commissioners acting under said license, showing that the stock had been fully subscribed for, and that after the giving of the ten days' notice required by law a meeting of the subscribers had been held on September 5, 1890, and certain persons had been elected as directors. The petition alleges that the secretary refused to file said report or to issue a final certificate of organization. In his answer, however, he alleges that the commissioners filed their report, but that, being in doubt as to the rights of the parties, he has delayed the issuance of the final certificate, and he "submits that he had no authority to revoke the license, . . . and had no authority to file the certificate of change of name of petitioner, as demanded, or to issue any certificate of such change." The petition alleges that the petitioner, the Illinois Watch Case Company, was organized under the laws of Illinois on November 27, 1888; that its principal office was located in Chicago; that its manufacture of watches was carried on in Chicago until May 20, 1890, when its factory was removed to Elgin, in Kane county, in pursuance of plans which were matured in January, 1890. The petition also alleges that all the defendants who demur to the petition "had actual knowledge that your petitioner had taken each of the steps and had done each of the acts hereinbefore set out for changing the corporate name," "long before, at the time of, and since their alleged subscription," and at the time of the offer to file said report of the commissioners. It would appear that the subscription to the stock had not been completed until about ten days before September 5, 1890. The petition does not state at what time before such subscription the said defendants had or acquired their knowledge of petitioner's acts for the change of its name. The petition contains no averment, and therefore the demurrer thereto does not admit, that the defendants had any notice or knowledge on January 30, 1890, when they applied for and obtained the license aforesaid, of any of the steps theretofore taken by petitioner for the change of its name.

Section 1 of the Act of March 26, 1872, after providing that, whenever the board of directors of any corporation existing under the laws of this state may desire to change the name, they may call a special meeting of the stockholders to vote upon the question of such change of name, contains the following proviso: "Provided that, in changing the name of any corporation under the provisions hereof, no name shall be assumed or adopted by any corporation similar to, or liable to be mistaken for, the name of any other corporation organized under the laws of this state, without the consent of such other corporation." Section 2 of the Act of April 18, 1872, after providing that persons proposing to form a corporation shall make, acknowledge, and file with the secretary of state a statement "setting forth the name of the proposed corporation," and the other matters therein specified, closes as follows: "The secretary of state shall thereupon issue to such persons a license as commissioners to open books for subscription to the capital stock of such corporation at such times and places as they may determine, but no license shall be issued to two companies of the same name." 1 Starr & C. Stat. p. 610; Rev. Stat. 1891, chap. 82, § 2. Although the first of the above named Acts went into force on the day of its passage, and the second not until July 1, 1872, yet they were both passed at the same session of the Legislature; and, so far as any of their provisions relate to the same subject-matter, they may be construed together. Thus construed, they plainly indicate that the intention of the Legislature was to prevent, if possible, any two or more corporations, doing business under the laws of this state, from making use of the same name. The steps required to be taken to secure a change of name must be taken by the corporation itself. Proceedings for the change are to be begun when the directors desire it. The directors call the special meeting of the stockholders to vote upon the change and give the notices of such meeting. The stockholders, by their vote, adopt or reject the proposed change. The certificate of the vote must be verified by the affidavit of the president, and must be under the seal of the corporation, and must be filed by the corporation in the offices of the secretary of state and of the recorder of the county where the principal business office is located. "Upon the filing of such certificate the change proposed and voted for at such meeting as to name . . . shall be and is hereby declared accomplished." The corporation upon filing such certificate shall cause a notice of such change to be published for three successive weeks. There is nothing necessary to be done to change the name of the corporation, which cannot be done without the aid or co-operation of the state, or of any of its officials, unless the secretary of state has the right to refuse to receive the certificate of the vote of the stockholders, or to refuse to permit it to be filed in his office, when he knows that the new name is the name of a corporation already existing or in process of organization. On the other hand, the proceedings necessary for the formation of the corporation cannot be carried on or completed without the aid of the state, acting through its secretary. The secretary of state must issue the license and the final certificate of complete organization. When there is a change of name the stockholders must see to it that the new name adopted by them is not similar to, or liable to be mistaken for, the name of any other corporation organized under the laws of the state. When a new corporation is formed the secretary of state must see to it that a license is not issued to two corporations having the same name. The duty of avoiding the use of the same name by two corporations is imposed by both of the foregoing Acts. The principal act in effecting a change of name is the vote of the stockholders in adopting the new name. If they are forbidden to adopt a name similar to that of any other corporation organized under the laws of the state, it must follow that they should take steps to ascertain whether any other corporation in the state bears the name which they propose to take, or a name similar thereto. The prohibition against the adoption of a name already in use involves and implies the duty of ascertaining whether such name is already in use. Such fact can be learned by inquiry at the office of the secretary of state. The records of the recorder's office of a particular county may show the names of corporations whose principal office is in that county, but the records of the office of the secretary of state will show the names of the corporations organized under the general state law, whether their principal office be in one county or another. If when the stockholders of petitioner met, on February 24, 1890, to vote to change the name, they had applied to the secretary of state for information, they would have learned that theretofore, to wit, on January 30, 1890, application had been made to form a new corporation, having the name of "Elgin Watch Case Company." Not only is it true that the petition in this case does not charge the proposers of the new corporation with having notice on January 30 of the resolution adopted by petitioner's directors on January 18, or with having knowledge of the notices given by the directors for the meeting of February 24, but it is also true that the notices which section 2 of the Act of March 28, 1872, requires to be delivered or mailed, and the general notice which that section requires to be published, were intended as notice to the stockholders of the meeting, and that such published notice was not intended to be a notice to the general public of a desire to change the name. The notice of the change which is required to be given to the public is the notice provided for in section 5, to be published after the filing of the certificate of the vote. Up to January 30, petitioner had done nothing to effect the change in its name, except that the directors passed a resolution on the 18th to call a meeting of the stockholders for February 24, and mailed notices of such meeting to the stockholders on January 20, and published notice thereof on January 21 and January 28. We do not think that the adoption of such resolution and the giving of such notices gave the petitioner an exclusive right to the use of the proposed name.

As the law forbids the adoption of a name similar to that of "any other corporation organized under the laws of this state without the consent of such other corporation," it is said that the new corporation of the defendants cannot be embraced within the meaning of the law, because it had not been fully organized when petitioner completed the steps necessary to change its name, but merely had a license at that time to open books of subscription; and that, therefore, its consent to the use of the name could not be obtained. The name of another corporation cannot be adopted without the consent of the latter, and it can make no difference whether the failure to obtain that consent arises from refusal to give it or from the inability to give it. It is true that a strict construction of the statute would limit its language to "organized" corporations. But we think the phraseology should be construed to include corporations so far advanced in the process of organization as to have secured the issuance of a license. When the proposers of the corporation have obtained a license, they have called into exercise the power of the state, which alone can give being to a corporation. Under the license, subscriptions to the stock may be taken, directors may be elected, and two years are allowed for organizing and proceeding to business. The law nowhere confers upon the secretary of state the power to revoke the license except for failure to organize and proceed to business within two years from the date of such license. During the two years the license is authority for taking the steps authorized by the law, and cannot be revoked. The sole ground upon which it is claimed that the secretary should be required to revoke the license in the present case is that before its issuance the directors of petitioner desired to change petitioner's name, and had notified its stockholders to meet and vote upon the question of such change. The ground alleged is wholly insufficient. We are therefore of the opinion that a mandamus directing a revocation of the license should not be granted.

It has been held that a writ of mandamus may be issued for a part of the relief asked. People v. Secretary of State, 58 Ill. 90; People v. Lippincott, 72 Ill. 578. The petition here is not only for a revocation of the license; but to compel the secretary of state to receive and file in his office the certificate of the vote by petitioner's stockholders to change its name, as provided for in section 4 of the Act of March 26, 1872. Upon this branch of the case we have had more difficulty in reaching a conclusion. If said section be considered by itself, it would seem that the filing of the certificate of change of name was a mere ministerial act, and that the secretary of state had no discretion in the matter of allowing it to be filed. But we are inclined to the view that section 4 should be construed in connection with section 2 of the Corporation Act. By the latter the secretary of state is clothed with the discretionary power of refusing a license to two corporations of the same name. If, after he had granted a license for the formation of a corporation by a certain name, he should suffer an existing corporation to file a certificate showing its adoption of that same name, he would thereby be consenting to the existence of two corporations in the state of the same name. This would be a violation of the spirit if not the letter of the statutes. As in the present case the license to form the Elgin Watch Case Company was irrevocable, the only way to give effect to the intention of the Legislature that two corporations by the name of the "Elgin Watch Case Company" should not be allowed to do business in the state, would be to refuse to allow petitioner's certificate of change of name to be filed. But, whether the secretary had or had not the discretion to refuse to permit the certificate of change to be filed, the fact remains that he did so refuse; and the question before us is whether we shall grant a writ of mandamus to compel him to permit it to be filed. The exercise of the power to grant the writ "rests to a considerable extent in the sound discretion of the court, subject always to the well-settled principles which have been established by the courts or fixed by legislative enactment." High, Extr. Legal Rem. § 9. "Its issue is discretionary with the court, acting upon existing facts, and viewing the whole case with due regard to the consequences of its action." People v. Ketchum, 73 Ill. 212. The writ is not granted as a matter of absolute right, and where it can be seen that it cannot accomplish any good purpose, or that it will fail to have a beneficial effect, it will be denied. Cristman v. Peck, 90 Ill. 150; People v. Lieb, 85 Ill. 434.

The consequence of granting the writ here will be that two corporations of the same name will be doing business in the state, and a conflict of interests and litigation in a different form from that now pending may result hereafter. The writ is never granted in doubtful cases, or unless the party asking it has a clear right. High, Extr. Legal Rem. § 9. Such doubt exists in the case at bar, and the petitioner has not a clear right to the relief asked, by reason of its failure to apply to the secretary of state for information, or to notify him in any way before January 30, 1890, of its intention to change its name.

For the reasons here stated, the writ will be denied.

Rehearing denied.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT.

HOUGHTON COUNTY SUPERVISORS, Relators,
v.

Robert R. BLACKER, Secretary of State.

(.....Mich.....)

1. The Legislature has no power to divide a county in the apportionment of districts for the election of representatives under the Michigan Constitution, which provides for the election of representatives by single districts equal as nearly as may be in population and for which no township or city shall be divided, and also that if any county is entitled to more than one representative, the board of supervisors shall divide it into the requisite number of districts.

NOTE.—For other recent decisions as to apportionments, see State v. Cunningham (Wis.) 15 L. R. A. 561; Giddings v. Blacker (Mich.) ante, 402; McPherson v. Blacker (Mich.) post, —, 16 L. R. A.

2. An Apportionment Act must be held entirely invalid where it divides a county in violation of the Constitution, and the effect of correcting the Act in this particular and giving the county the representation to which it is entitled would make one more representative than the Constitution permits.

3. "Convenient and contiguous territory" within the meaning of a constitutional provision as to the apportionment of election districts does not mean contiguous in contact by land when applied to counties which are composed of islands, and consequently Keweenaw and Isle Royal counties in Michigan may be declared as convenient and contiguous to other counties bordering on deep waters of the lake, as to Houghton county.
4. There can be no legislative discretion to give a county of less population than another greater representation under a Constitution requiring representative districts to contain "as nearly as may be" an equal number of inhabitants.
5. On holding an Apportionment Act unconstitutional election notices will be ordered to be given under the preceding Act if that was valid, unless a new Act shall be passed before it is necessary to give the notices.

(July 29, 1892.)

PETITION for a writ of mandamus to compel the Secretary of State to give notice of the election of two representatives in the state Legislature for Houghton County in disregard of the apportionment of representatives made by Pub. Acts 1891, No. 109. Notices ordered to be given under the apportionment made by Pub. Acts 1881, No. 255.

The facts are stated in the opinions.

Messrs. T. L. Chadbourne and Hubbell & Gray, with Mr. Allen F. Rees, for relators.

Mr. A. A. Ellis, Atty. Gen., for respondent.

Long, J., delivered the following opinion:

The Legislature, by Act No. 109, Pub. Acts 1891, apportioned anew the representatives in the Legislature among the several counties and districts of this state. The number of representatives was fixed by the first section of the Act at 100, in accordance with section 8, art. 4, of the Constitution, agreeably to a ratio of 1 representative to every 20,938 persons, including civilized persons of Indian descent, not members of any tribe, in each organized county, and one representative to each county having a fraction more than a moiety of said ratio, and not included therein, until 100 representatives are assigned. Under the United States census of 1890 it appears that Houghton county had a population of 35,889, or a ratio and a fraction more than a moiety. Under the above Apportionment Act, however, that county was divided, and the townships of Adams, Chassell, Duncan, Franklin, Hancock, Laird, Portage, Quincy, Schoolcraft, and Torch Lake made to constitute one representative district, while the townships of Calumet and Osceola, of Houghton county, and the whole of the counties of Keweenaw and Isle Royal, were constituted one representative district; that is, two townships of Houghton county were cut off and put into a district with Keweenaw and Isle Royal counties. This is a petition for a mandamus to compel the respondent, as secretary of state, to give notice of the election of two representatives from the county of Houghton, and disregard the division of the county as made by the Legislature under the Act.

16 L. R. A.

It is claimed that the Constitution is violated by this Act in two particulars: (1) In dividing the county by putting two of the townships into a representative district outside of it; (2) in refusing to give to the county two representatives, it having a ratio and a fraction over a moiety. Section 8, art. 4, of the Constitution, provides: "The House of Representatives shall consist of not less than sixty-four nor more than 100 members. Representatives shall be chosen for two years and by single districts. Each representative district shall contain as nearly as may be an equal number of inhabitants, exclusive of persons of Indian descent, who are not civilized or members of any tribe, and shall consist of convenient and contiguous territory; but no township or city shall be divided in the formation of a representative district. When any township or city shall contain a population which entitles it to more than one representative, then such township or city shall elect, by general ticket, the number of representatives to which it is entitled. Each county hereafter organized, with such territory as may be attached thereto, shall be entitled to a separate representative when it has attained a population equal to a moiety of the ratio of representation. In every county entitled to more than one representative the board of supervisors shall assemble at such time and place as the Legislature shall prescribe, and divide the same into representative districts equal to the number of representatives to which such county is entitled by law, and shall cause to be filed in the office of the secretary of state and clerk of such county a description of such representative districts, specifying the number of each district, and the population thereof, according to the last preceding enumeration." After the Act of 1891 took effect, the board of supervisors of Houghton county assembled, and acting under what is claimed to be the power of said board conferred by this provision of the Constitution, proceeded to divide the county into two representative districts, it having a ratio, as fixed by the Act, and a moiety over, under the last preceding enumeration. A description of such representative district was offered for filing in the office of the secretary of state. By resolution of the board of supervisors the county was divided into two districts; the townships of Calumet, Schoolcraft, and Torch Lake, containing a population of 18,758, constituting district No. 1, and the townships of Adams, Chassell, Duncan, Franklin, Hancock, Laird, Osceola, Portage, and Quincy, containing a population of 16,881, constituting district No. 2. It is expressly provided by the section of the Constitution above set forth that where a county is entitled to more than one representative the board of supervisors shall assemble and divide the county into representative districts. This power is therefore vested in the board of supervisors, and not in the Legislature; so that, if the county of Houghton is entitled to more than one representative, the Act of the Legislature, so far as it attempts to divide the county into districts, is void and of no effect.

At the time of the framing of the Constitution the convention adopted a schedule, which was made a part of it, and ratified by a vote of the people. The purpose of this schedule, as stated in the preamble, is as follows: "That no inconvenience may arise from the changes in the Constitution of this state, and in order to carry the same into complete operation, it is hereby declared," etc. Section 22 of this schedule provides: "Every county, except Mackinaw and Chippewa, entitled to a representative in the Legislature at the time of the adoption of this Constitution, shall continue to be so entitled under this Constitution; and the county of Saginaw, with the territory that may be attached, shall be entitled to one representative; the county of Tuscola and the territory that may be attached, one representative; the county of Sanilac and the territory that may be attached, one representative; the counties of Midland and Arenac, with the territory that may be attached, one representative; the county of Montcalm, with the territory that may be attached, one representative; and the counties of Newago and Oceana, with the territory that may be attached, one representative. Each county having a ratio and a fraction over equal to a moiety of said ratio, shall be entitled to two representatives, and so on above that number, giving one additional member for each additional ratio." At the time of the adoption of the Constitution of 1850 there were seven organized counties in the upper peninsula of the state, including Houghton county, and thirty-three organized counties in the lower peninsula. The county of Houghton, by the terms of section 22 of the schedule, was then entitled to one representative at least; and each organized county, except Mackinaw and Chippewa, was regarded as a unit for representative purposes, and to be dealt with by the Legislature only as a whole. By the plain provisions of section 3, art. 4, of the Constitution, and of section 22 of the schedule, it is manifest that the Legislature, in apportioning the representatives, should take into consideration the fact that certain counties had been organized prior to the adoption of the Constitution, and such counties, except Mackinaw and Chippewa, would be entitled to one representative at least; and that, where a county was thereafter organized, with such territory as might be attached thereto, it should be entitled to a separate representative when it had attained a population equal to a moiety of the ratio of representation, and that each county was to be regarded as a unit. Also, that when any county then organized, or thereafter organized, should be entitled to more than one representative, such county should be divided into districts by the board of supervisors; but that such county was also to be regarded as a unit. Again, if not alone entitled to one representative, it must, as a whole, be joined with other entire counties and other territory to send one representative. These limitations by the Constitution are placed upon the power of the Legislature in apportioning representatives to the various counties of the state. No other Legislature since the adoption of the present Constitution, in 1850, has ever given any other interpretation to the Constitution. It has never been thought that the Legislature has the power, under the Constitution, to divide a county in making representative districts, until the present Act was passed by the Legislature of 1891. By no one of the eight apportionment bills passed since 1850 has this been attempted; but, on the contrary, in every bill so passed, the county has been regarded as a unit. This has not arisen from matter of accident in the apportionment, but by the various Acts there is a distinct recognition of the fact that the Legislature has no power, under the Constitution, to divide a county. The first Apportionment Act after the adoption of the Constitution recognized the limitation of power. Act No. 104, Laws 1855. That Act provided that "the House of Representatives shall hereafter be composed of members elected agreeably to a ratio of one representative for every 7,000 white persons . . . in each organized county." And the Acts of 1861, 1865, 1871, 1875, use the same language. The Act of 1881 further says: "And one representative to each county having the largest fraction more than a moiety of said ratio."

It is apparent, therefore, that the Legislature had no power to divide the county of Houghton, and set off a portion of its territory into another district. Under our Constitution and form of government the county has come to be regarded as of much importance in the administration of the affairs of the state and in the matter of local self-government. The boards of supervisors may have conferred upon them, under section 38, art. 4, of the Constitution, powers of a local legislative and administrative character. Such powers have been conferred from time to time, so that the county, with its county seat established, and its own officers to manage its affairs, represents the interests of the state in that part of the territory designated as a county. Many of these counties existed at the time of the adoption of the present Constitution, and the formation of others was provided for as local interests might demand. The interests of the people of a county center around its seat of government, and the people of a county in the past have always been represented in the lower house of the Legislature by one of its own constituency. As was said by Mr. Justice Orton in State v. Cunningham (Wis.) 15 L. R. A. 561: "The people have a commendable pride in their own counties, and have more or less a common feeling and interest, and participate together in all their county affairs. They have a right to be represented by their own members of the Legislature, and the members themselves can better represent them, and promote and protect their interest." It is contended, however, by the attorney-general, who appears for the respondent in this case, that, though the Legislature may have made a mistake in dividing Houghton county, yet, if the Act is otherwise valid, it should not be declared unconstitutional. It will be seen that, if the provisions of section 22 of the schedule to the Constitution had been followed in making the apportionment, Houghton county, having a ratio of representation and a fraction over equal to a moiety, would be entitled to two representatives, so that, while the Act is invalid, inasmuch as it attempts to divide the county and set off a portion into another district, it also deprives the county of Houghton of that representation to which, under this section, it would be entitled. This court has no power, however, to make an apportionment, and could in no case hold that two representatives should be elected from that county. Under section 8, art. 4, of the Constitution, the whole number of representatives cannot exceed 100. The Legislature by the Act fixed the utmost limit of representation, and if it should now be held by this court that Houghton county should have two representatives, it would make the total number 101, or one more representative than the Constitution recognizes. This would be the effect of such a holding, or it would deprive Keweenaw and Isle Royal counties of all representation. We have no power to do this, or to declare what county or counties shall lose a representative in order to make the number good to Houghton county.

Some argument is made that the Legislature was bound under the provisions of section 8, art. 4, declaring that "each representative district shall consist . . . of convenient and contiguous territory," to unite Keweenaw and Isle Royal counties to the county of Houghton, for the reason that, within the meaning of the Constitution, they were not convenient and contiguous territory to any other county. This clause in the Constitution does not bear the restricted meaning contended for. It does not mean in contact by land. Certainly, so far as the islands are concerned, they may be considered contiguous, although separated by wide reaches of navigable deep waters. Isle Royal and other islands would go unrepresented if this were not so; and they may be as well declared 'convenient and contiguous territory to Baraga, Ontonagon, Marquette, or other counties bordering on the deep waters of the lake, as to Houghton county. We think this is the meaning of these words as used in the Constitution. Keweenaw county was set off from Houghton county in 1861. The Apportionment Act of 1865 gave her one representative, she then having a moiety of a ratio. That of 1871 made Ontonagon and Keweenaw together a district, the latter county having then less than a moiety of a ratio. The Act of 1875 joined her with Isle Royal, Baraga, and Ontonagon, that of 1881 with the same counties; that of 1885 the same; during all of which time Houghton county was entitled to one representative only. It was not thought in those times that Keweenaw was not convenient and contiguous to those counties. It would seem, therefore, that there was no difficulty in placing Keweenaw and Isle Royal counties in a district with convenient and contiguous territory without dividing a county to make a district. The Legislature had no constitutional power to divide the county of Houghton, and, we believe, no necessity existed, in apportioning the members of the Legislature to each county, to do so.

Many other glaring unconstitutional provisions of the Act could be pointed out,—provisions applying to other counties, where many are deprived of the number of members to which under the ratio they are entitled, and other counties given more members than such counties would be entitled to under the ratio. It is of course well known that an equal and exact division of the members among the different counties cannot be made, and all that the Constitution contemplates is that the division shall be as equal as may be; but where one county is given more representatives than it is entitled to, to the detriment of other counties, without any necessity or just cause, the county deprived of a member may well complain, and for such reason the Act may be held void. But we need not, in the present controversy, enter upon a discussion of that subject, as it is apparent that Houghton county could not constitutionally be divided and one portion of the territory put into another district. The prayer of the petition, however, cannot be granted as fully as the claim is made. As we have said, we have no power to make an apportionment, and the board of supervisors of that county would have no right to apportion two representatives to that county, as, in that case, the number would exceed the constitutional limit; but, for the reasons above given, we must hold the whole Act unconstitutional and void. In view of the facts set up in the petition and admitted by the answer, the writ must be granted, directing the secretary of state to give notice of election of the members of the Legislature throughout the state in accordance with the preceding apportionment, under Act No. 255 of the Public Acts of 1881, for the reasons set out in the opinion of my brother Morse, unless in the meantime the Legislature shall be assembled and apportion the members anew.

16 L. R. A.

The other Justices concurred.

Morse, Ch. J., delivered the following opinion:

The main question involved in this controversy is the right of the Legislature to dismember a county in the formation of representative districts. It is argued that there is no express prohibition in the Constitution against the division of a county, as was done in the apportionment of 1891, and attaching a portion of it to other counties to form a representative district. But such prohibition is plainly implied when the provisions in relation to representatives in the Legislature are taken as a whole and considered together, as they must be, in construing their meaning. It is very evident that it was not intended by the Constitution that counties should be divided unless entitled to two or more members, and then it is expressly provided that the division shall be made by the board of supervisors, at such time and place as the Legislature shall direct. The Constitution provides not only that each county thereafter organized shall be entitled to a separate representative when it has attained a population equal to a moiety of the ratio of representation, but the schedule, which, from its reading, must be held in operation for all time unless it shall be stricken out or amended, also provides that "each county having a ratio of representation and a fraction over equal to a moiety of said ratio shall be entitled to two representatives, and so on above that number, giving one additional member for each additional ratio." These provisions negative the idea of dividing counties and joining parts of two or more counties, or a part of one county to another entire county, in order to get an equality of population in the districts. Here, as in the senatorial apportionment, the county is the chief factor.

The provision that each district shall contain, as near as may be, an equal number of inhabitants, exclusive of persons of Indian descent who are not civilized, or are members of any tribe, and shall consist of convenient and contiguous territory, does not conflict with this main idea of representation by counties. The words "as near as may be" are capable of sufficient expansion to meet all difficulties that lie in the way. The number of inhabitants in each district is to be as equal as may be under a compliance with the other provisions of the Constitution, which compel a representation by counties. The Constitution does not look to a division of counties to obtain equality of population in the districts. For instance, if two counties adjoining contain, one of them a ratio and a fraction over, equal to a moiety of such ratio, and the other a population equal to a moiety of the ratio, the Constitution does not contemplate that the county having the excess over the ratio shall be divided and enough of its territory added to the lesser county to make it equal a ratio so that two districts shall be composed of the two counties in this way; but expressly provides that the larger county in population shall have two members and the smaller county one, making three districts out of two ratios. If it had been intended that a county should be divided and a part of its territory added to some other county, or a portion of some other county, in order to equalize more perfectly the population of the districts, these two provisions,—one giving an additional representative for a moiety and the other one for a moiety when the population of the county did not reach the ratio,—would not have been inserted in the Constitution. In fact, a county cannot be dismembered and carry out these two clauses of the Constitution.

In this case, Houghton county, under one of these provisions, was entitled to two representatives, and when a portion of it was detached and added to Keweenaw and Isle Royal counties, and the balance of the county given but one representative, the clear provisions of the Constitution were violated and ignored. It is plain to me that the framers of the Constitution intended that the county, as well as the township, should be treated as a unit in the formation of representative districts, except when a county was entitled to more than one representative. In such case the Legislature cannot divide. It must be done by the local Legislature, the board of supervisors. It is contended by the attorney-general that the provision of the Constitution that no city shall be divided in the formation of such districts, suggests that it was contemplated that a county might be divided, because a city may be, as some villages now are in the state, situated in two counties; and that, if it be held that a county cannot be dismembered under the Constitution, then the clause of that instrument which prohibits a division of a city might be nullified. But a city,—especially one not in existence at the time of the adoption of the Constitution—is the creature of the law, and has no constitutional right of being. There was no city, at the time the present Constitution was adopted, situated in this way, and there has been none since. Nor can a city be created, embracing territory in more than one county, unless such city shall be made a county by itself, in view of the provisions relative to the apportionment of representatives, without violating the plain intent of the Constitution. If, at the adoption of the Constitution, there had been a city thus situated, the contention of the attorney-general would have much force; but, as it is, it has none.

It is also claimed that the Constitution, in relation to the apportionment of representatives, cannot always be carried out in detail without violating some of its provisions. This is no doubt true, but it affords no argument in favor of the division of counties, except in the cases provided by the Constitution. If one county can be dismembered all of them can; and we might have, under the exercise of the legislative discretion, a representation ignoring counties altogether, and based solely upon the idea of equality of population. The schedule to the Constitution expressly provides that "every county, except Mackinac and Chippewa, entitled to a representative in the Legislature" at the time of its adoption, shall continue to be so entitled. When it is attempted to carry out this provision, and to give each county organized since the Constitution was adopted one representative for a moiety of the ratio, and also every county a member for each ratio, and an additional member for a moiety of a ratio, and then limit the number of representatives to 100, or any number, which shall be the quotient of the division of the whole population of the state by the ratio, it will be found that it cannot always be done without denying to some county its constitutional right of representation. For instance, the ratio of representation at 100 members, under the census of 1890, is 20,988. Under this census and ratio, if the Constitution be followed in all of its provisions, the counties entitled to one or more representatives under the moiety system use up 97 out of the 100 members, and there are still left 29 counties in the northern part of the state, with a population in round numbers of 187,000, out of which to carve three districts, each with a population of over 45,000,—more than double the ratio; so that two men would not have the representation in these districts that one would have in the others.

As far as I have examined, there has never been an apportionment but this difficulty has been encountered; and it has been a subject of much perplexity and vexation in the Legislature. It has resulted always in the necessary denial to some county or counties of their full representation under the moiety system. This court could not be called upon to enforce a constitutional provision incapable of enforcement. In case of making as equitable a division as possible under the Constitution,—and that is all that can be required,—it must be in the discretion of the Legislature to deprive some of the counties of their representation or additional representation upon the moiety plan; for two ratios cannot always be given three representatives, and at the same time limit the number of the whole to one for each ratio. But in such discretion the counties having the least number of inhabitants above the ratio or the moiety of the ratio should be the ones to suffer this deprivation. For instance in the present apportionment Houghton county, with a population of 35,389, was entitled, under the moiety plan, to two representatives, as were also Sanilac, Tuscola, Menominee, Macomb, and Montcalm. These counties, in population, under the census of 1890, were as follows: Menominee, 33,639; Montcalm, 32,637; Sanilac, 32,589; Tuscola, 32,508; Macomb, 31,818. Of these six counties, if three were to be left out, Houghton, Menominee, and Montcalm were entitled to two members each, and Sanilac, Tuscola, and Macomb to one each. But the Legislature gives two each to the last three, and only one to each of the first three above named, thus reversing the constitutional order of preference. Under the Constitution all of them are entitled to two, if the various provisions of the Constitution can be so worked out as to give each of them two. If they cannot, then the one or more left out should be those having the least population. There can be no legislative discretion, under the Constitution, to give a county of less population than another a greater representation. Such action would be arbitrary and capricious, and against the vital principle of equality in our government, and it is not intended or permitted by the Constitution; nor could such action lead to any good result. There can be found no excuse for it.

The relator prays that the secretary of state deliver a notice to the sheriff of Houghton county that two representatives are to be chosen in said county at the next election, and for such other and further relief as to the court may seem proper in the premises. The special prayer cannot be granted. The board of supervisors have no power to divide Houghton county into two districts, unless so authorized by the Legislature. Their action in this respect is null and void. But the people of the county are entitled to vote together for a representative. No portion of them can be detached and joined to another county. The Apportionment Act of 1891 is void, because it undertook to dismember Houghton county, and because the Constitution was also violated in giving counties two representatives having a less population than counties which were accorded but one. The Law of 1885 is also unconstitutional for the reason that the counties, or some of them, were given representation in defiance of the Constitution, and without the discretion of which I have spoken. Bay county, with a population of 51,221, was given but two representatives, while Lenawee county, with a less population, to wit, 49,584, was given three. This was not the exercise of constitutional discretion, but an arbitrary determination for some reason other than a desire to conform to the Constitution. Under the moiety clause, Bay, Lenawee and St. Clair were entitled, in 1885, in the order named, to three representatives. If only one could be given this number, the Constitution required it should be Bay; if two, Bay and Lenawee. An examination of the Apportionment Act of 1881 shows it to have been within the constitutional discretion of the Legislature, and therefore the secretary of state must give his notices under that law, unless a new and valid apportionment shall be made by the Legislature.

The other Justices concurred.

16 L. R. A.

Orissa M. JONES

v.

The PRESIDENT, etc., of the Village OF PORTLAND, Appt.

(.....Mich.....)

1. That a physician is employed to examine a person who has been negligently injured, for the express purpose of giving his testimony in a suit to be brought for the injury, does not render such testimony incompetent, but that fact may be considered by the jury as affecting its weight.
2. Testimony as to exclamations of pain, made by the injured person during the examination, cannot be given by a physician who has been employed to examine a person who contemplates suing for injuries received through another's negligence, for the express purpose of making him a witness in such suit.
3. Testimony as to statements made by the injured person to his attending physician of how the accident happened is not admissible in a suit to recover for alleged negligent injuries.
4. It is improper for counsel in an action to recover for injuries received by a fall on a sidewalk to offer, in the presence of the jury, to prove that other walks in the vicinity of where the accident occurred were defective, accompanying it by a positive statement that they are all unsafe; and it will be reversible error for the court to simply reject the offer without telling the jurors of its improper character and cautioning them not to be influenced by it.
5. A medical expert cannot in an action to recover for injuries alleged to have been caused by a fall upon a defective sidewalk, be permitted to give his opinion as to the cause of the condition of a person in a hypothetical case stated to him, which embraces the evidence which has been introduced concerning the injured person since it is a usurpation of the province of the jury.

(December 21, 1891.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Ionia County to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by a fall on a sidewalk which defendant had negligently permitted to become and remain out of repair. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. A. A. Ellis and W. H. Howard for appellant.

Messrs. Davis & Nichols for appellee.

Champlin, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was brought to recover compensation in damages for a fall caused by a defective cross-walk in the village of Portland, which the village authorities neglected to keep in repair. The plaintiff recovered judgment, and the defendant brings the case here by writ of error.

NOTE.—The rule admitting evidence of exclamations of pain made by an injured person is too well settled to need the marshaling of authorities in support of it. The exception thereto made by the above decision, although somewhat novel, seems so reasonable and just that it may be well regarded as unquestionably correct.

The injury was received on July 20, 1888, about 9 o'clock in the evening. This was on Friday; and on the evening of Tuesday, which was the 24th, Dr. Grant and Dr. Logan, of Ionia, came to see her. She had not at that time employed them, but they were employed by her husband, who was a lawyer. He engaged these physicians for the purpose of prescribing for his wife, and for the purpose of preparing them as witnesses to testify in a suit which was to be brought to recover damages against the village. The latter purpose would seem to be the principal one. Both of them understood that to be the object when they took the case and first went to see Mrs. Jones. During the summer previous Mrs. Jones had been ill, and she then had employed Dr. Alton and Dr. Hugg to attend her. Although she did not send for nor employ the Ionia physicians in the first place, she ratified what her husband had done, and submitted to an examination by and treatment from them. This suit was brought September 15, 1888, and some of these examinations were made before and some after suit brought. The physicians were allowed to testify to her complaints and to her statements of pain made during the examination made by them; also as to tenderness and pain in the region of her back, hip, and genital organs. They discovered a slight discoloration on the left hip, and a fullness at her knee, which were the only indications which they found of any ailments, and which, independently of her assertions that she had been injured, they would have attributed to rheumatism.

The questions presented by the assignments of errors upon this branch of the testimony are: First. Is it competent for a physician to testify to exclamations of pain made by a party who is being examined by such physician, when such party contemplates the bringing of a suit to recover for the injury which she claims to suffer, when such physician is employed with a view and for the purpose of giving testimony in such suit so to be brought? Second. Is it competent for such physician to testify to such exclamations and statements of the party upon examination made after suit is brought, and for the purpose of giving the same in evidence? The plaintiff claims that such testimony is admissible, under the following authorities: Hyatt v. Adams, 16 Mich. 180; Johnson v. McKee, 27 Mich. 471; Elliott v. Van Buren, 33 Mich. 49; Mayo v. Wright, 63 Mich. 32.

Hyatt v. Adams was an action on the case against a physician for malpractice in treating the plaintiff's wife, causing her death within four days. All there is in the opinion upon this subject is found in a single paragraph upon page 200, and reads as follows: "The court did not err in admitting the exclamations of pain and suffering uttered by the deceased, and her complaints as to the nature of her suffering during and after the operation, though some of them were in the absence of the defendant. This is the natural and ordinary mode in which physical pain and suffering are made known to others, and the only mode by which their nature and extent can be ascertained. Such exclamations and statements are therefore original evidence. But it was, of course, open to the defendant to show, or to raise an inference if he could, that they were feigned, or intended to deceive. They were clearly admissible as tending to show the malpractice of the defendant, though not for the purpose of aggravating the damages." It will be noticed that the admission of the evidence was confined to a single fact to be proved, and that was the malpractice of the defendant; and it was expressly stated that it was not admissible for the purpose of aggravating the damages. That case is not analogous to this. The exclamations of Mrs. Jones to her physicians, made four days after the accident happened, could in no manner tend to prove that she met with a fall upon a sidewalk through the negligence of defendant. It would not be competent testimony to prove the main fact in this way from statements of the party. The only bearing it could have legitimately would be to aggravate the damages, and the case cited is authority that it is not admissible for that purpose. Johnson v. McKee, 27 Mich. 471, was not a case of negligence, but of assault and battery. Testimony was received showing the statements by plaintiff at various times concerning her pains and bodily suffering. These were objected to as hearsay statements, and as declarations in her own favor. It was held by the court that, "so far as they were not narrations of past as well as present suffering, it has been well settled that such statements of present feelings are facts which furnish the best, and often the only, evidence of such physical conditions as are not open to discovery by the sight or other senses of witnesses." The question was no further considered. Elliott v. Van Buren, supra, was an action for an assault and battery, and the court said: "The declarations of a sick person, made from time to time, concerning present sufferings and sensations, (not being relations of past occurrences,) are the usual means of evidence where third persons testify on the subject." Mayo v. Wright was an action brought against a physician for malpractice in setting a broken leg, in which the same principle was asserted and applied. None of these cases were actions for negligence, but the causes of action were the direct act and misfeasance of the defendant, and the testimony was admissible as bearing upon the wrongful act alleged. In each of them, also, the exclamations were at a time when motives to make testimony favorable to the party in a suit such party had brought or contemplated to bring were absent. In this case it must be borne in mind that the witnesses were employed with a view of a suit to be brought, so far as was connected with two at least of the examinations made by them, and after the suit was brought, as to the other testimony relating to her exclamations or statements of her pain and suffering made to them.

In Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Huntley, 88 Mich. 544, 81 Am. Rep. 321, this court had occasion to pass upon the competency of testimony of physicians employed as "a mere auxiliary to a law-suit." Chief Justice Campbell, in giving the opinion of the court, said: "It has been held several times by this court that statements of pain and of its locality were exceptions to the rule excluding hearsay evidence. These statements are admitted only upon the ground that they are the natural and ordinary accompaniments and expressions of suffering. It would be impossible in most cases to know of the existence or extent or character of pain without them. They are received, therefore, as acts, rather than declarations, and admitted from necessity. The rule which admits declarations of present suffering has never been extended so as to include declarations either of past suffering or of the causes in the past of such suffering, so as to make such statements proof of the facts. Declarations concerning the past are narratives, and not facts. Exclamations of suffering may be, and, if honest, are, parts of the occurrence itself. It is difficult to lay down any very clear line of admission or exclusion where the exclamation refers to the feelings of the moment. But we think it would not be safe to receive such testimony in any case where it is not the natural and ordinary expression of pain, called out without purpose, or in the course of medical treatment. The unstudied expressions of daily life, or the statements on which a medical adviser is expected to act, and which, if feigned, he should have skill enough to subject to some test of truth, stand on a footing which removes them in general from suspicion. But we cannot think it safe to receive such statements which are made for the very purpose of getting up testimony, and not under ordinary circumstances. The physicians here were not called in to aid or give medical treatment. The case had been relinquished long before, as requiring no further attendance. They were sent for merely to enable the plaintiff below to prove her case. The whole course of the plaintiff was taken to no other end. She had in her mind just what expressions her cause required.' They were therefore made under a strong temptation to feign suffering if dishonest, and a hardly less strong tendency, if honest, to imagine or exaggerate it. The purpose of the examination removed the ordinary safeguards which furnish the only reason for receiving declarations which bear in a party's own favor. The general rule in regard to other classes of hearsay evidence and statements admitted upon the same principle is that they must have been made ante litem motam, which is interpreted to mean not merely before suit brought, but before the controversy exists upon the facts. Stockton v. Williams, Walk. Ch. 120, 1 Dougl. (Mich.) 546, (citing the Berkeley Peerage Case, 4 Campb. 401; Richards v. Bassett, 10 Barn. & C. 657; Doe v. Turner, Ryan & M. 16 L. R. A.

141; Monkton v. Attorney-General, 2 Russ. & M. 160; Whitelock v. Baker, 18 Ves. Jr. 514.

"The language of Lord Eldon in Whitelock v. Baker has met with general acquiescence. He says: 'All are admitted upon the principle that they are the natural effusions of a party who must know the truth, and who speaks upon an occasion when his mind stands in an even position, without any temptation to exceed or fall short of the truth.' Page 514. It is not necessary to consider whether there may not be properly received in some cases the natural and usual expressions of pain, made under circumstances free from suspicion, even post litem motam. The case must at least be a very plain one which will permit this. The present controversy presents no such difficulty. The physicians were called in, not to give medical aid, but to make up medical testimony; and the declarations were made to them while engaged in that work. It would be difficult to find a case more plainly within the mischief of the excluding rule."

While we adhere to the rule permitting such testimony in proper cases, we do not feel inclined to extend it beyond the necessities of the case, nor to cases clearly within the exception noted in the Huntley Case.

The fact that the physician is employed for the express purpose of giving his testimony in a case does not, for that reason alone, make him an incompetent witness. Nor is his testimony incompetent for that reason. It certainly may be considered by the jury as affecting the credibility of the witness and the weight the jury should give to his testimony; but the reason why such testimony is incompetent when given by third persons, either as original or corroborative testimony, is that it is giving in evidence the ex parte statements of a party to a suit upon points material to the issue, and made for the purpose of being testified to and given in evidence in a suit already pending or to be brought. Such testimony is incapable of contradiction. It has all the evils of manufactured testimony, without any possible means of detecting the falsity of it. In this state a party can testify to his sensations of pain and of suffering, mental or physical; but a party cannot be allowed to corroborate such testimony by witnesses employed to listen to such statements with a view to a suit to be brought or pending. In this case the plaintiff had been sworn, and detailed her condition and sufferings, and then introduced the two physicians employed with a view to bringing suit, to whom she stated her condition and pains and suffering, who corroborated her by swearing to such statements. Not only this, but they were permitted to testify to what plaintiff said as to her feelings and sensations of pain after suit brought, and even during the trial of the cause. This was plainly error, as held in the Case of Huntley.

Dr. Grant, upon being examined in chief, testified to her condition on the occasion of his first visit, as learned from Mrs. Jones, the plaintiff. The record shows the following to have occurred: "Question. What did she represent to you as to her condition? (Objected to as incompetent, on the part of the defendant. Mr. Davis: I think we have a right to know upon what he bases his opinion or conclusion, if he had come to any. The court: I suppose what answer she made to the physician would be evidence as to her condition. Mr. Ellis: Take an exception.) Answer. She stated how she had received the injury. It is not necessary to go over that any more. Q. I want to know just what she told you about it. A. She stated that she had received the injury from a fall, catching her heel in a walk going down town a few days previous, and had fallen in such a way as to severely strain the right knee-joint, so that it was doubled under her in such a way as to— Q. How did she describe this doubling under, doctor? Can you tell how that was? (Objected to as incompetent. The court: If she did not describe it, of course that would end it. I don't think that would be proper; what she said how she fell at that time would be proper.)" This testimony should have been excluded. It was another method of corroborating the party in a material part of the case by her own statements. Dundas v. Lansing, 75 Mich. 499; Merkle v. Bennington Twp. 58 Mich. 156, 55 Am. Rep. 646; Rossa v. Boston Loan Co. 132 Mass. 439.

The injury in this case was alleged to have been caused by a defective sidewalk. Counsel for plaintiff asked a witness the following question: "Question. How is the walk right straight along for eighty rods this side of Dorman's residence to day? Answer. It is bad. Q. Is it not true that in three or four places there are six inches of plank gone, and holes in the walk? (Mr. Ellis: I object to the question, and ask to have the last answer stricken out. The court: I am inclined to think the other party tried to get in something like that.)" Then followed an offer made by Mr. Davis, and the record proceeds as follows: "Mr. Davis: They did. Their offer was simply for the purpose of showing that Dr. Dillingham did not know where this was; that it was somewhere in the city. His attention was not called to it. My object is to show that at this very time and at the present time these walks are in such condition that it is unsafe for aged people or infirm people to pass over them to-day,—right along this street, for upwards of eighty rods. I am perfectly willing they should go into that if they go on the ground they intended to go in to show that they are giving it that careful examination they are attempting to show. They have offered to show the safe and nice condition of things. I say they are not safe for a man that was in any way infirm, or for a lady, to go along there at night without being injured or tripped up a half dozen times there in that walk. Mr. Ellis: I object to the statements out of order, not directed to any particular walk. The court: I don't think it is best to go into an investigation of all the sidewalks in Portland. I am a little fearful that it would be too long. Better confine ourselves to this particular cross-walk. Mr. Davis: Make it with a view of showing the general unsafe condition at that time and since. The committee on streets had had them in charge with one in question. Mr. Ellis: I object to it; object to his making it to the jury. He can't prove anything of the kind in the case. I take an exception to the offer. The court: We will not go into it."

The offer made by the plaintiff's counsel in the presence of the jury was improper, and directly in conflict with at least two decisions of this court,—Dundas v. Lansing, cited above, and Tice v. Bay City, 78 Mich. 209. When an offer is so made in the manner this was, with the assertion on the part of the attorney that the cross-walks "right along this street for eighty rods are not safe for a man that is in any wise infirm, or for a lady, to go along there at night without being injured or tripped up half a dozen times there in that walk," and such statement and offer are objected to, and nothing is said by the court to correct such error in its practice, it is reversible error. The impression which the jury must have received from the offer and statement, as well as from the testimony of the witness which the court did not on motion strike out, must have been detrimental to the defendant. The court, instead of saying to the attorney that his offer was improper, and contrary to the law as laid down by this court, and should not have been made in the manner and with the assertion of fact by the attorney, and instead of cautioning the jury not to be influenced by it, merely said: "I don't think it is best to go into an investigation of all the sidewalks in Portland. I am a little fearful it would be too long. Better confine ourselves to this particular cross-walk." And again, "We will not go into it." It left the jury to infer that, if it had been gone into, the assertion made by the attorney would have been substantiated by other testimony, and the attorney got before the jury the same effect of this immaterial testimony as if it had actually been introduced.

Objection is made to a question asked Dr. Grant as an expert witness. The record shows the following to have occurred: "Question. Doctor, I want to ask you this question: Now, suppose a woman forty-eight years old, free at the time from rheumatism, and in good health, one year previous having had a severe illness known as 'malarial fever,' and which confined her to the house for some thirteen weeks; and some six or seven years prior to that time having had some sickness of the lungs,—lung difficulty; and in 1864, while in a hospital in the south, had the small-pox; not having menstruated for about one year; never had any difficulty with her back except what she terms 'back-ache,' brought on at monthly periods,—(The court: Leave out "brought on,"—that she had back-ache at the time of monthly periods;)'—her uterine organs never having troubled her; never having had any trouble with her hip or the small of her back, except the back-aches spoken of, at the time spoken of; but three years previous had injured her left knee, by striking it against a stick of stove-wood, while putting it into the stove, to that extent that the injury terminated in what is known as 'dropsy of the knee, and for which she wore a rubber knee-cap until about three months previous,—till July 20, 1888, from which time until the 20th of July the said left knee was apparently as well as ever; and that about one year previous to July 20, 1888, she knelt upon the damp ground for about one-half hour, and upon her right knee; and that as a consequence she found swollen condition; but that upon application of iodine she found the next morning— (The court: Change that "as a consequence."—that it was followed by that. After kneeling down there it was followed by swollen condition.) That after kneeling down it was followed by swollen condition. That upon the application of iodine the next morning she found that the knee was apparently as well as ever. That about three or five months previous to July 20, 1888, she again knelt down upon the ground and upon her right knee, and it again appeared to be swollen and slightly painful, and continued for a period of about six weeks. That she then applied, during this time, iodine, and after three months, but for three months prior to 20th of July, 1888, she had no trouble with said knee,—that is, the right knee. The same appeared to be well, to have entirely recovered from the difficulty, having no tenderness of the muscles through the small of the back or lumbar regions, or pain or tenderness of the genital organs, no ecchymosed condition of the tuberosity of the ischium, no pain or inflammation in the sacro iliac joint or the muscles covering the same,—should catch her left heel in the cross-walk, and for the purpose of protecting herself, should throw her right foot back, and double her right foot under her right leg, and fall in that position upon the left hip and side, become unconscious, or nearly so, by reason of the suddenness of the fall, her left foot becoming loose in the mean time, and upon getting up she walked a distance of about 1,150 feet in going home, with great difficulty, being obliged to go from side to side, suffering great pain in the groin, extending to the front of the body, with pain in the back, and upon reaching home obliged to go to bed, and the next day after such accident suffering great pain in her left groin, back and front of her body, suffering intensely while lying on her left side, being unable to lie on the right side on account of pain in her right knee, being obliged to lie on her back, and in a position to have a pillow under her right knee, suffering great pain in her left heel; also with a pain in the back of her neck, or drawing in back of her neck, so that she had to have a pillow under it to keep her head from going forward; that five days afterwards you find upon examination the right knee in a semi-flexed condition, and upon comparison with the left knee you find that the right knee is about an inch larger than the left at certain points and where resistance is least you find a puffness at the side of the patella, also fullness or prominence above the knee, and the joint very tender, especially when you attempt to extend it; finding no contusions or bruises on the surface whatever, and skin apparently normal; left knee being in apparently a normal condition; finding upon the left hip, a little outside the tuberosity of the ischium, ecchymosed condition; finding no dislocation of knee joint or no fracture; more bruising of the tissue there upon upper part of hip-joint, near sacro iliac joint, or the muscles covering the same you find tenderness; with muscles covering the same you find tenderness with no bruises. Passing to the lumbar region you run your finger over the occipital bone from the upper part of the spinal column all the way down, and find tenderness on the left side of the spine in the lumbar region, and the patient complaining of extreme pain when attempt is made to put the muscles in action; upon pressure, finding over the pubic and left groin very much tenderness, and pain also in neighborhood of pubic bone; upon digital examination of vagina, you find placing your finger upon neck of uterus, extreme pains complained of by patient; attempting to impinge ovary you find that this manipulation causes so much pain that the patient was unable to bear it, according to her statements; and, coming to the conclusion that the trouble was with the left ovary and congested state of the womb, the temperature being 99, heart irritable, pulsation 96, bladder irritable, left ovary very tender upon pressure. Upon your second examination, which was on the 11th day of August, 1888, you find that the swelling in the knee has been reduced to one-half inch less, pain and tenderness in the muscles of the neck, in genital organs, and patient unable to bear her weight on her right foot. Upon third examination, which occurred about the 18th of September, you find same symptoms, with slight modifications in the reduction of swelling and the lessening of pain and tenderness in the right knee and muscles. Upon fourth examination, which occurs upon 17th day of October, you find her still unable to extend her right knee, with slight modifications of pain and tenderness in the right knee, hip, and genital organs. Upon fifth examination, made night before last, you find contraction of the external and internal tendons, 16 months' time having elapsed from date of first examination to that of last,—what would you say as to probability of absolute recovery of patient from all these conditions which you found her in at the time of your first examination? (Objected to. The trouble with the question is that, without describing it same condition, you find tenderness; you find tenderness there,—different parts. The court: Where it states that you find tenderness upon the examination that may be changed,—that the patient complains of tenderness and pain, complains of tenderness at those points. Mr. Ellis: Also that he assumes—the question does—that the left knee was in normal condition. The court: At what time? Mr. Ellis: At the time of the examination by the doctors. The court:

16 L. R. A.

The first one? Mr. Ellis: Yes, sir. The court: There is some evidence by the doctor, certainly, that he found it in normal condition at that time. Then there is some evidence to base it upon. Mr. Nichols: This doctor himself says it was. Mr. Ellis: The other doctor said it was not. Also, at the time of the third examination, the patient was unable to bear her weight upon her right limb. There is not any evidence of that kind. Mr. Nichols: I said the second examination. I don't say the third. The court: Well, change that—that the patient saying that she was unable at that time, at the time of that examination, to bear her weight upon the limb. Anything further? Mr. Ellis: I object further to the question that it is so long, and contains so many disputed propositions. Also contains a decision or determination that the doctor made at the time of the examination. The court: What decision do you refer to? Mr. Ellis: Concerning the cause of the trouble of the internal organs at that time; so much so that he decided so and so at the time. There is not any evidence that this doctor decided that. The court: There is evidence that this doctor decided something about the knee. Mr. Ellis: Oh, yes, but nothing about the genital troubles. The court: What do you say in your question about decision as to genital organs? Mr. Nichols: Extreme pain in attempting to impinge ovary between your fingers. This manipulation she was unable to bear; coming to the conclusion that the trouble was with the left ovary. Dr. Logan swears to that. The court: There is something to base that upon,—that is, in the opinion of one physician who examined it. Now, anything further? The court: I guess I will let him answer. Exception for the defense. The court: If you want anything added to, add to it. Mr. Ellis: I haven't any requests to make. It is in the same condition that it was before. The court: Our supreme court has decided as to those questions. When the court asks counsel to point out defects it is their duty to do so. Mr. Ellis: There was the condition about the excessive flowing afterwards. Mr. Nichols: I will add that some seven days afterwards—Mr. Ellis: Also doesn't contain medicine that the woman had been taking during that time. Mr. Nichols: Five days after the injury complained of by the patient—after the 20th—menstruation commences again, and continues for some time excessively, then ceases for a short time, and then again commences, and continues for the period of eight weeks without cessation, in excessive degree. The court: Did you state about her having lung trouble? Mr. Nichols: Yes, sir. The court: She had lung trouble some six or seven years ago, and coughed considerably. Mr. Ellis: It doesn't state what was taken, or what has been done with the patient, or the care she had had, or the place of these examinations, or where she had traveled to make these examinations from time to time, nor the medicine or care that she had had during that time. It seems to me that would be necessary, so that you could tell whether they were permanent or not. Whether she had run along without any care, what it was, the medicine that was given her, would be material. The court: Well, based simply upon what is included in the question, you may answer it, doctor. Exception for the defense.) Answer. You want to know as to my opinion of the permanency of all these disabilities mentioned? Answer. Yes, sir. A. Well, I have to exclude everything except the disability of the knee-joints. Q. Very well then, what can you say about that? A. As I believe, the others are not permanent. I think I answered the same question this forenoon,—that I believe the injury or the disability to the knee-joint was permanent."

16 L. R. A.

In Mayo v. Wright, cited above, we held that it was no objection to a question asked an expert witness that it was too lengthy; but we also held that it should be reduced to writing, and embrace the whole question in a connected manner. We think this question is open to the criticism made upon the question in so far as relates to the disconnected method of propounding it. It undoubtedly contains, however, the elements of what the plaintiff bases her right to recover on for the injury caused by the negligence of the defendant, which, upon examination of the question, turns out to be more in the aggravation of existing ills than any definite new injury caused to plaintiff. Following the expert question above referred to, the following was asked of this witness: "Question. Taking into consideration simply these things that were asked you on this question, to what would you attribute the condition that you found the patient in at the time of your examination?" This was objected to as incompetent. "The court: I am inclined to think that is proper. Leaving out now everything except what was stated to you in this hypothetical question, then what, in your judgment, caused the condition in which you found her? Answer. As to the cause? Answer. Yes. A. Why, it seems to me there could be but one conclusion, knowing the history of the case and all,—that it resulted from the fall. It doesn't take a medical expert to answer that question, does it?" This was improper. It was usurping the province of the jury. The witness was permitted to testify to a conclusion, contrary to our own decisions. Dundas v. Lansing, 75 Mich. 499; Tice v. Bay City, 78 Mich. 209.

The judgment must be reversed, and a new trial granted.

The other Justices concurred.

INDIANA SUPREME COURT.

PEOPLE'S GAS CO. et al., Appts.,
v.

Elbert TYNER,

(.....Ind.....)

1. The explosion of nitroglycerin in a gas well on one's own land to increase the natural flow is not an unlawful interference with the rights of other persons from whose land the gas is thereby drawn.
2. An injunction may be granted to prevent the explosion of nitroglycerin in a gas well within a city so near the residence of complainant as to endanger life and property therein.
3. The fact that an act which is dangerous to life and property constitutes a crime will not prevent an injunction against it on the application of a private citizen whose residence and family are endangered.
4. On an application for a mere temporary injunction, the sufficiency of the complaint will not be tested as by a demurrer if it presents a proper subject for investigation.

(April 27, 1892.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Hancock County in favor of plaintiff in a suit brought to enjoin defendants from exploding dynamite in a gas well for the alleged reason that it would injure property of the plaintiff. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

NOTE.—Natural gas.

The supplying of natural gas is a public use, and a corporation organized for that purpose may be granted the power of eminent domain. Johnston v. People's Nat. Gas Co. (Pa.) 5 Cent. Rep. 564; Carother's App. 11 Cent. Rep. 43, 118 Pa. 468; Bloomfield & R. N. G. L. Co. v. Richardson, 63 Barb. 437.

Securing natural gas and laying pipes for the transportation thereof for the use of a municipal corporation and its citizens, is a public purpose for which the corporation may validly exercise its taxing powers. Fellows v. Walker, 39 Fed. Rep. 651.

Whether natural gas is a "volatile substance" is a question of fact in determining which the aid of the testimony of scientific men must be had. Ford v. Buchanan, 1 Cent. Rep. 895, 111 Pa. 81.

A lease of land to be worked for oil and providing that it shall be void if oil is not found within four years is not satisfied by the finding of gas. "Gas" and "oil" are not synonymous. Truby v. Palmer (Pa.) 4 Cent. Rep. 925.

A municipal corporation cannot grant an exclusive right to supply it and its citizens with natural gas. Citizens Gas & Min. Co. v. Elwood, 14 West. Rep. 92, 114 Ind. 838. The court here said: "It would hardly be contended that even the Legislature could confer upon any corporation a special privilege to supply a town or city with coal or wood, and it is not easy to perceive why the same principle does not apply to natural gas. Less common than coal or wood, it is, nevertheless, a fuel."

A statute providing for the formation of corporations for "the manufacture and supply of gas, or the supply of light or heat to the public by any other means," does not authorize the grant of a franchise to furnish natural gas. Emerson v. Com. 16 L. R. A.

Messrs. James A. New, Charles Downing and Asa M. New for appellants.
Mr. David S. Gooding for appellee.

Coffey, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This was an action by the appellee against the appellants in the Hancock circuit court for the purpose of obtaining an injunction. The complaint alleges, substantially, that the appellee and his wife are the owners by entireties of the real estate therein described; which consists of four city lots in the city of Greenfield; that the lots are enclosed together by a fence, and that his dwelling-house and residence, in which he and his family reside, is situated on the lots; that the lots are near the centre of the city; and, with his residence thereon, are of the value of $4,000; that with full knowledge of all the facts the appellants regardless of the rights of the appellee, and of the safety, peace, comfort, and lives of himself and family, have, without his consent and over his objections, within the last forty days, dug and constructed a natural gas well, to the depth of about 1,000 feet, and about 200 feet distant from the appellee's residence, with only a street forty feet in width between the appellee's lots and the lot on which the well is sunk; that the appellants are about to "shoot" said well, and will do so unless restrained; that for the purpose of "shooting" the well the appellants, about midnight of the — day of August, 1889, unlawfully procured to be brought and unlawfully permitted a large quantity of nitroglycerin or other nitro explosive com-

108 Pa. 111. Green, J., says, p. 128: "The furnishing of natural gas is not the furnishing of heat. Natural gas is not heat. It is a fuel; a substance which may be converted into heat by combustion with atmospheric air. When the gas is delivered to the consumer it is still gas only. It is not heat. If the consumer does not produce combustion, no heat is obtained and if he does produce it, the act of doing so is his act and not that of the company which furnishes the gas."

A corporation authorized to maintain any work, public or private, which "may tend or be designed to improve, increase, facilitate, or develop trade" may engage in the business of producing, transporting, and supplying natural gas to factories and dwellings. Carother's App. 11 Cent. Rep. 43, 118 Pa. 468.

A contract to bore an oil or gas well of a specified diameter is not substantially performed by boring one of less diameter, without other excuse than to save time and expense, although for the purpose of testing the territory, which was the only result accomplished, the smaller well might be as effective as the larger. Gillespie Tool Co. v. Wilson, 123 Pa. 19.

A stipulation in a lease that the lessee, who agrees to drill a well for gas, shall furnish the lessor gas to heat and light his buildings and furnish pipes and fixtures therefor, is not an absolute agreement to furnish the gas and fixtures in any event, but only in case gas is obtained from the well. Evans v. Consumers Gas Trust Co. (Ind.) Dec. 18, 1891.

A manufacturing company having a contract for the use of natural gas for a fuel only, which uses it for illumination also, is liable for the reasonable value of the gas used for illumination without re-pound to be and remain upon Sycamore street, a public street in the city, and within less than 200 feet of appellee's residence, for about three hours, in the midst of and surrounded by a large number of people; that appellants by their employes, threatened and attempted to "shoot" said gas well, and that they still threaten so to do, with their said nitroglycerin or other nitro explosive compound, and will do so unless restrained; that nitroglycerin is highly explosive, and very dangerous to property and life, and is liable to explode under any and all circumstances, and at any time or place, and that an explosion of 60 or 100 quarts of said explosive at any given place on the surface of the earth could and probably would destroy life and property for a distance of 500 yards in all directions from such explosion; that the handling or storing thereof in or about appellant's gas well will endanger the lives of his family as well as the safety of his property, and that the shooting of said well with nitroglycerin will greatly injure and damage the appellee's said property, both above and under the surface of the earth, and endanger his life and the lives of his family. This complaint was verified, and upon it and the affidavits filed in support of its allegations the court granted a temporary injunction, from which this appeal is prosecuted. The affidavits filed by the appellee tended to prove that the appellants' gas well is within the corporate limits of the city of Greenfield; that a short time prior to the filing of the complaint in this cause the appellants deposited in or near the derrick at the well described in the complaint about 117 quarts of nitroglycerin, weighing about 840 pounds, with the intention of exploding the same in the well. The affidavits further tend to show that nitroglycerin is very explosive, and that it is liable to explode at any time; that the explosion of that quantity of nitroglycerin upon the surface of the earth would be likely to destroy life or property at any point within 500 yards of such explosion.

It is contended by the appellants—First, that they had the right to use their own property as to them seemed best, and for that reason they could not be enjoined from exploding nitroglycerin in their well for the purpose of increasing the flow of natural gas, though such explosion might have the effect to draw the gas from the land of the appellee; second, that, as bringing nitroglycerin into the corporate limit of a town or city in a greater quantity than 100 pounds is made a crime by statute, it cannot be enjoined. On the other hand, it is contended by the appellee—First, that natural gas is property, and that the appellants have no legal right to do anything upon their own land which will draw such gas from his land, and appropriate it to their own use; second, that as he is liable to suffer an injury peculiar to himself, to which the public in general is not subject, by the unlawful act of the appellants in bringing nitroglycerin within the corporate limits of Greenfield, he is entitled for that reason to an injunction.

It has been settled in this state that natural gas, when brought to the surface of the earth and placed in pipes for transportation, is property, and may be the subject of interstate commerce. State v. Indiana & O. G. & Min. Co. 120 Ind. 575, 6 L. R. A. 579. Water, petroleum oil, and gas are generally classed by themselves as minerals possessing in some degree a kindred nature. As to whether the owner of the soil may dig down and divert a well-defined subterranean stream of water, there is much diversity of opinion and conflict gard to the price paid for that used for fuel. Philadelphia Co. v. Park, 138 Pa. 346.

A contract by a natural gas company to supply a village with gas for street lamps contemplates such lamps as are commonly used in the natural gas region, and where only open lamps were there used the village cannot be compelled to use closed lamps in order to lessen the consumption of gas. Salisbury Gas Co. v. Salisbury, 10 L. R. A. 193, 138 Pa. 250.

"From the nature of gas and gas operations, . . . the grant of well-rights is necessarily exclusive." Westmoreland & C. Nat. Gas Co. v. DeWitt, 5 L. R. A. 731, 130 Pa. 235.

Under a lease of the right to bore for and gather "all oil or gases" on certain premises in consideration of a part of the oil found, the lessee is entitled to all the gas found. Eaton v. Wilcox, 43 Hun, 61.

From the next paragraph it seems that the result would have been the same had the right to gather the gas not been expressly given.

Under a lease of land "for the purpose of mining and excavating for rock or carbon oil" and "for said purpose only," in consideration of a part of the oil obtained, the lessee is entitled to all the natural gas which escapes by its own force from a well from which oil is taken. Wood County Pet. Co. v. West Virginia Transp. Co. 23 W. Va. 210, 57 Am. Rep. 656.

A test well producing gas sufficient to furnish five stoves, one grate, three jets, and two street lights produces gas in paying quantities, within a gas and oil lease for a term of years and so long as gas or oil are so produced, where, after the quantity produced was known, all parties thereto joined in or assented to the laying of pipe for its use and the expenditure of money therefor. Herrington v. Wood, 6 Ohio C. Ct. Rep. 826.

A reasonable regulation of the pressure at which natural gas may be transported in pipes is within the police power of a state Legislature, but a prohibition of the use of artificial means to maintain the legal pressure in order to prevent transportation of gas into other states is invalid. Jamieson v. Indiana Nat. Gas & Oil Co. 12 L. R. A. 653, 128 Ind. 555; Benedict v. Columbus Const. Co. (N. J. Eq.) Jan. 25, 1892. In the latter case McGill, Ch. J., said in the syllabus: "Until the national Congress regulates the transportation of natural gas from state to state—it being admittedly a dangerous commodity—the several states may make reasonable regulation for the protection of the life and health of its citizens against it, and such regulations when not directed against interstate commerce, but only incidentally and necessarily affecting it, will be upheld as valid. But where the state steps beyond the legitimate domain of police regulation, and under its guise or otherwise seeks by its legislation to restrict interstate commerce, such legislation becomes invalid."

Both of these cases arose out of the Indiana statute. A prior statute of that state directly prohibiting the transportation of natural gas in pipes into another state was held invalid as being interstate commerce legislation. State v. Indiana & O. G. & Min. Co. 6 L. R. A. 579, 120 Ind. 575. See note to this case, 6 L. R. A. 579, 580, for "power of Congress to regulate commerce." J. G. G.

in the adjudicated cases; but the authorities agree that the owner of a particular tract of land may sink a well, and appropriate to his own use all the percolating water found therein, though it may entirely destroy the well on his neighbor's land. Ang. Watercourses, § 112; Hannon v. McCus, 42 Cal. 303, 10 Am. Rep. 299; Wheatley v. Baugh, 25 Pa. 523, 64 Am. Dec. 721; Frazier v. Brown, 12 Ohio St. 302; Acton v. Blundell, 12 Mees & W. 324; Delhi v. Youmans, 50 Barb. 816; Mosier v. Caldwell, 7 Nev. 363; New Albany & S. R. Co. v. Peterson, 14 Ind. 112; Greencastle v. Haselett, 23 Ind. 186. It is a familiar maxim that in contemplation of law, land always extends downward as well as upwards, so that whatever is in a direct line between the surface of any land and the center of the earth belongs to the owner of the surface. Mr. Angell says that it would seem to follow from this maxim that whether what is subterranean be solid rock, mines, or porous soil, or salt springs, or part land and part water, the person who owns the surface may dig therein, and apply all that is there found to his own purposes ad libitum. Ang. Watercourses, § 109. Upon this principle, it was held by this court in the case of New Albany & S. R. Co. v. Peterson, supra, that if an adjoining land-owner, in lawfully digging upon his own land, draws the water from the land of another, to his injury, such injury falls within the description of damnum absque injuria, which cannot become the ground of an action. In the case of Halderman v. Bruckhart, 45 Pa. 514, it was said: "The purchaser of land in which there are unknown subsurface currents must buy in ignorance of any obstacle to the full enjoyment of his purchase indefinitely downwards, and the purchaser of land in which a spring arises, ignorant whence and how the water comes, cannot bargain for any right to a secret flow of water in another's land." Mr. Gould, in his work on Waters, (2d ed. § 291.) says: "Petroleum oil, like subterranean water, is included in the comprehensive idea which the law attaches to the word 'land,' and is a part of the soil in which it is found. Like water, it is not the subject of property, except while in actual occupancy, and a grant of either water or oil is not a grant of the soil, or of anything for which ejectment will lie." In recognition of the principles here announced in the case of Brown v. Vandergrift, 80 Pa. 142, it was said by the court that "the discovery of petroleum led to new forms of leasing lands. Its fugitive and wandering existence within the limits of a particular tract was uncertain, and assumed certainty only by actual development founded upon experiment." What is said of the fugitive character of percolating water and of petroleum oil applies with greater force to natural gas. In the case of Westmoreland & O. Nat. Gas Co. v. De Witt, 180 Pa. 235, 5 L. R. A. 781, it was said: "Water and oil, and still more strongly gas, may be classed by themselves, if the analogy be not too fanciful, as mineral feras naturas. In common with animals, and unlike other minerals, they have the power and the tendency to escape without the volition of the owner. Their fugitive and wandering existence within the limits of a particular tract is uncertain. . . . They belong to the owner of the land, and are part of it, so long as they are on or in it, and are subject to his control, but when they escape, and go into other land, or come under another's control, the title of the former owner is gone. Possession of the land, therefore, is not necessarily possession of the gas. If an adjoining or even a distant owner drills his own land and taps your gas, so that it comes into his well and under his control, it is no longer yours, but his." It is not denied by the appellee in this case that the appellants have the perfect legal right to sink a well into their own land, and draw therefrom all the gas that may naturally flow to it, but he contends that they have no right to explode nitroglycerin in the well to increase the natural flow. When it is once conceded that the owner of the surface has the right to sink a well and draw gas from the lands of an adjoining owner, no valid reason can be given why he may not enlarge his well by the explosion of nitroglycerin therein for the purpose of increasing the flow. The question is not as to the quantity of gas he may take, but it is a question of his right to take the gas at all. So far as this suit seeks to enjoin the appellants from exploding nitroglycerin in their gas well, upon the ground that it will increase the flow of the gas to the injury of the appellee, it cannot, in our opinion, be sustained. The rule that the owner has the right to do as he pleases with or upon his own property is subject to many limitations and restrictions, one of which is that he must have due regard for the rights of others. It is settled that the owner of a lot may not erect and maintain a nuisance thereon, whereby his neighbors are injured. If he does so, and the injury sustained by such neighbor cannot be adequately compensated in damages, he may be enjoined. Owen v. Phillips, 78 Ind. 284.

16 L. R. A.

If the appellants in this case have been guilty of the folly of sinking a gas well in the center of a thickly-populated city, where they cannot collect the necessary quantity of nitroglycerin to shoot it without endangering the property and lives of those who have no connection with their operations, they should be content with such flow of gas as can be obtained without such shooting. It certainly cannot be maintained that the destruction of human life is an injury which can be compensated in damages. No authority has been cited, and we know of none, supporting the position of the appellants that the appellee is not entitled to an injunction because the accumulation of nitroglycerin within the corporate limits of a town or city is a crime. It has long been settled that a private citizen may maintain an action for a public wrong if he suffers an injury peculiar to himself, and not sustained by the public in general. 8 Bl. Com. p. 219; Powell v. Bunker, 91 Ind. 64; Ross v. Thompson, 78 Ind. 90; Cummins v. Seymour, 79 Ind. 491, 41 Am. Rep. 618; McCowan v. Whitesides, 81 Ind. 235; Possion v. Landry, 128 Ind. 186; First Nat. Bank of Mt. Vernon v. Sarlle (Ind. Sup.) 28 N. E. Rep. 484; and Adams v. Ohio Falls Car Co. (Ind.) 81 N. E. Rep. 57, (at this term.)

The sufficiency of the complaint, as it would be when tested by demurrer, is not involved here. It is a mere temporary injunction. To authorize the court to grant such relief it was not necessary that a case should be made that would entitle the appellee to relief, at all events at the hearing. In such cases, it is sufficient if the court finds upon the pleadings and evidence a case which makes the transaction a proper subject for investigation in a court of equity. Spicer v. Hoop, 51 Ind. 365. In our opinion the court did not err in granting the temporary injunction in this case.

Judgment affirmed.

PENNSYLVANIA SUPREME COURT.

John C. STEVER

v.

PEOPLE'S MUTUAL ACCIDENT INSURANCE ASSOCIATION of Pittsburgh.

(.....Pa.....)

There is not a loss of a foot within the meaning of an accident insurance policy where the foot is not even injured and can be used when the person wears a "plaster jacket" to prevent an injury in another part of his body from affecting the use of the foot.

(July 13, 1892.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas for Huntingdon County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due under an accident insurance contract. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. George B. Orlady for appellant.
Messrs. John M. Bailey and W. H. & J. S. Woods for appellee.

Green, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was brought upon an accident policy, and the claim of the plaintiff was to recover the maximum amount of $2,500 for a partial disablement. If, under the evidence, a recovery can be had at all for that species of disablement, the judgment of the learned court below should stand. The language of the policy, which authorizes a payment of $2,500 for such an injury, is in these words: "The relief for partial permanent disablement, viz., the loss of one hand or foot or both eyes, by means as aforesaid, within sixty days from date of injury, shall not exceed $2,500." The policy defines the meaning of the expression, "partial permanent disablement." It is, "the loss of one hand or foot or both eyes." The plaintiff was not affected as to his hands or eyes, and he did not lose a foot, in the sense of a physical severance of a foot from the leg. Yet it was contended in the court below, and the court held, that a physical severance of the foot was not necessary to entitle the plaintiff to recover. On this subject the court charged as follows: "The evidence shows there has been no amputation of the foot; yet if the jury believe from the testimony that the foot, by reason of the injury and the paralysis, is entirely useless to the plaintiff; that he has no use thereof; that without artificial means he would be almost or entirely unable to move around; that it is only by artificial means—the plaster jacket—that he is able at all to use his foot; and that if the jacket were dispensed with he would be a helpless cripple,—we say to you that that would be, to our mind, satisfactory evidence of the loss of the foot, even though it be not amputated." This and other similar language in the charge was assigned for error, and presents the main subject for decision.

Upon recurring to the evidence, we find that in point of fact the plaintiff sustained no direct injury to his foot or his leg. They were both as whole and entire after the accident as before. The injury, as claimed by him, was sustained while riding in his wagon over a rough road, by his being jolted from one side of the seat to the other, and the muscles or ligaments of the back near the lower end of the spinal column being strained or wrenched severely, so as to cause him great pain and suffering, by reason of which he was subsequently deprived of the use of his left leg and foot, except by the application of an artificial device called a "plaster jacket." This jacket, as described in the testimony, was applied around his body in such a manner as to cause the weight of the body to rest upon the hips, and thereby relieve the affected parts of the pressure upon the spinal column, and consequent soreness and pain. Soon after commencing the use of this contrivance, the condition of the plaintiff improved so that he was finally enabled to resume the practice of his profession, and to go about visiting his patients riding in his wagon, or on the cars, or walking to some extent. It is surprising that very little testimony was given as to the extent of his power of locomotion on his feet. The plaintiff did not say, and was not asked, whether he could walk without a cane or a crutch, or whether he was able to go about freely on foot; whether he was obliged to limp, or whether he suffered any pain in ordinary walking, when he had on his plaster jacket. He did testify that without the jacket he was entirely disabled, and could not use his left leg or foot, and he was supported in this by the testimony of the physicians who were examined on his behalf. He also testi-

NOTE.—The question how far insurance against "loss of" a limb will include "loss of the use" of it because of injuries to other portions of the body is an interesting one and in view of modern policies will doubtless be an important one. So far as we can ascertain this case is the first contribution towards an adjudication of that question, and considering the fact that the use of the foot was not in fact lost in this case, the decision leaves that question about as much open as it was before.

fied that he could not sleep at night without pain if he laid off the jacket. One jacket would last about two months, and then had to be renewed. It must be conceded that, under the testimony, he could not use his left leg or foot without the assistance of the plaster jacket, and that without it his foot was comparatively useless to him. Just what he could do and did do by using the jacket is not so clearly described in the testimony as it might be, but some idea may be gained of this by an examination of portions of the evidence. The plaintiff testified that he had continued in the practice of his profession from the 1st of January, 1891, to the time of the trial, February 16, 1892; that after the month of June, 1891, his professional income was at the rate of $1,500 a year, and that it was improving. He was asked: "Question. When were you first able to go about the house and prescribe for your patients?" Answer. Well, about the beginning of December, 1890. Q. And you have attended to your professional duties in that way from that time since? A. Yes, sir. Q. How frequently have you been to Huntingdon within that time? A. Well, whenever I had any business; I couldn't approximate. Q. Half a dozen times? A. It might have been. Q. About the same number of times as during the eighteen months preceding the accident? A. No; oftener. Q. Oftener since? A. Yes, sir. Q. Have you been riding in a buggy? A. Why, occasionally. Q. On horseback? A. No, sir. Q. Did you ever ride horseback? A. Yes, sir. Q. Prior to the accident? A. Yes, sir. Q. Have you been riding in the cars? A. I have rode in the cars. Q. Have you been walking around town? A. I don't walk much; walking is the worst thing I have to do. I can do anything else better than walk. Q. You can't walk straight? A. I can't stand erect; yes, sir." He was also asked, in re-examination: "He has asked you about your practice since January 1, 1891. What enables you to practice at all?" Answer. Well, by the artificial means of support I am able to go about and do some work. Question. Without that artificial means of support, could you practice? A. I could not. Q. Without that artificial means of support, what effect would it have on both limbs? A. They would be useless." He also testified that his appetite and digestion were good, that he weighed nearly 200 pounds, and that he had not the appearance of an invalid.

Dr. Dercum, a witness for the plaintiff, testified: "Question. As to the extent of the permanent condition, in your opinion is it total or partial?" Answer. It is not total, in the sense that it prevents him from walking. It is partial, as regards enabling his getting about. I should qualify that by this statement: that the back being maintained in its condition of relief—rest—by the jacket that he wears and which he wore at the time I examined him,—he had removed it for a little while and put it on again,—while the spine is kept more or less at rest the pain is less both in the back and in the leg, and during that time he could get around tolerably well; at least, he seemed to move around in my office. . . . Q. It is a weak back? A. Yes, sir. Q. He uses both legs with average movement? A. Yes, sir. Q.

He steps forward with each leg alike? A. Yes, sir. Q. Turns and moves the body? A. Yes, sir; he did this, though, when I spoke to him, and he then stood alone upon one leg and the other. He stood very steady on the right leg, and badly on the left." Dr. Barnhart, another witness for the plaintiff, who attended him, was asked: "Question. After the application of the jacket and its use, the doctor commenced to improve? A. Yes, sir. Q. He was able to get up and move himself around? A. Yes, sir; that is, after a few weeks. Q. Or after the first of December, I think? A. Yes, sir." He further testified that he made his last examination about a year later, and found that the plaintiff's condition had improved, and his general health was better. Dr. James, another of plaintiff's witnesses who attended him, after describing his condition and the treatment used, said: "I couldn't tell whether it was the nerve or a ligament or a tendon torn off. I didn't get down to see. You can't tell that. It was evident there was something there; that one of these was injured to a certain extent. Question. From that time on, under your treatment, he continued to improve until he was able to walk around? Answer. Under the plaster of Paris treatment he continued to improve steadily. Q. And partially recovered his health, so that he is able now to move around, and go from his house to town, and to the railroad station, and on the cars to come to town? Is that correct? A. Well, I see him moving around, certainly, but he still has his jacket on."

There was much medical testimony as to what was the precise character of the plaintiff's injury. It was thought there was some atrophy of the muscles, and Dr. Dercum thought there was pain in the sciatic nerve extending down the leg, and all agreed that without the artificial support of the plaster jacket he would become helpless; and also that with it he could move around on his feet with more or less freedom, and could carry on the practice of his profession, including the visiting of his patients. It is beyond all question that the plaintiff was severely and painfully injured, and that without artificial support he would probably become helpless and unable to use his limbs. Under this state of the testimony, the question recurs, and it is the one leading question of the cause, Can there be a recovery, under the particular contract between these parties, for a lost foot? It is only for the loss of a foot that there can be any recovery of any kind in this action. The policy insures only against "bodily injury effected through involuntary, violent, and accidental means." In the fifth of the numbered conditions, it prohibits any recovery of benefits for certain injuries, and for the results of disease, in the following words: "Fifth. The benefits and insurance under this certificate shall not extend to any bodily injury of which there shall be no external visible signs, nor to hernia, nor to any bodily injury happening directly or indirectly in consequence of any disease, nor to any death or disability which may be wholly or in part attributable to disease or bodily infirmities existing prior to, or happening subsequent to, the date of this certificate, or poison in any form or manner, or the coming in contact with any poisonous substances, or any other cause, except where the injury is the proximate and sole cause of disability or death." It will be perceived, therefore, that the policy in suit insures only against involuntary, external, violent, and accidental injuries, and not against disease of any kind, nor against disabilities which are the result, wholly or in part, of disease or bodily infirmities; and, for the purposes of the present case, the only injury for which there can be any recovery, within the terms of the policy, is the loss of one foot. Now, in point of fact, as has been already stated, the plaintiff has not lost a foot. So far as the evidence goes, both his feet are in perfect natural condition. His left foot is the only one in question, and in reality it has received no injury of any kind, external or internal. So far as all its physical functions are concerned as a member of his body, it is entirely capable of use, if the other parts of his body which can or may affect its use are in proper condition. It is not proved, or even alleged, that any of the muscles, tendons, or nerves of the foot are injured in any manner. The source of the difficulty does not lie in the foot nor in the leg. It is in another part of the body, to wit, the back. Just what the actual physical injury or difficulty was is not precisely stated in the medical testimony. It is uncertain. It is supposed to be some injury to a muscle, or ligament, or nerve, or nerve center, or to the vertebrae of the spinal column. The physicians have different theories regarding this subject, and none of them claims to know with certainty. The disability of the plaintiff did not result immediately from the injury. He went to Philadelphia the day after, and remained several days; was examined and treated by physicians; returned home, and, on Monday following the previous Tuesday on which the accident occurred, he became disabled while returning from his stable. Whether the disability thus arising was due solely to the injury received at the time of the accident, or partly to a diseased condition of the muscles, tendons, nerves, or spinal vertebrae, might be an interesting, and possibly a controlling, question; but, in the view we take of the case, it is not necessary to determine that question. In point of fact, the plaintiff was so much benefited by the treatment he received that he was able in December following, and from thence until the trial, to use both his feet, to walk about and attend to his business, to ride in wagons and on cars, and generally to go around his house and the town as he was accustomed to do before he was injured. It is only when he removes the mechanical appliance called a "plaster jacket" that he becomes disabled. In such circumstances we do not see how he can be considered to have suffered the loss of a foot. He has neither lost a foot nor the use of it. He has it, and he constantly uses it, and therefore it cannot be said that because he is deprived of its use he is entitled to be considered as having lost the foot itself. If he had suffered an attack of permanent paralysis in the leg, and been thus deprived of the use of his foot, he could not have recovered, as the cause of his disability would have been disease. If, when he removes the jacket, a paralytic condition ensues, is it not due to a diseased condition of the nerves of the back, and does that help his legal standing under the fifth clause of the conditions of the policy? We think not; but, aside from that, he has received surgical treatment for his injury which has been successful, and has enabled him to preserve the use of his foot, and the position is not tenable that he has lost his foot, within the meaning of the policy, because he has lost its use. Of course, if the foot had been cut off by the accident or by amputation, and he had been provided with an artificial substitute which he could use, he could recover; but that would be because he had literally brought himself within the terms of the policy by actually losing his foot. But where, as here, he has not lost his foot, and it has not even been injured, and he is enabled to use it constantly by means of an appliance which prevents an injury in another part of his body from affecting the use of the foot, we are quite clear that there can be no recovery under the contract of the parties as for the loss of a foot. We sustain the second, fourth, fifth, and sixth assignments of error. As there is a remaining question whether the plaintiff is entitled to another sum under the policy, a new verdict must be granted.

Judgment reversed, and a venire de novo is awarded.

MARYLAND COURT OF APPEALS.

NORTHERN CENTRAL R. CO., Appt.,

John O'CONNER.

(.....Md.....)

1. The illegibility of the date on a ticket which the passenger receives in that condition does not impose on him the duty of getting the indorsement of a ticket receiver as to its validity because it is questioned by the gateman, and a rule of the railroad company making such a requirement is unreasonable, because it would subject a passenger to great inconvenience and might cause him to lose his train.

2. Damages for the refusal to permit a passenger to take a train which his ticket entitled him to take include the amount paid by him for another ticket, compensation for loss of time, necessary hotel expenses and also compensation for any inconvenience suffered.

(June 8, 1892.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Harford County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages because of defendant's alleged wrongful refusal to honor a ticket which plaintiff presented for passage over a portion of defendant's road. Reversed.

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion.

Argued before Miller, Robinson, Irving, Bryan, McSherry and Fowler, JJ.

Messrs. Bernard Carter, C. H. Carter, H. Robinson and William Grason for appellant.

Messrs. John I. Yellott and M. W. Offutt for appellee.

Robinson, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action to recover damages for the refusal by the defendant's agent to allow the plaintiff to pass through the gate to the train, then about to leave the Calvert station. The plaintiff, a lime burner by trade, bought of the defendant's agent a round-trip ticket from Texas station to Baltimore, good for two days, and paid therefor 68 cents. The conductor on the train to Baltimore tore off the Baltimore coupon, and handed the return coupon back to the plaintiff. On the evening of the same day, the plaintiff exhibited the return coupon to the gateman, who, after examining it, finding the date thereon illegible, even by the aid of a strong electric light, told the plaintiff that the ticket was in bad condition, and that he could not make out the date, and refused to allow him to pass through to the train. The plaintiff insisted that it was in the same condition as when he got it from the ticket agent at Texas station. This explanation, however, was not satisfactory, and, after some words between the plaintiff and the gateman, the ticket was handed to a police officer then on duty at the station, who, after examining it, said: "The date was rubbed out, and it looked as if it had been rubbed out on purpose." The gateman then said, "This is what I told him." The plaintiff still insisting upon his right to pass through, the gateman told him to take the ticket to the receiver's office up-stairs, and his indorsement would make it all right. The plaintiff started up-stairs, but how far he got there is some conflict in the testimony. Be that as it may, in a very short time he returned, and said he could not find the receiver's office, and demanded that he should be allowed to pass to the train, threatening at the same time to sue the company if the gateman refused. Thereupon the latter called the conductor of the train, and, showing him the ticket, asked if he would honor it, to which he replied, "No." In a few minutes the train

NOTE.—Regulations as to admission of passenger to train house.

A railroad company has exclusive dominion over its station and grounds and may make such reasonable regulations for use of them as may best further its own convenience. See note to Montana Union R. Co. v. Langlois (Mont.) 8 L. R. A. 768.

And this may extend to the prohibition of the transaction of private business by individuals in and about the station which has no connection with the company's contract for the carriage of passengers. See note to Cole v. Bowen (Mich.) 18 L. R. A. 848.

And the company may also establish reasonable rules for the convenient performance of its duty to its passengers. See note to Walker v. Vicksburg S. & P. R. Co. (La. Ann.) 7 L. R. A. 111.

Although in the establishment of these rules there can be no discrimination between persons. See note to McGowen v. Morgan's L. & T. R. & S. Co. (La. Ann.) 5 L. R. A. 817.

Hack drivers may be excluded from the station. Barker v. Midland R. Co. 18 C. B. 45.

The company may exclude even from its stations persons having no business there. Harris v. Stevens, 81 Vt. 70, 73 Am. Dec. 887.

The above rights of the company would seem to give it the right to make some reasonable regulation by which it may determine who are passengers and entitled to access to its stations and trains and who are not.

And in Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Boger, 1 Ill. App. 478, the court states that it is not to be disputed that the railroad company has a right to establish a rule requiring passengers to produce their tickets before entering its cars. See also Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Van Dyne, 57 Ind. 578, 28 Am. Rep. 68.

While in Dickerman v. St. Paul Union Depot Co., 44 Minn. 433, it is said that no claim could well be made against the reasonableness of a rule requiring persons passing through the gates of the depot for the purpose of taking trains to exhibit their tickets to the gate keeper and have them punched by him, such or similar rules would seem absolutely necessary to preserve to the defendant control of its ground and to enable it to receive and discharge passengers with order and to the safety, comfort, and convenience of the passengers.

And in that case it was decided that where a person crowded past the gate keeper without showing his ticket that officer might rightfully lay his hand upon and stop him without liability to an action for trespass.

The right of the passenger to be carried is superior to any rule or regulation which the carrier may make, and no rule can be upheld which will have a tendency to interfere with such rights. Day v. Owen, 5 Mich. 520, 72 Am. Dec. 62. H. P. F.

left, and the plaintiff was obliged to remain in Baltimore till the next morning. The defendant offered in evidence the following rule, adopted by the defendant company in regard to defaced tickets: "When outlawed or mutilated tickets, or tickets upon which the limit has expired, are presented at the gate, holders should be refused admittance to the trains, and referred to the ticket receiver for investigation of the case, who will decide the matter."

The defendant, it is claimed, has the right to pass rules and regulations in regard to the admission of passengers to its trains, and that, if the return coupon was defaced, and the date thereon illegible when it was exhibited to the gateman, and the latter referred the plaintiff to the receiver for his indorsement of the ticket, and the plaintiff refused to take it to the receiver, then he is not entitled to recover in this action, even though the jury should find that the ticket was not in fact defaced or blurred by the act of the plaintiff, and was in the same condition as when he got it from the defendant's agent at Texas station. To this we cannot agree. The defendant has the right, no doubt, to pass rules and regulations in regard to the admission of passengers to its trains, provided such rules are reasonable rules, and do not subject the passenger to unnecessary inconvenience and annoyance. It may, for its protection, require passengers to exhibit their tickets to the gateman in passing to the train, and the latter may, in the exercise of his judgment, refuse to allow one to pass through the gate on a defaced ticket. But in this, as in other like matters, the defendant is responsible for the wrongful and injurious exercise of judgment on the part of its agents. The gate, as the record shows, is opened a few minutes only before the train is to leave the station. And how long it would take the receiver to examine and pass upon the validity of a ticket referred to him depends, as he testifies, upon the circumstances. He would be obliged to see whether he had the corresponding coupon, and this might involve the examination, he says, in some cases, of a thousand tickets. And to hold that a passenger who has bought a ticket, and in good faith presents it to the gateman in the same condition as when he got it from the ticket agent, is obliged to go to the receiver's office, and get his indorsement, because its genuineness has been questioned by the gateman, would not only subject him to great inconvenience, but in many cases it would be impossible to get such indorsement in time to take the train. And, besides, suppose the receiver refuses to indorse the ticket, it can hardly be contended that his judgment is binding and conclusive as against the passenger. At the same time we agree that, if the return coupon was so defaced by the act or negligence of the plaintiff as to make the date illegible, the gateman had the right to refuse to honor it, and to refuse to allow him to pass to the train, and for such refusal no action would lie. On the other hand, if the ticket was so blurred or defaced at the time it was delivered to him by the ticket agent at Texas station, and it was presented at the gate in the same condition as when he got it, and the gateman refused to allow him to pass, the plaintiff, being himself without fault, was under no obligation to get the indorsement of the ticket receiver, and for such wrongful refusal by the gateman the defendant is liable. So the defendant has no reason to complain of the plaintiff's first prayer, nor of the rejection of its first prayer.

And this brings us to the question in regard to the measure of damages, and the law in this respect is well settled. In the absence of malice or wantonness or circumstances of aggravation, the plaintiff was entitled to recover such damages only as were the immediate and necessary consequences resulting from the wrongful act of the defendant; that is to say, the expenses incurred by him by reason of the defendant's refusal to allow him to enter its car, the amount paid for another ticket, compensation for loss of time, hotel expenses, if any, incurred, and, in addition to these, inconvenience suffered by him, may be ground of damages if it is such as is capable of being ascertained and assessed at a money value. Carr's Case, 71 Md. 185. There was no error, therefore, in granting the defendant's third prayer. The rule laid down in defendant's second prayer,—that in estimating the damages the jury should allow merely the sum of 40 cents, being the cost of a ticket from Baltimore to Texas station, and the further sum of $1.50, being the actual loss sustained by the plaintiff by absence from his business,—is rather too narrow, and the prayer was properly refused. We cannot agree, however, with the court below, that the facts set forth in plaintiff's second prayer would justify the jury in finding that the refusal by the gateman to accept the return coupon, and to allow the plaintiff to pass to the train, was made not merely in disregard of his rights, but with a wanton or reckless indifference to such rights. Now, what are these facts? First, that in refusing to accept the return coupon the gateman assigned as a reason for so doing that the date looked as if it had been rubbed out on purpose, and then that he referred the plaintiff to the ticket receiver, and that he returned, saying he could not find the receiver's office; and, further, that the gateman himself had time before the departure of the train and without neglecting his other duties to have reported the case to the receiver, and failed or refused so to do. We cannot agree that these facts in themselves would warrant the jury in finding that the gateman acted with a wanton or reckless indifference to the plaintiff's rights. He had no right, we agree, to use offensive or insulting language towards the plaintiff, and, if he did, such conduct on his part would be evidence from which the jury would be justified in awarding exemplary or punitive damages. And we agree, too, that in saying the date looked as if it had been rubbed out on purpose, such language may be construed as an insinuation, at least, that the date had been rubbed out by the plaintiff. But the plaintiff, it is clear, did not so understand it; nor did he consider it offensive, for it seems to have made no impression upon him. On the contrary, it had entirely escaped his recollection, and the evidence in regard to it was brought out by the gateman himself, who says that, after examining the ticket, the police officer told the plaintiff it looked as if the date had been rubbed out on purpose, which the witness added is "the same thing I told him." So it does not seem that the language was used, nor was it understood by the plaintiff as being used, in an offensive or insulting manner. Then, as to the refusal or neglect of the gateman to report the case to the receiver, the proof shows that it was his duty to stand at the gate until the departure of the train, and it would have been a breach of duty to have left the gate for this or any other like purpose. And there was error, therefore, in granting the plaintiff's second and fourth prayers.

Nor can we agree that these facts would warrant the jury in allowing not only such damages as they may find to have been the direct and immediate consequences of the defendant's refusal to admit the plaintiff to its train, but, in addition thereto, such other damages as they may believe he has suffered in his person and feeling. Rice's Case, 64 Md. 64, relied on in support of this instruction, differs widely from the case now before us. In Rice's Case the plaintiff had purchased a round-trip ticket from Wilmington to Philadelphia, and on the trip to Philadelphia the conductor by mistake canceled the return coupon. Afterwards, finding out his mistake, he attempted to correct it, by writing on the return coupon, "Canceled by mistake," and, handing it back to the plaintiff, said: "I have fixed it all right now. You can ride on it." The mistake, however, it seems, was not corrected in accordance with the rules of the company, and when the plaintiff presented the coupon to the conductor on the train from Philadelphia to Wilmington he refused to accept it, and demanded of the plaintiff that he should pay full fare on the return trip. This the plaintiff refused to do, and he was forcibly ejected from the car. He then brought an action of trespass vi et armis against the company, and, being wholly without fault, we said that, if the servants of the company, under such circumstances, laid their hands forcibly on the person of the plaintiff, and compelled him to leave the car, there was not merely a breach of contract on the part of the company, but an unlawful interference with the person of the plaintiff, and an indignity to his feelings, for which an action will lie, and for which he is entitled to be compensated in damages; and this, too, even though the servants of the company acted without malice, and used such force only as was necessary. Such damages were not allowed as punitive damages, but as compensatory damages for the unlawful interference with the person of the plaintiff, and the indignity to which he was thus exposed in being forcibly ejected from the car. But the action in this case is for a breach of contract, and not an action of trespass vi et armis. It is not alleged, nor is there any proof to show that the gateman used any force or violence or interference in any manner with the person of the plaintiff, and the rule laid down in Rice's Case has no application to this case.

There being error in granting the plaintiff's second, fourth and fifth prayers, the judgment must be reversed, and new trial awarded.

PENNSYLVANIA SUPREME COURT.

Charles D. WOODRUFF, Appt.,

v.

George E. PAINTER et al.

(.....Pa.....)

1. A retail merchant is liable for the loss of a customer's watch and chain which is taken off and at the suggestion of a salesman put in a drawer while the customer is trying on clothing, if ordinary care is not exercised for its safety, but not if he has exercised such care, notwithstanding which the watch has been stolen.
2. A bailment is for hire, although no hire is paid, when it is a necessary incident of a business in which the bailee makes a profit.
3. A retail storekeeper who fails to return the watch and chain of a customer which is placed in his custody while the owner is trying on clothing has the burden of showing that he has exercised ordinary care for its safety, and of explaining his neglect to restore it.

(July 12, 1892.)

NOTE.—The attempt to hold storekeepers responsible for the safety of property of customers which is necessarily laid aside while making purchases seems to be of recent origin. The leading case of Bunnell v. Stern, 10 L. R. A. 451, 122 N. Y. 539, which 16 L. R. A.

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the court of Common Pleas No. 1 for Philadelphia County in favor of defendants in an action brought to recover the value of a watch and chain which was alleged to have been placed in defendants' care for safe keeping and not returned by them. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. De Forrest Ballou for appellant.

Messrs. Milton C. Work and Henry J. McCarthy, for appellees:

The burden of proof is upon the plaintiff to show a loss resulting from such degree of negligence as would render the depository liable, and mere proof of loss is not evidence of such negligence.

Giblin v. McMullen, L. R. 2 P. O. 817; Smith v. First Nat. Bank in Westfield, 99 Mass. 609, 47 Am. Dec. 59; Pitlock v. Wells, Fargo & Co. 109 Mass. 452; Knowles v. Atlantic & St. L. R. Co. 88 Me. 55, 61 Am. Dec. 284.

In De Haven v. Kensington Nat. Bank, 81 Pa. 95 (1876), the plaintiff deposited securities in a bank for safe keeping. The securities is approved in the principal case, recognizes such responsibility, and the case from the Pennsylvania lower court, cited in appellees' brief, which denies it, seems to be impliedly overruled by this one.

were stolen. The plaintiff brought suit against the bank. A nonsuit was entered, which the court below refused to take off. The supreme court affirmed, Agnew, Ch. J., in his opinion saying: "We discover no sufficient evidence in this case to charge a merely voluntary bailee without reward for a loss by robbery."

This ruling was followed in Goff v. Wanamaker, 25 W. N. C. 353. There plaintiff entered defendant's store. When about to try on a new coat and vest the plaintiff took off those he had on and placed them on a counter, the salesman saying: "Lay off your coat and vest and try on these; nobody will disturb your clothes." Money was stolen and suit brought. Fell, J., entered a nonsuit, which the court of common pleas, No. 2, of Philadelphia County, refused to take off.

Heydrick, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendants were retail dealers in clothing in the city of Philadelphia. The plaintiff, in company with his wife, visited their store for the purpose of purchasing a suit of clothes, having upon his person at the time a watch and chain. Having selected a coat and vest, and being about to remove the corresponding garments for the purpose of trying on those selected, he took off his watch and chain, and was about to lay it on a pile of clothing, when the salesman who was waiting upon him said, "You had better put your watch here," indicating a drawer from which the vest had been taken; and adding, "It will be safe, I guess." The watch and chain were accordingly put in the drawer, and the drawer was closed by the salesman. The plaintiff, his wife, and the salesman then went to another part of the store, where there was a mirror, and the coat and vest, having been tried on, were found to be satisfactory. They next turned their attention to the selection of a pair of pantaloons, in doing which the plaintiff went twice to a dressing room connected with the store. While he was thus engaged in trying on pantaloons, the salesman conducted his wife to a seat some distance from the drawer in which the watch and chain had been placed, and to the vicinity of which she had returned after the coat and vest had been selected, and there entertained her during the time her husband was in the dressing room. When the entire suit had been selected, and the plaintiff had replaced the garments which he wore when entering the store, he said to the salesman, "Now we will take the watch." The salesman opened the drawer in which it had been placed, but it was not there. Several persons who had been in the store during the selection of the suit, but who had left, were sent for and questioned by one of the defendants, but the watch and chain were not found and returned to the plaintiff. While search was being made for the watch, the plaintiff asked the salesman whether they were in the habit of putting things like it in the drawers, and he replied that they had done so many times, and nothing of the kind had happened before. Having paid for the suit purchased, the plaintiff asked one of the defendants whether he thought it was right that he, the plaintiff, should lose the watch. The reply was that he would have to lose it, but the defendants would do all they could to assist him in finding it. The watch has never been returned to the plaintiff. Upon proof of these facts the court below nonsuited the plaintiff, and its refusal to take off the nonsuit is the single error assigned.

When the defendants opened a retail clothing store they thereby invited the public to come into their place of business and purchase clothing in the usual manner, and when they extended this invitation they assumed some duty to the people who should respond to it. Even the householder who permits the use of a path leading to his house is deemed to hold out an invitation to all people who have any reasonable ground for coming thither to pass along his pathway, and is therefore held responsible for neglecting to fence off dangerous places. 1 Addison, Torts, 203. So, too, a shopkeeper is liable for neglect on leaving a trap-door open without any protection by which his customers receive injury. Parnaby v. Lancaster Canal Co. 11 Ad. & El. 223. In like manner it cannot be doubted that, if these defendants had maintained or permitted a danger of any kind in their store, and by reason of it the plaintiff had sustained bodily injury, they would have been answerable to him for the consequences. In such case they would be said to have been guilty of negligence,—guilty of a neglect of a duty which they owed to the customer; but I apprehend that the duty neglected would arise from an implied contract that, if customers would come to their store, no harm that could reasonably be averted should overtake them, and the consideration for such promise would be the chance of profit from their patronage. Upon principle the contract must be held to extend to the safety of such property as the customers necessarily or habitually in pursuance of a universal custom carries with him. Whatever thus necessarily, or in common with people generally, he habitually carries with him, and must necessarily lay aside in the store while making or examining his purchases, he is invited to lay aside by the invitation to come and purchase, and, having laid it aside upon such invitation and with the knowledge of the dealer, he has committed it to his custody. And, this being a necessary incident of the business upon which the customer was invited to come to the store, the care of the property would be within the authority of the salesman assigned to wait upon him; it would be part of the transaction in which he is authorized to represent his employer. This much was assumed without question in Bunnell v. Stern, 123 N. Y. 539, 10 L. R. A. 481, a case differing from the present in this only: that the article lost was a lady's cloak, and the saleswoman took no care whatever of it.

Assuming that the jury would have found that a watch is such personal belonging as men usually carry with them, and that in the selection of a suit of clothes it is necessary or usual to remove it from the person, and lay it aside; and, further, that the plaintiff, by direction of the defendants' salesman, placed his watch in a designated drawer in the store, preparatory to the selection of a suit of clothes, to purchase which he visited the store,—the defendants thereby became chargeable as bailees. The principles which govern that relation are briefly and clearly stated by Judge Story, in his work on Bailments, thus: "When the bailment is for the benefit of the bailor, the law requires only slight diligence on the part of the bailee, and of course makes him answerable only for gross neglect. When the bailment is for the sole benefit of the bailee, the law requires great diligence on the part of the bailee, and makes him responsible for slight neglect. When the bailment is reciprocally beneficial to both parties, the law requires ordinary diligence on the part of the bailee, and makes him responsible for ordinary neglect. Manifestly the bailment, in a case like the present, is of the latter class, for, while the customer pays nothing directly, or eo nomine, for the safe-keeping of his effects, the dealer receives his recompense in the profits of the trade of which the bailment is a necessary incident. It was upon this principle that Lord Holt said, in Lane v. Cotton, 12 Mod. 483, an action was sustainable against an innkeeper for the loss of a guest's goods, and that the court of appeals affirmed the judgment of the court of common pleas of the city of New York in Bunnell v. Stern, supra. In Massachusetts the proprietor of a liquor store, who permitted an order slate for an expressman to be kept in his store, and allowed people to leave packages there to be taken away by the expressman, was held to be a bailee for hire on the theory that what he thus permitted brought him an increase of business. Newhall v. Paige, 10 Gray, 866. This, however, would seem to be pushing the principle to a dangerous extreme; it would render it unsafe for any business man to allow another's property to be left about his premises, and would be in seeming conflict with our own case of First Nat. Bank of Carlisle v. Graham, 79 Pa. 106, and De Haven v. Kensington Nat. Bank, 81 Pa. 95. The safer rule is to hold a bailment to be for hire when no hire is paid in such cases only as it is a necessary incident of a business in which the bailee makes profit; and such the jury might have found the present case to have been.

The remaining question is whether, upon the assumption that there was a bailment for hire, proof of failure of the defendants to return the watch and chain upon demand was, under the circumstances, sufficient to carry the case to the jury. If what was said by the plaintiff should be taken as proof that the property was lost, we would be met with a conflict of authority elsewhere as to the effect of it, and find little in our own books to help us determine whether the burden was upon the plaintiff to prove negligence, or upon the defendants to repel the inference of it. But the plaintiff's evidence amounts to no more than that the salesman examined the drawer in which the watch had been placed and some others, and did not find it, and that several persons, not employees of the defendants, who had been in the store and left, were sent for and interrogated without result. All this did not prove a loss, nor even that the defendants said the watch was lost or had been stolen.

In Logan v. Mathews, 6 Pa. 417, it was held that if a bailee for hire return the property in a damaged state, and give no explanation how the injury happened, the burden of proof to show that there was no negligence is upon him. In harmony with this judgment, a bailee who fails to give any such explanation of his neglect to restore the property intrusted to him as will enable the bailor to test his good faith ought to be held to proof that he has exercised ordinary diligence in the care of it. Doubtless the defendants were entitled to the benefit of any inferences fairly deducible from their conduct when the watch was demanded, but such inferences were for the jury. If the case had been submitted to them, and they had found as an inference from the facts proved that the watch had been stolen, such finding would have been a complete exculpation, unless they further found that the defendants had not exercised ordinary care.

The judgment is reversed, and a venire facias de novo is awarded.

WISCONSIN SUPREME COURT.

FISH BROS. WAGON CO., Respt.,

v.

Titus G. FISH et al., Appts.

(.....Wis.....)

1. The good-will of a business including the right to use trade-marks even where these consist of the names of individuals engaged in the business and of a picture representing such name, pass with a transfer of all the property and assets of the business although not specifically mentioned.
2. The words "Fish Bros. & Co." and the picture of a fish may be applied by brothers named Fish to vehicles manufactured by them although such words and picture were previously used by them in a business which has now passed with its good-will and trade-marks to a corporation, provided their use is not such as to induce persons to buy their vehicles as and for those manufactured by the corporation.

NOTE.—For note on name of business establishment as part of the good-will of the business, see Vonderbank v. Schmitt (La.) 15 L. R. A. 462.

16 L. R. A.

3. Persons have no right to represent their business as the same formerly conducted by them where that has been transferred with all its assets to other parties, although they have a right to do the same kind of business.

(Winslow, J., dissents from proposition 3.)

(June 15, 1892.)

APPEAL by defendants from an order of the Circuit Court for Douglas County refusing to vacate an injunction restraining them from using certain trade marks and names, and also refusing to restrain plaintiff from using them. Reversed.

Statement by Cassoday, J.:

It appears from the record that in 1863 the defendant Titus G. Fish and one Bull, under the firm name of Fish & Bull, commenced the business of manufacturing wagons in the city of Racine; that, as such firm, they employed one Edwin B. Fish, a brother of Titus G.; that about 1864 Bull went out of the firm, and Abner C. Fish, a brother of Titus G., became a member thereof, and they continued the business of manufacturing wagons under the firm name of Fish Bros., and as such continued Edwin B. Fish as an employé; that about 1868 Edwin B. Fish became a member of the firm of Fish Bros.; that about that time the firm became embarrassed, and thereupon entered into an agreement with Jerome I. Case, whereby Fish Bros. transferred to Case all the personal property they then had in the wagon-making business at Racine, and he advanced a large amount of money for the purpose of carrying on said business under an agreement in writing whereby said business was thereafter to be carried on by Fish Bros., acting as his agents, and they to draw out a certain amount per year for the support of their respective families, and to have the privilege of redeeming the property and the business or repurchasing the same upon payment to Case of the amount advanced and the interest agreed upon as stipulated; that the business was thereupon conducted by and in the name of "Fish Bros., Agents;" that about 1872 or 1873 one Huggins became a member of said firm and the same became known as "Fish Bros. & Co., Agents," composed of Titus G., Abner C., Edwin B. Fish, and John C. Huggins; that in 1878 the catalogue used by said Fish Bros. & Co., Agents, had thereon a picture of Titus G. Fish on the left-hand corner, and underneath the picture were the words, "Titus G. Fish, founder of the firm of Fish Bros. & Company, 1864," and upon the right-hand side of the picture was "1878," being the date of the catalogue; that there was also a picture of a fish on the catalogue and cars; that such pictures and statements were continued on subsequent catalogues down to the time of the incorporation of the plaintiff; that in 1880 the wagons and vehicles so manufactured by Fish Bros., Agents, and by Fish Bros. & Co., Agents, had become somewhat celebrated to the trade, so that in 1880 they manufactured and sold about 15,000 in different parts of the country, and the capital involved in the business then was about half a million; that in 1880 a disagreement arose between Jerome I. Case and Fish Bros. & Co., Agents, as to their respective rights under said agreement, and thereupon Case commenced a suit against Fish Bros. & Co., which twice came to this court, and will be found reported in 58 Wis. 56, and 63 Wis. 475; that in 1882 or 1883 Abner C. dropped out of the firm, and D. J. Morey and S. S. Lyon became members thereof, under the firm name of Fish Bros. & Co., composed of Titus G. and Edwin B. Fish, Huggins, Morey, and Lyon; that the business was conducted and managed by Fish Bros. & Co., Agents, until after the first decision in 16 L. R. A.

this court; that October 16, 1883, Jerome I. Case was appointed a receiver, and took possession of all the property standing in the name of Fish Bros. & Co., Agents, or otherwise represented in said business, and excluded the members of said firm therefrom otherwise than and as employés; that Case continued such receiver down to September 26, 1885, when he resigned, and A. O. Hall was appointed in his place, and he continued the same as such receiver, advertising the business as "Fish Bros. & Company; A. W. Hall, Receiver; T. G. Fish, Superintendent;" and placing on the wagons and their catalogues "Fish Bros.," "Fish Wagons," "Fish Bros., Agents," "Fish Bros. & Company, Agents," and the picture of a fish with "Bros." on it, or "Bros. & Co.;" that Titus G. Fish continued in the employ of said Hall as such receiver during his entire connection with the business; that in December, 1886, Case being desirous of getting his money out of the business, one O. R. Johnson proposed to buy from Hall, as such receiver, the entire real and personal property of the business for $48,603.96 besides the outstanding accounts; that in pursuance of such order Johnson thereupon gave notes for such purchase to the amount of about $115,000; that January 22, 1887, by way of effecting such transfer, Case and wife conveyed the real estate to said Johnson, and also his interest in the personal estate, that January 25, 1887, the court ordered such sale by the receiver to said Johnson, and the same was made accordingly; that January 28, 1887, the plaintiff, Fish Bros. Wagon Company, became incorporated under chapter 86, Rev. Stat., for the manufacture and sale of wagons at Racine, with Titus G. and Edwin B. Fish, Johnson, Booth, and Deane, as stockholders, which corporation had a capital stock of $250,000; that Edwin B. Fish and one Fred C. Fish, a son of said Titus G., were employed in the business; that Johnson was the principal stockholder and president of the company; that Booth was secretary; that Titus G. Fish was vice president and manager, that Deane was treasurer, and Edwin B. Fish superintendent; that Titus G., as such manager, made an illustrated catalogue having thereon, "Fish Bros. Wagon Company, Racine, Wisconsin;" the picture of a fish, with the word "Wagon" thereon, a portrait of Titus G. Fish, with the figures "1864" on the left and "1888" on the right; together with the words, "Titus G. Fish, founder of the Fish Bros. Wagon" in the middle; also with the words, "The Fish Bros. Wagon;" "Fish Bros. & Company, Racine, Wisconsin," and the picture of a fish with "Fish Bros. Wagon Company, Racine, Wis." thereon, and another picture of a fish with "Bros." thereon, and another picture of a fish with "Bros. & Co." thereon; that the articles of incorporation of said plaintiff company are dated January 27, 1887, and signed by Johnson, Booth, Titus G. Fish, and Edwin B. Fish, that April 22, 1887, Hall, as such receiver, deeded the real estate connected with said business to O. R. Johnson, in pursuance of the order of the court and a public sale at auction, April 7, 1887, reciting the consideration of $15,000; that Titus G. Fish was one of the directors of said company; that he was present at a meeting thereof, May 12, 1887; that on that day he entered into a written agreement with said Johnson, reciting that Johnson had advanced money to purchase the business of Fish Bros. & Co., and to purchase the real and personal assets of said business, and had transferred the said property to Fish Bros. Wagon Company, being the plaintiff corporation herein, and that he held substantially all of the capital stock of the corporation; therefore it was mutually agreed that said Titus G. Fish should give his entire time and efforts to making said assets productive, and containing an optional right to purchase by him from Johnson; that on the same day Johnson and wife conveyed said real estate, including the factory and buildings situated thereon, to the plaintiff company; that July 17, 1887, said Hall, as such receiver, made a further deed to said Fish Bros. Wagon Company, the plaintiff herein; that August 1, 1887, Titus G. Fish and Johnson entered into an agreement extending the former agreement between them to July 1, 1888, and the same was afterwards extended to December 1, 1888, by written agreement; that Titus G. Fish was present and participated in a directors' and stockholders' meeting of the plaintiff company held October 24, 1887; that November 7, 1887, Hall, as such receiver, made a further deed of such property to said plaintiff company; that at a meeting of the directors of the company, August 13, 1888, said Huggins was elected a director and treasurer of said company; that December 29, 1888, Titus G. Fish verbally agreed to take 500 shares of the capital stock of the plaintiff company, and certificates therefor were issued, but not paid for, and were finally canceled April 2, 1889; that at a stockholders' meeting of the plaintiff company held January 21, 1889, Titus G. Fish and said Huggins participated in and were each elected directors for another year; and thereupon said directors elected said Huggins vice-president and general manager, and said Titus G. Fish, secretary, of said plaintiff company; that at a stockholders' meeting of the plaintiff company held March 30, 1889, the stock of said Titus G. Fish was voted by proxy; that at the same meeting he presented his resignation as a director and secretary of the company, and the same was accepted; that Edwin B. Fish continued in the employ of the plaintiff company until June 17, 1890, when he went out; that June 17, 1890, Titus G. Fish, Edwin B. Fish, and Fred. C. Fish entered into copartnership by an agreement in writing to prosecute the business of manufacturing or procuring to be manufactured and dealing in wagons and other vehicles, under the name of Fish Bros. & Co., Titus G. Fish to have a one half interest and Edwin B. and Fred. C. each one-fourth interest therein; that it was provided therein that each party was at liberty to engage in other business on conditions named; that said business was to be located and conducted at such place as they might mutually deem advantageous; that on the same day the said Titus G., Edwin B., and Fred. C. Fish, of Racine, under the name of Fish Bros. & Co., entered into an agreement with the defendant, the La Belle Wagon Works, a corporation then organized and existing under the laws of

16 L. R. A.

Wisconsin, in Douglas county, to the effect that said La Belle Wagon Works therein agreed to manufacture for said Fish Bros. & Co., and to deliver to such persons as may be by them designated and accepted, farm wagons to be known as "Fish Bros. & Co. Wagons," and to be marked on the rear axle "Fish Bros. & Co.," and upon the side of the box "Fish Bros. & Co. Wagon," said wagons to be manufactured of material and pattern selected and designated by said Fish Bros. & Co., and the manufacture thereof to be under their supervision and direction, and of the net proceeds thereof Fish Bros. were to have 2½ per cent, and the La Belle Wagon Works the balance; that the La Belle Wagon Works were to have the exclusive right to fix prices on all wagons sold, and to reject any and all orders of persons unworthy of credit, unless they paid cash; that Fish Bros. & Co. were to save harmless the La Belle Wagon Works from any and all litigation which might thereafter be instituted against it, by reason of the manufacture or sale of said Fish Bros. & Co. wagon; that said Titus G. Fish was to be employed as superintendent of sales and collection by said La Belle Wagon Works, under the supervision and instruction of its board of directors, and to have a salary of $3,000 per year, and that Edwin B. Fish was to have a salary of $1,500 per year, and Fred. C. Fish a salary of $1,000 per year, with other stipulations, and it was therein agreed that said contract should terminate June 17, 1900, subject to the provisions therein contained, and was signed by each of the members of said firm of Fish Bros. & Co. and said corporation; that thereupon Titus G., Edwin B., and Fred. C. Fish, under the firm name of Fish Bros. & Co., issued a circular addressed "To Our Old Customers and the Implement Trade," stating, among other things, that they desired to advise them of the change of location and change in their firm name; that the firm of Fish Bros. & Co., of South Superior, Wis., succeeds Titus G. Fish, of Fond du Lac, Wis., the senior member and head of the present firm, comprising Titus G., Edwin B., (Fish Bros.) and Fred. C. Fish, formerly of Racine, Wis., and stating that for the first time since 1883 they were able to furnish their patrons with "the genuine Fish Bros. & Co. wagon, fully up to our old standard of that date;" that their experience of over a quarter of a century in the manufacture of farm wagons for each and every section of the United States had led them into quarters where they found the best advantages for the manufacture of first-class wagons; that they were located in the finest timber belt in the country, and using the best hard-wood timber; and they guaranteed the trade a wagon made of a first-class butt-cut stock, thoroughly dry; that their former patterns and styles had been changed in but a few minor particulars, and then only where they could find opportunity to do better work; and inviting the trade of their old customers; that on or about July 27, 1891, the plaintiff commenced this action for the purpose of restraining the defendants herein from using the words "Fish Bros.," "Fish Bros. & Company," "Fish Bros. Wagons," the picture of a fish with "Bros.," "Brothers," "Bros. & Co." printed thereon, or in advertising their wagons, and that the plaintiff be adjudged the exclusive right to the same as trade marks; that upon the application of the plaintiff for a preliminary injunction thereon, and on August 17, 1891, the court ordered, in effect, that the defendants be, and were thereby enjoined and restrained until the further action of the court from using the words "Fish Bros.," "Fish Bros. Wagons," or the trade-mark or device consisting of the picture of a fish with the words "Bros." or "Brothers" or "Bros. & Co." printed thereon, or from in any wise using said words, phrases, or devices, or any of them, in any way designating any wagons or vehicles, or printing, publishing, circulating or distributing catalogues containing such words in imitation of the plaintiff, or in any way giving out that the defendants, or any of them, are the manufacturers of or dealers in, or authorized to manufacture or deal in, Fish Bros. wagons, or to use the words "Fish Bros." or "Fish Bros. Wagons" in designation of their manufacture; that thereupon the defendants moved to dissolve said injunction, upon affidavits, etc. whereupon the court, September 13, 1891, ordered that so much of said temporary injunction as enjoins the defendants, or any of them, from using in their business of making and selling wagons or other vehicles the words "Fish Brothers & Company," "Fish Bros. & Co.," or either of them, is hereby dissolved, annulled, and set aside, upon giving the requisite bond; that thereupon the defendants answered upon the merits, and by way of counterclaim, and asking a counter injunction restraining the plaintiff from using the words "Fish Brothers," "Fish Bros.," or "Fish Brothers Wagons," or the picture of a fish with the words "Fish Brothers" or "Bros." or "Fish Brothers & Company" or "Fish Bros. & Co." stamped thereon; that thereupon these defendants moved the court November 12, 1891, on due notice, for an order setting aside and vacating the injunctive order theretofore entered therein on the plaintiff's application, and for a temporary restraining order in favor of the defendants; and, after consideration thereof, the same was and is thereby denied, with costs. From that order the defendants bring this appeal.

Messrs. Turner & Timlin and Ross, Dwyer & Smith, for appellants:

The plaintiff never acquired the exclusive use of the device of the fish or the trade-name "Fish Bros." "Fish Brothers" "Fish Bros. Wagon" or "Fish Wagon."

The plaintiff could only acquire these rights by:

- a. Adoption and use.
Browne, Trade-Marks, § 46.
- b. Assignment.
Id. § 57.
- c. Operation of law.
Ibid.

No matter how long Fish Brothers may have permitted the plaintiff or others to use the trade-mark and trade-name they do not thereby lose their exclusive right to the same. Such user creates only the relation of licensor and licensee.

McCardel v. Peck, 28 How. Pr. 120; Cox, Trade-Mark Cas. 312. See Stephens v. De 16 L. R. A.

Conto, 4 Abb. Pr. N. S. 47, 7 Robt. 343; Cox, Trade-Mark Cas. 445; Browne, Trade-Marks, § 364.

By permitting another to use his trade-mark a man does not lose his ownership of it, even though such user may be by him in conjunction with his partner.

Kidd v. Johnson, 100 U. S. 617, 619, 25 L. ed. 769, 770; Huwer v. Dannendhoffer, 82 N. Y. 499; Hazard v. Canwell, 93 N. Y. 259.

The good-will of an established and successful business is undoubtedly of much value to the possessor of such business and may be sold with it. But, while such sale will entitle the purchaser to a certain limited protection, it will not of itself alone be sufficient to preclude the seller from engaging in a separate and independent business of the same kind in the same village or city.

Washburn v. Doech, 68 Wis. 489, 60 Am. Rep. 878; Bergamini v. Bastian, 85 La. Ann. 60, 48 Am. Rep. 216.

The defendants Fish have the right to use their own name in their business, notwithstanding the organization of the corporation.

Marshall v. Pinkham, 52 Wis. 585, 88 Am. Rep. 756; Carmichel v. Latimer, 11 R. I. 895, 23 Am. Rep. 481; Symonds v. Jones, 8 L. R. A. 570, 82 Me. 302, 17 Am. St. Rep. 496, note.

Even if the defendants Fish, at the time of the organization of the corporation, transferred the good-will of their trade to the corporation, such sale would not import an agreement by them not to engage in similar business in some other place at a subsequent time, in their own name.

Hozie v. Ohaney, 8 New Eng. Rep. 709, 143 Mass. 592.

It is only upon the ground of identity with the place of manufacture and character of the goods, and not on the ground of its indicating the manufacture, or his personal supervision, that a trade-name or trade-mark is permitted to be transferred, sold, or assigned; it is only when an individual name becomes an adjective as describing the article sold as distinguished from the personal work or supervision employed in the manufacture, that it can be transferred as a trade-mark or trade-name.

Symonds v. Jones, 8 L. R. A. 570, 82 Me. 302, 17 Am. St. Rep. 496; Connell v. Reed, 128 Mass. 477, 85 Am. Rep. 397; Manhattan Medicine Co. v. Wood, 108 U. S. 218, 27 L. ed. 706; Kidd v. Johnson, 100 U. S. 617, 25 L. ed. 769; Wilmer v. Thomas (Md.) 13 L. R. A. 880; Meriden Britannia Co. v. Parker, 39 Conn. 450, 12 Am. Rep. 401.

The right of a person to use his name as a brand does not pass to his assignee in bankruptcy.

Mattingly v. Stone (Ky.) Nov. 23, 1889; Wolfe v. Barnett, 24 La. Ann. 97, 13 Am. Rep. 113.

The plaintiff does not come into court with clean hands and is therefore not entitled to any relief in the action.

Browne, Trade-Marks, §§ 474, 525, 534; Stachelberg v. Ponce, 23 Fed. Rep. 480; Manhattan Medicine Co. v. Wood, 108 U. S. 218, 27 L. ed. 706.

A lack of truth debars a trade-mark from protection. The tale told by the symbol must be sincere. The instant it ceases to be truthful in spirit as well as letter, it becomes an instrument of fraud and is not lawful.

Abbott v. Siebert, 61 Md. 276; Samuel v. Berger, 24 Barb. 164; Leather Cloth Co. v. American Leather Cloth Co. 4 De. G. J. & S. 187, 11 H. L. Cas. 544; Koehler v. Sanders, 9 L. R. A. 576, 132 N. Y. 65; Sherwood v. Andrews, 5 Am. Law Reg. 588; Pidding v. How, 8 Sim. 477; Browne, Trade-Marks, §§ 71, 477, 478, 494.

Defendants had the right to use their own name in the business, and they had the right to refer to their personal reputation to secure further business, and also the right to refer to the superior quality of goods theretofore manufactured by them.

Hazleton Boiler Co. v. Hazleton-Tripod Boiler Co. (Ill.) March 24, 1892.

Messrs. Quarles, Spence, Hoyt & Quarles, for respondent:

The rebus and brands used by plaintiff are trade-marks, and the words "Fish Bros. Wagon," and "Fish Wagon" are trade-names.

They "point out the true source, origin, or ownership of the goods to which the mark is applied, and point out and designate the dealer's place of business."

Marshall v. Pinkham, 52 Wis. 572-578, 38 Am. Rep. 756; Dunbar v. Glenn, 42 Wis. 118, 24 Am. Rep. 895; McLean v. Fleming, 96 U. S. 245-254, 24 L. ed. 828-832; Delaware & H. Canal Co. v. Clark, 80 U. S. 13 Wall. 811, 20 L. ed. 581; Lawrence Mfg. Co. v. Tennessee Mfg. Co. 81 Fed. Rep. 788.

And the name has come to be used as a name for distinguishing the wagons by "which they may be bought and sold."

Dunbar v. Glenn, 42 Wis. 118-138, 24 Am. Rep. 895; Carroll v. Ertheiler, 1 Fed. Rep. 688-691.

There is a distinction, and a difference as well, between a trade mark and a trade-name.

Rapalje & L., Law Dict. title, Trade Name.

The word or phrase, whether arbitrary or descriptive, will be protected when it has come to be a short name used between the buyer and seller to designate the article sold, as "Glenfield Starch," Wotherspoon v. Currie, L. R. 5 Eng. & Irish App. 521; "Apollinaris," 14 Blatchf. 380; "The Chatterbox," 21 Fed. Rep. 189; "Durham," 3 Hughes, 151; "Lone Jack," 1 Fed. Rep. 688; "Bethesda," 42 Wis. 118, 24 Am. Rep. 895; "Thorley's Cattle Food," L. R. 14 Ch. Div. 756, 37 Moak, Eng. Rep. 77; "Day & Martin's Blacking," 7 Beav. 84; "Sapolio," 43 Fed. Rep. 420.

The trade-name is impersonal and belongs to the factory.

Filley v. Fassett, 44 Mo. 169, 100 Am. Dec. 275.

A trade-name, when it has once been acquired, has ceased to be personal, and attaches to the factory, even as against the original manufacturer.

Pepper v. Labrot, 8 Fed. Rep. 29-41; Hall v. Barrows, 4 DeG. J. & S. 157; Motley v. Downman, 3 Myl. & C. 1; Kidd v. Johnson, 100 U. S. 620, 25 L. ed. 771; Wotherspoon v. Currie, L. R. 5 Eng. & Irish App. 521, Bury v. Bedford, 4 DeG. J. & S. 368.

The right to use a trade-mark or trade name can be founded only upon actual user.

16 L. R. A.

Neither adoption nor claim of right can confer the right.

Trade-Mark Cases, 100 U. S. 82-94, 25 L. ed. 550-551; Candee v. Deere, 54 Ill. 489.

This right is in the plaintiff both by purchase and by estoppel.

There is no reason why a trade-mark cannot be conveyed with the property with which it is associated. It constitutes a part of partnership assets, and is properly sold with the firm property.

Morgan v. Rogers, 19 Fed. Rep. 596; Browne, Trade-Marks, §§ 860, 861; Hall v. Barrows, 10 Jur. N. S. 55; Ainsworth v. Walmesley, 85 L. J. Ch. 352; Kidd v. Johnson, 100 U. S. 617, 25 L. ed. 769; Walton v. Crowley, 8 Blatchf. 440; Congress & E. Spring Co. v. High Rock C. Spring Co. 57 Barb. 526; Dixon Crucible Co. v. Guggenheim, 2 Brewst. 821.

For a trade-mark to pass under a bill of sale it is not necessary that it should be specifically mentioned.

See Witthaus v. Braum, 44 Md. 808-805.

Where a trade-mark is used to designate the place and the person by whom the goods are made, the right to such trade-mark passes to the purchaser upon the sale and transfer of the business and manufactory at which the goods are made.

Witthaus v. Braum, 44 Md. 808-805; Pepper v. Labrot, 8 Fed. Rep. 41.

The office thenceforward of the trade-name is to refer to the origin of the product, that is, to the factory, and no one except the owner of the factory can use the name without practicing a deception upon the public.

Pepper v. Labrot, supra; Howe v. Chaney, 3 New Eng. Rep. 709, 148 Mass. 592.

The claim that the trade-mark and trade-name did not pass to the plaintiff is against conscience.

If permitting Fish now to make this claim will work injury to the plaintiff, then Fish is, both by the law of morality and by the law of the land, forever precluded from making this claim.

Broom, Legal Maxims, p. 169; Dickerson v. Colgrove, 100 U. S. 678-580, 25 L. ed. 618, 619; Dair v. United States, 83 U. S. 16 Wall. 1-4, 21 L. ed. 491, 492; Gregg v. Von Phul, 68 U. S. 1 Wall. 274-281, 17 L. ed. 586, 587.

There is no misrepresentation in the plaintiff's use of the trade-mark and trade name.

By such use, the plaintiff, according to the ordinary usages of trade, "is not to be understood as saying more than that it is carrying on the same business as had been formerly carried on by the person whose name constituted the trade-mark."

Leather Cloth Co. v. American Leather Cloth Co. 11 Jur. N. S. 513; Oakes v. Tonsmierre, 49 Fed. Rep. 447-451; Marshall v. Pinkham, 52 Wis. 572-582, 38 Am. Rep. 756; Russia Cement Co. v. LePage, 6 New Eng. Rep. 577, 147 Mass. 206-209; William Rogers Mfg. Co. v. Rogers & S. F. Mfg. Co. 11 Fed. Rep. 495-499.

When the plaintiff in any way, by purchase or otherwise, succeeded to the business of the original Fish Bros. and their successors, it had the exclusive right to use the trade-mark and the trade-name to indicate that it was carrying on the same business.

Witthaus v. Braun, 44 Md. 808-805; Bury v. Bedford, 4 DeG. J. & S. 368, Kidd v. Johnson, 100 U. S. 617-620, 25 L. ed. 769, 770; Hoar v. Chaney, and Pepper v. Labrot, supra; Massam v. Thorley's Cattle Food Co. L. R. 14 Ch. Div. 748-755.

The use made by the defendants of the trade-mark and trade-name is fraudulent and in violation of the plaintiff's right.

If the defendants' advertisements were calculated to mislead an unwary purchaser of the machines into the belief that he was purchasing those manufactured and sold by the plaintiff then the plaintiff is prima facie entitled to an injunction.

Marshall v. Pinkham, 53 Wis. 572, 586, 587, 38 Am. Rep. 756; Welch v. Knott, 4 Kay & J. 747; Millington v. Fox, 3 Myl. & C. 338; High, Injunctions, § 1087.

It is apparent that the defendants by their combinations and doings have attempted and are attempting to steal away the business of the plaintiff for the benefit of the defendants. Whenever and however this is done, whether by active misrepresentation or by silence when one should speak, or by any kind of springe, automatic or otherwise, to catch the unwary, a court of chancery will interfere and prevent the fraud.

Enoch Morgan's Son's Co. v. Wendover, 43 Fed. Rep. 420; Celleloid Mfg. Co. v. Cellonite Mfg. Co. 82 Fed. Rep. 97; McLean v. Fleming, 96 U. S. 245, 251, 252, 255, 24 L. ed. 828, 880, 881, 882; Newman v. Alford, 51 N. Y. 192, 10 Am. Rep. 588; Lawrence Mfg. Co. v. Tennessee Mfg. Co. 188 U. S. 587-549, 34 L. ed. 997-1004; Thompson v. Montgomery, L. R. 41 Ch. Div. 35-50; Partridge v. Menck, 3 Barb. Ch. 101, 103, 5 L. ed. 572, 573.

The fact that certain of the defendants are using their own names does not justify them.

Massam v. Thorley's Cattle Food Co. L. R. 14 Ch. Div. 748-760; Rogers v. Rogers, 1 New Eng. Rep. 411, 53 Conn. 121; William Rogers Mfg. Co. v. Rogers & S. Mfg. Co. 11 Fed. Rep. 495-499; Levy v. Walker, L. R. 10 Ch. Div. 447; Shaver v. Shaver, 54 Iowa, 208-211, 37 Am. Rep. 194; Croft v. Day, 7 Beav. 84.

Cassoday, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff, Fish Bros. Wagon Company, was incorporated in January, 1887, and since that time has been engaged in the manufacture of wagons at Racine, and selling the same throughout the country. The defendant La Belle Wagon Works and the other defendants have since June 17, 1890, been engaged in the manufacture of wagons at South Superior, and selling the same in different parts of the country. This suit was commenced in July last to restrain the defendants from using the words "Fish Bros.," "Fish Bros. & Co.," "Fish Bros. Wagons," and the picture of a fish as trade marks on the wagons, and in the advertisements of the defendants, on the ground that the plaintiff has the exclusive right to the same. The defendants, insisting upon the right to use such words, counterclaim an exclusive right to the same, and ask for an injunction accordingly. The history of the use of those words by the firm of Fish Bros and Fish Bros. & Co. as copartners 16 L. R. A.

at Racine up to the time when Mr. Case became the ostensible owner or mortgagee, and from that time down to October 16, 1883, in connection with the word "Agents," when he was appointed receiver of all the property and assets connected with that business, and from that time down to September 26, 1885, when he was superseded by Mr. Hall, as such receiver, and from that time down to 1887, when all the property and assets connected with the business were sold by the receiver and the parties interested to the plaintiff company, is sufficiently set forth in the foregoing statement. The first question presented is whether the plaintiff, by such purchase and subsequent use, acquired the right to continue the use of such words and pictures on their wagons and in their advertisements as trade marks, as indicated. Two of the Fish brothers, Titus G. and Edwin B., and Huggins, of the firm of Fish Bros. & Co., remained in the business as managers under such receivers, not only down to such transfer of the property and assets to the plaintiff company, but for more than two years thereafter, acting as directors and officers of the plaintiff company. Such conduct on their part was a continued sanction of the use of such words and symbols as trade marks on the plaintiff's wagons sold during the time throughout the country, and advertisements of the same. It is conceded that the office of a trade-mark is to point out the true source, origin, or ownership of the goods to which the mark is applied, or to point out and designate a dealer's place of business, distinguishing it from the business locality of other dealers. Marshall v. Pinkham, 53 Wis. 578, 38 Am. Rep. 756; Gessler v. Grieb, 80 Wis. 24. "Such trade mark usually includes the name of the manufacturer or dealer as the best designation of such source, origin, ownership, or place of business. . . . Sometimes, however, it consists of some novel device, arbitrary character, or fancy word, applied without special meaning, and which, by use and reputation, comes to serve the same purpose. Gessler v. Grieb, supra, and cases there cited. From these several authorities it is obvious that a trade-mark may perform one or more of three several functions, depending upon what it is and its manner of use. One of these is to point out the true source or origin of the goods to which the mark is applied. Manifestly, the words "Fish Bros." and "Fish Bros. & Co.," as used, pointed out Titus G. as the founder, and him and his brothers and other members of the firm as originators, of the particular make and style of wagon and vehicle first manufactured by them, and afterwards by them as agents, and subsequently by receivers and the plaintiff, under their supervision or with their acquiescence, at Racine. The mere fact that each and all of the Fishs withdrew from that business did not prevent the words mentioned from continuing to point to the old place of business and the old firm of Fish Bros. and Fish Bros. & Co. at Racine, as the true source and origin of their particular make and style of wagon and vehicle to which the plaintiff company succeeded, and continued to manufacture at Racine.

It is true that one of the functions of a trade-mark is to point out the true ownership of the goods or articles to which it is applied, and that the words "Fish Bros." and "Fish Bros. & Co." partially ceased to perform that office when Mr. Case became the ostensible owner or mortgagee, and still more so when the legal title passed to the receivers, respectively, and finally became extinct when the property and assets became vested in the plaintiff; but such extinction did not prevent those words from performing the two other functions of a trade-mark mentioned. As indicated, one of these is to point out and designate the dealer's place of business, distinguishing it from the business locality of other dealers. Such trade-mark is, in effect, an extension or perambulation of the dealer's trade sign. It advertises the home business to all who may observe the article on sale or in use in other parts of the country. It attaches to every such article on sale or in use the reputation it has acquired with the trade, and informs all observers desiring a like article where the manufacturer or dealer may be found. The picture of a fish and the manner of its use, as well as the words mentioned, designated, not only the plaintiff's place of business at Racine, but also the true source and origin of the make and style of the wagons and vehicles so previously made by Fish Bros. and Fish Bros. & Co., as agents, and under the receivers at Racine, and hence may fairly be regarded as trade-marks for the plaintiff, even after all the Fishs had withdrawn from that business. Upon the facts in this case, as found in the foregoing statement and the law applicable, we are constrained to hold that the plaintiff acquired the good-will of the business, including the right to use the picture and words mentioned as trade-marks, notwithstanding they were not specifically named in any of the transfers or conveyances to the plaintiff. Thus in Menendez v. Hott, 128 U. S. 514, 82 L. ed. 526, it was in effect held that when a partner retires from a firm, assenting to or acquiescing in the retention by the other partners of the old place of business and the future conduct of the business by them under the old firm name, the good-will of the business, including the trade-marks, remain with the latter, as of course. To the same effect, Merry v. Hoopes, 111 N. Y. 415; Re Welcome's Trade-Mark, L. R. 83 Ch. Div. 213; Hoxey v. Chaney, 148 Mass. 592, 3 New Eng. Rep. 709; Witthaus v. Braun, 44 Md. 303; Morgan v. Rogers, 19 Fed. Rep. 596.

In quoting from Lord Cranworth it was said, in Marshall v. Pinkham, 52 Wis. 581, 88 Am. Rep. 756, that "difficulties, however, may arise where the trade-mark consists merely of the name of the manufacturer. When he dies, those who succeed him (grandchildren, or married daughters, for instance), though they may not bear the same name, yet ordinarily continue to use the original name as a trade-mark, and they would be protected against any infringement of the exclusive right to that mark. They would be so protected because, according to the ways of the trade, they would be understood as meaning no more, by the use of their grandfather's or father's name, than that they were carrying on the manufacture formerly carried on by him. Nor would the case be necessarily different if, instead of passing into other hands by devolution of law, the manufacture were sold and assigned to a purchaser. The question in every such case must be whether the purchaser, in continuing the use of the original trade-mark, would, according to the ordinary usages of trade, be understood as saying more than that he was carrying on the same business as had been formerly carried on by the person whose name constituted the trade-mark." Leather Cloth Co. v. American Leather Cloth Co. 11 Jur. N. S. 513; Hazard v. Caswell, 93 N. Y. 259.

2. But the more serious question is whether such right is exclusive. Notwithstanding the good-will of an established and successful business may be sold in connection with the property and assets, so as to entitle the purchaser thereof to a certain limited protection, yet such transfer will not of itself alone be sufficient to preclude the seller from engaging in a separate and independent business of the same kind, and to solicit the customers of the old business, even in the same city or village, much less in a city or village 200 miles or more distant. "In order to preclude the seller from engaging in such separate and independent business, there must be an agreement to that effect, based upon a good and valuable consideration, and not contrary to law or public policy." Washburn v. Doech, 68 Wis. 439, and cases there cited; Williams v. Farrand, 88 Mich. 473; Vernon v. Hallam, L. R. 84 Ch. Div. 748. True, the transfer of the good-will to the plaintiff included the trade-marks; but it is to be remembered that a trade-mark gives no exclusive right to the device or article to which it is applied. It is in no sense a patent, and gives the proprietor thereof no exclusive right or monopoly of the thing manufactured and sold. The theory upon which actions for the infringement of trade-marks are maintained is that the law will not allow one person to sell his own goods as and for the goods of another. Marshall v. Pinkham, 52 Wis. 580, 88 Am. Rep. 756. To the same effect are Lawrence Mfg. Co. v. Tennessee Mfg. Co. 138 U. S. 537, 34 L. ed. 997; Jay v. Ladler L. R. 40 Ch. Div. 649.

It is only the dealer's own trade and his own business which are thus to be protected by his own trade-mark. Gessler v. Grieb, 80 Wis. 25. It does not relate to the nature, quality, or mode of operation of the thing sold, but merely to the designation, name, or mark by which it is sold. Such being the functions of a trade-mark, it is obvious that the plaintiff's right to the marks in question would not be infringed by the manufacture and sale of wagons and vehicles of similar make and style by any person, even in Racine, much less by the Fish brothers themselves at South Superior.

The right of the defendants to manufacture and sell similar wagons and vehicles being admitted, as it must, the question remains whether they also had the right to affix thereto the words "Fish Bros.," "Fish Bros. & Co.," and the picture of a fish. The picture of a fish, as used, must be regarded simply as another way of designating the surname "Fish" as the founder and originator of the particular make of wagons and vehicles thus manufactured and sold. In Burgess v. Burgess, 17 Eng. L. & Eq. 257, 292, John Burgess and his son William R., as partners under the firm name of John Burgess & Son, sold "Burgess'

Essence of Anchovies" at No. 107 Strand. The father died, and the son, William R., continued the same business, selling the same article at the same place, in the name of the old firm. William R. had a son William H., whom he employed in the business on a salary. Subsequently William H. left the employ of his father and went into the same business for himself, selling the same article under the same name, but at a lower price, and advertised the same as "Late of 107 Strand." The father filed a bill in equity to restrain the son from conducting that business in that way, and, in giving the opinion of the court, Knight Bruce, L. J., said: "All the queen's subjects have a right, if they will, to manufacture and sell pickles and sauces, and not the less that their fathers have done so before them. All the queen's subjects have a right to sell them in their own name, and not the less so that they bear the same name as their fathers; and nothing else has been done in that which is the question before us. . . . He [the defendant] carries on business under his own name, and sells essence of anchovy as 'Burgess' Essence of Anchovy,' which it is. . . . The only ground of complaint is the great celebrity which, during many years, has been possessed by the elder Burgess' essence of anchovy. That does not give him such exclusive right, such a monopoly, such a privilege, as to prevent any man from making essence of anchovy and selling it under his own name." The court did, however, restrain the son from advertising as "Late of 107 Strand." See Marshall v. Pinkham, 53 Wis. 588-586, 88 Am. Rep. 756, and other cases there cited. In Brown Chemical Co. v. Meyer, 189 U. S. 540, 35 L. ed. 247, it was held that "an ordinary surname cannot be appropriated as a trade-mark by any one person as against others of the same name who are using it for a legitimate purpose, although cases are not wanting of injunctions issued to restrain the use even of one's own name where a fraud upon another is manifestly intended, or where he has assigned or parted with his right to use it. The owner of a trade-mark bearing his own name, which is affixed to articles manufactured at a particular establishment, may, in selling the latter, confer upon the purchaser exclusive authority to use the trade-mark." In the case at bar there is no agreement giving such exclusive right to the plaintiff, and hence we must conclude that the defendants are at liberty in good faith to apply to the wagons and other vehicles manufactured by them the words "Fish Bros.," or "Fish Bros. & Co.," or the picture of a fish, provided they do it in a way not calculated to induce persons to buy the same as and for those manufactured by the plaintiff at Racine.

8. The defendants ask to enjoin the plaintiff from the use of those words and that device as a trade-mark in their business at Racine. In Thynne v. Shore, 45 Ch. Div. 577, the plaintiff, A. Thynne, sold his stock in trade and business of a baker, and the good-will thereof, including trade cards bearing the name of "A. Thynne, Baker," to the defendant. The deed and transfer contained an assignment of "all the beneficial interest and good-will of the said Arthur Thynne in the said trade or business," but contained no express assignment of the right to use the plaintiff's name. After the purchase the defendant used the trade cards bearing the plaintiff's name until they were exhausted, and then printed further trade cards bearing the plaintiff's name, as before. In an action to restrain the defendant from printing or publishing any such cards, or otherwise trading in the name of the plaintiff, it was held that the defendant, "by virtue of the assignment to him of the good-will of the business, was entitled to use the name of the plaintiff for the purpose of showing that the business was that formerly carried on by the plaintiff, but must not so exercise that right as to expose the plaintiff to liability, and held that, under the circumstances, an injunction must be granted to restrain the defendant from using the plaintiff's name in such a way as to expose him to any liability." In the case at bar we discover nothing to indicate that the plaintiff is using the words "Fish Bros." or "Fish Bros. & Co." in a manner to expose any of the defendants to liability. In fact no claim of that kind is made; and hence so long as the plaintiff uses those words honestly and truthfully, and for the legitimate purpose designed, the defendants have no ground for complaint. On the authorities cited, and others which might be cited, we are constrained to hold that the defendants are not entitled to an injunction against the plaintiff. On the same theory the defendants have the lawful right to honestly and truthfully state where they formerly resided, the experience they have respectively had, and the skill they, respectively, possess in the manufacture of wagons and other vehicles, but they have no right to represent their present business as the same which they formerly conducted at Racine. The circular addressed "To Our Old Customers and the Implement Trade," issued by Fish Bros. & Co., and mentioned in the complaint and the foregoing statement, is to a limited extent objectionable on this ground; as, for instance, where it speaks of their "change of location" and "firm name," Fish Bros., "formerly of Racine, Wis.," and for the "first time since 1888 we shall be able to furnish our patrons with the genuine Fish Bros. & Co. wagon, fully up to our old standard of that date." But the defendants may truthfully and in good faith publish the good qualities and material of the wagons and vehicles manufactured by them, and their superior facilities for the manufacture of the same at South Superior. In other words, their advertisements and marks must truthfully and in good faith refer to their own manufactures, trade and business, and not to those of the plaintiff.

The order of the circuit court is reversed, and the cause is remanded for further proceedings according to law.

Winslow, J., dissenting:

I agree that the words "Fish Bros. Wagon" and the rebus of the fish were trade names or labels appertaining to the business transacted at the Racine factory, and that the right to use such names or labels upon wagons was acquired by the plaintiff by its purchase of that business. Such a right is in its very nature exclusive, and, if the plaintiff owns it, the defendants manifestly do not own it. In my judgment, the defendants have no right to mark their wagons with either the words or the rebus. Probably they have the right to use the firm name Fish Bros. & Co., if they do not use it in such a way as to mislead the public, but this would not give them the right to use a trade-name or label on their wagons which is the distinctive mark of the product of the Racine factory, and the right to use which has passed from the defendants T. G. and E. B. Fish to that concern.

CONNECTICUT SUPREME COURT OF ERRORS.

Clapp SPOONER

v.

Daniel PHILLIPS et al.

(.....Conn.....)

Shares of increased stock which represent the increase in value of the property of an association resulting from the development of its business, and which are not, strictly speaking, the product of stock dividends and do not represent surplus earnings in the ordinary sense, and which are apportioned pro rata among existing shareholders, constitute capital and not income or dividends as between a person entitled to the income or dividends of the original shares during life and a person entitled at her death to the reconveyance of the stock.

(May 23, 1892.)

RESERVATION from the Superior Court for Fairfield County for the advice of the Supreme Court of Errors of an action brought to compel a transfer and delivery of certain shares of stock to the plaintiff. Judgment in favor of plaintiff advised.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. H. H. Knapp and C. R. Ingersoll, for plaintiff:

Even if the several "increases" made by the Adams Express Company in the number of shares into which its property was divided could be regarded as of the nature of "stock dividends," such increased number of shares would not belong to the life-tenant as "income" under the trust instrument.

It is for the corporation to determine whether its surplus earnings shall be capitalized and retained for corporate use, or divided as income among the stockholders. And nothing can be "income" to the stockholders that has not been made so by the act of the corporation.

Phelps v. Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank, 26 Conn. 269; Brinley v. Grou, 50 Conn. 66, 47 Am. Rep. 618.

NOTE.—Right to increased stock and stock dividends as between owner of capital and income.

The intention of the one creating the trust will govern so far as it can be ascertained. Clarkson v. Clarkson, 18 Barb. 646; Bushee v. Freeborn, 11 R. I. 150; Gibbons v. Mahon, 136 U. S. 549, 34 L. ed. 526; Minot v. Paine, 99 Mass. 101.

If his intention cannot be ascertained then the courts seem to agree that dividends which do not come from the earnings of capital invested belong to the remainderman. Re Curtis, 29 N. Y. S. R. 217.

Thus where a fund from which a stock dividend is declared has been created by a sale of a portion of its real estate the dividend should be treated as capital. Riggs v. Cragg, 26 Hun. 108.

So dividends representing the sum realized from the sale of part of the assets of the corporation belong to the capital. Vinton's App. 99 Pa. 441, 44 Am. Rep. 116; Wheeler v. Perry, 13 N. H. 307; Heard v. Eldredge, 109 Mass. 258.

So dividends declared in winding up the concern are capital. Gifford v. Thompson, 115 Mass. 478.

When neither of the above rules applies the courts have attempted to fix a rule to govern the right to the extra stock but the results reached are not entirely harmonious.

The English rule.

The question was brought before the English courts at an early date and it was decided that where government annuities had been received by a bank in exchange for subscriptions of funds to the public service, and they were divided among the stockholders of the bank, they went to the remainderman and the income from them to the tenant for life. Brander v. Brander, 4 Ves. Jr. 800.

And in case of a similar dividend by the Bank of Scotland it was ruled that extraordinary or unusual dividends go to augment the principal. Irrving v. Houston, 4 Paton, 80. App. Cas. 531.

In Paris v. Paris, 10 Ves. Jr. 185, it was ruled that there could be no distinction between dividends of money and stock, and that all extraordinary bonuses went to the remainderman.

But where the dividend appears to be an ordinary dividend it will go to the life-tenant although it has increased in amount from time to time according to the earnings of the corporation over what it was during the testator's lifetime. Barclay v. Wainwright, 14 Ves. Jr. 79.

Later, in Prioe v. Anderson, 15 Sim. 473, it was ruled that whatever the corporation declares to be dividends will go to the life-tenant, however large, and a dividend of twelve pounds ten shillings per cent was given to the life-tenant although the regular dividend was only two pounds ten shillings per cent.

Where in addition to the regular dividend a stock dividend is declared which represents profits which have been invested in the business, the new shares go to the remainderman. Re Barton's Trust, L. R. 5 Eq. 242.

So a bonus on an augmentation of the capital of bank stock goes to the remainderman. Hooper v. Roositer, 18 Price, 774.

In Re Bouch, L. R. 29 Ch. Div. 685, the corporation had accumulated a large amount of undivided profits. It finally decided to issue new shares of stock to an amount equal to the surplus and declare a dividend which should enable each stockholder to take and pay for the shares allotted to him. The trustees took the shares allotted to their estate and paid for them with their dividend. The nisi prius court awarded them all to the remainderman. The court on appeal regarded them as income. But the house of lords reversed the chancery division and held that the corporation had no intention to pay any sum as a dividend, but intended to ap-

Nor will the corporation be controlled by the courts in the reasonable exercise of this right.

Pratt v. Pratt, 38 Conn. 440; Rand v. Hubbard, 115 Mass. 461, 15 Am. Rep. 121; Richardson v. Richardson, 75 Me. 570, 46 Am. Rep. 428; Brown & Larned Petitioners, 14 R. I. 371; Greene v. Smith (R. I.) Index GG, 29; Re Kernoohan, 7 Cent. Rep. 90, 104 N. Y. 618; Williams v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 93 N. Y. 162; Beveridge v. New York Elev. R. Co. 2 L. R. A. 648, 112 N. Y. 27; Gibbons v. Mahon, 136 U. S. 549, 84 L. ed. 525.

The principle of the rule here sanctioned must apply to all associations of commercial partnership, with a joint-stock or capital, whether formally incorporated or not.

Lockwood v. Weston, 61 Conn. 211; People v. Wemple, 6 L. R. A. 803, 117 N. Y. 136; Boston & A. R. Co. v. Pearson, 128 Mass. 445.

Mr. M. W. Seymour also for plaintiff.

Messrs. Levi Warner and Lockwood & Beers, for Henry R. Parrott, defendant:

Upon the facts found, H. R. Parrott, administrator, is entitled to the new shares of stock of this association.

They are issues of shares based upon the earnings of the association, after the creation of the trust, and it seems to be the rule that when the interest, income, and dividends of a trust fund are given to a person, with no limitation as to the amount or value of the same, such interest, income, and dividends, whether in cash or in stock dividends based upon earnings, belong to the tenant for life.

Earpe's App. 28 Pa. 368; Willbank's App. 64

Pa. 256, 3 Am. Rep. 535; Moss's App. 83 Pa. 264, 24 Am. Rep. 164; Biddle's App. 99 Pa. 278; Vinton's App. 99 Pa. 434, 44 Am. Rep. 116; Robert's App. 92 Pa. 407; Thomson's App. 89 Pa. 36; Van Doren v. Olden, 19 N. J. Eq. 176, 97 Am. Dec. 650; Ashhurst v. Field, 26 N. J. Eq. 1; Lord v. Brooks, 52 N. H. 72; Richardson v. Richardson, 75 Me. 570, 46 Am. Rep. 428; Riggs v. Cragg, 26 Hun. 89, 103; Clarkson v. Clarkson, 18 Barb. 646; Cook, Stock & Stockholders, § 554 (a), note 2, and cases cited; 2 Beach, Priv. Corp. § 600; 1 Morawetz, Priv. Corp. §§ 463, 469.

The application of the rule above stated would seem to be more in accordance with the principles of justice and equity, than the adoption of the Massachusetts rule, sometimes called the rule in the Minot Case (Minot v. Paine, 99 Mass. 101), which is, to regard cash dividends however large as income, and stock dividends however made as capital, as the application of the former rule gives to the life-tenant all the earnings of the trust fund, which, in the absence of limitations, it is to be presumed the creator of the trust intended him to receive; and preserves the principal of the trust fund intact for the remainderman; while the latter rule may entirely defeat the purposes of the trust and increase the principal of the trust fund for the remainderman.

Cook, Stock & Stockholders, § 557.

Carpenter, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff, in 1857, transferred to Daniel Phillips, in trust for the use of Mary Ann Garproprate the undivided profits as an increase of capital stock which went to the remainderman. 12 App. Cas. 386. In the house of lords it is said that when a testator permits the subject of his disposition to remain as shares in a corporation which has power either to distribute its profits as dividends or to convert them into capital, and the corporation validly exercised this power, such action is binding on all parties interested, and consequently whatever is paid by the corporation as dividends goes to the tenant for life and whatever is appropriated as increase of capital inures to the benefit of the remainderman. And that a corporation which has power to increase its capital cannot be considered as having intended to convert any part of its profits into capital when it has in fact made no such increase.

In that case, the authority of the early case of Irving v. Houston, supra, is expressly recognized and distinguished on the ground that the Bank of Scotland had no power to increase its capital, so its failure to do so was not a conclusive test as to the character of the dividends. From these cases it would seem that by the present English rule whether a dividend is to be considered capital or income depends largely on the intention of the corporation, and that if it transforms surplus into capital and declares a stock dividend the new shares will go to the remainderman.

How far such rule followed in this country.

In Minot v. Paine, 99 Mass. 101, the court states that a simple rule is to regard cash dividends, however large, as income, and stock dividends, however made, as capital; and conclude that as the corporation has power to give to the shareholders either an increase of income or an increase of capital, according to the discretion of its directors, it would seem to follow that an increase of capital should be kept for the remaindermen and an increase of income should be paid to the tenant for life.

Where a corporation, some of whose stock was held in trust to pay the income for life, with remainder over, having on hand a large accumulated surplus of profits and it being unlawful to declare a stock dividend, voted to increase its stock to a sufficient amount to absorb the surplus, and then declared a dividend of an amount equal to the surplus, and authorized the treasurer to receive this dividend in payment of new shares, and issue certificates of stock therefor, it was held that this was in reality a stock dividend and belonged to the remaindermen, the court holding that the substance of the transaction is to determine its character. Daland v. Williams, 101 Mass. 571.

So where the corporation, in the stock of which the trust fund was invested, out of net earnings, bought in the market part of its own stock and invested other net earnings in property a large portion of which was not required for its immediate use, and voted to increase its stock and declared a dividend payable, one half in the shares which it had purchased and one half in cash, from the fund derived from the sale of its increased shares, it was held that so much of the dividend as was represented by the shares of old stock which the corporation distributed was income and should go to the life-tenant; but so much as was represented by the amount exchanged for increased capital was capital and should go to the remainderman. Leland v. Hayden, 102 Mass. 542.

So dividends declared for the purpose of enabling shareholders to take up the shares of new stock awarded to them on the increase of the capital, and which cannot be distributed directly because of a law prohibiting stock dividends, go to land for life, or until she should marry, ten shares of the stock of the Adams Express Company, a joint-stock association, organized under the laws of the state of New York, by an instrument in writing, as follows:

"Know all men by these presents, that I. Clapp Spooner, of the city of Bridgeport, in Fairfield county, Connecticut, for value received, have bargained, sold, assigned, and transferred, and by these presents do bargain, sell, assign, and transfer, unto Daniel Phillips, of Hartford, ten shares of the capital stock of the Adams Express Company, a joint-stock association, established under and by virtue of the laws of the state of New York, standing in my name on the books of said association, in trust to and for the use of Mrs. Mary Ann Garland, of said city of Bridgeport, to have and to hold the same as such trustee, and for the use aforesaid, and to pay over to her the dividends and income thereof during the natural life of the said Garland; and upon her decease, or sooner determination of said trust, to reconvey and transfer said stock to me, or my heirs, executors, and administrators; provided, this assignment is made upon the express condition that the said Garland shall remain sole, single, and unmarried during her life; and, further, that, in the event of her marriage, all right, title, and interest which she has in or to said stock, by virtue of said trust, shall thereafter cease and determine, and the same shall revert to me, my heirs, etc., as hereinbefore provided. In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and seal this 8d day of March, 1857. Clapp Spooner. [L. s.]"

The true consideration for said transfer and said instrument was friendship and affection. The ten shares were increased from time to time by the action of the association, so that, at the time of the death of Mrs. Garland, there stood in the name of Mr. Phillips sixty-six shares. The new shares were not, strictly speaking, the product of stock dividends, nor do they represent, in the ordinary sense, surplus earnings; but as the business of the concern increased by its extension over new routes, and into new territory, and perhaps by the purchase of local express firms, as the articles of association clearly contemplate, it is evident that the property and facilities for doing the increased business would also increase, the plant would become more valuable, and its earning capacity increase. In this state of things the association deemed it expedient to increase the number of shares into which its property was divided. This was done by apportioning the new shares, pro rata, among existing shareholders; so that after each increase, as before, each share represented a definite proportion of the property of the association, including the good-will. Mr. Spooner now claims that the sixty-six shares belong to him. Henry R. Parrott, the administrator of Mrs. Garland's estate, claims that the increase of stock, fifty-six shares, belongs to the estate, and should be transferred to him. The parties interpleaded pursuant to an order of the superior court. The facts were found by a committee, and the case was reserved for the advice of this court.

Our first inquiry is as to the intention of the the remaindermen. Rand v. Hubbell, 115 Mass. 451, 15 Am. Rep. 121.

But a cash dividend declared out of profits, by a corporation, indebted nearly to the amount of such profits for permanent improvements, which is exactly sufficient to pay for the proportion of the new stock at par, issued at the same time and allotted to each stockholder for subscription, and which the stockholders may elect to invest in the new stock, or may retain, selling the right to subscribe for the new stock, which is worth more than the par, belongs to the life-tenant, while the premium which can be derived from the sale of the right to subscribe belongs to the remainderman. Davis v. Jackson, 152 Mass. 58.

In Georgia stock dividends are part of the principal. Millen v. Guerrard, 67 Ga. 292.

Where a bank reduced the par value of its shares because of certain supposed losses, and afterwards upon recovering the sums supposed to have been lost issued additional stock to its shareholders, the tenant for life is not entitled to an unconditional certificate of the new shares. Parker v. Mason, 8 R. I. 427.

New shares of capital stock representing surplus property and distributed among stockholders are not to be considered as income and do not belong to the life-tenant. Brown's Petition, 14 R. I. 371.

Where the corporation doubles its original capital from its earnings and issues additional stock, the amount of the increase of which it divides among its stockholders in proportion to the amount originally held by them, the new shares belong to the remaindermen and not to life-tenant. Gibbons v. Mahon, 4 Mackey, 130, 54 Am. Rep. 262.

Where the corporation purchased its own stock paying for it by an issue of its own bonds, and distributed the stock so purchased among its remaining stockholders, such dividend does not pass to the life-tenant as net annual income but goes to the remainderman. Gilkey v. Paine, 6 New Eng. Rep. 554, 80 Me. 319.

In Gibbons v. Mahon, 136 U. S. 549, 34 L. ed. 525, Mr. Justice Gray very fully examines the authorities and concludes that the weight of authority is in favor of the proposition that whether or not the distribution of earnings is an apportionment of additional stock representing capital or division of profits and income depends upon the substance and intent of the action of the corporation as manifested by its vote or resolution, and that ordinarily a dividend declared in stock is to be deemed capital and a dividend in money is to be deemed income of each share. See also dictum in Richardson v. Richardson, 75 Me. 570, 45 Am. Rep. 423.

In Re Kernochan, 7 Cent. Rep. 90, 104 N. Y. 620, the court says the rule is a reasonable and proper one which limits the right of a stockholder to profits by the action of the managers of the corporation, and the late English cases are quoted with apparent approval.

The act of the corporation in capitalizing profits is binding upon all concerned. Hotchkiss v. Brainard Quarry Co. 58 Conn. 120.

Departures from the English rule.

In Gilkey v. Paine, 6 New Eng. Rep. 554, 80 Me. 319, it is stated that the effort has been made in this country generally to maintain the integrity of the capital and to give all surplus earnings in whatever form distributed to the life-tenant.

Where the fund represented by the stock dividend consisted of accumulations of profits for a long period of time before and after the death of the testator, all that had accumulated at his death is to be regarded as capital and all the rest is in-parties. What did Mr. Spooner intend to give, and what did he intend to reserve to himself? and what did Mrs. Garland suppose at the time that she was to receive? In this, as in other cases where the parties have put their transaction in writing, we must look to the writing itself for the purpose of ascertaining their intention. The language is very brief and very simple. "In trust to and for the use of Mrs. Mary Ann Garland." "To have and to hold the same, as such trustee and for the use aforesaid, and to pay over to her the dividends and income thereof during the natural life of the said Garland, and, upon her decease, . . . to reconvey and transfer said stock to me or my heirs," etc. This language can have but one interpretation. The use which includes and consists in fact of the dividends and income belonged to Mrs. Garland. The stock itself, which carries with it any appreciation in value, or any depreciation, belongs to Mr. Spooner. It will hardly be admitted by the representative of Mrs. Garland that if the business had been unfortunate, and the stock had depreciated in value, her estate should make good the deficiency. If Mr. Spooner should bear the loss in the one case, why should he not in the other receive the gain? Loss and gain in commercial enterprises usually fall to the lot of the same party. What is the ordinary meaning of the "use" of a thing? It is not the thing itself, or any part thereof, but is that which the thing will produce. If a house or other building, or any other form of real estate, it is the rent which can be obtained for it. If it is money, it is the interest which it will earn. If stock in a corporation or other form of commercial partnership, it is the profit which may be reasonably set apart, and is in fact set apart, by the management as the separate property of the shareholder. Such profit is usually denominated "dividends" or "income." But it may be said that the increase of shares represents earnings which might have been, and therefore ought to have been, distributed to the shareholders in the form of dividends; and that Mrs. Garland during her lifetime had, and her estate now has, an equitable claim to such earnings. That brings us directly to the real debatable question in the case.

We remark, in the first place, that, the transaction between Mr. Spooner and Mrs. Garland being in the nature of a gift, we fall to discover any ground on which equitable considerations can be urged in favor of Mrs. Garland, the donee. It is a question of intention,—the intention to be gathered from the transaction and the lan-come, regardless of the character of the dividend. Earp's App. 23 Pa. 338.

In Philadelphia, Trust, S. D. & Ins. Co's App. (Pa.) 24 W. N. C. 187, the entire dividend appears to have been awarded to the life-tenant regardless of whether the profits were accumulated before or after the death of testator.

In Smith's Estate, 140 Pa. 344, the court goes back to the doctrine established in Earp's App., 23 Pa. 338, and declares that to be the law of the state.

Where trust funds of which the income is to go to one person for life, with remainder over, are invested either by the trustees or by the testator in stock or shares of an incorporated company, the value of which consists in part of an accumulated surplus or undivided earnings laid up by the company, such additional value is part of the capital and together with the par value of the shares must be kept intact for the benefit of the remainderman. Van Doren v. Olden, 19 N. J. Eq. 178, 97 Am. Dec. 650; Ashhurst v. Field, 26 N. J. Eq. 11.

In New York the earlier cases decided that where after the death of the testator, money, the income of which was directed to be paid to the life-tenant, was invested in stock upon which a stock dividend was afterward declared, the original investment should be maintained intact and that all above what was necessary to effect such a result should be considered income and paid to the life-tenant. Clarkson v. Clarkson, 18 Barb. 648; Simpson v. Moore, 30 Barb. 637.

This of course was an entirely different question from the one under discussion, but those cases have been used as authority for the rule afterwards followed by the lower courts in that state.

Stock dividends issued to the holders of stock of a corporation which is about to consolidate with another one for the purpose of equalizing the stock of the two are capital. Goldsmith v. Swift, 26 Hun, 201.

But stock dividends representing earnings are income. Ibid.

Dividends created by and declared from the surplus earnings of the company are income (Riggs v. Cragg, 26 Hun, 103), and belong to the life-tenant. Re Warren, 38 N. Y. S. R. 534.

16 L. R. A.

Stock dividends belong to the life-tenant. Re Woodruff's Estate, Tucker, 55.

To what extent these decisions represent the present rule in New York is doubtful. See Re Kernochan, 7 Cent. Rep. 90, 104 N. Y. 629; Gibbons v. Mahon, 126 U. S. 549, 34 L. ed. 525.

The question is at present before the court of appeals of Kentucky, upon appeal from the chancellor, who awarded the stock dividends to the life-tenant. Hite v. Hite, 2 Ry. & Corp. L. J. 558.

Right to subscribe for stock.

Options to subscribe for new stock belong to the remainderman. Re Kernochan, 7 Cent. Rep. 90, 104 N. Y. 630.

The right to take and pay for new shares at par is principal. Greene v. Smith (R. L.) Index GG, 29.

Profits realized by selling the right to take new shares go into the principal. Re Bromley, 55 L. T. N. S. 145; Atkins v. Albree, 12 Allen, 339; Brinley v. Grou, 50 Conn. 66, 47 Am. Rep. 618.

In the absence of evidence that the right to take new shares arises from earnings of the corporation it will be regarded as capital. Peirce v. Burroughs, 58 N. H. 302.

In contrast with the above it has been held in Pennsylvania that the advantage arising from the right to subscribe for new stock is income. Wiltbank's App. 64 Pa. 260, 3 Am. Rep. 585.

Unless by the increase of stock the value of the original shares is diminished, in which event enough of the profit realized by the sale will go to the remainderman to make good the diminution of his original shares. Moss's App. 33 Pa. 270, 24 Am. Rep. 164.

And Biddle's App., 39 Pa. 233, amounts practically to an adoption of the rule recognized in other jurisdictions, that the right to subscribe for new shares is capital.

But where the corporation purchased shares of its own stock with profits made after the stockholder's death and distributed them to its stockholders at par the profits made by the trustees by the purchase of the shares allotted to the estate were decreed to belong to the life-tenant. Thompson's Estate, 11 W. N. C. 483.

H. P. F.

guage of the instrument creating the gift. And here it is proper to add that the intention we are seeking after is mainly the intention of the donor. In mutual contracts, where both parties expect to derive some benefit, we look for the intention of both parties; and anything of which it can be said that either party did not agree to will not be considered as within the intention. Not so with a gift. That is not the subject of negotiations. It is the act of one party. He alone fixes the terms and conditions to please himself. The other simply accepts or rejects. He ordinarily is not in a situation to impose conditions, or even to ask for more favorable terms. The law raises no presumptions and no equities in favor of the donee which are not expressed by, or fairly inferred from, the language or conduct of the donor. As in wills it is the intention of the testator which governs, so in gifts it is the intention of the giver which prevails.

Let us examine this record with some care, for the purpose of discovering what the will of Mr. Spooner was with respect to these earnings, conceding that the new shares represent earnings. We have already examined the instrument creating the trust, for another purpose. We will add, in this connection, that we find in it no language sufficiently comprehensive to include earnings which the management never set apart to be the separate property of the shareholder, nor in any other way placed to his credit. Until some such act is done, the earnings can, in no proper sense, be said to be the separate property of the individual shareholder. Until then they are within the exclusive control, and must be regarded as the property, of the association. The declaration of a stock dividend is not sufficient. That merely gives the receiver of the stock certain rights, but it gives him no title to any portion of the property of the corporation, and no individual right to control it, or interfere with its management. If it had been intended that Mrs. Garland should have all the earnings, even though they remained a part of the common property, it would have been very easy to have expressed that intention. A few words of general, but comprehensive, import—"all stock dividends," "all earnings, whether capitalized or not," or any similar words—would have been sufficient. The absence of any such language is significant.

The use of the stock seems to be limited to the receipt of dividends and income. The word "dividends," if unqualified, signifies dividends payable in money. The word "income" has a broader meaning, but hardly broad enough to include things not separated in some way from the principal. It is not synonymous with "increase." The value of stock may be increased by good management, prospects of business, and the like. But such increase is not income. It may also be increased by an accumulation of surplus; but so long as that surplus is retained by the corporation, either as surplus or increased stock, it can, in no proper sense, be called "income." It may become producing, but it is not income. Is there anything in the situation of the parties, the object they had in view, or in the circumstances attending the transaction which will justify the inference that Mr. Spooner intended that Mrs. Garland should have any portion of the property in controversy as her own? On the contrary, do they not all unite in suggesting that the interpretation we have placed upon the transaction is the correct one? Mrs. Garland was the mother of his deceased wife. In consideration of "friendship and affection" purely, he was desirous of contributing towards her support. Beyond the power of revocation he placed property in the hands of a trustee that would, in all probability, yield a cash income at stated intervals. He carefully provided that she should be relieved from all care and responsibility in the management of the property. We may presume that he intended that she should have the benefit of the increased income arising from any probable increase in the number of shares, by stock dividends or otherwise; for that is precisely what she did receive without objection from any source. On the other hand, we may not presume that he intended that she should receive the increment of stock as her own absolute property; for that was precisely what she did not receive. At one time, about fifteen years since, she claimed it, but her claim was denied, and she did not further press it,—a pretty strong instance of a practical construction of a transaction by the parties. And now, after so long a time, and after the death of Mrs. Garland, her administrator renews the claim. We cannot see that the claim in his hands is stronger or more equitable than it was when presented by Mrs. Garland. Mr. Spooner's relation to the association, his knowledge of its business and prospects, and his anticipations of gain from it are circumstances which ought not to be overlooked. The association was formed in 1854. Mr. Spooner was one of the original promoters. The fact is not expressly found, yet we can perceive, and may safely assume, that the association was formed by a combination of several companies, firms, and individuals previously engaged in the express business; the object being to bring the business, then extensively carried on over a large part of the United States, under one management. It will be observed that the articles provide for no definite amount of capital, and there is no par value to the shares of stock. It would seem that the property then invested or employed in the business was brought together in one concern, and, either with or without an appraisal, was divided into 12,000 shares, and the shares divided among the persons concerned according to their respective interests, except about 1,200 shares, which were to belong to the association. It is easy to see that the advantages resulting from the consolidation would cause the business to increase to such an extent that it would hardly fail to be profitable. Moreover, it was foreseen that the business of the concern would be likely to increase in another direction. That was provided for in the following extract from the articles of association: "And for the purpose of enabling us to carry on our said business more advantageously to the public, and satisfactorily to ourselves, other persons and corporations or companies who shall contribute to the joint stock, or shall be permitted to acquire interests in the business of the company, shall be admitted to participate in its profits and share in its losses, according to the stipulation herein contained." It is also provided that the number of shares "may from time to time be increased or diminished." Accordingly the ninth article provides that "the board of managers may, with the consent in writing of three fourths in interest of the shareholders, from time to time increase the number of shares of the association, and, when so increased, may issue the increased shares to the existing shareholders, pro rata, according to their existing interests, or dispose thereof to such others as the said board may approve, and the money or property received therefor be applied to the benefit of the association."

It is impossible for us to perceive any ground on which we can presume that Mr. Spooner intended that Mrs. Garland should have any of the increased shares thus provided for. We have little space, and perhaps there is little occasion, to speak of the legal questions discussed. We believe that the question in this case, and in all cases of like character, is one of intent. Life estates are more frequently created by will, sometimes by donation, and sometimes by contract. However created, the main question is, What did the testator, the donor, or the contracting parties, as the case may be, intend? When that intention is discovered, it should control. If we are correct in the views hereinbefore expressed, we have really no occasion to go further. But if wrong, or if there is room for doubt, then, in some aspects of the case, it may be important to consider the legal questions. It is well settled in this state that a corporation, an association in the nature of a corporation, and even an ordinary business partnership, own the undivided earnings of the business, rather than the stockholders, shareholders, or partners; also that the latter cannot become the separate owners of any part of the common property until set apart by the management for that purpose, by declaring a dividend or otherwise; also that the courts will, in the absence of fraud, allow the management to exercise its powers and duties, and will not interfere to compel dividends at the instance of a minority in interest, and much less at the instance of one entitled only to the use of stock for life, as a gift, against the interest of a donor. It follows conclusively that in the case of a concern continuing a successful business, and after a life estate is ended the courts will not, except for very strong reasons, go back for a period of a quarter of a century or more, and treat assets, which the company has converted into stock for the benefit of the donor, as dividends for the benefit of the estate of the life-tenant. It need hardly be added that no reason whatever appears in the present case why the court should take that course.

A reference to a few only of the many cases bearing upon this general subject will suffice. In Pratt v. Pratt, 83 Conn. 448, this court refused to interfere in behalf of a minority of stockholders, and restrain the company from using a large surplus as capital in erecting a large building, etc., and also refused to decree a distribution of the surplus in dividends. If the court will not require the company to make a dividend, it is difficult to see upon what principle it will itself make a dividend. In Phelps v. Farmers & M. Bank, 26 Conn. 16 L. R. A.

269, it was held that "the profits of a bank, no matter when made, until separated from the stock by declaring a dividend, are mere increment and augmentation of the stock. They are properly stock themselves, composing a part of the stock of the bank, and will pass with the stock under that name, either by contract or by levy of execution." In Brimley v. Grou, 50 Conn. 66, 47 Am. Rep. 618, the facts were briefly these: A testator left to trustees for his four children, equally during their lives, the "rents, dividends, increase, and income thereof," to be paid to them annually. Some years later the accumulated profits of a fire insurance company, of which the trustees held a large amount of stock, equaled the capital of the company. The company then increased its capital from three to four millions, apportioning the new shares pro rata among the stockholders at par. The trustees subscribed for a portion of the shares to which they were entitled, and sold the right to subscribe for the remaining shares at a considerable premium. The court held that the right to subscribe for the new shares, the profit on a sale of the right, and the new shares taken went to the trustees as a part of the principal of the fund, and not to the children as a part of the income. See also Hotchkiss v. Brainerd Quarry Co. 58 Conn. 120. It is conceded that the law of Massachusetts is in substantial harmony with our own. We therefore content ourselves with referring to two cases: Minot v. Paine, 99 Mass. 101; Rand v. Hubbell, 115 Mass. 461, 15 Am. Rep. 121. We quote at some length from the cases in the state of New York, inasmuch as it is claimed that the law of that state differs from our own. We think it is substantially the same. In Hyatt v. Allen, 56 N. Y. 553, the head note is: "A shareholder in a corporation has no legal title to its property or profits until a division is made; and a contract by him in reference to dividends and profits upon his stock includes only dividends or profits ascertained and declared by the company and allotted to the stockholders, and not profits to be ascertained by third persons or courts of justice, upon an investigation of the accounts and transactions of the company." In Re Kernochan, 104 N. Y. 618, 7 Cent. Rep. 90, the court says: "As soon as the profits on shares of stock are ascertained and declared, they cease to be the property of the company, and the owner of the shares becomes entitled to the dividend. It at once forms part of his estate. The fact that they are made payable at a future time is immaterial. The dividend to which the life tenant may be entitled as income can only be that which the company declares after that relation is acquired." On another point in the same case it is said: "The referee made the apportionment in question by ascertaining how much was earned before and how much after the death of the testator, and so doing applied a rule which may be founded on general equity, viz., that when a fund is given for life to one beneficiary, and remainder over, the first shall have its earnings after his life tenancy begins, and the remainderman the balance. I find nothing in the will which indicates that the testator intended any such investigation or division, or that any other than the ordinary rule, which gives cash dividends declared from accumulated earnings or profits to the life tenant, should be applied. The direction to his executors is to receive the rents, interest, and income of his estate, and apply the net amount of such rents or other income . . . to the use of his wife. From the shares in question no income could accrue, no profits arise to the holder until ascertained and declared by the company, and allotted to the shareholder, and that act should be deemed to have been in the mind of the testator, and not the earnings or profits as ascertained by a third person, or a court, upon an investigation of the business and affairs of the company, either upon an inspection of their books or otherwise." In Beveridge v. New York Elev. R. Co., 112 N. Y. 27, 2 L. R. A. 648, the court says: "A shareholder in a corporation has no legal title to the property or profits of the corporation until a division is made or a dividend declared. He acquires no right or title to the accumulated gains from the revenues of the corporation, which entitles him to sue for his aliquot share of dividends. Until divided by the directors or trustees of the corporation, all of its property is held in joint ownership by the corporators, and no several right is possessed by the individual stockholder until a dividend is declared. The declaration of a dividend from a surplus, or a division of profits, is within those discretionary powers of the directors or trustees, which will not be controlled by the courts. Williams v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 93 N. Y. 162."

An important case on this subject is Gibbons v. Mahon, 136 U. S. 549, 34 L. ed. 525, which so thoroughly sustains the views we entertain that we quote from it at some length. It is there said: "Money earned by a corporation remains the property of the corporation, and does not become the property of the stockholders, unless and until it is distributed among them by the corporation. The corporation may treat it and deal with it either as profits of its business or as an addition to its capital. Acting in good faith and for the best interests of all concerned, the corporation may distribute its earnings at once to the stockholders as income; or it may reserve part of the earnings of a prosperous year to make up for a possible lack of profits in future years; or it may retain portions of its earnings, and allow them to accumulate, and then invest them in its own works and plant, so as to secure and increase the permanent value of its property.

"Which of these courses shall be pursued is to be determined by the directors, with due regard to the condition of the company's property and affairs as a whole; and, unless in case of fraud or bad faith on their part, their discretion in this respect cannot be controlled by the courts, even at the suit of owners of pre-16 L. R. A.

ferred stock, entitled by express agreement with the corporation to dividends at a certain yearly rate, 'in preference to the payment of any dividend on the common stock, but dependent on the profits of each particular year, as declared by the board of directors.'

"Reserved and accumulated earnings, so long as they are held and invested by the corporation, being part of its corporate property, it follows that the interest therein, represented by each share, is capital, and not income, of that share, as between the tenant for life and remainderman, legal or equitable thereof.

"Whether the gains and profits of a corporation should be so invested and apportioned as to increase the value of each share of stock, for the benefit of all persons interested in it, either for a term of life or of years, or by way of remainder in fee, or should be distributed and paid out as income, to the tenant for life or for years, excluding the remainderman from any participation therein, is a question to be determined by the action of the corporation itself, at such times and in such manner as the fair and honest administration of its whole property and business may require or permit, and by a rule applicable to all holders of like shares of its stock; and cannot, without producing great embarrassment and inconvenience, be left open to be tried and determined by the courts, as often as it may be litigated between persons claiming successive interests under a trust created by the will of a single shareholder, and by a distinct and separate investigation," etc. The case then goes on to hold that, in ascertaining the rights of such persons, the intention of the testator, so far as manifested, must, of course, control; and that, "when he has given no special direction upon the question as to what shall be considered principal and what income, he must be presumed to have had in view the lawful power of the corporation over the use and apportionment of its earnings, and to have intended that the determination of that question should depend upon the regular action of the corporation with regard to all its shares." It then holds that "ordinarily a dividend declared in stock is to be deemed capital, and a dividend in money is to be deemed income of such share."

The superior court is advised that the equitable title to said sixty-six shares of the Adams Express Company is in Clapp Spooner, and that said Daniel Phillips should be required to transfer and deliver to said Spooner, by proper instrument, said sixty-six shares, together with all dividends received by him since the death of Mrs. Garland, (subject to the payment of the charges stated in the preliminary order), and to give judgment accordingly.

The other Judges concurred.

NEBRASKA SUPREME COURT.

WALTON PLOW CO., Appt.,

v.

L. S. CAMPBELL et al.

(.....Neb.....)

- *1. In an action to foreclose a real-estate mortgage, the petition alleges the execution and delivery of the note to secure which the mortgage was given, and sets out a copy of the note. Held, that evidence showing that the note has been materially altered after its execution is admissible, under an answer denying each and every allegation contained in the petition.
2. An unauthorized alteration of a non-negotiable promissory note by the payee, after the execution thereof, by the insertion of the word "bearer" after the name of the payee, is a material alteration which will nullify the instrument.
3. Where a promissory note has been altered by the payee in a material matter, and with a fraudulent purpose, no recovery can be had upon the instrument, or upon the original consideration for which it was given.
4. The fraudulent alteration of a promissory note secured by a mortgage cancels the debt which it evidenced, and discharges the mortgage.

(July 1, 1902.)

APPPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the District Court for Phelps County in

*Head notes by NORVAL, J.

NOTE.—Effect on mortgage of alteration of note secured by it.

In Gillett v. Powell, 1 Speers, Eq. 144, which seems to be the first case in which this question was treated, a person purchased some property at an administrator's sale and gave a bond for the amount, and on the same day executed a mortgage which did not refer to the bond. The penalty of the bond was subsequently raised so as to render it void, but the court held that this did not prevent an enforcement of the mortgage. Several attempts have been made in South Carolina to distinguish subsequent cases from that one and take them out of the rule established in it, but thus far none of them seem to have succeeded.

In Plyler v. Elliott, 19 S. C. 264, the same rule was followed, the court apparently placing the decision on the ground that the mortgage was an independent security for the debt and could be enforced although the note had been destroyed.

Again, in Smith v. Smith, 27 S. C. 166, 13 Am. St. Rep. 683, the question arose and an attempt was made to take the case out of the rule established in the Gillett Case by contending that in the one case the mortgage did not refer to the note, while in the other it did. But that fact was held to be immaterial. It was also contended that in the Gillett Case, the alteration was innocent while in the case at bar it was fraudulent, but the court held that there was nothing to show that the alteration in the Gillett Case had not been fraudulent.

In the next case in which the question arose, Heath v. Blake, 28 S. C. 406, it appeared that the alteration was made with no intention of fraud and it was held that under those circumstances the mortgage was not avoided.

In marked contrast with the above cases is the 16 L. R. A.

favor of defendants in an action brought to foreclose a mortgage. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinions.

Messrs. Atkinson & Doty, for appellant:

An alteration of an instrument is not material which does not change its meaning. If what is written upon or erased from the instrument had no tendency to produce this result or to mislead any person it is not an alteration.

Oliver v. Hawley, 5 Neb. 444.

Where the alteration was not fraudulently made, although the identity of the instrument may be destroyed, it ought not to cancel the debt of which the instrument was merely the evidence.

Vogle v. Ripper, 84 Ill. 100, 85 Am. Dec. 298; Crowell v. Labree, 81 Me. 44; Wilson v. Hayes, 4 L. R. A. 196, 40 Minn. 581, 12 Am. St. Rep. 758; Shepherd v. Whetstone, 51 Iowa, 457; Rowley v. Jewett, 56 Iowa, 492.

The assignment made, not only of the note but of the mortgage given to secure the note to the plaintiff, was entirely sufficient to enable the plaintiff to maintain this suit.

First Nat. Bank of Port Huron v. Carson, 60 Mich. 432; Weaver v. Bromley, 8 West. Rep. 190, 65 Mich. 212.

An alteration that is not material, i. e., does not give the instrument a different legal effect, will not avoid it.

Greenl. Ev. § 655; Robinson v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 25 Iowa, 480; Briscoe v. Reynolds, 51 Iowa, Indiana rule where, it would seem, an alteration of the note which will destroy it whether fraudulent or not is sufficient to defeat an action on the mortgage. Tate v. Fletcher, 77 Ind. 105; Sherman v. Sherman, 8 Ind. 337.

So releasing one of the makers of the note will discharge from the lien of the mortgage the property of one who joined in it as surety and who did not know of or consent to the release. Crawford v. Hazelrigg, 2 L. R. A. 139, 117 Ind. 63.

In Vogle v. Ripper, 84 Ill. 100, 85 Am. Dec. 298, the rule is stated as follows: Where a mortgagee has released or discharged the debt by a fraudulent alteration or destruction of the written evidence of it he ought not to be permitted to sustain a suit for its recovery, but where the alteration is not fraudulent, although the identity of the instrument may be destroyed, it should not cancel the debt of which the instrument was merely evidence.

Hence a mortgage executed to secure a promissory note which has been altered so as to destroy it is not, in the absence of fraud, affected by the alteration and may be enforced. Clough v. Seay, 49 Iowa, 111; Elliott v. Blair, 47 Ill. 242.

And where there is no ground for a belief that the alteration was made for any evil purpose the mortgage may be enforced. Gillette v. Smith, 18 Hun, 10.

In Mersman v. Werges, 112 U. S. 139, 28 L. ed. 641, the court decides that adding the name of a married woman to the note which her husband has given and which is secured by a mortgage in which her husband and herself joined, is not such an alteration of the note as to release her liability on the mortgage,—reversing 1 McCrary, 522.

H. P. F.

678; Church v. Fowle, 2 New Eng. Rep. 862, 143 Mass. 12.

There is no evidence in this case that the alteration, if made at all, was made fraudulently, and with a view to obtain an improper advantage. The plaintiff in this case, as assignee of said Duperon, is justly entitled to whatever equity the assignor had in the property at that time.

State Sav. Bank of St. Joseph v. Schaffer, 9 Neb. 1.

The plaintiff had a remedy in an action on the mortgage if the note was barred.

Hale v. Christy, 8 Neb. 264; Longworth v. Taylor, 1 McLean, 895; Gillette v. Smith, 18 Hun, 10.

Alteration of a note, secured by a mortgage, while it avoids such note does not affect the mortgage, and the latter may be enforced to compel payment of the debt for which the note was given.

Smith v. Smith, 27 S. C. 166, 13 Am. St. Rep. 633; Wilson v. Hayes, 4 L. R. A. 196, 40 Minn. 531, 12 Am. St. Rep. 758; Vogel v. Ripper, 84 Ill. 100, 85 Am. Dec. 298; Jones, Mortg. § 353; Olough v. Seay, 49 Iowa, 111.

Messrs. Sam A. Dravo and Leese & Stewart for appellees.

Norval, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action to foreclose a real-estate mortgage given by L. S. Campbell and wife to one D. H. Duperon, to secure the payment of a promissory note for the sum of $100, with interest at 10 per cent from date thereof. Plaintiff is the owner and holder of said note and mortgage. The defendants answered, denying each and every allegation of the petition. The lower court found the issues in favor of the defendants, and dismissed the action. The court permitted the defendants, over plaintiff's objection, to introduce testimony tending to prove that the note had been materially altered since its execution, by writing in the word "bearer," although the note was non-negotiable when signed. At the close of the trial the defendants, with the permission of the court, filed an amended answer denying each and every allegation of the petition, and alleging that, on or about the date of the note sued on, they executed and delivered to D. H. Duperon a note calling for $100, due in six months from date; that the note read "D. H. Duperon," the words "or order" being erased by defendants before the same was signed; that after the defendants signed said note, and without their consent, the word "bearer" was fraudulently written therein over the words erased.

The first question presented for our decision is, Was evidence showing that the note had been altered after its execution admissible under the general denial in the original answer? We think the answer must be in the affirmative. The petition alleges the execution and delivery of the note by the defendants, and the instrument is set out in the body of the pleading in its altered form. The general denial put in issue every material averment of the petition, and the affirmative was upon the plaintiff to prove the making and delivery of the identical note mentioned in the petition, and so continued to the close of the case. Donovan v. Fowler, 17 Neb. 247; First Nat. Bank of Madison v. Carson, 80 Neb. 107. Under a general denial, the defendants were entitled to disprove the material facts stated in the petition. Evidence that they did not sign the instrument sued, or that it had been materially altered after delivery, was clearly admissible under the original answer. It is only affirmative defenses that the Code requires to be pleaded. The defense of alteration was not new matter required to be set up in the answer. If the note was altered without defendant's consent, after its execution and delivery, by inserting therein the word "bearer," then it was not their note, and evidence tending to establish such fact tended to rebut or disprove the evidence offered by the plaintiff that the defendants made the note described in the petition and introduced on the trial. We do not think it was necessary to allege the alteration in the answer, and the court did not err in receiving the evidence offered on the question under the general denial. Abbott, Tr. Ev. 407; Boomer v. Koon, 6 Hun, 645; Lincoln v. Lincoln, 12 Gray, 45. It follows from what has been said that plaintiff was not prejudiced by the filing of the amended answer, as it presented no issue not raised by the general denial of the first answer. No objection was made to the granting of permission to file an amended answer; therefore the defendants cannot now urge the ruling as a ground for reversing the case. It is undisputed that the note when signed by defendants was non-negotiable, and that after its delivery, but before the instrument came into the possession of plaintiff, it was changed by inserting the word "bearer." The writing of this word in the body of the note changed its character, and invalidated the instrument. The alteration is a material one, and, being unauthorized by the makers, no action could be maintained thereon. Booth v. Powers, 56 Y. Y. 22; Union Nat. Bank v. Roberts, 45 Wis. 878; Croswell v. Labree, 81 Me. 44; McCauley v. Gordon, 64 Ga. 221, 87 Am. Rep. 68; Morehead v. Parkersburg Nat. Bank, 5 W. Va. 74; Needles v. Shaffer, 60 Iowa, 65.

But it is contended by counsel for appellant that the payee having indorsed the note, and plaintiff having received the same in good faith, in the usual course of business, the indorsee has a right of action upon the note, notwithstanding the alteration thereof. We cannot agree with counsel in this contention. This court has more than once held that the unauthorized material alteration of a negotiable note by the payee nullifies the instrument, even in the hands of a bona fide holder. Palmer v. Largent, 5 Neb. 223, 25 Am. Rep. 479; Brown v. Straw, 6 Neb. 536, 29 Am. Rep. 869; Davis v. Henry, 18 Neb. 497.

It is finally insisted the district court erred in ruling that the mortgage given to secure the note was no lien upon the property described in the mortgage; in other words, that plaintiff was entitled to a decree of foreclosure, notwithstanding the alteration of the note it was given to secure. Authorities are to be found which sustain the position contended for by counsel. The leading case so holding is Gillett v. Powell, 1 Speers, Eq. 144. This case was followed by the Supreme Court of South Carolina in Plyler v. Elliott, 19 S. C. 257, and Smith v. Smith, 27 S. C. 166. The court of last resort in the state of Illinois had held that where a mortgagee has fraudulently made a material alteration of a note, to secure which the mortgage was executed, the debt is thereby discharged and defeats a foreclosure of the mortgage; but if the alteration, although material, was not made with a fraudulent purpose, it will not have that effect. Vogle v. Ripper, 84 Ill. 100, 85 Am. Dec. 298; Elliott v. Blair, 47 Ill. 842. So far as we are advised, the question is now presented to this court for the first time.

The effect of the material alteration of a note depends upon the person by whom, and the intention with which, it was made. If changed by a stranger, without the consent of the parties to the instrument, the rights of the holder will not be affected thereby. The material alteration of a note by the payee, although made without any fraudulent intent, renders the paper void. Yet the holder may recover in an action brought upon the original consideration. The effect of an alteration of such paper, innocently made, under an honest mistake of right, was considered by this court in State Sav. Bank of St. Joseph v. Shafer, 9 Neb. 1, and it was there ruled that, while the alteration vitiates the instrument, it would not defeat a recovery upon the original consideration for which such note was given. The weight of authority is in favor of the doctrine that a fraudulent alteration of a promissory note in a material matter not only avoids the instrument, but works a forfeiture of the debt for which it was executed. In such case no recovery can be had in any form of action. The law will not permit the holder to take the chances of gain by fraudulently altering the note, without risk of loss in case of detection. Dan. Neg. Inst. § 1410a; Neuell v. Mayberry, 8 Leigh, 250, 28 Am. Dec. 261; Martindale v. Follet, 1 N. H. 95; Smith v. Mace, 44 N. H. 553; Bigelow v. Stilphen, 35 Vt. 521; Whitmer v. Frye, 10 Mo. 349; Waring v. Smyth, 2 Barb. Ch. 135, 5 L. ed. 586; Warder v. Willyard, 46 Minn. 581.

It is inferable from the record that the insertion of the word "bearer" was not made for an honest purpose. Applying the above principles to the case at bar, we are unable to perceive upon what ground it can be held that the mortgage should be enforced. If the fraudulent alteration avoided the note and extinguished the debt, it also discharged the mortgage by which it was secured. The cancellation of the debt released the lien of the mortgage. The plaintiff not only lost his right of action on the note, but on the mortgage as well. Sherman v. Sherman, 3 Ind. 337; Tate v. Fletcher, 77 Ind. 102; McCorkle v. Doby, 1 Strobb. L. 896. In Gillett v. Powell, supra, it does not appear that the alteration was fraudulently made; hence that case is not an authority against the principle 16 L. R. A.

for which we contend. The case of Plyler v. Elliott, supra, was decided by a divided court. The opinion of the majority is placed upon the untenable ground that the fraudulent material alteration of a note does not discharge the debt, but merely takes away all remedy upon the note itself. The writer of that opinion, in substance, contends that as to the effect upon the debt, there is no substantial difference between that of a note barred by the Statute of Limitations, and that of one made void by fraudulent alteration, and that both are controlled by the same principle of law. In this it seems to us that the author of the opinion has fallen into a grave error. The Statute of Limitations only takes away the remedy, while the fraudulent alteration of a note goes further. It reaches to the debt itself, and extinguishes it. The fact that an action can be brought on a mortgage, though the note which it secures is barred, is no ground for holding that the mortgage cannot be enforced in this case to compel the payment of the debt for which the altered note was given. A barred note secured by a mortgage continues as evidence of debt until the statute runs against the mortgage. Cheney v. Woodruff, 20 Neb. 124; Cheney v. Janssen, 20 Neb. 128.

It is the judgment of this court that the judgment appealed from be affirmed.

Post, J. concurs.

Maxwell, Ch. J., dissenting:

I am unable to give my assent to the decision of the majority of the court, for the following reasons: The plaintiff brought an action in the district court of Phelps county, against the defendants, to foreclose a mortgage upon real estate. The action was brought upon the 19th day of December, 1889. No answer was filed until the 7th day of April, 1890, which seems to have been the day on which the trial took place, when the defendants, by leave of court, filed a general denial. The note appears to have been introduced in evidence without objection. The defendant L. S. Campbell was called as a witness in his own behalf, and testified as follows: "Question. State if that note is in the same condition it was when you signed it. (Counsel for plaintiff objects as immaterial, irrelevant, and incompetent. Overruled. Plaintiff excepts.) Answer. No, sir. Q. What change has been made, if any? (Objected to as immaterial, irrelevant, and incompetent. Overruled. Plaintiff excepts.) A. The word 'bearer' has been written in there. Q. Any words been erased out,—were the words 'or order' erased? A. Yes, sir; I erased them myself." Upon this evidence the court held that there was an alteration, and that it was fraudulent; and thereafter, but so far as it appears not in open court, permitted an amended answer to be filed to conform to the alleged proof, and rendered judgment in favor of the defendants, and against the plaintiff, dismissing the action. It is very clear that the court erred in permitting an affirmative defense to be proved under a general denial. The requirement of the Code, that affirmative defenses shall be pleaded, is reasonable and just, and it is the duty of the court to see that this rule is not infringed. If a party has a defense, he must set it forth so that the adverse party may be prepared to meet it. Otherwise, if he rests his case upon a general denial, his proof will be restricted to controverting the facts stated in the petition. To permit a defendant, against the objection of the plaintiff, to prove a defense entirely different from that set forth in his answer, and then amend his answer to conform to his proof, is a gross violation of the rules of pleading, and is liable to be fraught with great injustice; and particularly is this true where, as is evident in this case, the wrong was deliberately planned. The plaintiff is the indorsee of the note. He evidently is an innocent purchaser. Now, had the defendant set up in his answer the defense that the note had been altered by adding the word "bearer," the testimony of the payee and others could have been taken, and thus the indorsee have been prepared to defend his rights. Here was a snap judgment taken which deprived the plaintiff of a trial upon the real question decided, viz., the alteration. That question has not in fact been tried yet. If the defendant may conceal his defense under a general denial, and on the trial prove a defense which, in the absence of counteracting proof, will defeat the action, and which the plaintiff, taken by surprise, cannot be prepared to meet, why may he not prove payment, release, accord and satisfaction, or other defense, and thus the beneficial effects of the Code, as to pleading affirmative defenses, be lost? This is a step, and a most important one, in that direction. But the defendants, by filing an amended answer, in effect admit that such an answer is necessary. It is the duty of the courts to uphold honesty and fair dealing, and protect and enforce the rights of every one. From time immemorial, courts of equity have granted continuances to permit one or both parties to obtain proof, add new parties, or otherwise protect and save their rights, and under the Code this practice is still in force. In addition to this, a court will not determine without a hearing that an alteration is fraudulent. The presumption of innocence prevails until overcome by proof. It is not claimed by the defendants that they have any defense against the note itself that would be defeated by a transfer thereof to an innocent purchaser. How, then, are they defrauded, or can be? They can lose nothing by the transfer. The judgment should be reversed, and the cause remanded for trial upon the amended answer.

TEXAS SUPREME COURT.

GULF, COLORADO & SANTA FÉ R.
CO., Appl.,

v.

Isaac LOONEY.

(.....Tex.....)

1. A ticket over connecting roads limited as to the time but which is a joint contract of the carriers, entitles a passenger who is delayed by a wreck on one of the roads to complete his journey although the time expires before he reaches the last of the connecting roads.

2. A coupon ticket over connecting roads limited as to time and expressly providing that the carrier selling it is not responsible beyond its own line. but is only an agent of the connecting roads, will not entitle a passenger to be carried over the last NOTE.—How far ticket may be used for passage after expiration of time limited.

It is only required that the holder of the ticket present himself at the cars of the company and take passage at any time within that limited by the terms of the contract. It is not necessary for him to complete the journey within such time. Lundy v. Central Pac. R. Co. 66 Cal. 191, 56 Am. Rep. 100.

If the holder of the ticket enters upon his journey before midnight of the day on which the ticket expires, and presents it to the conductor for passage, it is used within the meaning of the contract, and the holder will be entitled to be carried to his destination, although it cannot be reached on such day. Evans v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 11 Mo. App. 564.

But in Canada the rule seems to be that the whole journey must be completed within the time limited. Craig v. Great Western R. Co. 24 U. C. Q. B. 509.

Although it might be different if the company by its own acts rendered it impossible to complete the journey within the time specified. Briggs v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 24 U. C. Q. B. 510.

A ticket issued on the 6th of the month and limited to be used within two days from the date sold, does not expire until twelve o'clock on the night of the 8th. Georgia S. R. Co. v. Bagelow, 68 Ga. 219.

16 L. R. A.

If the journey covered by the last coupon on a ticket for passage over several connecting roads is begun before the expiration of the time limited the ticket will carry its holder to his destination although the limit expires before it is reached. Auerbach v. New York Cent. & H. R. Co. 89 N. Y. 281, 42 Am. Rep. 290.

But passage must be taken on last coupon before the expiration of limitation of the ticket to render it good; and delay by fault of the connecting road will not entitle the holder of the ticket to use it if he does not reach the train on which the coupon is to be used before its expiration. Pennsylvania Co. v. Hine, 41 Ohio St. 276.

It seems that actual passage on the train must be taken, and that it is not sufficient to reach the station from which the journey is to be begun if the last train going out on the day of the expiration of the limit has departed. Arnold v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 6 Cent. Rep. 630, 115 Pa. 135.

Where the last day of the time limited is on Sunday and the last road over which the ticket is to be used runs no trains on Sunday the holder of the ticket who has reached the terminus of such road in time to take a train on Sunday if it had run will be entitled to passage by the first train on Monday. Little Rock & Ft. S. R. Co. v. Dean, 48 Ark. 421, 51 Am. Rep. 594.

H. P. F.

road in the series after the time has expired although his failure to complete the journey on time was due to a wreck on one of the other connecting roads.

(June 7, 1892.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Milam County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged unlawful ejection of the plaintiff from defendant's cars. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the commissioner's opinion.

Messrs. J. W. Terry and Alexander & Clark for appellant.

Messrs. Ford & Ford for appellee.

Garrett, P. J., filed the following opinion:

This action was brought by Isaac Looney against the Gulf, Colorado & Santa Fé Railway Company to recover damages, because, as alleged, the defendant's conductor unlawfully ejected the plaintiff from defendant's cars while he was traveling thereon as a passenger. The petition alleged that on August 6, 1886, at Birmingham, Ala., plaintiff purchased a limited ticket from the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company, which entitled plaintiff to transportation from said city of Birmingham, Ala., to McGregor, Tex., and thence on the line of the defendant's railway, to Cameron, Tex.; that in issuing said ticket, the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company acted for itself and as agent of defendant company; that the ticket was purchased August 6, 1886, and was limited to August 9; that plaintiff left Birmingham on the day the ticket was issued, in ample and sufficient time to have reached his home in Cameron before the limit expired; but while traveling with all possible dispatch, and while on the cars of one of the connecting lines of defendant, at Belden, Tex., he was unavoidably detained, without fault on his part, about eighteen or twenty hours, and did not reach the said town of McGregor until the morning of August 10; that plaintiff, on August 10, entered the first passenger cars of defendant bound for Cameron after his arrival at McGregor; that the defendant company recognized the validity of said ticket, but refused to carry plaintiff thereon, claiming it had expired, and compelled plaintiff to pay the sum of one dollar to be carried to Temple, on defendant's line of road; that, after passing Temple, defendant did, without any lawful cause, with force and violence, eject plaintiff from its cars, and turn him off at a place other than a usual stopping place, in the open prairie and hot sun, and declined to transport plaintiff further. Whereby, to plaintiff's great injury and mortification, he has been damaged, including lost time and additional price paid for ticket, in the sum of $2,510, for which amount he prays judgment. Defendant's answer embraced general and special exceptions, general denial, and a special plea that, at the time plaintiff first reached defendant's line of railway, the time within which his limited excursion ticket was to be used had expired, of which fact plaintiff was notified by defendant's conductor; that plaintiff, upon demand of the latter paid his fare from McGregor to Temple, Tex., the last-named point being the divisional terminus of defendant's line of railway, where a change of conductors was made; that, after leaving Temple, on the route to Cameron, defendant's second conductor demanded of plaintiff his fare or ticket from Temple to Cameron, and plaintiff refused to produce either; that plaintiff courted a forcible eviction of himself from defendant's train as a basis for a damage suit against defendant. Defendant says its conductor ejected plaintiff, without force, solely because he utterly refused to pay his fare or produce a valid ticket. Defendant's demurrers were overruled by the court, to which the defendant excepted. Trial before a jury resulted in a verdict and judgment for the sum of $434.

Appellant's first and second assignments of error are based upon the action of the court in overruling its general demurrer that the facts alleged in the petition showed that, "when the plaintiff was ejected, it was in consequence of his insisting upon riding upon an expired ticket, and if plaintiff had any cause of action it was clearly not against defendant;" and in overruling defendant's special exception, "because the allegation as to delay or default, being the express act of the carrier other than the defendant, and the same not occurring upon defendant's line, defendant is not liable." From the allegations in the plaintiff's petition it would seem that the agent of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company at Birmingham, Ala., sold the plaintiff a ticket which entitled him to through passage from Birmingham to Cameron, Tex., and that in doing so he acted also as the agent of the defendant. It does not appear that the ticket was composed of the separate tickets or coupons of each of the connecting lines, or that the ticket was limited in any other manner than as to the time within which it should be used. Looking only to the petition, as we must in the disposition of the demurrers, the ticket appears to have been the joint contract of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company and its connecting lines, including that of the defendant, to transport the plaintiff from Birmingham, Ala., to Cameron, Tex., with a limitation only as to the time within which it should be done. Such a limitation may be made when reasonable, and the purchaser of the ticket must use it within the time stipulated, but it is subject to the implied condition that the train shall make the passage within the time limited, and that the company shall, upon its part, perform its obligation. 2 Wood, Railway Law, 1398, 1400, 1402. It appears from the petition that the failure of the plaintiff to reach McGregor before the expiration of the ticket was owing to the fault of one of the connecting lines; that the plaintiff commenced his journey immediately after the purchase of the ticket on August 6, but was detained at Belden on a connecting line which failed and refused to move its train for eighteen or twenty hours; and that, but for such delay, plaintiff would have reached McGregor in time to take defendant's train on the 9th of August, before the expiration of the ticket. Since it appears from the petition that the ticket was the joint undertaking, or evidence of such undertaking, on the part of all the lines of railroad, the defendant would be responsible for the default of the connecting line causing the delay, to the extent at least that it was bound to honor the ticket when presented to it at McGregor for passage from McGregor to Cameron. A joint undertaking having been shown by the petition of all the connecting lines to transport the plaintiff from Birmingham, Ala., to Cameron, Tex., the limitation of time in the ticket also applied to the time within which the journey should be commenced at Birmingham, and the plaintiff having commenced his journey within the time prescribed, and continued the same without a stopover at McGregor he was entitled to be transported by defendant from McGregor to Cameron, notwithstanding the limitation to his ticket had expired when he reached McGregor. 2 Wood, Railway Law, 1397, 1398; Lundy v. Central Pac. R. Co., 66 Cal. 191, 56 Am. Rep. 100. Since the averments of the plaintiff's petition show a through contract for passage, as we think, there was no error in overruling defendant's demurrer.

But the facts, as developed upon the trial of the case, show that plaintiff's ticket was a coupon ticket, the unused portion of which was as follows: "Issued by Louisville and Nashville Railroad Company. Good for one passage of the class designated, to the point on Gulf, Colorado and S. Fé Ry. Co. indicated by punch marks and in check attached, when stamped by company agent, subject to the following contract: It is understood and agreed between the purchaser of this ticket and all the companies named in it and its coupons, as follows: 'First. That in selling this ticket and coupons over connecting lines, the Louisville & Nashville R. R. Co. acts only as agent and is not responsible beyond its own line. Second. That baggage liability is limited to wearing apparel, not exceeding one hundred dollars in value. Third. That no stopover will be allowed unless permitted by the local regulations of the various lines. Fourth. That if the ticket and coupons are punched to indicate destination only, they are good until used. Fifth. That if this ticket and coupons are sold at a reduced rate, and punched to denote that they are limited, they are not good after the date so canceled in the margin of this contract, and that if more than one date is canceled they are void. Sixth. That if no punch marks are used to indicate "class," then this ticket and coupons are good for first-class passage, but, when punched to denote second-class, they entitle the holder only to the privileges usually accorded to second-class passengers. Seventh. This ticket and coupons are void if they show any alteration or erasure, or if more than one station is designated as the terminal point; and that the coupons are void if detached. Eighth. That none of the companies named in this ticket or coupons will be held liable for damages on account of any statement, not in accordance with this contract, made by an employé or employées of said companies. Ninth. That it is especially agreed and understood that no agent or employé of any of the companies named in this ticket or coupons has any power to alter, modify, or waive, in any manner, any of the conditions named in this contract. Tenth. That the right exists to declare this ticket or either of the coupons forfeited for violation of either of the companies (?) [conditions] named in this ticket or coupons; the right of forfeiture being a continuous one. C. P. Atmore, Gen. Pass. & Ticket Agent." In the margin of the contract, "August 9, 1888," is punched, indicating August 9, 1888, as the canceled date referred to in the fifth clause of the ticket. Its only coupon attached reads: "Issued by Louisville & Nashville R. R. Co. on account of Gulf, Colorado & Santa Fé Ry. Co. McGregor to point indicated by punched marks;" Cameron being the point indicated by punched mark. "Not good if detached." In one corner of the coupon are the letters "Limited when punched," printed around a half circle, and the half circle is punched out with the letter "L." The coupon is so punched in another corner to denote that it entitles the holder to first-class passage. The balance of the coupons were detached by the conductors of connecting lines. The ticket was by way of the Louisville & Nashville, "The Cotton Belt" or St. Louis, Arkansas & Texas, and the Gulf, Colorado & Santa Fé Railway lines to Cameron, Tex. Plaintiff bought the ticket at Birmingham, Ala., from the agent of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company, on August 6th. He called for the cheapest ticket. He commenced his journey at once, and did not stop over en route, but was detained on the Cotton Belt by a wreck, and had to stop over there, without fault on his part, eighteen or twenty hours. But for this delay he would have reached McGregor in time to take the defendant's train bound for Cameron on August 9th. He reached McGregor on August 10th, and took the first train leaving for Cameron over defendant's road. The conductor refused to honor the coupon, because it had expired, and plaintiff paid him the regular local fare as far as Temple. After passing Temple, plaintiff was ejected by another conductor because he failed to produce a ticket other than the expired coupon, or pay the fare.

16 L. R. A.

The court, in its charge to the jury, held the defendant responsible for the act or omission of the connecting line, and instructed the jury, in substance, to find for the plaintiff if he failed to make the connection at McGregor from no fault of his own, but by reason of the act or omission of the defendant, or either of the connecting lines. Defendant requested the following charge, the refusal of which has been assigned as error: "You are instructed that, the evidence, without contradiction, showing that plaintiff's ticket was a limited ticket, and that the period of limitation had expired when plaintiff first boarded defendant's train on its line of railway, the conductor was justified in refusing to recognize the expired ticket, and, upon refusal of plaintiff to pay fare or produce a valid ticket, the conductor was justified in ejecting plaintiff, using no more force than was necessary." It is further contended that the verdict of the jury is not supported by the evidence in the case, to the effect that the "ticket upon its face expresses that, in issuing the same with coupons over connecting lines, the Louisville & Nashville Railway acts only as agent, and is not responsible beyond its own lines, which stipulation in the ticket negatives the existence of any partnership or joint interest between the various companies over whose roads the different coupons read, and the evidence fails to show that there was any partnership or joint interest. The ticket upon its face, in connection with the coupons, shows in legal effect that, if the defendant company was in any respect connected with or bound thereby, it was a contract on the part of defendant company to transport the plaintiff from McGregor to Cameron, provided the ticket was presented, for passage, to it on or before the 9th day of August, 1888, and the evidence shows that the plaintiff failed to present said ticket for passage to the defendant within said time; and under the contract evidenced by the ticket, in connection with all the testimony in the case, the defendant not being liable for the defaults or negligence of other lines which may have prevented the plaintiff from presenting his ticket, in the required time, to the defendant, the verdict is entirely without evidence to support it, and should have been for the defendant;" and that the court should have charged the jury to return a verdict in favor of the defendant. As the ticket upon which the plaintiff traveled, in this case, contained the stipulation that, in selling this ticket and coupons over connecting lines, the "Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company acts only as agent, and is not responsible beyond its own line," we are relieved of the difficulty presented in the consideration of a case where separate coupon tickets are sold without such limitation. But Mr. Hutchinson, in his work on Carriers, (sec. 152,) says it is "well settled that one passenger carrier may sell his own and at the same time the tickets of connecting carriers, entitling the purchaser to through transportation to his destination over all the lines, and may receive the fare for the whole distance, without becoming responsible for the passenger's carriage beyond its own line; and in fact, where nothing else appears in the transaction, this will be the legal construction put upon it." Each coupon is the separate contract, voucher, or token of the respective connecting carriers, and the selling carrier is the agent of the several lines in selling them. Knight v. Portland, S. & P. R. Co. 56 Me. 234, 96 Am. Dec. 449; Milnor v. New York & N. H. R. Co. 53 N. Y. 363; Hartan v. Eastern R. Co. 114 Mass. 44; Ellsworth v. Tartt, 26 Ala. 733, 62 Am. Dec. 749; Hood v. New York & N. H. R. Co. 22 Conn. 1. The coupons are not the contract of the first or selling carrier, but it sells them as the agent of the several connecting carriers.

When, as in the present case, it is expressly stipulated that the selling carrier acts as the agent of the connecting carriers, and will not be responsible beyond its own line, each coupon becomes the separate contract for the line for which it is issued, and the ticket does not imply a joint obligation resting on each of the companies. A carrier may limit its liability to its own line, (Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Baird, 75 Tex. 263,) and our supreme court sees no distinction between carriers of freight and of passengers, (Harris v. Howe, 74 Tex. 534.) It appears from the evidence that the limitation of the ticket to four days was reasonable, and that the plaintiff would have easily reached McGregor in time for the defendant's train on August 9 but for the delay in the line of the Cotton Belt. Being reasonable, the limitation of the ticket was binding upon the plaintiff, and the coupon evidencing the plaintiff's right to be carried from McGregor to Cameron over defendant's line was defendant's contract, and entitled the plaintiff to be transported if he presented himself within time; and defendant should not be held liable for the default of its connecting line to have the plaintiff there in time. Mosher v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co., 127 U. S. 393, 32 L. ed. 250. Plaintiff has a right of action against the Cotton Belt Company for its failure to transport him to McGregor within time; but his coupon for transportation over defendant's line having expired by limitation, the defendant was not bound to carry him, because it was no fault of plaintiff that he did not reach there in time; neither was it the fault of the defendant.

Appellee relies upon the fact that the journey was commenced at Birmingham within the time to which the ticket was limited, to compel the defendant to recognize its coupon, though presented after the expiration of the limit, and has cited, as authority for his position, 4 Lawson, Rights, Rem. & Pr. p. 3235, and the cases cited in support of the text, which is: "When a limited ticket is issued, 'not good for passage' after a certain number of days from its date, or to be 'used' by a certain day, the passenger need not have completed his journey by that date; it is sufficient that he has commenced it,"—citing Lundy v. Central Pac. R. Co. 68 Cal. 191, 56 Am. Rep. 100; Auerbach v. New York Cent. & H. R. Co. 89 N. Y. 261, 42 Am. Rep. 290; Evans v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 11 Mo. App. 463. In Auerbach v. New York Cent. & H. R. Co., the plaintiff had purchased a ticket from St. Louis, over several railroads mentioned in coupons annexed to the ticket, to the city of New York. When ejected from defendant's cars he had commenced his journey upon the last coupon, before its expiration, and had not completed it when the time expired. It was held that the acceptance of the coupon by the conductor before midnight of the last day was in time, although the journey could not be completed until afterwards. This case is not in point, and applies only to a continuous trip. The case in 11 Mo. App. 463 (Evans v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co.) is not accessible to us. Lunde v. Central Pac. R. Co. would, at first, seem to be in point, as the ticket was a coupon ticket issued by the Union Pacific Railroad over its line and that of defendant, and the court said: "In our view it was only required of plaintiff that he present himself at the cars of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, or of the defendant, and take passage at any time within nine days from the 12th day of March, 1874." Plaintiff's time had expired when he presented the coupon to defendant's conductor. But an examination of the case will show that the liability of the Union Pacific was not limited, nor that of the defendant, by the terms of the ticket, and a verbal agreement was shown between the passenger agents of the companies to honor each other's tickets. It was put on the ground that a contract was made by authority of the defendant by the Union Pacific Railroad Company for carrying the plaintiff through from Omaha, on the line of the Union Pacific to San Francisco, on the line of the defendant. We are of the opinion that the defendant made no contract except to carry the plaintiff from McGregor to Cameron, and only then in case he presented himself for carriage at the defendant's cars for that purpose within the time fixed in the ticket, and that the defendant was not bound to carry out said contract after the limited time on account of the failure of its connecting line to perform its obligation to expeditiously carry the plaintiff, and have him at McGregor before the expiration of his ticket. Consideration of the remaining assignments of error is unnecessary.

For the error of the court herein indicated, we conclude that the judgment of the court below should be reversed, and the cause remanded.

Adopted by Supreme Court, June 7, 1892.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT.

William McPHERSON, Jr., et al., Relators,
v.
Robert R. BLACKER, Secretary of State,
Recept.

(....Mich.....)

1. A state Legislature has power to direct that presidential electors shall be chosen by congressional districts instead of by the state at large under U. S. Const., art. 2, § 1, providing that each state shall choose electors "in such manner as the legislature thereof may direct."
2. Nonuser will not defeat a power to exercise rights expressly delegated in a written Constitution.
3. The constitutional provision as to the manner of choosing presidential electors is not affected by the 14th and 15th Amendments.
4. The title "An Act to Provide for the Election of Electors of President and Vice-President, etc.," sufficiently expresses the subject of an Act which provides for the election of alternate electors as well as electors.
5. Lack of any provision for filling the vacancy in case of the death of both an elector and alternate elector does not make a statute providing for the election of presidential electors by congressional districts invalid.
6. Failure to provide for notice of the election of presidential electors is not a defect in a statute providing for such election by congressional districts where the general statutes of the state sufficiently provide for notice of elections.
7. The lack of any provision in a statute providing for a choice of presidential electors by congressional districts for a separate canvass of the votes cast in different electoral districts within one county, is not material as the inspectors can designate the district in which an elector is voted for.

8. The invalidity of a provision as to the time of meeting of presidential electors in a statute providing for the choice of such electors which in that respect conflicts with an Act of Congress does not make the whole Act inoperative.

(June 17, 1892.)

PETITION for a writ of mandamus to compel the Secretary of State when giving out notices for the election of presidential electors to ignore the Act passed in 1891 and follow the law previously in force. Writ denied.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Henry M. Duffield, for relator:

By the United States Constitution there are certain rights and powers which are reserved to the states, as bodies politic, and there are certain rights and powers which are not reserved to the states, but are reserved to the people.

As early as the case of Hepburn v. Ellzey, 6 U. S. 2 Cranch, 445, 2 L. ed. 882, the court said: "These clauses show that the word 'state' is used in the Constitution as designating a member of the Union; and excludes from the term the significance attached to it by writers on the law of nations. When the same term which has been used plainly in this limited sense in the articles respecting the legislative and executive department is also employed in that which respects the judicial department, it must be understood as retaining the sense originally given to it"

In the case of Penhallow v. Doane, 8 U. S.

NOTE.—The above case, being the first adjudication on the question, offers little opportunity for annotation. The purely legal aspects of the case are overshadowed by its public importance. It involves more than a mere question of partisan 16 L. R. A.

advantage, and suggests a possible relief from the present undue concentration in a few pivotal states of the political struggle in each presidential campaign.

B. A. R.

8 Dall. 54, 1 L. ed. 507, (read page 98, L. ed. 523, 524), Mr. Justice Iredell, speaking for the court, says: "A distinction was taken at the bar between a state and the people of the state. It is a distinction I am not capable of comprehending. By a state forming a republic, speaking of it as a moral person, I do not mean the Legislature of the state, the executive of the state, or the judiciary, but all the citizens which compose that state, and are, if I may so express myself, integral parts of it; together forming a body politic."

See also Ware v. Hylton, 8 U. S. 3 Dall. 225, 1 L. ed. 579; Buckner v. Finley, 27 U. S. 2 Pet. 536, 7 L. ed. 528.

In Texas v. White, 74 U. S. 7 Wall. 700, 19 L. ed. 227, Chief Justice Chase said: "A state, in the ordinary sense of the Constitution, is a political community of free citizens occupying a territory of definite boundaries, and organized under the government's sanction, and limited by a written constitution, and established by the consent of the governed."

In the letter from Mr. Madison to Mr. Everett, cited by Judge Cooley in his note to Story on the Constitution, vol. 1, p. 89, the eminent writer says: "It (the Constitution of the United States) is formed by the states, that is by the people in each of the states acting in the highest sovereign capacity, and formed consequently by the same authority which formed the state Constitution . . . and being a compact among the states in their highest sovereign capacity . . . it cannot be altered or annulled at the will of the states, as the Constitution of a state may be at its individual will."

The Declaration of Independence, appealing to the Supreme Judge of the world, declares and publishes "that these united colonies are, and of right ought to be, free and independent states, and that as free and independent states they have full power to do all acts and things which independent states might by right do."

In the face of these provisions the contention cannot prevail that "the state" need not appoint the electors, but that they may be appointed by fractions of the territory of the state, and by the votes of portions of its electors. It is worthy of note that nowhere in the Constitution is any reference made to "districts," either congressional or otherwise. The earliest allusion to districts in Federal legislation was the Act of Congress of 1842, 5 U. S. Stat. 591, which required, for the first time in the history of the country, the election of members of Congress by districts.

What the Constitution meant was the sovereign state, a legal although artificial being, a great political corporation with imperial prerogatives and powers, the great state, the state that in the minds of most of the men of the convention which framed the Constitution was greater almost than the United States; the state of whose proper sovereignty they would not give up one jot or tittle; which had a great seal; which had a seat of government; which had a system of courts to decide any controversy concerning an appointment; which had a military and civil power; which could record its decree; and which from its high plane of sovereignty could command respect for its choice, and if its choice was not respected could command obedience to its will.
16 L. R. A.

In the whole proceedings of the convention which adopted this Constitution nothing whatever was done by districts, nothing whatever was done by the people, nothing whatever was done by the Legislatures of the states, but every vote recorded the vote of a state, just such a state as we are now contending here should appoint these electors. It was those states, and that kind of state, that formed the Constitution, and it was those states and that kind of state that the Constitution meant when it declared "each state shall appoint electors."

As to contemporaneous construction, it is stated in McMasters History of the People of the United States, vol. 1, p. 525, that all of the states choose by direct vote of the people, or by Legislature.

This continued until in 1800 the trouble began. Party strife ran high. The federalists began to lose power, the republican party were coming into power, largely through the extreme popularity in New York of one of their members. And then we see at once the district plan is brought into play in case it will help the federalists, and again abandoned in case that course will help the federalists.

Whatever legislation took place then was the legislation of partisan heat and excitement, and should have no more weight with your honors or any other court who will look into it, as a construction of the Constitution than the law that we are discussing would have weight, for the legislation then was prompted by and born of the very same spirit that this law is born of—a mad desire for temporary power.

All the states which had originally adopted a district system soon abandoned it, and as early as 1864 presidential electors in every state in the Union were appointed by the state, being chosen either by the popular vote or by the Legislature.

Mr. F. A. Baker, also for relator:

The language of the Constitution, in its literal or exact meaning, contemplates and requires that the state shall act as a unit in appointing presidential electors.

In what sense was the word "state" used?

It is evident the Legislature was not considered the state, because the Legislature is mentioned as the "Legislature thereof," that is, of the state, so that the power of appointment was not by the Constitution vested in the Legislature, as in the case of the appointment of United States senators.

On the other hand, it seems equally clear that the word "state" was not used as a convenient way of describing the people residing within the territorial limits of a state, on the theory that the state in one and its simplest sense consists of the people. If that had been the intention, it is reasonable to believe this constitutional provision would have followed the language of article 1, section 2, that "the House of Representatives shall be composed of members chosen every second year by the people of the several states," etc.

The word "state" was used to describe the people residing within certain described territorial limits, organized into a state government, republican in form, constituting one body corporate and politic, and in and of itself a unity.

An unorganized body of inhabitants is not a state.

Texas v. White, 74 U. S. 7 Wall. 700, 721, 19 L. ed. 227, 236.

This interpretation is abundantly sustained by an examination of the convention debates. They are stated and reviewed in 2 Bancroft's History of the Constitution of the United States, pp. 165-185.

The process of constitutional development, by construction and usage, has been such that it is not now competent for a state to break and destroy the homogeneity of the electoral colleges, by dividing itself into separate and independent districts for the election of presidential electors, to voice the will of such districts in the choice of the chief magistrate, as distinguished from the will of the state as a political unit.

See 1 Bryce's American Commonwealth, p. 350.

Messrs. Henry A. Haigh and B. M. Cutcherson counsel for relators.

Mr. A. A. Ellis, Atty-Gen., for respondents:

In the mode devised by the National Convention, as exhibited in the Constitution, it was presumed that the electors would consist of well-informed citizens, who should exercise their own judgments in selecting candidates for the offices of president and vice-president.

See Life of Timothy Pickering, vol. 3, 103; Miller on the Constitution of the United States, 149, 150.

The district mode was mostly, if not exclusively, in view when the Constitution was framed and adopted; and was exchanged for the general ticket and the legislative election as the only expedient for baffling the policy of the particular states which had set the example.

Writings of James Madison, vol. 3, 338, 334; Hildreth, History of the United States.

It was the intention of the framers of the Constitution to leave that power in the hands of the several states to be exercised in the manner the Legislature of each state shall deem proper.

McKnight, "The Electoral System of the United States," p. 87.

The right to make these directions is complete and conclusive, subject to no control or revision, and placed entirely with them [state legislatures] for the best and most unanswerable reasons.

The Electoral System of the United States, McKnight, 877; Judge Cooley in Michigan Law Journal of February, 1892, p. 6; Story, Constitution, 4th ed. p. 304.

The report made by the committee on Privileges and Elections in 1874 discusses the question of the relative merits of the two systems. It appears clear from such report that the district system is more equitable and more fairly represents the wishes of the entire people.

Report, 395, 48d Cong. 1st Session, Senate Report; Report containing Reports Nos. 281 to 478.

The word "state" in the Federal Constitution is used in four or five different senses. 16 L. R. A.

Texas v. Wright, 74 U. S. 7 Wall. 700, 19 L. ed. 227.

In reply to the play on the word "state" I refer the court to the clause in article 1, section 10: "No state shall make any law impairing the obligations of contracts."

The word "state" in this clause is used in the sense of "legislature of a state" and as a prohibition against the state Legislature, and prohibits the Legislature from directly or indirectly making such a law. It extends to a city ordinance.

Saginaw Gas Light Co. v. Saginaw, 28 Fed. Rep. 533; Wright v. Nagle, 101 U. S. 791, 25 L. ed. 921.

Mr. J. W. Champlin, also for respondent.

Where the words of a constitutional provision, taken in their ordinary sense, and in the order of their grammatical arrangement, embody a definite meaning, which involves no absurdity or conflict with other parts of the same instrument; the meaning thus apparent on the face of the provision is the only one that can be presumed to have been intended, and there is no room for construction. It is not allowable in a constitution any more than in a statute, to interpret that which has no need of interpretation.

Newell v. People, 7 N. Y. 9, 97; Hills v. Chicago, 60 Ill. 86; Springfield v. Edwards, 84 Ill. 626; Cooley, Const. Lim. 68, 71; Beardstown v. Virginia, 76 Ill. 34.

Nor can the inconvenience or hardship that may ensue the enforcement of a provision couched in such unmistakable language justify its modification by construction, and no considerations of supposed public policy, nor of political expediency, or party success, can be regarded in arriving at the meaning.

Weill v. Kenfield, 54 Cal. 111; Wayne County v. Detroit, 17 Mich. 401.

Messrs. Otto Kirchner and F. E. Barkworth also for respondent.

Montgomery, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The relators, who are candidates for the office of electors of president and vice-president, placed in nomination by the Republican party, ask for a mandamus to compel the respondent to give notice of an election to be held on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November, to fill said offices, under the statute in former years providing for an election of electors by the state at large. The relators allege that Act No. 50 of the Public Acts of 1891, known as the "Miner Law," is unconstitutional and void. It is first averred that the law in question is in conflict with article 2, § 1, of the Federal Constitution, in this: that it attempts to delegate to portions of the state fixed as districts by the Legislature the power to name electors, whereas the section referred to, it is contended, confers this authority and duty upon the state at large, acting as a corporate unit in its corporate capacity. Secondly, it is contended that, even though the Legislature may thus delegate the authority to districts, the law enacted is fatally defective in the following respects: (a) That it violates article 4, § 20, of the Constitution of this state, which provides that no law shall embrance more than one object, which shall be expressed in its title, in that it provides for an election of alternate electors, whereas the title relates only to choosing electors; (b) that the Act is inoperative, for the reason that it fails to provide means for canvassing the votes of electors in those portions of Wayne county which constitute the first and portions of the second, sixth, and seventh electoral districts; (c) that, even if the election of alternate electors is valid, the act makes no provision for filling the office in case both the elector and the alternate shall die or become disqualified before performing their duties.

Most evidently the question of greatest importance is that relating to the true interpretation of section 1, art. 2, of the Federal Constitution. The provision of that section is that "each state shall appoint, in such manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a number of electors equal to the whole number of senators and representatives to which the state may be entitled in the Congress." On both sides it appears to be conceded that the word "state," as here employed, means the body politic and corporate. On the part of the relators it is contended that the state must, in the choice of electors, act as a unit, and cannot delegate the authority to name electors to any fractional part of the state, as a district fixed for that purpose alone, or for that and other political action. On the part of the respondent it is contended that the section in question gives the Legislature plenary power to prescribe how and in what manner the state may choose its electors, whether by the Legislature, or by all the electors voting for a general ticket, or by electors voting in districts.

In Story on the Constitution, (vol. 2, p. 804, 4th ed.) it is said: "It is observable that the language of the Constitution is that, 'each state shall appoint, in such manner as the Legislature thereof may direct,' the number of electors to which the state is entitled." Under this authority the appointment of electors has been variously provided for by the state Legislature. In some states the Legislature have directly chosen the electors themselves; in others they have been chosen by the people by a general ticket throughout the whole state; and in others by the people in electoral districts, fixed by the Legislature, a certain number of electors being apportioned to each district. No question has ever arisen as to the constitutionality of either mode, except that of a direct choice by the Legislature. But this, though often doubted by able and ingenious minds, has been firmly established in practice ever since the adoption of the Constitution, and does not now seem to admit of controversy, even if a suitable tribunal existed to adjudicate upon it."

If the question were to be determined solely by reference to the language employed, it may be admitted that there would be much force in the contention that the state must act as a unit, and that no lesser body could be delegated to perform any portion of the duty vested in the state as a body corporate, and it might possibly be held that the words, 16 L. R. A.

"in such manner as the Legislature thereof may direct," conferred only the limited power of directing how the state acting as an entirety shall make its appointment. But in my judgment these words are clearly susceptible of a construction which confers upon the Legislature the power to say how the state action shall be voiced. In such a case resort is properly had to contemporaneous construction. Judge Cooley in his work on the Constitution says: "Contemporaneous construction may consist simply in the understanding with which the people received it at the time, or in the acts done in putting it in operation, and which necessarily assume that it is to be construed in a particular way. In the first case it can have very little force, because the evidences of the public understanding, when nothing had been done under the provision in question, must always necessarily be vague and indecisive. But where there has been a practical construction, which has been acquiesced in for a considerable period, considerations in favor of adhering to this construction sometimes present themselves to the courts with a plausibility and force which it is not easy to resist. Indeed, where a particular construction has been generally accepted as correct, and especially when this has occurred contemporaneously with the adoption of the Constitution, and by those who had opportunity to understand the intention of the instrument, it is not to be denied that strong presumption exists that the construction rightly interprets the intention." Cooley, Const. Lim. p. 67. This rule has been so frequently recognized both by this court and the Supreme Court of the United States as to require little more than a reference to the authorities. Martin v. Hunter, 14 U. S. 1 Wheat. 851, 4 L. ed. 109; Bank of United States v. Halstead, 28 U. S. 10 Wheat. 63, 6 L. ed. 267; Ogden v. Saunders, 25 U. S. 12 Wheat. 290, 6 L. ed. 632; People v. Dean, 14 Mich. 406; People v. State Treasurer, 28 Mich. 499; Detroit City R. Co. v. Mills, 85 Mich. 646. Speaking of this rule in Ogden v. Saunders, Mr. Justice Johnson says: "It proceeds upon the presumption that the contemporaries of the Constitution have claims to our deference on the question of right, because they had the best opportunities of informing themselves of the understanding of the framers of the Constitution, and of the sense put upon it by the people when it was adopted by them." In People v. State Treasurer, supra, it was held that Constitutions are to be construed as the people construed them in their adoption, if possible, and the public history of the times should be consulted, and should have weight in arriving at that construction. See also People v. Harding, 53 Mich. 481.

The practical construction which was placed upon the section under consideration was certainly such as to maintain the contention of the respondent that the contemporaneous interpretation was that by this section plenary power was reposed in the several Legislatures of the states to prescribe methods for choosing electors other than that by a vote of electors of the entire state, or by any agency which, in the performance of other public functions, represented the entire state. In the first presidential election Maryland and Virginia each adopted the district plan.

Maryland continued to so choose her electors down to and including the year 1832. Massachusetts in 1788 adopted a plan of nominating electors in districts by a vote of the people, to whom the Legislature was limited in making a choice. In 1796 they were chosen by districts. In New York the method of choosing electors first adopted was by vote of the Legislature, but in 1825 the district system was adopted, and was in use in the election of 1828. In North Carolina the district system was adopted in 1803, and in use in 1804 and 1808. In Kentucky the district system prevailed until 1828. In Tennessee the district system prevailed from 1796 to 1836. In Indiana the district system was used in 1824 and 1828. In Illinois the district system prevailed from its admission into the Union until 1827. In Maine also the district system prevailed from 1820 until and including the election of 1828. It will be seen, therefore, that the exercise of the right to choose electors by districts began at the first election held under the Constitution, and continued to be exercised by some of the states for a period of forty years. Nor was an abandonment of this method due, except possibly in a single instance, to growing doubts as to its constitutionality. The states in which it had been invoked adopted a general ticket method, is believed, not because of any doubt of the authority to choose electors in districts, but in order that more power could be wielded by the state in political conventions. Madison, who acted as a member of the committee which reported to the Federal convention the method finally adopted for electing the president, in a letter written in 1823, and in which a constitutional amendment which should make the choice of electors by districts imperative was recommended by him, in referring to the action of the convention, said: "The district system was mostly, if not exclusively, in view when the Constitution was framed and adopted, and was exchanged for the general ticket and the legislative election as the only expedient for baffling the policy of the particular states which had set the example." 3 Madison Papers, 338.

Another persuasive fact in determining whether the intention was to limit the exercise of the right of the state to choose electors to a method which involved action by the state as a unit is the practical construction placed upon section 2 of article 1, which provides that "the House of Representatives shall be composed of members chosen every second year by the people of the several states," and that until enumeration shall be made "the state of New Hampshire shall be entitled to choose three, Massachusetts eight," etc. There is certainly the same ground for contention that the authority given to a state to choose three or eight representatives involves action by the state as a unit as there is to say that the provision that each state shall appoint electors in such manner as the Legislature thereof may direct requires action by the state as a unit, and yet, from the time of the adoption of the Constitution, the power of the state to provide for choosing representatives by districts has not been questioned, nor has the power to choose by an election at large been questioned, (where no law of Congress intervenes,) so that there has been the practical construction which has continued down to this day, which establishes that, under the provisions of section 2, art. 1, the state having authority to choose representatives has the choice of methods, and may elect by districts or en masse.

But it is urged that the fact that the district system has been abandoned is evidence from which it may be inferred that there has been a growing belief in the unconstitutionality of that method; and it is further stated in the briefs of the counsel that "any examination of the history of the methods of choosing presidential electors which approximates philosophic or scientific inquiry can only result in the conclusion that the states, in coming to the use of the general ticket, by a common consent and practice gave to the Constitution a construction and meaning which it might not otherwise now have, but which is nevertheless of the most conclusive and binding character." There would doubtless be great force in the practical construction which has obtained for sixty years, even though not contemporaneous, if such construction involved of necessity a negation of the right claimed by the Legislature in this case, but the fact that the several states have provided by their Legislatures for choosing electors on a general ticket does not involve an assertion that the power to choose by districts does not exist. And, in so far as the argument of counsel assumes that our Constitution is subject to growth, it is, in my judgment, inconsistent with the purpose and duty to sacredly maintain the integrity of that instrument, to treat it as subject to modification except by the prescribed agencies and by the prescribed methods. And, especially is it inconsistent with established rules to say that by nonuser a commonwealth may lose the power to exercise rights expressly delegated in a written constitution. If, under the Constitution, and after forty years of practical construction, the state had the right to choose electors by districts, it does not lie with any court to assert that that right had been lost to the state by nonuser.

In People v. State Treasurer, 23 Mich. 499, Mr. Justice Cooley, speaking for the court, said: "Constitutions do not change with the varying tides of public opinion and desire. The will of the people therein recorded is the same inflexible law until changed by their own deliberative action; and it cannot be permissible to the courts that in order to aid evasions and circumventions, they shall subject these instruments, which in the main only undertake to lay down broad general principles, to a literal and technical construction, as if they were great public enemies standing in the way of progress, and the duty of every good citizen was to get around their provisions whenever practicable, and give them a damaging thrust whenever convenient. They must construe them as the people did in their adoption, if the means of arriving at that construction are within their power." It has evidently not been the view of eminent statesmen either that the original construction of this section should have been such as to exclude the power of the Legislature to adopt the district method, or that that power has been lost by nonuser, for as late as 1874 the committee on privileges and elections of the United States senate made a report, in which, speaking, of this section, it was said: "The appointment of these electors is thus placed absolutely and wholly with the Legislatures of the several states. They may be chosen by the Legislature, or the Legislature may provide that they shall be elected by the people of the state at large, or in districts, as are members of Congress, which was the case formerly in many states."

But it is urged that the Act in question is in conflict with the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments, and it is said that at the time these Amendments were adopted the method of choosing electors actually in vogue in all the states was by vote of the people at large for a general ticket, and that it is provided by the Fourteenth Amendment that "no state shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States;" and also provided that, "when the right to vote at any election for the choice of electors of president and vice-president . . . is denied to any of the male inhabitants of such state, being twenty-one years of age and citizens of the United States, or in any way abridged except for participation in rebellion or other crime, the basis of representation shall be reduced;" and as the Fifteenth Amendment, provided that "the right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States, or by any state, on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude," that these Amendments are to be held to have relation to the conditions then existing, and that, in effect, they operate to repeal by implication so much of article 2, § 1, as to prescribe the manner of choosing electors. It would, in our opinion, be a strained construction which should give to either of these Amendments the effect to annul the power expressly delegated in section 1, art. 2. But here again we are not without the aid of contemporaneous construction. As already pointed out, the committee of privileges and elections of the Senate, composed, as it was of men who participated in the adoption of these Amendments, reported in 1874, in the most unequivocal terms, that this power still rested with the Legislature. The question was also discussed by eminent members of the electoral commission of 1877. Commissioner Frelinghuysen, speaking of the power of the state to appoint electors, said: "Under this power, the Legislature might direct that the electors should be appointed by the Legislature, by the executive, by the judiciary, or by the people. In the earliest days of the republic electors were appointed by the Legislatures. In Pennsylvania they were appointed by the judiciary. Now, in all the states except Colorado, they are appointed by the people." Commissioner Hoar said: "Upon the whole matter, therefore, I am of opinion that the appointment of electors and the ascertaining who has been appointed is the sole and exclusive prerogative of the state. The state acts by such agencies as it selects." Justice Field said: "The Constitution declares that each state shall appoint electors 'in such manner as the Legislature thereof may direct'. . . . With the exception of these provisions as to the number of electors and the ineligibility of certain persons, the power of choice on the part of the state is unrestricted. The manner of appointment is left entirely to its Legislature." Justice Miller, commissioner, said: "If elected by the Legislature, as they may be, an appropriate mode [of certifying the election] would be the signatures of the presiding officers of the two Houses to the fact of such appointment, or a certified copy of the Act by which they were elected." In Re Kemmler, 136 U. S. 436, 34 L. ed. 519, it was said: "The Fourteenth Amendment did not radically change the whole theory of the relations of the state and Federal government to each other and of both governments to the people." See also Minor v. Happersett, 88 U. S. 21 Wall. 162, 23 L. ed. 637. It is very clear that the Fifteenth Amendment was intended to preclude the state from making any discrimination against citizens on account of color. No reasoning could make this plainer than does the mere reading of the provision: "The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude." There is no attempt to place limitations upon the power of the state, except that in any case where the right of suffrage is involved the class protected by this Amendment shall not be discriminated against. Neither by the Fourteenth nor Fifteenth Amendments was there any attempt to place limitations upon the authority of the state as to the choice of officers theretofore existing. Presidential electors are still regarded as state officers. Fitzgerald v. Green, 134 U. S. 377, 33 L. ed. 951. And to hold that because, at the time of the adoption of the Fourteenth Amendment, the general custom was to elect by the states at large, this secured irrevocably the right of each citizen twenty-one years of age to vote directly for the number of electors to which the state is entitled, would be to hold also that the method of choosing state officers, including judicial officers, which at the time of the adoption of this Amendment obtained, was irrevocably fixed beyond the power of the Legislature of the several states to change. We do not think the Amendment is susceptible of this construction.

Does this Act embrace more than one object, and, if not, is that object sufficiently expressed in its title? It is held that the provision of the Constitution requiring that the subject shall be expressed, etc., is fully accomplished when the statute has but one general object, and when such object is fairly indicated by its title. Every end and means necessary to the accomplishment of the general object need not be provided for by a separate Act relating to that alone. People v. Mahaney, 13 Mich. 481; Kurtz v. People, 33 Mich. 279; Ryerson v. Utley, 16 Mich. 270. The title of this Act is "An Act to Provide for the Election of Electors of President and Vice-president of the United States, and to repeal all other Acts and Parts of Acts in Conflict herewith." It is said that the body of the Act provides for the elections of alternate electors as well as electors, and that alternate electors are not named in the title. It would hardly be contended that it was not competent under this title to provide for filling vacancies occasioned by the death or disability of one of the electors first chosen. This Act, in effect, does no more than that. Technically, also, alternate electors are, before they become officials vested with any functions whatever, electors. The sole object of their election is that they shall, in a certain event, exercise the function of electors. The question might be quite different if they were elected to a distinct office, having duties to perform, and with a provision that they should have added to these duties the function of electors in the event of the disability of their principal.

It is also urged as an objection to the validity of this law that, in case of the death or disability of both the elector and alternate, no provision is made for filling the vacancy, and it is therefore claimed to be inoperative. But it is only necessary to say that, if this be true, then any attempt to appoint electors would fail; for, under the former statute existing in this state, and under all statutes vesting power to fill vacancies in the electoral college, death might intervene, and prevent the exercise of that function.

Can the Act be said to be inoperative and void because so defective that its provisions cannot be given effect? It is first claimed that the law is defective in not requiring notice of election of the district electors provided for, but we think this criticism without force. Section 147 of Howell's Statutes remains in force, and by the express terms of that statute the secretary of state is required to give notice that there are to be chosen as many of the following officers as are to be chosen at such general election, namely, a governor, electors of president and vice-president. The electors provided for in this Act are to be chosen at this general election, and it is the plain duty of the secretary of state to give notice of that fact.

It is next urged that the law is defective and inoperative, for the reason that no means are provided either by the Act itself or the general law for canvassing votes in Wayne county. The general law (Act 190, Pub. Acts 1891) provides, by section 1, for inspectors of election for elections at which presidential electors may be voted for. Section 36 provides for a canvass of the votes. Section 38 requires duplicate statements of the result to be prepared, one copy of which is to be filed, and the other delivered to the inspector appointed by the board to attend the county canvass. Sections 184 and 185 of Howell's Statutes provide that the board of canvassers shall proceed to canvass the votes, and section 185 requires the statement of votes given for electors of president and vice-president of the United States each year in which such electors are to be chosen. The Act in question, in section 2, provides that, "the counting, canvassing, and certifying of the votes cast for such electors at large and their alternates, and said district electors and their alternates, shall be done, as near as may be, as is now provided by law for the election of electors of president and vice-president of the United States." The precise point appears to be that, as the votes cast in the county for the presidential electors are cast in different electoral districts, there is no provision for a separate canvass of the votes cast in each district by the board of canvassers. We do not see the least difficulty in applying the law. It would, of course, be the duty of the inspector to designate the district in which the elector is voted for; and, as the district is defined by law, there is no more difficulty in doing this than there is in the board of state canvassers crediting to the one entitled the votes cast in the proper judicial circuit for circuit judge.

The Act in question is in conflict with the law of Congress in so far as it attempts to fix a date for the meeting of electors and the method of certifying their action. Does this render the entire Act inoperative? There is no doubt of the rule that where the law of a state conflicts with the law of Congress in a matter in reference to which Congress has the right to legislate the state law must give way to the extent of such conflict. Robinson v. Rice, 8 Mich. 242. The law is not necessarily inoperative in toto because in some of its provisions the Legislature has exceeded its power. On the contrary, the rule is stated to be that the unconstitutionality of one portion of the statute cannot defeat other portions, unless the nature of the unconstitutional provision is such as to render it of vital importance to the law. People v. Mahaney, 13 Mich. 481. See also People v. Richmond, 59 Mich. 570; Atty-Gen. v. Amor, 60 Mich. 372; Robinson v. Miner, 68 Mich. 549, 13 West. Rep. 471.

This general rule is conceded, but it is contended that this statute furnishes evidence upon its face that it contains provisions which would not have been adopted had it been within the understanding of the Legislature that the provision relative to the date for the meeting of electors was inoperative. The statute providing, as it does, that "in case two or more persons have an equal and the highest number of votes cast for any office created by this Act as canvassed by the board of state canvassers, the Legislature in joint convention shall choose one of said persons to fill such office, and it shall be the duty of the governor to convene the Legislature in special session immediately upon such determination by said board of state canvassers," it is urged that if it had been understood that the Legislature which is to be chosen at the same general election at which the presidential electors are chosen was to convene before the date when, under the law of Congress, the electors are permitted to cast their vote, it is not to be presumed that the Legislature would have provided for convening the Legislature in special session at large expense; but we are not able to say, as a matter of law, that this is true. The new Legislature will sit but three legislative days prior to the date fixed by the law of Congress for the meeting of electors. Nor is it clear beyond question that it was not the purpose and intent of the present Legislature to retain the power of choosing the electors in case of tie rather than to commit it to their successors. We think there are evidences afforded by the Act itself that such was their purpose. We cannot, therefore, say that this statute would not have been passed in the form in which it is, without the provision relating to the time of the meeting of the electors, and therefore are not justified in holding that the law is wholly inoperative, because of the conflict of that provision with the law of Congress upon the same subject.

We have considered the questions presented with the care which the exceeding importance of the issue seemed to us to imperatively require, and our conclusion is that the statute must stand as the lawful edict of the Legislature. Nearly 70 years ago Chancellor Kent wrote in regard to the election of the president as follows: "The mode of his appointment presented one of the most difficult, momentous questions that occupied the deliberation of the Assembly which framed the Constitution; and if ever the tranquillity of this nation is to be disturbed, and its liberties endangered by a struggle for power, it will be upon this very subject of the choice of president. This is the question that is eventually to test the goodness and try the strength of the Constitution; and if we shall be able, for half a century hereafter, to continue to elect the chief magistrate of the Union with discretion, moderation, and integrity, we shall undoubtedly stamp the highest value on our national character, and recommend our republican institutions, if not to the imitation, yet certainly to the esteem and admiration, of the more enlightened part of mankind." 1 Kent, Com. 274. The danger in this plenary power conferred by the Constitution of the state upon its Legislature has been recognized by the wise and patriotic statesmen of all political parties, and several attempts have been made in Congress to secure an amendment requiring a uniform mode. The language of Chancellor Kent was written shortly after a long debate in the United States Senate over proposed amendments. Ann. Cong. 1823-24, 167-375. To the intelligence, wisdom, and patriotism of our people is due the gratifying fact that the danger has thus far been averted, but the action resulting in the passage of the Act in question is a reminder of the danger which may at any time be precipitated upon the country for the purpose of obtaining political power. The injustice of any other than a uniform system of electing the president of the United States is manifest. As has been recently well said: "It is of the first and last consequence and importance that, in legislating upon this subject, it should not be regarded from a party standpoint." But neither the fact that this most important consideration may have been overlooked, nor that this legislation may result in serious injustice, can extend our jurisdiction, or justify us in usurping functions which under the Constitution pertain to the Legislature. As was said by Justice Cassoday in the recent case of State v. Cunningham, (Wis.) 51 N. W. Rep. 1185: "It is to be remembered that even praiseworthy objects cannot be rightfully obtained by a violation of law. Every effort to fritter away the plain language of the Constitution, by way of construction or otherwise, even to secure a desirable end, is nothing less than an insidious attempt to undermine the fundamental law of the state, and hence, to that extent, destructive of good government, be sides being vicious in its tendencies."

The writ should be denied.

The other Justices concurred.

UTAH SUPREME COURT.

Eleanor B. TUFTS, Appt.,

v.

Elbridge TUFTS, Resp.

(.....Utah.....)

1. A cause of action for divorce is not taken away by the repeal of the statute under which it arose without any saving clause where this is accompanied by a new statute prescribing the same grounds for divorce although making the requirements less.

2. A general Statute of Limitations does not apply to an action for divorce.

(June 6, 1822.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from orders of the District Court for Salt Lake County sustaining a demurrer to, and dismissing, the complaint, in an action brought to obtain a divorce. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

NOTE.—For note on effect of statutes to defeat or preserve pending civil actions, see Pritchard v. Savannah St. & R. R. Co. (Ga.) 14 L. R. A. 721. 16 L. R. A.

For notes on effect of repeal on cause of action, see Moore v. Kenockee (Mich.) 4 L. R. A. 555; Coots v. Detroit (Mich.) 5 L. R. A. 315.

Messrs. Brown & Henderson, for appellant:

A cause of action having accrued and become complete under the old statute, a subsequent change in the law, or even a repeal, could not take it away. It had become a vested right.

Sutherland, Stat. Const. §§ 164, 480; Cooley, Const. Lim. 362; Smith v. Louisville, N. O. & T. R. Co. 62 Miss. 510.

A statute prescribing causes for divorce, or taking away causes before existing, should be construed to apply only to acts committed subsequent to it, unless a clear intent to the contrary is expressed.

Clark v. Clark, 10 N. H. 380, 84 Am. Dec. 165; 1 Bishop, Mar. & Div. §§ 98-108, 696-698.

The complaint states facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action under either statute.

2 Bishop, Mar. & Div. 5th ed. §§ 650, 651; Brown, Divorce, 130; Palmer v. Palmer, 45 Mich. 150, 40 Am. Rep. 461.

At common law, and in those jurisdictions where the common law is recognized in distinguishing between legal and equitable actions, the general Statute of Limitations does not in terms apply to equitable actions, but courts of equity in all cases where there was a concurrent remedy at law, or where the case had an analogy in a legal action, applied the Statute of Limitation governing the concurrent or analogous case in a court of law to the equitable action.

Wood, Lim. of Act. p. 108, § 58 et seq.; 18 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, 674-680; Smith v. Wood, 6 Cent. Rep. 316, 42 N. J. Eq. 568; People v. Everest, 4 Hill, 71; Farnam v. Brooks, 9 Pick. 242.

In those jurisdictions where the distinction between legal and equitable actions are (so far as form is concerned) abolished and the Statute of Limitations is made applicable to all actions, courts of equity instead of applying the statute by courtesy or by analogy, are governed by it in cases where it was so applied before.

13 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, 675; Luz v. Haggin, 69 Cal. 255; Butler v. Johnson, 111 N. Y. 204.

It has been held in California, from which we get our Statute of Limitations, that it applies to equitable as well as legal actions.

Lord v. Morris, 18 Cal. 486; Royd v. Blankman, 29 Cal. 44, 87 Am. Dec. 146.

But there is a class of cases cognizable by courts of equity where there is no concurrent or analogous legal remedy, but which are purely equitable actions to which the general Statutes of Limitations do not apply, such as express trusts, claims between husband and wife, or between partners.

Love v. Watkins, 40 Cal. 547, 6 Am. Rep. 624; 18 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, 688, 684, 711, and notes; Wood, Lim. of Act. p. 118, § 59.

Actions for divorce come within the principles established by these authorities, and the Statute of Limitations of actions generally does not apply.

Moely v. Moely, 67 Ga. 92; Barnett v. Harshbarger, 3 West. Rep. 750, 105 Ind. 410.

The statute does not apply and lapse of 16 L. R. A.

time is not in itself a bar and can only be considered in determining whether the action is brought in good faith or the offense condoned, and this is available only as a defense.

Brown, Divorce, 74; 2 Bishop, Mar. & Div. §§ 48, 108 et seq.

Messrs. Powers & Hiles, for respondent:

The Act of 1852 was repealed by the Act of 1878. There is no saving clause in the Act of 1878 saving the right of action conferred by the section of the Act of 1852. Therefore it follows that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.

Sutherland, Stat. Const. §§ 162, 163, and cases there cited; Utah Comp. Laws 1876, p. 375, 1888, § 2602.

To justify a divorce the ground of complaint for a divorce must be given by the law of the forum. The cruel treatment must have been committed after the passage of the statute.

5 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 778.

Divorce statutes are given prospective effect only.

The alleged contract of separation which is set out in the complaint is not a ground for a divorce. It cannot be held as desertion. Separation by consent is not willful desertion.

Hankinson v. Hankinson, 38 N. J. Eq. 66.

Such contracts are not unlawful.

Wells v. Stout, 9 Cal. 492; Walker v. Walker, 76 U. S. 9 Wall. 748, 19 L. ed. 814.

Miner, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellant in this case filed her complaint for divorce October 15, 1891, alleging, among other things, that she was married to the defendant in November, 1869, at Salt Lake City, where she had resided since that time; and that for several months following her said marriage she was required by the defendant to reside with his mother, and that during such residence she was subject to, and made the victim of, repeated acts of extreme cruelty on the part of the defendant and his mother, which, if true, would ordinarily entitle her to a decree of divorce. These acts are sufficiently set out to cover the requirements of the statute. She further alleges that, on account of such several acts of cruelty, she was obliged to leave his mother's house, and return to her parents; that soon after this the parties obtained what was then called a "church divorce" from the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, which reads as follows: "Know all men by these presents, that we, the undersigned, Elbridge Tufts and Eleanor B. Tufts, his wife, (before marriage with him, Eleanor Bringham,) do hereby mutually covenant, promise, and agree to dissolve all the relations which have heretofore existed between us as husband and wife, and keep ourselves separate and apart from each other from this time forth. In witness whereof we have hereto set our hands, in Salt Lake City, this 26th day of August, A. D. 1870. Elbridge Tufts. Eleanor B. Tufts. Signed in presence of D. McKensie, George Reynolds."

It also appears that at this time the appellant was of the age of twenty years, had no experience whatever in courts, and supposed that such document above recited was a valid divorce until before the commencement of this suit; that no other divorce had ever been granted; that several years after this, and while in the belief that she was legally divorced, she again married one Wickle, but she ceased living with him after she discovered she was not legally married to him; that said defendant has twice married since her marriage with him, and has never obtained any legal divorce from plaintiff, etc. To this complaint the defendant filed his demurrer, on the grounds: First, that said complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action; second, that it appears upon the face of the complaint that said cause of action there stated is barred by section 201 of the Code of Civil Procedure. This demurrer was sustained by the court, and the complaint dismissed. The plaintiff appeals from the order sustaining the demurrer and from the decree dismissing the complaint.

The first question here is, Was the demurrer properly sustained? The learned counsel for the defendant now contend that the cause of action arose under the Act of this territory passed 1852, (see Comp. Laws Utah 1876, p. 375,) and that this statute was repealed by the Act of 1887, (see Comp. Laws 1888, § 2602;) and that there was no saving clause to this Act saving the right of action conferred by the Act of 1852; and therefore the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. Section 2602 should not be so construed as to deprive any person of such rights as had accrued under the former Act. This Act prescribes a less degree of cruelty as a cause of divorce than was required under the former Act, but in many respects its provisions are the same. State v. Gumber, 87 Wis. 808; 1 Bishop, Mar. Div. & Sep. § 165; Bishop, Written Laws, §§ 86, 123, 183; Lauds v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 88 Wis. 640.

In Pennsylvania it is held that before a statute should be construed to take away a remedy for a prior injury it should clearly appear that it embraces the cause of the injury within its provisions. Chalker v. Ives, 55 Pa. 81.

In New York it has been held that positive enactments are not to be construed as interfering with previously existing rights of action, contracts, or suits, unless the intent thus to interfere be expressed in the enactment. Butler v. Palmer, 1 Hill, 825; Hitchcock v. Way, 6 Ad. & El. 943; Bedford v. Shilling, 4 Serg. & R. 401, 8 Am. Dec. 718. So, also, a statute prescribing causes for divorce, or taking away causes before existing, should be construed to apply only to acts committed subsequent to its passage, unless a clear intent is expressed to the contrary. Bishop, Mar. & Div. 3d ed. § 802; 1 Bishop, Mar. & Div. 5th ed. §§ 98-103, 696; Jarvis v. Jarvis, 8 Edw. Ch. 462, 467, 6 L. ed. 726, 728; Clark v. Clark, 10 N. H. 380, 84 Am. Dec. 165; Given v. Marr, 27 Me. 212; Scott v. Scott, 6 Ohio, 534.

The rights and liabilities of these parties grew out of a contract governing the marriage relation which existed at the time the alleged cruelty was inflicted. These rights and liabilities were so sacred and binding between the parties that they could not be severed by mutual consent; nor could the parties forcibly break away from their binding force. Mr. Justice Field, in Pacific Mail S. S. Co. v. Jolliffe, 69 U. S. 2 Wall. 458, 17 L. ed. 807, said: "When a right has arisen upon a contract, or a transaction in the nature of a contract, authorized by statute, and has been so far perfected that nothing remains to be done by the party asserting it, the repeal of the statute does not affect it, or any action for its enforcement. It has then become a vested right, which stands independent of the statute."

This new Act took effect simultaneously with the repeal of the first Act. Its provisions may therefore more properly be said to be substituted in the place of, and to continue in force with modifications, the provisions of the original Act, rather than to have abrogated and annulled them." Bishop, Written Laws, § 181, lays down the rule that "the repeal of a statute, accompanied by a re-enactment of its terms, or of its substantial provisions in any other form of expression, does not break its continuity, and there is no moment when, whatever words of repeal are employed, it can be said to be repealed." Martindale v. Martindale, 10 Ind. 566; Fullerton v. Spring, 3 Wis. 667; Collins v. Warren, 63 Tex. 314; State v. Gumber, 87 Wis. 298; Sutherland, Stat. Const. §§ 164, 165; Middleton v. New Jersey W. L. R. Co. 26 N. J. Eq. 269, 274. It is clear that the Legislature did not intend, by repealing the Act of 1852, to take away or impair the rights which had arisen under it. Pacific Mail S. S. Co. v. Jolliffe, 69 U. S. 2 Wall. 450, 17 L. ed. 805; Wright v. Oakley, 5 Met. 406; Randolph v. Larned, 27 N. J. Eq. 557; Bishop, Written Laws, § 183; Willamette Falls T. & Mill. Co. v. Riley, 1 Or. 188; Capron v. Strout, 11 Nev. 804.

The complaint states facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action under the statute. The cause of action having accrued and become complete under the Laws of 1852, we think it sufficient, unless barred by the Statute of Limitations. Section 8150, Comp. Laws 1888, is the general Statute of Limitations applicable to actions not otherwise specified. Actions for divorce are nowhere referred to in any provision of the Limitation Act. The question is therefore presented whether the general Statute of Limitations is applicable to actions for divorce under the laws of this territory. Bishop, in his work on Marriage, Divorce, and Separation, (vol. 2, § 426,) says "that the Statutes of Limitations, in the mere ordinary words common in our statutes, are not extended by interpretation to suits for divorce." But, where the statute by express terms limits the period within which a matrimonial suit must be brought, such statute operates absolutely. By the practice of the English parliament in granting divorce bills, delays in the preliminary steps and in the final application are taken into account; yet there, as in some of the states, where no express statutory bar is created, any reasonable explanation contained in the pleadings or the proofs excusing the delay is to be considered by a court of equity in granting or refusing relief. And lapse of time, when excused, is by no means treated as an absolute bar. In one case cited, poverty being the excuse for delay, the petitioner was granted relief, although sixteen years had passed since the adultery was committed. So, also, absence abroad, sickness, and mistake of fact as to the relation existing between the parties, have been held sufficient to excuse the delay in presenting a complaint for relief. Bishop, Mar. Div. & Sep. §§ 428, 429; Mosely v. Mosely, 67 Ga. 92. Mr. Justice Swayne, in Sullivan v. Portland & K. R. Co. 94 U. S. 807, 24 L. ed. 824, says: "Every case is governed chiefly by its own circumstances. Sometimes the analogy of the Statute of Limitations is applied, sometimes a longer period than that prescribed by the statute is required; in some cases a shorter is sufficient, and sometimes the rule is applied where there is no statutory bar. It is competent for a court to apply the inherent principles of its own system of jurisprudence, and decide accordingly." And "where the relief sought is based on a right purely equitable, then that court acts solely upon its own inherent rules, altogether outside of and independent of the Statute of Limitations." Kline v. Vogel, 90 Mo. 239, 6 West. Rep. 647; 13 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, 675-679.

Taking the facts as presented in this case in connection with the peculiar relations then existing between husband and wife as recognized by the church of which these parties were evidently members, we can come to no other conclusion than that the delay on the part of the plaintiff in presenting her complaint should be recognized as excusable. Indeed, delay in complaining of family difficulties, and in bringing such matters before the court, is to be encouraged, rather than punished, in the hope that a better state of things may be established by the voluntary action of the parties. The marriage relation is a continuing one. In legal contemplation, husband and wife are one. In their dealings with each other they are governed by the same rules that are applied to others. Neither should be allowed to claim laches as to the other, but the policy of the law should be to encourage tranquillity and forbearance between parties sustaining that relation. While the relation is based upon a contract, yet it is a contract that differs from all others, and is the basis of civilized society. It cannot, like other contracts, be dissolved by mutual consent of the contracting parties. It may be entered into by parties not capable of forming any other lawful contract. It can be annulled by law, and its rights and relations are derived rather from the law relating to it than from the contract itself. In dissolving this contract by judicial procedure, we cannot conclude the Legislature intended to class it with other causes of actions to which acts of limitations apply. Mosely v. Mosely, 67 Ga. 92; Johnson v. Johnson, 50 Mich. 293.

Our conclusion is that the Statute of Limitations is not a bar to this action. We do not mean to say that long unexplained delay in bringing this action may not be the subject of inquiry by the court at the hearing. This delay may defeat the action upon a full and fair investigation, if it is not satisfactorily explained. All the facts concerning the allegations in the complaint should be presented to the court, and from them the court can determine the rights of the parties.

The several orders of the Third District Court in sustaining the demurrer and dismissing the complaint are vacated and set aside, with costs, the defendant to be allowed to answer, and the case proceed to a hearing upon the merits.

Anderson and Blackburn, JJ., concur.

INDIANA SUPREME COURT.

City of VINCENNES, Appt.,

v.

CITIZENS' GAS LIGHT & COKE CO.

(.....Ind.....)

1. An ordinance which is in effect an offer by the city when accepted creates a contract to be construed and interpreted like any other written contract.
2. An ordinance granting the privilege to lay gas mains and pipes in the city streets for twenty-five years on certain conditions, containing a provision that the city shall take sufficient gas for certain lamps, without mentioning any other period, makes a contract to take the quantity of gas specified for a term of twenty-five years.

3. The interpretation which the parties themselves have put upon an indefinite or ambiguous contract will be adopted by the court.
4. An exclusive use of the streets of a city for gas-pipes is not implied by an ordinance granting merely the privilege of laying gas mains and pipes and also constituting a contract for a certain quantity of gas.
5. The agreement of a city to take gas for certain lamps for a specified time, and also for such additional lamps as the city council may from time to time direct, does not prevent the city from purchasing gas from any other company for any lamps except those specified.
6. A municipal contract for gas being the exercise of a purely business power is not void as a surrender of legislative power.

NOTE.—For note on the power of public officers to make contracts binding on their successors or for a term of years, see Shelden v. Fox (Kan.) ante, 367.

16 L. R. A.

For note on power of municipality to create a monopoly, see Altgelt v. San Antonio (Tex.) 13 L. R. A. 383.

7. A city has power to contract for a supply of gas or water for a reasonable period of time extending beyond the tenure of office of the individual members of the common council making such contract.
8. Twenty-five years cannot be said to be an unreasonable time for which to contract for the supply of light or water to a city.
9. The passage of an ordinance constituting an offer which is accepted as a contract, if the contract is included within the terms of a prior ordinance requiring proposals for work, is a repeal of the prior ordinance pro tanto.
10. To present a question as to damages on appeal, it must have been assigned as a cause for a new trial.

(June 17, 1892.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Knox County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover the contract price of certain gas which had been furnished by plaintiff for lighting defendant's streets. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. John T. Goodman, Cullop & Kessinger and McDonald, Butler & Snow for appellant.

Mr. W. H. DeWolf, with Messrs. Riley & Ermison, for appellee:

The contract in this case is clearly within the contractual power of the city to enter into, and does not in the slightest particular restrict the city in the fullest and most extensive exercise of its legislative powers.

Indianapolis v. Indianapolis Gas Light & C. Co. 66 Ind. 396.

A municipal corporation acts as a private corporation when it enters into a contract with its inhabitants, as to supply gas, and is subject to the same duties, liabilities, and disabilities as individuals. It cannot therefore impair the obligations of its contracts so entered into because it may deem it for the benefit of its citizens so to do.

Western Sav. Fund Soc. v. Philadelphia, 81 Pa. 175; Bailey v. New York, 8 Hill, 588, 88 Am. Dec. 669.

An ordinance authorizing a gas company, on condition of its furnishing gas at specified rates, to lay its pipes in the streets, is, after it has been accepted by the company, a contract and not a mere revocable license.

Chicago M. Gas Light & F. Co. v. Lake, 180 Ill. 42; East St. Louis v. East St. Louis Gas Light & C. Co. 98 Ill. 415.

There is a distinction between the powers of a municipal corporation which are governmental or political in their nature, and those which are to be exercised for the management and improvement of property. As to the second the municipality represents the pecuniary and proprietary interests of individuals, and within the limits of corporate power the rules which govern the responsibility of individuals are properly applicable.

Cincinnati v. Cameron, 88 Ohio St. 336.

Although there may be a defect of power in a corporation to make a contract if a contract made by it is not in violation of the charter or of any statute prohibiting it, and the corporation has by its promise induced a party relying 16 L. R. A.

upon such promise, and in execution of the contract, to expend money and perform his part of the contract, the corporation is liable on the contract.

State Board of Agriculture v. Citizens St. R. Co. 47 Ind. 407; Logansport v. Dykeman, 116 Ind. 15.

A contract is only ultra vires when it is wholly outside of the legal powers of the corporation.

Dillon, Mun. Corp. § 935.

If municipal corporations cannot contract for a long period of time for such things as light or water, the result would be disastrous.

Crowder v. Sullivan, 128 Ind. 496.

This contract must be construed as a whole, and if, upon examination, it is found throughout to be consistent with itself, and in all its parts, and the contracting parties had authority under the law to enter into it, then the courts will regard it as a valid contract, and enforce its provisions.

5 Lawson, Rights, Rem. & Pr. § 2316; 2 Parsons, 638.

Miller, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellee brought this suit against the appellant to recover for gas supplied to appellant for public street lighting for a period of ten months, under the provisions of an ordinance enacted by the common council of the city and accepted by the appellee. The ordinance is as follows:

"An ordinance to provide for the lighting of the city of Vincennes, Indiana, with gas. Section 1. There is hereby granted and secured to Laz. Noble and associates, their successors and assigns, the privilege of laying gas mains and pipes for supplying illuminating coal gas along the several streets, alleys, thoroughfares, and public grounds of the city for twenty-five years from the date of this ordinance, the said mains and pipes to be so laid as not to interfere with the drainage or sewerage of said city; but before laying down any such mains or pipes five days' notice shall be given to the mayor of the commencement of the work, and such mains or pipes shall be laid with reasonable diligence, and the streets and alleys shall be repaired and restored to their original condition without delay. Sec. 2. That for the purpose of supplying gaslight upon the several streets of said city the said Laz. Noble and associates, their successors and assigns, shall lay down the required mains and pipes to supply gas for lighting the street lamps at the several street crossings along the following streets, viz., [omitted.] Sec. 3. The said Laz. Noble and associates, their successors or assigns, may erect within said city all suitable and necessary buildings and works for making illuminating coal gas of the most approved quality and purity for supplying the public lamps and private consumers of said city, and shall at all times supply the same in sufficient quantities for the public use as well as for private consumption. Said works to be completed and in operation on or before the 1st day of September, 1876, and in case they are not so completed the rights and privileges hereby granted shall cease and be void. Sec. 4. Upon the laying of the mains and pipes as above provided the city of Vincennes shall erect and maintain at the several street crossings within the limits prescribed in the above section 2 at least two public lamp-posts with lamps having all the needed fittings and fixtures for lighting, and may also erect and maintain along the lines of said mains and pipes such additional lamp-posts and lamps as the city council may from time to time direct; and upon the erection of said lamps said city shall take from the gas works so to be erected sufficient gas to keep said lamps lighted as similar lamps are usually lighted in other cities. The public lamps already located on the lines of said proposed mains, belonging to the city, where the same are properly located, are to be included as part of the number provided for in this ordinance. Sec. 5. The said Laz. Noble and associates, their successors and assigns, shall at all times supply all the public lamps with illuminating coal gas of approved quality and pureness, and of illuminating power equal to standard, fourteen sperm candle light, the burners to be used to be five-foot burners; and they further agree to light and extinguish the public lamps according to the 'American Meter Company's' time-tables in use for lighting and extinguishing similar lamps in cities generally, and to furnish gas, light, clean, and extinguish such lamps, for all of which the said city of Vincennes shall pay them at the rate of three dollars per month for each and every lamp so furnished with gas, lighted, extinguished, and cleaned, in monthly payments. And they also agree to supply all other lamps of the city, and the inhabitants who may desire it, with coal gas, as aforesaid, for their private use, at the rate of three dollars per 1,000 cubic feet, payable on bills rendered monthly. They shall make all needed repairs to the public lamps, purchase the material therefor, and render bills therefor against the city at cost, for payment. Sec. 6. The said Laz. Noble and associates, their successors and assigns, agree to extend their mains along the same or other streets whenever so required by the city council; provided, there shall be found at least three average private consumers upon each square upon such proposed extension; and if the city council shall determine at any time to light any street or thoroughfare beyond the limits hereinbefore specified, the said city council may, at the city's expense, extend the pipes, erect such additional posts and lamps as they may deem proper, and such lamps may be lighted, extinguished, and cleaned on the same terms as others are. Any pipes so laid shall only be used for supplying the public lamps, unless said Noble and associates, their successors and assigns, shall pay the city for said extended pipes. Sec. 7. The said Laz. Noble and associates may organize as a joint-stock company, under the laws of the state of Indiana, for the purpose of constructing, equipping, and operating the gas works contemplated in this ordinance; and, in case they shall so organize, all the rights, privileges, and agreements contained herein shall inure to such company. Sec. 8. The city reserves the right to test at all times the accuracy of the meters, and the quality and purity of the gas, by any competent agent that may be appointed by the city council. Sec. 9. The said Noble and associates shall enter into bond with surety for the performance of the stipulations in this ordinance in the penalty of ten thousand dollars within forty days from the passage hereof, and, on failure so to do, this ordinance, and all the rights conferred therein, shall be null and void. W. H. H. Beeson, Mayor. Passed December 27th, 1875.

"Attest: Emil Gull, City Clerk."

The complaint shows that after the passage of the ordinance the appellee company was organized and received from Laz. Noble and associates an assignment of all their rights conferred by the ordinance, and that on the 22d day of May, 1876, the appellee notified the appellant in writing of their acceptance of the terms and provisions of said ordinance; that the company erected the works, laid the mains authorized by the ordinance, and in all respects complied with its terms and conditions. The complaint shows that within a short time after the completion of the works as originally agreed upon petitions were filed with the common council by citizens and tax-payers, and extensions of the mains and the location of additional lamps were ordered. This was continued from time to time until April, 1880, when the city ordered the mains so extended as to provide for fifty additional lamps. The gas company hesitated in agreeing to the extension, but after some negotiations between the city and gas company a proposition was made in writing by the company to the city council, in which this language was used: "As this work will necessitate a very large expenditure of money by the company, and many years will probably elapse before any adequate returns will be realized, the company will require that upon the first of each month lamps upon any streets that are ready for lighting shall be put in use without waiting for the completion of the entire work. As a large quantity of materials must be contracted for, and other necessary preparations be made, an early disposition of the above proposition is desired. If this proposition is agreed to, it is expressly understood that it shall in no respect affect or change the contract existing between the city and the company." In reporting this proposition to the city council the committee on gas, who were conducting the negotiations on the part of the city, said: "We recommend that the proposition be accepted, with the stipulation that it be in force for no longer a time than the original contract, and end at the time when said original contract ends." The report was received and concurred in by the council, and the mains were extended and lamp-posts put up and supplied with gas by the company. The arrangement between the city and gas company was referred to as a "contract" in many other resolutions adopted by the city council in ordering extensions of the mains and location of lamp-posts. It is averred in the complaint that the company supplied gas of the proper quality for the lamp-posts agreed upon, amounting in all to 282 posts, continuously from the time of their erection until the beginning of the suit; that the city paid the company at the rate of $3 per lamp per month for all of the lamps up to and including November, 1889, but refused to pay the monthly bills of $696 each from December 1, 1889, up to and including October, 1890, though demand for payment was made soon after the expiration of each month. A demurrer for want of facts was filed to the complaint and overruled, and the ruling is assigned as error here.

The appellant contends that the ordinance of December 27, 1875, and the acceptance by the appellee, do not constitute an agreement binding the city to buy gas from the company for lighting the streets of the city for 25 years; that, fairly construed, it gives the company the right to use the streets of the city for that length of time, but that the grant is not exclusive, and that the city might grant another gas company the use of the same streets; that the ordinance fixes the price to be paid by the city per lamp per month so long as the city desires to take gas from the company, but no longer. No time is fixed, in express words, during which the city was to take gas from the company for lighting its street lamps. This makes it important to determine the rules of construction to be applied to the ordinance under consideration. It is insisted by the appellant that the ordinance is simply a grant of the franchise to lay pipes and mains in the streets, alleys, and thoroughfares of the city for the purpose of supplying it and its inhabitants with gas, and that in such cases the grant is to be taken strongly against the grantee, and nothing is to be taken by implication against the public except that which necessarily flows from the nature of the grant.

Indianapolis Cable St. R. Co. v. Citizens St. R. Co., 127 Ind. 369-390, 8 L. R. A. 539, and cases there cited, sustains the doctrine where the ordinance simply grants a franchise. We are, however, of the opinion that the ordinance under consideration is something more than a grant. It is a grant in so far as it confers upon the company the right to lay its mains and pipes in the public streets; and, if the controversy in this case related to the nature and extent of that grant these authorities would be in point, and of importance. In addition to the grant above referred to, the ordinance embodies a contract between the city and the company for the supply of gas. It is this contract which is in dispute, and which furnished the subject-matter of this controversy. The ordinance was in effect an offer by the city, the acceptance of which by the company created a contract between the parties, measured, like any other contract, by the terms and conditions of the writings. We see no reason why the contract thus formed should not be construed and interpreted like any other written contract. We are to look to the language employed, and, in case terms are ambiguous, or susceptible of more than one meaning, may, in order to arrive at the intention of the parties, inquire as to their situation at the time the contract was entered into, and the purpose to be accomplished by its execution. Beard v. Lojton, 102 Ind. 408; H. G. Olds Wagon Works v. Coombs, 124 Ind. 62; Lygon v. Lenon, 100 Ind. 567, 4 West. Rep. 461.

In 2 Lawson, Rights, Rem. & Pr. § 2816, the rule of interpretation is expressed in this language: "In all contracts where the meaning of language is to be determined by the courts, the governing principle must be to ascertain the intention of the parties through the words they have used. This principle is one of universal application. So every part of a document should be construed with reference to the intention of the parties as to the whole contract. To ascertain that intention, regard must be had to the nature of the instrument itself, the condition of the parties executing it, and the objects which they had in view." We are forced to the conclusion that at the time the ordinance was enacted by the common council of the city, and accepted by the gas company, it was mutually understood that the company was to furnish gas for street lighting, and the city was to pay for gas so furnished, at the agreed price, for the period of twenty-five years. It is evident that the company was unwilling to put in the plant, or, after it was put in and in operation, to extend the mains, unless both the city and private consumers would agree to take gas. We cannot but know that it is the almost universal custom for companies and individuals contracting to furnish either water or gas, before undertaking the large expenditure necessary to putting in the necessary plant, to require a contract for taking water or gas for public use for a specified time and at an agreed price. The only time mentioned in the ordinance that could in any manner fix the time during which the gas for street lighting should be furnished by the company and paid for by the city is 25 years. If the contract is not for that period of time, no time is fixed, and the city might immediately, upon the completion of the work, have discontinued the use of gas in its streets. We cannot believe that the parties intended to have the use of gas for street lighting to the uncontrolled option of one of the contracting parties. If this is the construction to be placed upon the ordinance, it amounts to little more than a grant of the use of the street for laying pipes and mains; the city being able at any time to discontinue the use of its lamps unless gas was furnished at its own price.

Whatever of doubt we might have entertained upon the construction of the ordinance is dispelled by the construction and practical interpretation placed upon it by the parties themselves in their subsequent dealings. The stipulation in the contract made for extension of the mains and supply of gas for additional lamps, that the arrangement should "be in force for no longer a time than the original contract, and end at the time when said original contract ends," shows that both the contracting parties, at the time when this language was used, understood that some time was fixed in the original contract for the termination of the agreement made by the company on the one hand to furnish gas, and by the city on the other to pay for the same at the agreed price. This time must, we think, necessarily be at the end of the twenty-five years mentioned in section 1 of the ordinance. That it is the duty of a court, where the language of a contract is indefinite or ambiguous, to adopt the construction and practical interpretation which the parties themselves put upon the contract, and to enforce that construction, has been so often asserted by this and other courts that no doubt of its soundness can be entertained. Ingle v. Norrington, 126 Ind. 174:

Pate v. French, 122 Ind. 10; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Reynolds, 118 Ind. 170; Vinton v. Baldwin, 95 Ind. 486.

We do not think this construction of the ordinance is subject to the objection that it in effect gives the company an exclusive privilege. There is no exclusive grant to the company of the use of the streets. It may be that no other company is likely to attempt the occupancy of the same streets at or near the location of the mains and pipes of this company, but it is by no means impossible. Whatever there is of an exclusive nature in the grant for the use of the streets is such as is the necessary result of all such grants. To deny the right to make grants that will not prevent a like occupancy by another company would prevent the construction of plants for the distribution of gas and water, or the use of streets for street railways; for two railways cannot occupy the same space in a street. Indianapolis Cable St. R. Co. v. Citizens St. R. Co., supra. So far as the ordinance gives the company the use of the streets, it is in the nature of a license, and not exclusive. Crowder v. Sullivan, 128 Ind. 486; Rushville v. Rushville Natural Gas Co. (Ind. Sup.) 15 L. R. A. 851.

Neither does the contract give the company a monopoly of supplying gas to the city for street lighting. The city agrees to take a certain quantity of gas for a specified period of time, leaving it the unrestricted right to either manufacture or purchase as much more as it desires. This is not the class of contracts which the law denounces as monopolistic. The making of contracts for the supply of light and water for a considerable time at fixed prices is ordinarily necessary and permissible. Crowder v. Sullivan, supra; Citizens Gas & Min. Co. v. Elwood, 114 Ind. 833, 14 West. Rep. 92. There is in the ordinance no agreement or provision preventing the city from taking gas from any other company. The contract entered into relates to the street lamps mentioned in section 2, and such "additional lamp-posts as the city council may from time to time direct. The ordinance authorizes the city to compel the company to extend its mains and pipes, under certain conditions, and furnish light for additional lamps; but we do not understand the contract as one which compels the city to take gas from this company for all additional lamps which might be needed to light the city. As we construe the contract, the city might have restricted the gas company to the lamps provided for in section 2, and contracted with some other company for all additional lamps, the liability of the city to pay for gas furnished for additional lamps being dependent upon contracts with the company subsequently made, by which it was agreed that the mains should be extended and gas furnished upon the same terms and for the same period of time provided for in the original ordinance. If the ordinance contained a provision by which the city agreed to take gas from no other company, or prohibiting any other company from engaging in the business of making and selling gas, the case of Davenport v. Kleinschmidt, 3 Mont. 502, and cases collected in Re Union Ferry Co. of Brooklyn, 98 N. Y. 139-150, would be in point.

In our opinion, the contract was not void on 16 L. R. A.

account of any supposed surrender by the common council of its legislative power. Every contract, or ordinance in the nature of a contract, does to some extent limit and control the power and authority of future councils. This is and must be the unavoidable result of any binding contract. We do not regard this as being an open question in this state. In Volparaiso v. Gardner, 97 Ind. 1, 49 Am. Rep. 416, this court said: "There is a distinction between powers of a legislative character and powers of a business nature. The power to execute a contract for goods, for houses, for gas, for water, and the like, is neither a judicial nor a legislative power, but is a purely business power. The question is, however, so firmly settled by authority that we deem it unnecessary to further discuss it. Indianapolis v. Indianapolis Gas Light & C. Co. 66 Ind. 396; Dillon, Mun. Corp. 3d ed. §§ 478, 474." See also Crowder v. Sullivan, supra; New Orleans Gaslight Co. v. New Orleans, 43 La. Ann. 188. We discover nothing in the ordinance that contains any substantial limitation of the legislative power of the common council. The question of the extent to which the common council has power to change or alter the location of the lamp-posts when once established is not before us in this appeal. We are of the opinion that nothing in the ordinance impairs the authority of the common council to make all needful changes in the grade of its streets. Elliott, Roads & Streets, 834.

Whatever may be the law in other jurisdictions, this court is committed to the doctrine that a city has power to contract for a supply of gas or water for a stated period of time extending beyond the tenure of office of the individual members of the common council making such contract. Indianapolis v. Indianapolis Gaslight & C. Co. 66 Ind. 396; Volparaiso v. Gardner, 97 Ind. 1, 49 Am. Rep. 416. While the facts in these cases are not precisely like the facts in the one before us, the discussion and decisions so fully cover the questions involved in this case that we do not deem it necessary to re-examine the question at length. The making of contracts for the supply of gas or water is a matter delegated to the governing powers of municipalities, to be exercised according to their own discretion; and, in the absence of fraud, while acting within the authority delegated to them, their action is not subject to review by the courts.

The length of time for which they shall bind their towns or cities depends upon so many circumstances and conditions as to situation, cost of supply and future prospects, that the courts can interfere only in extreme cases and upon seasonable application. We cannot say that twenty-five years is an unreasonable time for which to contract for a supply of light or water. Improvements made in the methods and cost of street lighting have in many instances rendered contracts that were fair and equitable when made to seem now to be grinding and oppressive. We are satisfied that the Act of March 8, 1883 (Elliott, Supp. § 794), did not affect the contract sued on. The first section of that Act authorizes the common councils of cities to contract for light for its streets and alleys for a period of time not exceeding 10 years. By the fourth section of the Act existing contracts, except such as confer exclusive privileges, are declared to be valid. We have arrived at the conclusion that the contract involved did not confer exclusive privileges, and it is therefore not affected by the legislation. We do not decide that it is within the power of the Legislature to impair the obligation of such contracts, but simply that the Act does not purport to do so. See, upon this subject, Indianapolis v. Indianapolis Gaslight & C. Co. supra; New Orleans Gaslight Co. v. Louisiana Light & H. P. & Mfg. Co. 115 U. S. 650, 29 L. ed. 516; Louisville Gas Co. v. Citizens Gaslight Co. 115 U. S. 688, 29 L. ed. 510. In our opinion, the court did not err in overruling the demurrer to the complaint.

Errors are assigned upon the action of the court in sustaining demurrers to several paragraphs of answer; but, as the discussion of the questions involved in the ruling of the court upon the demurrer to the complaint covered all the questions presented by the answers, except the second paragraph, we will not extend this opinion by referring to the others. In the second paragraph of answer it is alleged that at the time of the passage of the ordinance mentioned in the complaint an ordinance of the city of Vincennes was in force which required that proposals for work, the estimated cost of which exceeded $40, be let to the lowest bidder after a notice for proposals had been given by publication; that the ordinance in suit was passed in violation of the terms of this ordinance. It was also alleged in the answer that the common council by resolution prohibited the gas company from supplying gas for ten of the lamp-posts specified after December 1, 1889. The action of the court in sustaining the demurrer to this paragraph of answer was not erroneous. The ordinance claimed to have been violated evidently referred to work done for the city, and not to contracts such as this one. If the passage of the ordinance sued on was within the prohibition of the other ordinance, its passage repealed it pro tanto. Dillon, Mun. Corp. § 814; Burlington v. Estlow, 48 N. J. L. 18; Ex parte Wolf, 14 Neb. 24.

The position of the appellant was not improved by the passage of an ordinance prohibiting the company from furnishing gas to ten of the street lamps. The contract was mutually binding upon both the contracting parties, and neither could, by its own act, prejudice the position of the other.

Objection is made to the allowance of interest upon the installments payable each month for gas furnished the city. In order to present a question on appeal relating to the damages awarded, it must be assigned as a cause for a new trial. Ringle v. Kendall First Nat. Bank, 107 Ind. 425, 5 West. Rep. 621. No motion was made for a new trial in this case, and no question relating to the amount of the recovery can therefore be made in this court. We find no error in the record.

Judgment affirmed.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

Mary CREAMER, Admx. of Terrence Creamer, Deceased,
v.

WEST END STREET R. CO.

(.....Mass.....)

1. The relation of a passenger to the carrier is terminated as soon as he steps from a street-car to the street and does not continue during his passage to the sidewalk.
2. Stepping from a street-car which is slowing up, but is still in motion, in front of an electric car coming from the opposite direction at the rate of fifteen miles an hour, and which was lighted, and could be plainly seen, and the gong of which was ringing, is such negligence as will prevent the liability of the street-car company for the resulting death of a passenger where there was nothing to show that his senses were defective or that he exercised any care or caution, although his fellow passengers shouted to him to stop.

(May 10, 1892.)

REPORT by the Superior Court for Suffolk County for the opinion of the Supreme Judicial Court, after directing a verdict in favor of defendant, of an action brought to recover damages for the alleged negligent killing of plaintiff's intestate. Judgment on the verdict.

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion.

Mr. J. D. Long for plaintiff.

Messrs. M. F. Dickinson, Jr., and William B. Sprout, for defendant:

No unreasonable burden should be placed upon the common carrier. He is bound by law to furnish a reasonably safe place for passengers to alight. To hold that a person can choose, in fact dictate, where he can leave the car, and still claim the right of protection as a passenger, would place upon the carrier an unreasonable and unjust burden.

Com. v. Boston & M. R. Co. 129 Mass. 500, 87 Am. Rep. 352.

A street railway is not bound to anticipate that a passenger is to leave the car until some notice has been given by the passenger to those in charge of the car of his intention of leaving it. This is true even on the question of the due care of the passenger.

Nichols v. Middlesex R. Co. 106 Mass. 463.

In case of steam railroad relationship of passenger and carrier it has been held to continue after the passenger left the train at a station while he was leaving the station.

McKimble v. Boston & M. R. Co. 139 Mass. 543.

NOTE.—The question as to when the relation terminates between a passenger and a street-car company, which is decided in the above case, does not seem to have been decided directly and in terms in many previous cases, although the decision may have been made by implication.
16 L. R. A.

But this rule grows out of the duty of steam railroads to provide safe places at which their passengers can alight.

If a person attempts to leave a steam-car at a point not used as a station, uninvited by the railroad and voluntarily for the purpose of abandoning his journey, he ceases to be a passenger.

Com. v. Boston & M. R. Co. 129 Mass. 500, 37 Am. Rep. 382.

Barker, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff's intestate was instantly killed on Warren street by an electric car, which, it was testified, was running at a speed of fifteen miles an hour. His death, under the circumstances, gave the plaintiff a right to maintain the action under Stat. 1886, chap. 140, if, when killed, he was a passenger, or if, not being a passenger, he was in the exercise of due diligence. He had ridden as a passenger upon another car, which he had left immediately before he was killed. When struck he was walking across Warren street, having taken one or two steps from the place where he had touched the ground on leaving his car, and was between the rails of the track on which was the car by which he was struck. He had not reached or had time to reach the sidewalk of Warren street, but he had left the car on which he had been a passenger, and had begun his progress on foot across the street. We are of the opinion that he was not a passenger when the accident occurred, and that he ceased to be a passenger when he alighted upon the street from his car. The street is in no sense a passenger station, for the safety of which a street railway company is responsible. When a passenger steps from the car upon the street, he becomes a traveler upon the highway, and terminates his relations and rights as a passenger, and the railway company is not responsible to him as a carrier for the condition of the street, or for his safe passage from the car to the sidewalk. When a common carrier has the exclusive occupation of its tracks and stations, and can arrange and manage them as it sees fit, it may be properly held that persons intending to take passage upon or leave a train have the relation and rights of passengers in leaving or approaching the cars at a station. Warren v. Fitchburg R. Co. 8 Allen, 227, 85 Am. Dec. 700; McKimble v. Boston & M. R. Co. 139 Mass. 542; Dodge v. Boston & B. Steamship Co. 148 Mass. 207, 214, 2 L. R. A. 83. But one who steps from a street-railway car to the street is not upon the premises of the railway company, but upon a public place, where he has the same rights with every other occupier, and over which the company has no control. His rights are those of a traveler upon the highway, and not of a passenger.

The plaintiff, therefore, cannot recover unless she shows by affirmative evidence that the deceased was in the exercise of due diligence to avoid injury in traveling upon the street. As was said in Chaffee v. Boston & L. R. Corp., 104 Mass. 108, 115, "the question of ordinary care is, in most cases, even when the facts are undisputed, a question of fact, which it is peculiarly the province of the jury to settle." But, as was also said in the same case, 16 L. R. A.

"if as a matter of common knowledge and experience, the court can see that, upon all the undisputed facts, the plaintiff was not in the exercise of ordinary care, and that the injury he received was in part attributable to his want of it, the jury may be properly told, as matter of law, that he cannot recover." "If the whole evidence has no tendency to show care on the part of the person injured, but, on the contrary, shows that he was careless, it is the duty of the court to direct a verdict for the defendant." Warren v. Fitchburg R. Co. 8 Allen, 227, 230, 85 Am. Dec. 700, and cases cited.

All the material evidence bearing upon the question whether the deceased was in the exercise of due diligence is stated in the bill of exceptions. In the opinion of the presiding justice, it had no tendency to show that the deceased was in the exercise of due care, and, if this view of the evidence was correct, there should be judgment on the verdict which he ordered.

The time of the accident was about half past 11 o'clock at night. The car on which the deceased was riding was an open car, drawn by horses, and going southerly on Warren street, approaching Savin street, near which he lived. The car had transverse seats, and he was sitting on the extreme left of the rear seat. There were two car tracks in the street, and his car was on the right-hand track as he rode southerly. Savin street led off from Warren street to the left, and the car which struck him was running northerly on the track at his left. When the car on which he was had approached within 150 feet of Savin street, the conductor rang the bell for it to stop at Savin street. There was a stone crosswalk from Savin street across Warren street. The junction of these two streets was a regular stopping place for electric and horse cars and was so marked with the usual posts. Before the car actually stopped, and when the deceased was within five or ten feet of the crosswalk, he rose from his seat, and immediately stepped off the car, at right angles to the left. His car had slowed up, but was still in motion when he left it; and he stepped in front of another car going northerly upon the other track, and was instantly killed. The car on which he had been riding came to a stop a few feet further on. The car which struck him was coming down hill, and was moving at a speed of fifteen miles an hour. It was an electric car, of the open pattern, lighted, and crowded with people. The gong of this car was ringing, and the passengers upon it were shouting, singing, and whistling, and making a good deal of noise. The street was straight, and there was nothing except the passengers in front of the deceased, as he sat in his seat, to obstruct his view of the approaching car before he left his seat, and nothing after he rose to leave the car. When he rose from his seat, and started to get off, two men, one the conductor, and the other a fellow passenger, who were standing on the platform immediately behind him, shouted to him to stop, but he did not appear to hear, and stepped right off on the street to go across, and was on the other track, having taken the first step, and being in the act of finishing the second, when he was struck. When he rose to leave, the dashers of the two cars were opposite each other, and when he touched the car which struck him was not more than five or six feet away. He made no reply to the warnings given him, and did not appear to hear them. The testimony was that he did not appear to pay attention to anything, and the witnesses saw no indication that he took any notice of the approaching car or of the warnings given, and that his movement in leaving was so sudden that there was only time to shout to him, and that he jumped from the car, and went right along. Without quoting at length from the testimony, it is sufficient to say that it discloses no single indication of the exercise of care or caution on the part of the deceased. There is no evidence that his senses were defective, and no suggestion, in the testimony, of any other reason for haste on his part in leaving the car than the fact that it was near his destination. We do not, of course, hold that it is as a matter of law negligent for one to leave a street-car while it is in motion, or to attempt to cross a streetcar track without looking to see whether a car is approaching; but neither of these acts is evidence of due care, and we cannot discover in the testimony reported any evidence that the deceased exercised care or attention of any kind or degree. On the contrary, the undisputed evidence shows that, in spite of warnings from those in his immediate vicinity, he suddenly, without precaution, precipitated himself into a position of great and obvious danger. He no doubt had a right to expect that any cars which might be upon the other track would not run at a dangerous rate of speed, and would be lawfully managed; but this proper expectation could not excuse him from the exercise of all proper care, and does not relieve the plaintiff from the obligation of proving, by positive affirmative evidence that the deceased was in fact in the exercise of due diligence. As there was no such evidence, a verdict for the defendant was rightly ordered.

Judgment on the verdict.

ILLINOIS SUPREME COURT.

Frank FRORER et al., Appts.,
v.
PEOPLE of the State of Illinois.

(.....Ill.....)

1. Judicial notice will be taken that employees in mines and manufactories include but a part of those who are employed by others and who depend upon their daily labor for subsistence.
2. A statute making it unlawful for a person or corporation engaged in mining or manufacturing to engage or be interested in keeping or controlling any truck store, shop, or scheme for furnishing supplies, tools, clothing, provisions or groceries to employees, but which does not apply to those employing laborers in other branches of business, violates the constitutional guaranty that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law.
3. A statute which makes it a misdemeanor for persons in one branch of industry to do what is unlawful for those in another branch of industry in like relation and under like conditions, is unconstitutional.

(March 26, 1892.)

NOTE.—Statutes of the character of the one under examination in this case are of comparatively recent origin in this country and are by no means numerous at the present time. As a consequence there are few decisions on the question of their validity. What there are we think are all referred to in this opinion and with the exception of Hancock v. Yaden, 6 L. R. A. 576, 121 Ind. 365, they concur in holding the statutes unconstitutional. Hancock v. Yaden is very nearly opposed to the other authorities. The statute there prohibited employees from making contracts in advance to accept pay in anything else than money, and the court in the opinion devotes considerable space to this provision of the statute. But the statute says also that mining or manufacturing concerns

A PPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Christian County imposing a fine upon them for violating the terms of the statute prohibiting certain classes of persons from being interested in truck stores, etc. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. George S. House and Drennan & Hogan, for appellants:

This law interferes with the right of both the mine operator and coal miner to contract regarding a matter where all others are left free. This may not be done. It is an invasion of the guaranteed fundamental rights of both the employer and the employé.

In the subject-matter of this legislation the public can have no concern.

It is a character of legislation condemned by all courts as degrading in this, that it proceeds upon the theory that the class of employers named are unjust, and the class of employees named incapable,—wanting in natural capacity. This will not do in this government.

Labor is property. The right to make contracts about the free use and enjoyment of one's own property is a right of property, and secured by the constitutional guaranty that no person shall be deprived of property without due process of law.

shall pay their employees at least once in two weeks in money, and the court says that constitutes no unjust discrimination since it operates upon all alike within the classes named and leaves all free to enter them or not at their pleasure. There is, however, no discussion of how a class may be formed and it appears to assume that the Legislature may constitute a business which goes under one name a class leaving out all which may be called by other names, although their general features may be the same. That view would certainly not receive universal acceptance.

For note on statutory restrictions on contracts between master and servant, see Com. v. Perry (Mass.) 14 L. R. A. 326.

Butchers Union S. H. & L. S. L. Co. v. Crescent City L. S. L. & S. H. Co. 111 U. S. 757, 28 L. ed. 591; Cooley, Const. Lim. p. 398; Millett v. People, 5 West. Rep. 155, 117 Ill. 294.

See also Budd v. State, 3 Humph. 498, where one of the sections of the Act incorporating the Union Bank which provided that if any of the officers, agents, or servants of that bank should embezzle the funds of the bank, or make false entries, they should be guilty of felony, was held unconstitutional, because it did not apply generally to officers, agents, or servants of banks committing like offenses. And Wally v. Kennedy, 2 Yerg. 554, 24 Am. Dec. 511, where an act authorizing the court to dismiss Indian reservation cases where prosecuted for the use of another, was held unconstitutional.

See also People v. Marx, 99 N. Y. 877, 52 Am. Rep. 84.

The Supreme Court of the state of Pennsylvania, in the case of Godcharles v. Wigman, 4 Cent. Rep. 837, 118 Pa. 481, in passing upon the validity of what was denominated as the "Stone Order Act" in that state says: The Act is an infringement alike of the right of the employer and the employé; more than this, it is an insulting attempt to put the laborer under a legislative tutelage which is not only degrading to his manhood, but subversive of his rights as a citizen of the United States.

It is entirely without and beyond the power of the Legislature to limit or forbid the right of contract between parties under no mental, corporal, or other disability when the subject of contract is lawful, not public in its character, and the exercise of it is purely private, and personal to the parties themselves.

State v. Goodwill, 6 L. R. A. 631, 38 W. Va. 179; State v. First Creek C. & C. Co. 6 L. R. A. 859, 38 W. Va. 188. See also Soon Hing v. Crowley, 118 U. S. 703, 28 L. ed. 1145; Minnesota v. Barber, 186 U. S. 813, 24 L. ed. 455; Re Jacobs, 98 N. Y. 98; People v. Marx, 99 N. Y. 877, 52 Am. Rep. 84; People v. Gillman, 12 Cent. Rep. 616, 109 N. Y. 889; Ex parte Kubach, 9 L. R. A. 482, 85 Cal. 274; Raggio v. State, 86 Tenn. 272; State v. Divine, 98 N. C. 778; Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 31 L. ed. 205; Fick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 856, 30 L. ed. 220.

Messrs. Ricks & Creighton and William Mooney for the People.

Schofield, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action of debt under the Act approved May 28, 1891, in force July 1 of that year, entitled "An Act to Provide for the Payment of Wages in Lawful Money, and to Prohibit the Truck System, and to Prevent Deduction from Wages except for Lawful Money actually Advanced." The 1st, 2d, and 7th sections only are pertinent in the present case, and they read as follows: "Section 1. Be it enacted by the people of the state of Illinois, represented in General Assembly, that it shall be unlawful for any person, company, corporation, or association, now engaged, or hereafter to be engaged, in any mining or manufacturing business in this state, to engage in, or be interested directly or indirectly in, the keeping of a truck store, or the controlling of any store, shop, or scheme for the furnishing of supplies, tools, clothing, provisions, or groceries to his, its, or their employes, while so engaged in mining or manufacturing. Sec. 2. Every person, company, corporation, or association found guilty of violating section one (1) of this Act, either by himself its or their agents, servants, or employes or partners, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor for each and every day such business is done in violation of said section, and on conviction shall be liable to a fine for each offense of not less than fifty (50) nor more than two hundred (200) dollars, to be recovered in the name of the people, for the use of the school funds; and any person having knowledge of the fact that said section has been violated may make complaint, and cause summons or warrant to be issued." "Sec. 7. 'Truck' means the payment of wages otherwise than in lawful money, or otherwise than to the full amount earned by the employé."

There are two counts in the declaration. It is alleged in the first count that "since the 1st day of July, 1891, and prior to the commencement of the suit, the defendants, as copartners, under the firm name of the Pana Coal Company, were engaged in the mining of coal at said Christian county, and in such business had in their employ divers persons; and that at said time and place the said defendants were interested in the keeping of a certain truck store, there situated, for the furnishing of supplies, tools, clothing, provisions, and groceries to their said employes, contrary to the form of the statute." In the second count it is alleged that "the said defendants, as copartners, were engaged in the mining of coal, and having in their employ divers persons, all at the time and place aforesaid, and were then and there interested in controlling a scheme for the furnishing of supplies, clothing, provisions, and groceries to their said employes, contrary to the form of the statute." The defendants pleaded not guilty, and the cause was, by agreement of the parties, tried by the court without the intervention of a jury.

Upon the trial, and after evidence was submitted, the defendants asked the court to mark as "held" the following among other propositions submitted in writing: "(4) As a matter of law, the court holds that the Act of the Legislature entitled 'An Act to Provide for the Payment of Wages in Lawful Money, and to Prohibit the Truck System, and to Prevent the Deduction from Wages, except for Lawful Money actually Advanced,' approved May 28, 1891, and each and every section thereof, is illegal and void." But the court declined to hold as thus requested, and found the defendants guilty, and assessed a fine of $50 against them on each count, and gave judgment accordingly. The defendants excepted to the several rulings of the court, and the record of that judgment is brought before us by the appeal of the defendants.

The question whether there is error in the judgment depends upon whether sections 1 and 2, supra, are constitutional enactments, and therefore the law of the land; for, if they are not, there is no statute or principle of the common law upon which the judgments can be sustained. The first section assumes to make it unlawful for a person or a corporation, while in the business of mining or manufacturing, to engage or be interested, directly or indirectly, in keeping or controlling any truck store, shop, or scheme for the furnishing of supplies, tools, clothing, provisions, or groceries to employes. Laws 1891, p. 212. This is not confined to sales upon credit, nor to sales of articles paid for or to be paid for in work, nor are any exceptions made because of any peculiar circumstances or occasions, however urgently the necessities of individuals may require that there should be such exception; but it extends, under any and all circumstances, to every keeping or controlling of any store, shop, or scheme for furnishing supplies, tools, clothing, provisions, or groceries, by the operator of the mine or manufactory, to employes while engaged in mining or manufacturing. While the prohibition includes, by name, only the person, company, corporation, or association engaged in "mining or manufacturing," it includes equally within its effect their employes; for the employe is necessarily denied the right to contract with one who is forbidden by the law to possess, for the purpose of contracting with him, the articles about which he wishes to contract. It would therefore have added nothing to the legal meaning of this section if it had expressly prohibited the employes from contracting with their employer for the purchase of the property in which it is thus made unlawful for their employer to have any ownership. We must take judicial notice that employes in mines and manufactories include but a part of those who are employed by others, and who depend upon their daily labor for subsistence; for we know, from daily observation, that many thousands are employed in making excavations and embankments for roads, buildings, and other improvements, erecting and repairing buildings and various other structures, in the business of transportation, in that of the sale of goods, wares, and merchandise, in that of quarrying stone, and that of agriculture, and in that of domestic service, and in all of these branches of industry employers and employes are unaffected by this statute; and such employers may therefore, after as before its taking effect, engage or be interested in truck stores or shops or schemes for the furnishing of supplies, tools, clothing, provisions, and groceries to their employes.

And this leads to the inquiry whether the keeping of a truck store, or controlling of a store, shop, or scheme for the furnishing of supplies, tools, clothing, provisions, or groceries to his employes, by the person carrying on the business of making excavations and embankments for roads and other improvements, erecting and repairing buildings and other structures, the business of transportation, that of the sale of goods, wares, and merchandise, or that of agriculture, is, in substance and in principle, a different thing from that of the keeping of a truck store, or controlling of a store, shop, or scheme for the furnishing of supplies, tools, clothing, provisions, or groceries to his employes, by the person carrying on the business of mining or manufacturing. The purpose is, manifestly, the same in each case, namely, the sale by the employer to the employe of the articles designated; and it requires precisely the same elements to constitute a contract—including mental capacity in the parties contracting, and freedom from fraud and overreaching—in the one case as it does in the others. The operator of a mine and the manufacturer have no other control over the employe than that which may result from employing him, or continuing him in employment, or refusing to do so; and every other employer of labor has precisely the same control over those who obtain or wish to obtain employment with him. There can be no reason why the miner or the operative in the manufactory will be more or differently influenced by his hopes and fears in these respects than will laborers in any other industries. Mining and manufacturing are indispensable branches of industry, and as honorable as any others. There is nothing in operating mines or manufactories to render the individual less capable to contract, or to give him greater wisdom and adroitness therein, than he would possess were he engaged in operating and controlling some other branch of industry. It may be conceded that there is more of dependence of the employe upon the employer in case of skilled labor, in a special department, because the demand for such labor is limited in each locality by the number and size of its industries, than there is in the case of the general laborer, who may find employment anywhere and everywhere; but mining and manufacturing do not include all the skilled labor in the country. In constructing roads, in building houses, in the business of commerce, including buying, selling, and transportation, and in other branches of industry, a vast number of skilled laborers are constantly employed, and their relations to their employers would seem to be under precisely the same conditions as are those affecting the relations between operators of mines and manufacturers and their employes. And, in any view, the extent and degree of dependence in particular classes of industry cannot affect the general principle, since, human nature being the same in all classes of industry, the effect of equal degrees of dependence must be the same in each class. It cannot truthfully be said that all operators in mines or manufactories are more dependent upon their employers than all laborers in any other branch of industry. We know, from observance, that there are instances of entire destitution, and consequently of the dependence presumed to result therefrom, in all branches of industry; and that in all branches of industry there are varying degrees of destitution, and consequently of the correspondent presumed dependence resulting therefrom. And so it must follow that any difference between the business protected by the first section, when carried on by the employer of laborers in mines or manufactories, and when carried on by the employers of laborers in other branches of lawful industry, cannot be one of principle, but must be purely one of degree, varying with the circumstances of particular cases; the injury from the prohibited business, if, in fact, it be such, being of precisely the same kind, whether one or many may be affected by it. In all that relates to mining and manufacturing, wherein they differ from other branches of industry, we recognize the supremacy of the General Assembly to determine whether any, and, if any, what, statute shall be enacted for their welfare and that of operators therein, and necessarily affecting them alone; but keeping stores and groceries, or supplies of tools, clothing, and food, by whatever name, to sell to laborers in mines and manufactories, is entirely independent of mining and manufacturing, and has no tendency in any possible way to affect the mechanical process of mining and manufacturing. The prohibition of the statute operates, not directly upon the business of mining and manufacturing, but upon the individual, because of his participation in that business. It is not imposed for the purpose of rendering mining and manufacturing less perilous or laborious, nor to restrict or regulate the duties of employer and employé in respects peculiar to those industries, but for the sole purpose of imposing disabilities in contracting as to tools, clothing, and food,—matters about which all laborers must contract, and as to which all laborers in every other branch of industry are permitted to contract with their employers without any restriction.

Assuming, then, that the keeping of a truck store, or controlling of a store, shop, or scheme for the furnishing of supplies, tools, clothing, provisions, or groceries to his employés, by the person carrying on the business of mining or manufacturing, is not, in principle, a different thing from what it is when kept or controlled by persons employing laborers in different branches of labor, it is, if these sections are law, now lawful for any person or corporation, other than one engaged in mining and manufacturing, to engage or be interested directly in keeping a truck store, or controlling a store, shop, or scheme for the furnishing of supplies, tools, clothing, provisions, or groceries to his employés, while a person engaged in mining and manufacturing is, because of that fact alone, prohibited from doing so. The privilege or liberty to engage in or control the business of keeping and selling clothing, provisions, groceries, tools, etc., to employés, is one of profit,—of presumptive value; and thus, by the effect of these sections, what the employers in other industries may do for their pecuniary gain with impunity, and have the law to protect and enforce, the miner and manufacturer, under precisely the same circumstances and conditions, are prohibited from doing for their pecuniary gain. The same act, in substance and in principle, if done by the one is lawful, but if done by the other is not only unlawful, but a misdemeanor, punishable by fine.

If the General Assembly may thus deprive some persons of substantial privileges allowed to other persons under precisely the same conditions, it is manifest that it may, upon like principle, deprive still other persons of other privileges in contracting which, under precisely the same circumstances, are enjoyed by all but the prohibited class; and it can hardly be admissible that the legislative determination that the facts are such as to warrant this discrimination is conclusive, for that would make the General Assembly omnipotent, since, if that were so, there could be nothing but its own discretion to control its action in regard to every liberty enjoyed by the citizen; and it might find that the public welfare required that society should be divided into an indefinite number of classes, each possessing or being denied privileges in contracting and acquiring property, as favoritism or caprice might dictate. The privilege of contracting is both a liberty and a property right, and if A. is denied the right to contract and acquire property in a manner which he has hitherto enjoyed under the law, and which B., C., and D. are still allowed by the law to enjoy, it is clear that he is deprived of both liberty and property to the extent that he is thus denied the right to contract. Our Constitution guarantees that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law (section 2, art. 2), and says Cooley: "The man or the class forbidden the acquisition or enjoyment of property in the manner permitted the community at large would be deprived of liberty in particulars of primary importance to his or their pursuit of happiness." Cooley, Const. Lim. 1st ed. p. 393; People v. Gillson, 109 N. Y. 398, 12 Cent. Rep. 616; People v. Otis, 90 N. Y. 48. "Due process of law" does not mean a statute passed for the purpose of working the wrong. Cooley, Const. Lim. 1st ed. p. 353. These words are held to be synonymous with the words "law of the land." Id. pp. 352, 353. "And this means general public law, binding upon all the members of the community under all circumstances, and not partial or private laws, affecting the rights of private individuals or classes of individuals." Millett v. People, infra, and authorities there cited. It is not doubted that laws may be enacted properly, and without infringing this section of the Constitution, which, by reason of peculiar circumstances, may affect some persons or classes of persons only who were not before affected by such restrictions; but, in such instances, the circumstances must be so exceptional as to leave no others affected in precisely the same way upon whom a general law could have effect.

As we quoted from Cooley, Const. Lim., in Millett v. People, 117 Ill. 294, 5 West. Rep. 157, "distinctions in these respects should be based upon some reason which renders them important, like the want of capacity in infants and insane persons; but if the Legislature should undertake to provide that persons following some specific lawful trade or employment should not have capacity to make contracts, or to receive conveyances, or to build such houses as others were allowed to erect, or, in any other way, to make such use of their property as was permissible to others, it can scarcely be doubted that the act would transcend the due bounds of legislative power, even if it did not come in conflict with express constitutional provisions. The man or the class forbidden the acquisition or enjoyment of property in the manner permitted to the community at large would be deprived of liberty in particulars of primary importance to his or their pursuit of happiness." Cooley, Const. Lim. 1st ed. p. 391. And upon this principle we held in Millett v. People, supra, that it is not competent under the Constitution for the General Assembly to single out owners and operators of coal mines, and provide that they shall bear burdens not imposed on other owners of property or employers of labor, and prohibit them from making contracts which it is competent for other owners of property or employers of labor to make. In State v. Goodwill, 88 W. Va. 179, 6 L. R. A. 631, and in State v. Fire Creek, C. & C. Co., 88 W. Va. 188, 6 L. R. A. 359, the question before the supreme court was whether a statute of West Virginia, declaring "that it shall not be lawful for any person, firm, company, corporation, or association engaged in mining coal, ore, or other minerals, or mining and manufacturing them or either of them, or manufacturing iron and steel, or both, or any other kind of manufacturing, . . . to issue for the payment of labor any order or other paper whatsoever unless the same purports to be redeemable for its face value in lawful money of the United States, bearing interest at a legal rate, made payable to employé or bearer, and redeemable within a period of thirty days by the person, firm, company, corporation, or association giving, making, or issuing the same." The court held, after a lengthy and able discussion of the question, that the enactment was unconstitutional and void. The court, among other things, said: "The property which every man has in his own labor, as it is the original foundation of all other property, so it is the most sacred and inviolable. The patrimony of the poor man lies in the strength and dexterity of his own hands; and to hinder him from employing these in what manner he may think proper, without injury to his neighbor, is a plain violation of this most sacred property. It is equally an encroachment both upon the just liberty and rights of the workman and his employer, or those who might be disposed to employ him, for the Legislature to interfere with the freedom of contract between them, as such interference hinders the one from working at what he thinks proper and at the same time prevents the other from employing whom he chooses. A person living under the protection of this government has the right to adopt and follow any lawful industrial pursuit, not injurious to the community, which he may see fit; and, as incident to this, is the right to labor or employ labor, make contracts in respect thereto upon such terms as may be agreed upon by the parties, to enforce all lawful contracts, to sue and give evidence, and to inherit, purchase, lease, sell, or convey property of every kind. The enjoyment or deprivation of these rights and privileges constitutes the essential distinction between freedom and slavery; between liberty and oppression." There was like ruling in regard to a similar enactment by the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania in Godcharles v. Wigeman, 113 Pa. 431, 4 Cent. Rep. 887. In Com. v. Perry (Mass.) 14 L. R. A. 325, the defendant was indicted under a statute of Massachusetts providing that "no employer shall impose a fine upon, or withhold wages or any part of the wages of, an employé at weaving for imperfections that may arise during the process of weaving;" and the court held the statute unconstitutional, and in doing so said: "There are certain fundamental rights of every citizen which are recognized in the organic law of all our free American states. A statute which violates any of these rights is unconstitutional and void, even though the enactment of it is not expressly forbidden. . . . The right to acquire, possess, and protect property includes the right to make reasonable contracts, which shall be under the protection of the law. The manufacture of cloth is an important industry, essential to the welfare of the community. There is no reason—indeed, the statute before us recognizes it—why men should not be permitted to engage in it as a legitimate business, into which anybody may freely enter. The right to employ weavers, and to make proper contracts with them, is therefore protected by our Constitution; and a statute which forbids the making of such contracts, or attempts to nullify them, or impair the obligation of them, violates fundamental principles of right, which are expressly recognized by our Constitution." See also, to like effect, People v. Marz, 99 N. Y. 877, 53 Am. Rep. 84; Re Jacobs, 98 N. Y. 98; Ex parte Kuback, 85 Cal. 274, 9 L. R. A. 462.

16 L. R. A.

But it is contended the enactment before us is sustained by the principles announced in Munn v. People, 60 Ill. 80. There is, in our opinion, no analogy between that case and the present. In the first place, there the subject-matter of the Act was local and exceptional in its nature, and the law in question operated alike upon all affected by like conditions; in the second place, the business of warehousing was held to be affected by a public use, and assimilated to the business of carriers, innkeepers, millers, and others of like kind, and therefore subject to regulations for the public welfare; and, in the third place, the statute there affected only the business of warehousing,—that wherein the necessity of transportation from the west to the east left the shipper no discretion, but compelled him, whether he would or not, to patronize the warehouse. It did not assume to regulate or restrict the warehouseman in contracting with his laborers, or his laborers in contracting with him. See Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 127, 24 L. ed. 84.

Other instances of statutory regulations of private rights are in lien laws in favor of home-owners, mechanics, etc., limitation laws, the Statute of Frauds, and other statutes relating to evidence, laws in regard to pleadings, exemption laws, and insolvent laws; but these all relate, not to the power to contract in regard to matters of general right, but to the remedy for the enforcing of contracts, as to which the Legislature may make such regulations as the public welfare seems to demand, so long as, under pretense of regulating the remedy, it does not impair the right itself. Cooley, Const. Lim. 1st ed. 861. So, under what is denominated the "police power," laws may be constitutionally enacted imposing new burdens on persons and property, and restricting personal rights of enjoyment of property, where, in the opinion of the General Assembly, the public welfare demands it, under which may be instanced license laws, laws or ordinances fixing fire limits, quarantine laws, laws imposing liability upon masters on account of death or injury of servants, laws requiring dangerous machinery to be so guarded and used as to avoid injuries to others, laws to prevent monopolies, extortions and fraudulent impositions, and, in general, all laws whereby one person is prohibited from so using his liberty or property as to injure or endanger the liberty or property of another. See Id. 527. Under this head may also properly be classed usury laws, and laws that may have been found on the statute books of England, and also, perhaps, on statute books of some of the states, imposing peculiar and exceptional restrictions on contracts with seamen. Usury laws proceed upon the theory that the lender and the borrower of money do not occupy towards each other the same relations of equality that parties do in contracting with each other in regard to the loan or sale of other kinds of property, and that the borrower's necessities deprive him of freedom in contracting, and place him at the mercy of the lender; and such laws may be found on the statute books of all the civilized nations of the world, both ancient and modern. See Tyler, Usury, p. 61; opinion of Chancellor Kent in Dunham v. Gould, 16 Johns. 377, 8 Am. Dec. 323. By the common law, the master had authority over all the mariners on board the ship, and, in case of disobedience, disrespectful or disorderly conduct, he might lawfully correct them in a reasonable manner; "his authority in this respect being analogous to that of a parent over his child, or of a master over his apprentice or scholar." Abb. Shipp. 7th Am. ed. p. 248, § 4. See also note at bottom of page. By the very nature and necessities of their employment, and the usages and customs governing it, seamen thus constituted a servile class, as distinctly marked, and as dependent and helpless, in many respects, as that of infants, and, of necessity, they required a measure of protection not required by the citizen who acknowledges no master. In none of the statutes alluded to is one person denied a privilege or liberty which is allowed to others under like conditions or circumstances, as he is here. The police power is limited to enactments having reference to the comfort, the safety, or the welfare of society, and, under guise of it, a person cannot be deprived of a constitutional right. It is impossible that under that power what is lawful, if done by A., if done by B. can be a misdemeanor, the circumstances and conditions being the same. Theoretically, there is no inferior class, other than that of those degraded by crime or other vicious indulgences of the passions, among our citizens. Those who are entitled to exercise the elective franchise are deemed equals before the law, and it is not admissible to arbitrarily brand, by statute, one class of them, without reference to and wholly irrespective of their actual good or bad behavior, as too unscrupulous, and the other class as too imbecile or timid and weak, to exercise that freedom in contracting which is allowed to all others. So far as Hancock v. Yaden, 121 Ind. 365, 6 L. R. A. 576, may be in conflict with the views we have herein expressed, it is equally in conflict with Millett v. People, supra. There is nothing in the recent decision of the supreme court of West Virginia in State v. Peet Splint Coal Co., in conflict with our decision in this case. It proves nothing that statutes may have been in force in England analogous to the sections involved in this suit, for there, as Blackstone says, "parliament is absolute and without control" (1 Com. pp. 161, 162, Cooley's ed.), while our legislative powers are restrained by a written constitution. We feel compelled to hold that the sections we have considered are repugnant to section 2, art. 2, of our Constitution, and therefore not law. The proposition in writing, submitted to the court, included sections not pertinent to this case, and it was therefore too broad, and the court properly refused to mark it as "Held." But the court erred in finding appellants guilty, and in giving judgment in behalf of appellee, and that judgment is reversed.

A petition for rehearing has been presented since the filing of the opinion, and we have given its arguments all the care and consideration within our power; and, having done so, we still remain of the opinion before announced. We have no discretion. Understanding our Constitution as we do, it is impossible, without disregarding its provisions, to sustain a statute which makes that a misdemeanor, when done by persons while engaged in one branch of industry, which if done by persons in another branch of industry, in like relations and under like conditions, will be lawful. We doubt not that grievous wrongs have resulted from overreaching by employers of employes engaged in mining and manufacturing, but, if so, on like principle, precisely, the same wrongs are liable to result in other branches of industry under like conditions; and the wrong, wherever done, must, in principle, always be the same. It is the province of legislation to deal with principles, leaving their application to particular facts to the courts. See Const. art. 8. We have, since considering this petition, restated, in somewhat different language, our views upon the question involved in this case, and the present opinion will therefore be filed and published in lieu of that heretofore filed. Rehearing denied.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

Maggie L. LOKER

v.

Nathaniel R. GERALD.

(....Mass.....)

The legal action that a wife's domicil follows that of her husband gives jurisdiction of a suit for divorce on the ground of the wife's desertion, to a court of a state to which the husband has removed and in which he has resided for the time required by statute, although the marriage took place in another state in which the wife still resides and in which

NOTE.—Domicil of wife for purpose of divorce suit. While the doctrine of the principal case is sustained by numerous decisions, both English and 14 L. R. A.

American, the dissent from the ruling is so emphatic as to warrant a mention of the opposite view—especially as it clearly appears that upon a strictly her desertion began and in which service is made upon her.

(June 24, 1892.)

REPORT from the Superior Court for Middlesex County for the opinion of the Su-analogous state of facts the New York Court of Appeals, in the case of O'Dea v. O'Dea, 1 Cent. Rep. 785, 101 N. Y. 23, reached a directly opposite conclusion. The general proposition grounded upon well-recognized principles of the common law, that the domicile of the wife follows that of the husband, has long been fully accepted by the Massachusetts courts, and this, with the facts disclosed in evidence fully warranted the conclusion reached in the case under review.

The purposes of this note, however, are to show the dissent from this decision, and disclose the unfortunate conflict that prevails throughout the various states with reference to the question of the domicile of either party to the suit as affecting the right of the petitioned court to take jurisdiction.

The law making the domicile of the husband that of the wife is applicable only to their relations with third parties, and has no application in cases of actual separation and controversy between themselves as to the temporary or permanent severance of the marriage tie by judicial proceedings. Vence v. Vence, 15 How. Pr. 407; Schonwald v. Schonwald, 55 N. C. 397; Cheever v. Wilson, 76 U. S. 9 Wall. 109, 19 L. ed. 605.

In Louisiana it is said by Todd, J., delivering the opinion of the court: "It would do violence to the plainest principles of common sense and common justice to call this residence of the guilty husband, where the wife is forbidden to come, or of which she knows nothing, the domicile of the wife. The true meaning of this aphorism, touching the domicile of the wife being that of her husband, is that the domicile of the wife is the domicile that the husband has at his marriage, or provides after marriage for himself and his wife, and which, though he may change at pleasure, it must be one to which the wife is taken or invited, or at least of which she knows, and to which she may go and stay at her will." Champon v. Champon, 40 La. Ann. 28.

In Indiana it is held that the identity of domicile is a presumption which may be rebutted in a divorce case, that any act of the husband which entitles the wife to a divorce immediately discharges her from any obligation to dwell with him, that in such a case she must separate from him to preserve her legal rights, or the cohabitation will be a condonation of the act, and that when the duty of dwelling together ceases, the presumption must also cease. Jenness v. Jenness, 24 Ind. 355, 87 Am. Dec. 335. In other words, the law will recognize the wife as having a separate existence, separate interests, and separate rights in those cases where the object of the proceedings is to show that the marriage relation itself ought to be dissolved, otherwise the parties would stand on very unequal grounds, as the husband could change his own domicile at will, and thus, in many cases, deprive the wife of all opportunity of enforcing her rights. Tolen v. Tolen, 2 Blackf. 407, 21 Am. Dec. 743.

The New York Court of Appeals decides that the jurisdiction of the court of another state in which a judgment has been rendered is always open to inquiry in the courts of this state, and if that court has exceeded its jurisdiction, or has not obtained jurisdiction of the parties, the proceedings are coram non judice and void. Dobson v. Pearce, 12 N. Y. 156, 62 Am. Dec. 152; Kinnier v. Kinnier, 45 N. Y. 535, 6 Am. Rep. 182.

Or if the judgment has been procured by fraud upon the legal rights of the party against whom it is rendered, it may be questioned collaterally for that reason in the courts of this state. Kerr v. Kerr, 41 N. Y. 272; Hunt v. Hunt, 73 N. Y. 217, 338 Am. Rep. 129.

The tenant pleaded the general issue and recovered dower out of the estate of William Loker, deceased, in which a verdict had been directed in favor of the tenant. Judgment on the verdict.

The tenant pleaded the general issue and is rendered, it may be questioned collaterally for that reason in the courts of this state. Kerr v. Kerr, 41 N. Y. 272; Hunt v. Hunt, 73 N. Y. 217, 338 Am. Rep. 129.

[In a subsequent case it was held that a court of another state cannot adjudge the dissolution of the marital relations of a citizen of New York domiciled and actually residing there during the pendency of the judicial proceedings in such state without a voluntary appearance on his part therein and with no actual notice to him thereof, and this although the marriage was solemnized in such other state. People v. Baker, 76 N. Y. 73, 32 Am. Rep. 274; Williams v. Williams, 14 L. R. A. 220, 130 N. Y. 196.

The New Jersey court of errors and appeals agrees with the New York court, and holds that a decree in a divorce suit will have no extraterritorial effect when the defendant is domiciled in another state, and is not served with process, nor with notice of the proceedings. Doughty v. Doughty, 28 N. J. Eq. 581.

It is in no state or court denied that there may be such fraud upon a tribunal and upon the opposite party in judicial proceedings as will vitiate a judgment obtained thereby. Nor is it questioned that if the divorce granted in a foreign state is in all respects, as regards jurisdiction, as it is affected by the question of domicile, regular and valid, it appearing that all statutory requirements of the foreign state have been met, it is entitled to full faith and credit in every state of the Union. U. S. Const. § 1, art. 4.

A formidable array of federal decisions, expository of this constitutional provision, will be found to sustain the text. Livingston v. Maryland Ins. Co. 10 U. S. 6 Cranch, 274, 3 L. ed. 222; Talbot v. Seeman, 5 U. S. 1 Cranch, 1, 2 L. ed. 15; Raynham v. Canton, 8 Pick. 298; Consequa v. Willings, 1 Pet. C. C. 225; Church v. Hubbard, 6 U. S. 2 Cranch, 187, 2 L. ed. 249; James v. Allen, 1 U. S. 1 Dall. 186, 1 L. ed. 93; Phelps v. Holker, 1 U. S. 1 Dall. 261, 1 L. ed. 123; Hitchcock v. Aicken, 1 Calnes, 406; Kibbe v. Kibbe, Kirby, 119; Vandervoort v. Smith, 3 Calnes, 155; Yeaton v. Fry, 9 U. S. 5 Cranch, 385, 3 L. ed. 117; McElmoyle v. Cohen, 38 U. S. 13 Pet. 312, 10 L. ed. 177; D'Arcy v. Ketchum, 52 U. S. 11 How. 165, 13 L. ed. 643; Lafayette Ins. Co. v. French, 59 U. S. 18 How. 403, 15 L. ed. 451; Thompson v. Whitman, 85 U. S. 18 Wall. 457, 21 L. ed. 897; Mills v. Duryee, 11 U. S. 7 Cranch, 451, 3 L. ed. 411; Hampton v. McConnell, 16 U. S. 3 Wheat. 234, 4 L. ed. 378; 1 Kent, Com. Lectures, 12, pp. 243, 244; United States v. Amedy, 24 U. S. 11 Wheat. 382, 6 L. ed. 502; Buckner v. Finley, 27 U. S. 2 Pet. 532, 7 L. ed. 531; Owings v. Hull, 34 U. S. 9 Pet. 627, 9 L. ed. 253; Stacy v. Thrasher, 47 U. S. 6 How. 44, 13 L. ed. 337; Bank of Alabama v. Dalton, 50 U. S. 9 How. 522, 13 L. ed. 242; Booth v. Clark, 58 U. S. 17 How. 322, 15 L. ed. 164; Craig v. Brown, 1 Pet. C. C. 364; Gardner v. Lindo, 1 Cranch, C. C. 78; Turner v. Waddington, 3 Wash. C. C. 126; Catlin v. Underhill, 4 McLean, 199.

In Hunt v. Hunt, supra, it is said that the wife, from necessity, may in certain cases have a domicile in another jurisdiction than that of her husband, as when they are living apart under a judicial decree of separation, or when the conduct of the husband has been such as to entitle the wife to an absolute or limited divorce; and so the reason of the rule weakens in power when in extreme cases the conduct of the husband has been such as to make specified that the demandant was not the widow of decedent. At the trial it was admitted that demandant was entitled to dower unless she had been barred by a divorce obtained in Colorado, and a copy of an alleged record of divorce proceedings was introduced in evidence. The demandant objected that the record was wholly insufficient and did not show a valid and effectual divorce.

Further facts appear in the opinion.

Mr. L. H. Wakefield for demandant.

Mr. P. H. Cooney for tenant.

it proper for the wife to seek relief from her obligation to have the same home and interest with him, and altogether ceases when a judicial decree has separated and adjudged them to live apart. . . . It is evident that this reason will also operate in favor of the husband, so that where he has ground for a suit by reason of the misconduct of the wife she may not so often change her domicile as to baffle him in his pursuit of a remedy.

The following cases in this country sustain the proposition that either party to the matrimonial relation may acquire a separate domicile as against the other so far as jurisdiction in divorce proceedings are concerned. Cook v. Cook, 56 Wis. 155, 43 Am. Rep. 708; Cheever v. Wilson, 76 U. S. 9 Wall. 108, 19 L. ed. 604; Dutcher v. Dutcher, 39 Wis. 661; Shanks v. Dupont, 28 U. S. 3 Pet. 242, 7 L. ed. 606; Craven v. Craven, 27 Wis. 418; Hanberry v. Hanberry, 29 Ala. 719; Hare v. Hare, 10 Tex. 365; Turner v. Turner, 44 Ala. 437; Republic v. Skidmore, 2 Tex. 261; Moffatt v. Moffatt, 5 Cal. 280; Shreck v. Shreck, 32 Tex. 579, 5 Am. Rep. 251; Smith v. Smith, 4 Mackey, 255; Hull v. Hull, 2 Strobb. Eq. 174; Jennness v. Jennness, 24 Ind. 355, 37 Am. Dec. 335; Fishli v. Fishli, 2 Litt. 387; Harding v. Alden, 9 Me. 140, 23 Am. Dec. 549; Sawtell v. Sawtell, 17 Conn. 234; Fickle v. Fickle, 5 Yerg. 203; Ditson v. Ditson, 4 R. I. 87; Colvin v. Reed, 55 Pa. 375; Hinds v. Hinds, 1 Iowa, 36; Hollister v. Hollister, 6 Pa. 449; Goodwin v. Goodwin, 45 Me. 377; Smith v. Morehead, 59 N. C. 300; State v. Schlachter, Phillips, L. 520; Sewall v. Sewall, 122 Mass. 156; Mellen v. Mellen, 10 Abb. N. C. 322; Burlen v. Shannon, 115 Mass. 438; Kinnier v. Kinnier, 45 N. Y. 535, 6 Am. Rep. 132; Shaw v. Shaw, 98 Mass. 158; Harteau v. Harteau, 14 Pick. 181, 25 Am. Dec. 372; Yates v. Yates, 13 N. J. Eq. 230; Wright v. Wright, 24 Mich. 180; Frary v. Frary, 10 N. H. 61; Hopkins v. Hopkins, 35 N. H. 474; Payson v. Payson, 34 N. H. 518.

If the husband abandons his wife, and the domicile they have established, to get rid of all these conjugal obligations which the marriage relation imposes upon him, neither giving to her the necessities nor the comforts suitable to their condition and his fortune, and relinquishes altogether his marital control and protection, he yields up that power and authority over her which alone makes his domicile hers, and places her in a situation to sue him for a divorce. Barber v. Barber, 62 U. S. 21 How. 582, 16 L. ed. 220.

Although prima facie, the domicile of the wife is the same as that of the husband, the law recognizes an exception to the rule when the husband begins an action to dissolve the marriage contract. In such case, the theoretical identity of person and interest ceases to exist, the legal fiction of one domicile no longer operates, and the jurisdiction of the court to entertain the action depends upon the actual existing facts. Mellen v. Mellen, 10 Abb. N. C. 322.

The rights of the parties and the jurisdiction of the court must stand or fall upon the actual existing state of facts, as disclosed by the evidence. This is the necessary result of the cases. 2 Bishop, Mar. & Div. §§ 124-127, 3 Am. Law Reg. 271, 222; Rogers, Domicil, 11 Cent. L. J. 421; Hunt v. Hunt, 72 N. Y. 217, 28 Am. Rep. 129; Elder v. Reel, 62 Pa. 308, 1 Am. Rep. 414; Cox v. Cox, 19 Ohio St. 502, 2 Am. Rep. 415; Kinnier v. Kinnier, 45 N. Y. 535, 6 Am. Rep. 132.

It must not be assumed that the validity of a di-vice depends upon the actual service of the citation upon the defendant, as there are numerous authorities holding that such service is unnecessary, where it appears that the plaintiff was domiciled in the jurisdiction issuing the citation. Ditson v. Ditson, 4 R. I. 87; Shafer v. Bushnell, 24 Wis. 372; People v. Hovey, 5 Barb. 117; Harding v. Alden, 9 Me. 140, 23 Am. Dec. 549; Mansfield v. McIntyre, 10 Ohio, 27; Tolen v. Tolen, 2 Blackf. 417, 21 Am. Dec. 743; Hull v. Hull, 2 Strobb. Eq. 174; Cooper v. Cooper, 7 Ohio, 238; Gleason v. Gleason, 4 Wis. 64; Dickson v. Dickson, 1 Yerg. 110; Thompson v. State, 23 Ala. 12; Hood v. Hood, 11 Allen, 196, 37 Am. Dec. 709; Ponsford v. Johnson, 2 Blatchf. 51; Beard v. Beard, 21 Ind. 321; Rhys v. Rhys, 7 Bush, 316; Wilcox v. Wilcox, 10 Ind. 436; Shreck v. Shreck, 32 Tex. 573; Baker v. People, 2 Hill, 325; People v. Dawell, 25 Mich. 247; Bradshaw v. Heath, 13 Wend. 407; McGiffert v. McGiffert, 17 How. Pr. 18.

The common-law rule previously referred to, which locates the domicile of the wife with that of the husband, is a mere fiction which is never allowed to defeat justice. Irby v. Wilson, 21 N. C. 568. Neither can it be invoked to overthrow a right accorded to the wife by permitting the husband to assign to her another domicile after the cause of action has arisen, or after the suit has actually been commenced. Colvin v. Reed, 55 Pa. 375.

In the course of an extended note appended to the case of Mellen v. Mellen, supra, Mr. Abbott suggests that the question whether the husband's taking the new domicile without the wife entitles her to invoke the fiction that her domicile follows his is by no means settled.

The right of a state to declare the present or future status, so far as its own limits are concerned, of persons there lawfully domiciled, cannot be extended so as to enable it to determine absolutely what such status was at a previous time, and while they were subject to the laws of another state. The decrees of its courts in the latter respect must be subject to revision in the state where rights were then existing, or had been acquired. Blackinton v. Blackinton, 2 New Eng. Rep. 87, 141 Mass. 432; Cummingtown v. Belchertown, 4 L. R. A. 181, 149 Mass. 223.

Ordinarily where a party, upon a change of domicile, goes into another state or country, the personal status which he carries with him will be recognized by the courts of the latter country. This is certainly the general rule, but it is subject to certain well-recognized exceptions. If, for instance, such status has been acquired by a violation of an express provision of the positive law of the state in which its recognition is asked, or if it be contrary to the genius and spirit of its institutions, or if it is opposed to its settled policy, or to the good order and well being of society, or to public morality and decency, in all such cases the status would not and should not be recognized by the courts of the latter state. 2 Kent, Com. 458; Whart. Conf. Laws, 2d ed. §§ 165, 207; Story, Conf. Laws, §§ 98, 244; 4 Phillimore, Int. Law, ed. 1861, p. 529; Brook v. Brook, 9 H. L. Cas. 193; Cincinnati Mut. Health Assur. Co. v. Rosenthal, 55 Ill. 91; Forbes v. Cochrane, 2 Barn. & C. 448; Mette v. Mette, 1 Swab. & T. 416; Com. v. Lane, 113 Mass. 458, 18 Am. Rep. 509; Van Voorhis v. Brintnall, 86 N. Y. 13, 40 Am. Rep. 505.

F. S. R.

Field, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

We think that it appears that the divorce was obtained in the state of Colorado in accordance with the statutes of that state, and that the service of process on the wife, who is the demandant in the present action, was also in accordance with these statutes. The report recites that, "it was not claimed by the demandant that the said William Loker went to Colorado for the purpose of procuring a divorce," and it must be taken that he was a bona fide resident of that state for more than a year before his suit for divorce was brought, which is the time required by the statute of Colorado, when the cause of divorce occurred in another state. A copy of the bill of complaint for divorce and of the summons was served on the wife in Massachusetts, where she lived; and the causes of divorce set forth by the bill were desertion for more than a year, and adultery; and the court, after hearing evidence, decreed a divorce from the bonds of matrimony for desertion. Great pains were taken to give the wife notice and an opportunity to be heard. The parties were married in Massachusetts, and lived there as husband and wife, but the husband removed to Colorado, and we infer that the wife did not, but remained in Massachusetts, and we infer that the desertion on account of which the divorce was granted began in Massachusetts. The real contention is that as the wife was never domiciled in Colorado, and was never served with process in that state, the court had no jurisdiction over her to dissolve the marriage. It must be noticed that, by our statutes, desertion, continued for three years, and adultery, are causes of divorce; and that the statutes authorize divorces for causes occurring in other states, even when the parties were not married in this commonwealth, and were not inhabitants of the commonwealth at the time of the marriage, provided the libellant has resided in the commonwealth for five years next preceding the filing of the libel, and did not remove into the commonwealth for the purpose of obtaining a divorce. Pub. Stat. chap. 146, § 5. In practice here, divorces are often granted in cases in which the libelee has never resided within the commonwealth, upon service made by publication, and by a registered letter sent to the libelee, or notice served upon him or her, in another state, as the court may direct. Pub. Stat. chap. 146, §§ 9, 10. Pub. Stat. chap. 146, § 41, provides "that a divorce decreed in another state or country, according to the laws thereof, and by a court having jurisdiction of the cause, and of both the parties, shall be valid and effectual in this commonwealth," except in certain cases not material to the present inquiry. The various decisions of the courts of different states and countries on the question of the jurisdiction of a court to dissolve the bonds of matrimony, when only the libellant is domiciled within the state or county to which the court belongs, and the effect to be given to a decree of divorce in other states or counties, if the court takes jurisdiction, and enters a decree, are well known, and they are fully considered in 2 Bishop, Mar. & Div. chaps. 2-6.

It is sufficient for the present case to say that by our decisions, it not appearing that the wife separated from her husband for justifiable cause, her domicile followed his, and that, therefore, for the purpose of divorce, the court in Colorado had jurisdiction of both the parties, within the meaning of the statute. The fact that our courts grant divorces under somewhat similar circumstances is a reason why, as a matter of comity, we should recognize the validity of this divorce. Burten v. Shannon, 115 Mass. 438. We are not now required to consider whether the rule of law would not be the same, independently of the legal fiction that the domicile of the wife follows that of the husband. The decision in Cumington v. Belchertown, 149 Mass. 228, 4 L. R. A. 131, was upon the effect of a decree annulling the marriage ab initio, and the court expressed no opinion upon the effect of a decree of divorce made under the circumstances there stated.

Judgment on the verdict.

NEW JERSEY COURT OF ERRORS AND APPEALS.

Alexis DELAFOILE et al., Piffs. in Err.,

v.

STATE OF NEW JERSEY.

(.....N. J.....)

*Marshals of an association organized under "An Act to Authorize the Formation of Asso-

*Head note by KNAPP, J.

NOTE.—Right of peace officer to enter dwellings to make arrests.

This question is treated at considerable length by the text-writers, but the relevant cases are not numerous. Many of the rules rest upon the authority of the early elementary writers.

Without a warrant.

A constable has the right, by virtue of his office and without a warrant, to enter any house the door of which is unfastened and in which there is a citations for the More Effectual Prevention and Detection of Crime," approved March 20, 1873, (Supp. Rev. 815), having on a Sunday peaceably entered an inn, afterwards forced their way into upper rooms (where they suspected that the law in respect to the sale of intoxicating liquors was being violated), against the remonstrance and resistance of the landlord and his wife and servants. They had no warrant for the arrest of any person, and did not know that a crime had been or noise amounting to a breach of the peace, and to arrest any person engaged in an affray or in committing an assault in his presence. Com. v. Tobin, 108 Mass. 426, 11 Am. Rep. 875.

If there be an affray in the house, where its doors are shut, whereby there is likely to be manslaughter or bloodshed committed, a constable may break open the doors to keep the peace and prevent the danger. 2 Hale, P. C. 95.

So, too, if there be disorderly drinking or noise in a house at an unreasonable time of night. Ibid.

was being committed. In forcing the stairs they did injury to the person of the landlord's wife, and were indicted and convicted for assault and battery. Held, that their act was not justified by any authority conferred on them as marshals by the statute before mentioned, and that they were properly convicted.

(June 20, 1892.)

ERROR to the Supreme Court to review a judgment affirming a judgment of the Quarter Sessions for Bergen County convicting defendants of assault and battery. Affirmed.

Statement by Knapp, J.:

The plaintiffs in error were indicted at the September Term, 1889, of the Bergen over and terminer, for assault and battery on one Hannah Collins, the wife of Thomas Collins, who kept an inn and tavern called "The Octagon," at Fort Lee, in the said county of Bergen. The defendants were members and marshals of an organization called the "Riverside Law and Order Society of the Township of Ridgefield." The organization of that society was under an Act of the Legislature entitled "An Act to Authorize the Formation of Associations for the more Effectual Prevention and Detection of Crime," approved March 20, 1878. Supp. Revision, 815.

The cause was tried at the same term in the quarter sessions, resulting in a conviction of the defendants. It was removed by writ of error into the supreme court, and there heard upon exceptions sealed at the trial. The supreme court affirmed the judgment of conviction, and it is to review that judgment that this writ of error is brought.

Mr. E. Stevenson for plaintiffs in error.
Mr. A. D. Campbell for the State.

Knapp, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The record shows a conviction of the plaintiffs in error on an indictment found against them for assault and battery. The bill of exceptions returned with the record shows acts of forcible injury to the person, committed by them, such as justify the conviction, unless the official character in which they assumed to act shields them from the ordinary legal consequences of a forcible injury to the person of another. Their defense is that they were clothed with the authority of constables, and as such possessed the right to enter the dwelling of another when they had reasonable ground to believe that in such dwelling the criminal law was being secretly violated in the unlawful sale of intoxicating drink; that, as such officers, when in any part of such dwelling by the license of the owner, their further right was to force their way, against the will of such owner, into any other part of such building in search of the suspected wrong-doing. The

Of this latter proposition of Lord Hale it is said in McLennon v. Richardson, 15 Gray, 74, 76, 77 Am. Dec. 353: "No authority is given for this statement, nor, so far as we know, has it ever been recognized as the law in any adjudicated case;" its correctness is questioned and it is there said that "the authority of a constable to break open doors and arrest without a warrant is confined to cases where treason or felony has been committed or there is an affray or breach of the peace in his presence."

If one engaged in an affray fly into a house, and the officer follows him in fresh pursuit, he may without a warrant break open the doors to arrest him. Crocker, Sheriffs, 3d ed. § 48, 63.

Though a felony has been committed, yet a bare suspicion of guilt against a person will not justify an officer in forcing the door of his dwelling unless armed with a warrant. It will at least be at the peril of proving that the party so taken on suspicion was guilty. Foster, 321; 1 Russ. Crimes, 7th Am. ed. p. 629.

Where the doors of strangers are broken open upon supposition of the person sought being there, it must be at the peril of finding him there, unless as it seems, the officer acts under a warrant. 1 East, P. C. 324.

With a warrant.

A constable has a right to break open and enter the dwelling of a person for whom he has a warrant, if he believes such person to be therein. Kelsy v. Wright, 1 Root, 83; State v. Shaw, 1 Root, 134; Barnard v. Bartlett, 10 Cush. 501, 57 Am. Dec. 123; Jacobs v. Measures, 13 Gray, 74.

He may do so in the night-time as well as day-time. State v. Smith, 1 N. H. 346.

The sheriff has no right to enter and search a house not the dwelling of the defendant in the writ without the owner's consent, unless the so-cused be therein. Hawkins v. Com. 14 B. Mon. 395, 61 Am. Dec. 147. But see next paragraph.
16 L. R. A.

A police officer with a warrant for a person whom he has reasonable cause to believe to be within another's dwelling has the right to enter and search the premises. Com. v. Irwin, 1 Allen, 587.

When the officer is once in the house he may break open all inner doors, drawers, boxes, and chests he may deem necessary in the execution of the warrant. Crocker, Sheriffs, 3d ed. § 64; Murfree, Sheriffs, 2d ed. § 1163.

In Williams v. Spencer, 5 Johns. 352, it was held that an action of trespass would not lie against a constable who, having a warrant for a person, entered through the open outer door of the house in which such person occupied an inner room and broke the door of the inner room to effect his arrest. The same conduct in executing a capias ad resp. was held justifiable in Hubbard v. Mace, 17 Johns. 127.

Officers of the house of commons who have a warrant of the speaker to take a person therein named after having been admitted to and having searched his house without finding him have no right to remain there to await his return; and by staying in his house for that purpose for several hours become trespassers ab initio. Howard v. Gossett, 1 Car. & M. 380.

In Allen v. Colby, 47 N. H. 544, it was held that officers searching for one attempting to avoid a military draft might rightfully take possession of his valise and clothing, if they could reasonably suppose that so doing would lead to his arrest.

To recapture escaping prisoner.

An escape by a prisoner lawfully arrested warrants the retaking of him, on fresh pursuit, and the breaking of doors for that purpose after demand and refusal of admittance. Com. v. McGahey, 11 Gray, 194.

question is, and the only one possessed of any substance, whether such officer is clothed with authority to the extent claimed for these defendants. That the defendants, in virtue of their offices, possessed the powers and authority of constables, is not denied. The Act under which they are appointed provides that "all the powers of constables in criminal cases shall be possessed and exercised by them, and that they shall have power and authority to arrest any person found within the limits of said county who shall have violated any law of this state within the county, or who shall have willfully interfered with the peace and good order of the county, and the said marshal shall arrest every such person without warrant and indorsement, and bring him or her, as soon as conveniently can be, before a magistrate," etc. This legislation, and their appointment under it, undoubtedly conferred upon them the common-law powers and authority of constables, and the usual powers exercised by officers of police. Has one so endowed with public authority the right by force, against the will of the owner, resisting him, to pass through any part of a dwelling, on the mere belief, however well grounded, that the criminal law is being violated, and that not in a way to constitute a breach of the peace? The parties were not armed with any warrant for the arrest of any person; therefore their justification is not under acts done in execution of process. But the powers of these officers are not limited to the mere execution of process. The office was originally instituted for the better preservation of the peace, and a constable has the right, under his common-law powers, in divers cases, to arrest offenders without warrant. Thus he is justifiable without warrant in arresting persons directly charged with felony although it should afterwards appear that no felony had actually been committed; and where a felony had been committed, he is justified in making arrest without warrant, provided he acts in good faith upon such information as amounts to a reasonable and proper ground of suspicion. If he has reasonable cause to suspect that a felony has been actually committed, he is justified in arresting the parties suspected, although it afterwards appear that no felony has been committed. He may also arrest an offender without warrant for treason, felony, breach of the peace, and some misdemeanors, when committed in his view. 2 Bacon, Abr. title, Constable, C; Hale, P. C. 587; Beckwith v. Philby, 6 Barn. & C. 635. He is not only empowered to part an affray in his presence, but he is bound at his peril to do so if possible, and he may carry the persons engaged in it before a justice of the peace in order to their finding sureties to the peace, and to answer for their offenses. If the affray be in a house, the constable may break open the doors to preserve the peace; and if the affrayers fly to the house, and he freshly follow, he may break open the doors to take them without warrant. Hale, P. C. 92-135.

In Cahill v. People, 106 Ill. 621, 623, it is said: "We think there can be no doubt in reference to the law, and it may be regarded as wellsettled that an officer who has arrested a criminal, when he has escaped, may, if it becomes necessary, break down doors to rearrest him." To that effect is Geuner v. Sparks, 6 Mod. 173.

An officer is not justified in breaking open doors to retake a prisoner if the first arrest was illegal, as by the warrant having been filled up after being sealed. 1 East, P. C. 324.

Necessity of notification and demand before entering.

The early text-writers lay down the rule that in every case there must be a notification of his business by the officer and a demand and refusal of admission before he can force his way into houses to make arrests. Foster, 320; 2 Hawk. P. C. chap. 14, § 1; Russ. Crimes, 7th ed. p. 628.

Whether, in the cases of felony, the officer must first demand entrance has been doubted, but in misdemeanors it is considered requisite. Wharton, Cr. Law, 7th ed. § 2960; Crooker, Sheriffs, 2d ed. § 68.

The better opinion seems to be that, in cases of felony, no demand of admittance is necessary especially as in many cases the delay incident to it would enable the felon to escape. Murfree, Sheriff, 2d ed. § 1:63.

In Launook v. Brown, 2 Barn. & Ald. 692, Abbott, Ch. J., said: "It is not at present necessary for us to decide how far, in the case of a person charged with felony, it would be necessary to make a previous demand before you could justify breaking open the outer door of his house; because I am clearly of the opinion that, in the case of a misdemeanor, such previous demand is requisite." This doctrine is followed in McLennon v. Richardson, 15 Gray, 74, 77 Am. Dec. 368.

An officer holding a warrant against one charged with a misdemeanor, whom he believes to be within the house of a stranger, after a demand and refusal of admittance, may enter by force, nor can he be treated as a trespasser by the owner although he did not inform the latter who the person was that he sought when the owner made no inquiry, if such owner knew that he was an officer with a warrant seeking to arrest a person believed to be in his house. Com. v. Reynolds, 120 Mass. 190, 31 Am. Rep. 510.

In some cases a demand is treated as requisite without it appearing what the grade of the offense is for which an arrest is sought to be made. Barnard v. Bartlett, 10 Cush. 501, 57 Am. Dec. 128; Jacobs v. Measures, 13 Gray, 74; Com. v. McGahey, 11 Gray, 194.

The sheriff having criminal process for the arrest of a person may without demand for admission enter and search such person's dwelling, although it belongs to and is also occupied by another, whether the person sought be actually therein or not. Hawkins v. Com. 14 B. Mon. 385, 61 Am. Dec. 147.

It does not appear in this case whether the offense for which an arrest was sought to be made was a felony or misdemeanor, and the opinion makes no distinction. The court says, p. 397: "The fact that the house entered and searched is at the time the place of the dwelling of the defendant in the writ gives sufficient warrant to the sheriff, though it be not known to him certainly whether the defendant be or not then in the house or be found therein, and the law does not require that the officer should first signify his business and demand admission before entering and searching; for such disclosure of his purpose, and demand of entrance, would in many cases defeat the very object in view, by giving the offender notice of his danger and an opportunity of effecting his escape." J. G. G.

But he cannot, without a warrant, arrest a man for an affray or breach of the peace out of his view, unless it embrace a felony. This subject is fully discussed in Wharton, Crim. Pl. & Pr. §§ 5-8, and the cases are there collected. The boundaries of this official power seem to be clearly defined and distinct, and definite limits placed upon its exercise. No case or text-writer asserts of this office the power to go into or through a private house unbidden by the owner, save it be in the execution of criminal process, or where there is a well-founded belief of crime, and the officer goes in pursuit of the criminal, or where in such house there is evidence that a felony or breach of the peace is being committed. No one in this country, I think, before this case, ever asserted the right of a public officer to go through the private apartments of a family against the will of the owner to search for the existence of evidence of an infraction of a public law. Such a right, if it existed, would, in my judgment, create more public disorder than it could by any possibility repress.

It is said, however, that, admitting that such a right does not inhere in these officers under the doctrine of the common law nor general statutes controlling the subject, in this case there is such broad and extended power given that it embraces the right that these parties set up. Before it should be held that these officers or any others, acting in a ministerial capacity, or as conservators of the peace, are clothed with a power so comprehensive, the words of the law from which it is supposed to be derived should be such as to admit of no other possible construction. When such a law appears, it will be time enough to consider whether or not it infringes upon those fundamental rights of personal security and private property lying at the very foundation of organized government. The Act invoked in support of this claim of the plaintiffs in error does not, in my judgment, go any way towards the maintenance of their position. First, they are given the rights and powers of constables in criminal cases. These rights and powers are well defined, and, as has been shown, embrace within them no such claim. Next, they are given power to arrest persons who have violated any law of this state within the county, or who have willfully interfered with the peace and good order of the county, and then proceeds: "And the said marshal shall arrest every such person without warrant and indorsement, and bring him or her, as soon as conveniently can be, before some person exercising the duties of justice of the peace in criminal cases, to be dealt with according to law." In my judgment, this Act, when properly construed, will be found not to have extended the power of these marshals beyond those that are ordinarily exercised by other peace officers of the state. It is not to be presumed that the Legislature has done so, or intended to do so, and made exceptional provisions in favor of this peculiar class. Whom are they to arrest? Persons found within the limits of the county, who shall have violated any law of this state within the county. What sort of a law is here intended as having been violated? It is a violation of law to commit a trespass upon one's land; the driving a wagon over the public highway of a less width than the statute demands is the violation of a law; to pursue any worldly business or pleasure or traveling on the first day of the week commonly called Sunday, is the violation of a law of this state. Is it this class of laws for the violation of which these officers are authorized to take up and arrest without warrant? Clearly not. It is the violation of some criminal law that is intended. And how are these officers to know that the law has been violated? Because, the law must have been violated in order that they may arrest. They have no power to take testimony; they do not sit as committing magistrates. How, then, can they know it? Only by its having taken place in their presence. In cases of this kind, the constable has power to arrest for an offense committed against the public law in his presence, provided it is in other language of the Act, "An act that interferes with the peace and good order of the county." That it is to be a criminal act, that interferes with the peace and good order of the county, is manifest from the further provision of the law that the offender is to be taken immediately before a justice of the peace having jurisdiction in criminal cases, there to be dealt with according to law.

The whole frame of this section of the Act plainly shows that the Legislature intended to express the possession of that degree of authority which, in common understanding, and under the doctrines of the common law, is possessed and exercised by these officers. It was not intended to confer upon them any such extraordinary powers. If the words are to be taken in their broad scope, they embrace every act that is violative of law, whether the redress for such act be of a civil or of a criminal nature. It would be absurd to yield to any such notion. It is said that the plaintiffs in error went in to make an arrest for a breach of the criminal law. But what breach of the criminal law was it for which they meant to arrest the guilty party? They did not know that the law was violated. At best, it was a mere suspicion. And, while they say they went in with the purpose of arresting any person that they might find violating the law, it would be an abuse of terms to say that their purpose in entering was to arrest a criminal. They knew of none such. Beyond mere suspicion, they were ignorant of any criminality. To cast aside all disguise of words, their purpose was to hunt through this house, looking for evidence to justify their suspicion, and this against the will of the owner, and against his resistance. This they had no right to do, and if they attempted it by force, and in doing so committed any violence against the person of the owner or of those acting in his interest, they were undoubtedly guilty of criminal assault. There is no pretense that previous to their act of violence there was any breach of the peace, or noise or turbulence, nor was the person of any one threatened or endangered. Their power to arrest without warrant, where the public peace and good order of the county are interfered with, did not exist. The antitheses of public peace and order are violence and turbulence.

But it is said they went to abate a public nuisance. Whence did the power arise by which these officers could determine the fact of public nuisance, and upon such determination of their own proceed to abate it? Public nuisances are subjects of indictment, to abate which a public officer must have the judgment and order of the court. No man is given the power, upon his mere individual judgment, to undertake to so redress a public wrong. There is nothing in the case tending to show a right, as private citizens, to abate the alleged nuisance, under the well-settled doctrine on that subject. Brown v. De Groff, 50 N. J. L. 400, 12 Cent. Rep. 818. Unless we are willing to hold that the domicil of every citizen against whom these officers have a suspicion may be invaded by force, and their houses ransacked to find evidence justifying their suspicion, their action in this case must be disapproved.

The judgment below is affirmed.

NOTE BY JUSTICE MAGIE.

This opinion was found among the papers of the late Mr. Justice Knapp, to whom its preparation had been intrusted. It is known to his associates that he had intended to add some new matter to it. But it has been thought best to publish the opinion as it is, and to place in its note the matter which it is understood was intended to be added.

The closest parallel to the claim of plaintiffs in error, that a public officer may lawfully break open a house, or, being lawfully therein, may break into rooms, to discover evidence of the commission of a crime, will be found in those cases which arose in England shortly before the separation of this country, respecting the publication of seditious libels in the North Briton Monitor and other periodicals. In those cases the secretary of state issued general warrants, directing the arrest of the authors and publishers of such libels, (without naming them,) and the search and seizure of their papers. Messengers, to whom the warrants were directed, arrested and confined a large number of persons, and broke into rooms and desks, examined and seized their private papers, and delivered them to a clerk of the secretary of state. Many of those who were thus treated brought actions of trespass against the messengers, and recovered substantial damages. Upon motions in arrest of judgment or for a new trial or otherwise, questions involving the validity of such warrants, and the authority of messengers, were considered in the king's bench and in the common pleas. Money v. Leach, 1 W. Bl. 555; Huckle v. Money, 2 Wils. K. B. 205; Beardmore v. Carrington, 2 Wils. K. B. 244; Entick v. Carrington, 19 How. St. Tr. 1070, 2 Wils. 16 L. R. A.

K. B. 275; Wilkes v. Wood, 19 How. St. Tr. 1154. In Money v. Leach the king's bench, without determining the question of the authority of the secretary of state to issue any warrant, decided that his warrant, not naming or particularly describing the person to be seized, was wholly void, and sustained a verdict in favor of Leach, who had been arrested on such a warrant. In Huckle v. Money a similar warrant came in question, under which Huckle, a journeyman printer, had been arrested. A verdict for exemplary damages was sustained in the common pleas, Lord Chief Justice Platt saying of the action of the jury: "I think they have done right in giving exemplary damages. To enter a man's house by virtue of a nameless warrant, in order to procure evidence, is worse than the Spanish inquisition." In Entick v. Carrington the warrant in question expressly directed the apprehension of Entick, and also the seizure of his papers. In his action against the messengers, Entick confined his claim for damages to the trespass committed by breaking into his desks and boxes, and examining and seizing his papers. In the report of the case in the state trials, Lord Chief Justice Camden thus deals with the claim that a search in a suspected person's papers could be justified as a means of detecting offenders by discovering evidence: "Lastly, it is urged as an argument of utility, that such a search is a means of detecting offenders by discovering evidence. I wish some cases had been shown where the law forceth evidence out of the owner's custody by process. There is no process against papers in civil causes. . . . In the criminal law, such a proceeding was never heard of. . . . It is very certain that the law obligeth no man to accuse himself because the necessary means of compelling self-accusation, falling upon the innocent as well as the guilty, would be both cruel and unjust, and it would seem that search for evidence is disallowed upon the same principle. There, too, the innocent would be confounded with the guilty." The report of the same case in 2 Wils. K. B. contains the decision of the common pleas upon a special verdict, and, after two solemn arguments, it was determined by the whole court that there was no jurisdiction in the secretary of state to grant a warrant "to break open doors, locks, boxes, and to seize a man, and all his books, etc., in the first instance, upon an information of his being guilty of publishing a libel." From these cases it is clear that the common law did not admit of the invasion of private property, even under color of a warrant, for the purpose of procuring evidence of crime. A fortiori such an invasion without warrant was not justifiable. It does not necessarily follow that the Legislature may not, with proper restrictions, authorize such invasion of private property to procure evidence of crimes difficult otherwise to detect. This question Justice Knapp in his opinion has distinctly reserved from decision.

ILLINOIS SUPREME COURT.

SHELBYVILLE WATER CO., Appl.,

v.

PEOPLE of the State of Illinois, ex rel.
Ambrose M. CRADDICK, County Collector.

(.....ILL.....)

1. The water mains and electric wires of a water and light company are personal property for purposes of taxation.
2. Failure to enter opposite the name of a personal tax delinquent the cause of failure to collect the same and make oath as to the truth of such cause and that the taxes remain unpaid, as required by Rev. Stat. 1891, chap. 120, § 170, may be corrected by amendment of the record at the hearing of a proceeding to collect the taxes out of real estate, under section 191 of that Act, which provides for supplying omissions of tax officers.
3. Where the statutes make real estate liable for taxes levied on personal property when they cannot be made out of the personalty, and direct the collector to select real estate for that purpose when it becomes necessary, it will be presumed when the books show charges of unpaid personal taxes against land that they were necessary because the taxes could not be made out of personalty although it is not so stated on the return.

(March 20, 1892.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the County Court for Shelby County holding its real estate liable for the payment of taxes which had been assessed as personal-property taxes. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. J. William Lloy and William C. Kelley for appellant.

Messrs. W. B. Townsend and Moulton, Chaffee & Headen for appellee.

Magruder, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal from a judgment of the county court of Shelby county, rendered at the May Term, 1891, against delinquent lands, including certain lots and acre property belonging to the appellant company. The company appeared and filed objections, which were overruled, and exception was taken. Judgment was rendered against the lots of appellant in the original town of Shelbyville for a certain sum as personal property taxes, penalties, and costs, and against ten acres of appellant in said county for a certain other sum as personal property taxes, penalties, and costs. The two assessments of personal property taxes were made on the water mains and pipes and hydrants, and also upon the electric wires and lamps and poles, of the appellant, a part of which are in school-district No. 2, and a part in school-district No. 1, the latter comprising the city of Shelbyville. The appellant has erected, upon its land adjoining said city, a building and works, containing the necessary machinery for supplying the city with water, and for producing and furnishing electric light. The water-mains and electric wires are connected with the machinery. The mains are imbedded in the earth, and extend from the works for some distance on the company's land, and thence through the streets of the city, by permission of its authorities, under ordinances passed for that purpose. Fifty hydrants, standing each about three feet above the ground, are fixed to and form a part of the mains. The water is drawn by the machinery from a river, and forced by the engines into the mains and pipes. The wires also extend through the city from the dynamo and power engine in the building. Attached to them are thirty electric lamps. The wires, and the pole on which they are strung, beyond the land of appellant, are also upon the streets of the city by permission of the authorities expressed in city ordinances.

The first objection is that these mains and wires are a part of the realty, and were therefore improperly assessed as personalty. By express provision of our Revenue Act, gas mains and pipes laid in roads, streets, or alleys are declared to be personal property, and are required to be listed and assessed as such. Rev. Stat. chap. 120, § 16; 2 Starr & C. Stat. p. 2084. No such provision, however, exists in regard to water-mains or electric poles and wires. There are authorities which hold that the mains of a gas company are appurtenant to its lots, and are taxable as realty, unless it is otherwise provided by statute. Capital City Gas-Light Co. v. Charter Oak Ins. Co. 51 Iowa, 81; Providence Gas. Co. v. Thurber, 2 R. I. 15. Under the doctrine of such authorities, it would seem that water-mains and electric wires should be assessed as part of the realty, where there is no statutory provision directing otherwise; and in Iowa such water-mains have been held to be real estate, and treated as appurtenances to the water-works. Appeal of the Des Moines Water Co. 48 Iowa, 524.

There are other authorities, however, which hold that gas-mains in the streets of a city are personalty. In People v. Brooklyn Bd. of Assessors, 39 N. Y. 81, it was said: "These mains, running under the streets of the city, not being erected upon or affixed to the relator's land, cannot be regarded as real estate, under the statute, for the purpose of taxation. The mains are not 'real estate,' as that term is defined in the statute regulating the assessment of taxes, and I do not think they can be held as fixtures, under the common doctrine upon that subject." In Memphis Gas-Light Co. v. State, 6 Coldw. 810, 98 Am. Dec. 452, the Supreme Court of Tennessee says: "It is insisted that the

NOTE.—For a case holding that the mains, pipes and hydrants of a water company are to be assessed as part of its real estate, and a note showing 16 L. R. A.

the course of the decisions on the subject, see Oskaloosa Water Co. v. Oskaloosa Board of Equalization (Iowa) 15 L. R. A. 226.

pipes used for conveying the gas manufactured to the consumers, and laid down, not upon the land of the company, but through and under the public streets of the city, are not a part of the manufacturing establishment. Pipes laid through the streets of the city in the manner above mentioned, by permission of the corporate authorities, do not become the property of the city or a part of the realty. They are personal property, and the property of the company." So far as the application of this doctrine is concerned, there is no difference between the mains and the wires. In this conflict of authority we are inclined to hold that these mains and wires are personalty, as this view is in harmony with the spirit, if not the letter, of our own statutes, and with the tone of our own decisions. In Johnson v. Roberts, 102 Ill. 655, it was claimed that certain machinery in a building had been improperly assessed as personal property, because the engines and boilers were permanently attached to and were a part of the realty; and we there held that, although the engines and boilers would be regarded as permanent fixtures and part of the realty at common law, and as between grantor and grantee, yet that the Legislature has the power to declare personal property to be realty, and realty to be personal property, for the purposes of taxation; that it had changed the rule so far as the facts of that case were concerned; that the engines and boilers, though attached to the realty, were to be treated as personalty under the twenty-fifth section of the Revenue Act, which mentions "every steam-engine, including boilers and the value thereof," as the sixth item in the schedule of personal property. 2 Starr & C. Stat. p. 2086. The evidence in the case at bar shows that the machinery in appellant's building, used for forcing water into the mains and furnishing electric light to the city, "consists of two Worthington pumping engines, two tubular boilers, one New York safety high-speed power engine, and one electric dynamo and fixtures." The mains and wires, being directly connected with these engines and boilers, which are personal property for the purposes of taxation under the doctrine of the Johnson Case, can as well be held to be a part of the machinery as of the realty to which the machinery is attached. If they are a part of the engines and boilers with which they are connected, they may, like such engines and boilers, be regarded as personal property for the purposes of taxation. In Com. v. Lowell Gas-Light Co., 12 Allen, 75, it was held that the gas mains and pipes, laid down in the streets for the purpose of distributing gas to the consumers, constituted a part of the machinery in operation at the gas-works. So, also, in Memphis Gas-Light Co. v. State, supra, it was held that the pipes were a part of the apparatus for the delivery of gas to the consumers; that the delivery was as much within the purpose of the creation of the gas company as the manufacture; that the apparatus for delivery was merely an extension and continuation of the apparatus for manufacture; and that both belonged to the manufacturing establishment. In the present case the water-mains and electric wires are a part of the apparatus for the delivery of water and light to the inhabitants of the city, and, as such, constitute a part of the machinery, including the engines and boilers, which is located in appellant's building. We think that the mains and wires were properly assessed as personal property.

The next objection filed in the court below is that the said personal property taxes should not have been charged against the real estate, for the alleged reason that the town collector did not note in writing, opposite the name of appellant, "the cause of failure to collect the same," and did not make oath, and sign and enter upon the collector's book an affidavit, that the cause of delinquency noted was true and correct, and that such sums remained due and unpaid, and that he had used due diligence to collect the same. Rev. Stat. 1891, chap. 120, § 170; 2 Starr & C. Stat. par. 172, p. 2078. Upon the trial the court ordered the clerk to correct and supply the record; and thereupon the town collector was called, and entered upon his delinquent report or list, opposite appellant's name and opposite each amount of the total personal taxes, and under the head of "Remarks," the following words, "Refused payment, and no available property on which to levy." The town collector also made the oath, and attached to said list the affidavit provided for in said section 170. The action of the court in this regard was objected to and exception taken. We think the court was authorized to allow the record to be amended in the respect above indicated, under the provisions of section 191 of the Revenue Act. Rev. Stat. 1891, chap. 120, § 191; 2 Starr & C. Stat. par. 193, p. 2087. That section provides for amendments in judicial proceedings for the collection of taxes; and that no charge for any of said taxes shall be illegal on account of any irregularity in the tax-lists; and that no informality not affecting the substantial justice of the tax shall vitiate or affect it; and that any irregularity in the tax-lists, or any omission of any officer connected with the levying of such taxes, may, in the discretion of the court, be corrected, supplied, and made to conform to law, etc.

A strict construction of section 170 would lead to the conclusion that the only cases of failure to collect the tax upon personal property which are contemplated by that section are "removal" or "insolvency" or some "error in the tax-book." Primarily, this section would seem to have special reference to the settlement of the town collector with the county collector. It is illogical to require that the insolvency of a party charged with a personal property tax shall be a prerequisite to a charge of such tax upon his land. If he owns land, he is not insolvent. Section 255 of the Revenue Act provides that "real property shall be liable for taxes levied on personal property, but the tax on personal property shall not be charged against real property, except in cases of removals, or where said tax cannot be made out of the personal property." 2 Starr & C. Stat. par. 257, p. 2112. Sections 170 and 255 should be construed together. The latter is broad enough to include other causes for a failure to collect the tax upon personal property besides insolvency. In the present case the proof shows that the town collector made a demand upon appellant about February 1, 1891, for the payment of the taxes upon its personal property; that appellant made no objection to the taxes, nor denied its liability therefor, but asked for as much time as possible, and was given until March 20, 1891, promising that payment would be made at that time; that a second demand was made about March 20, and payment was refused. If it was not then too late to make a levy, it is doubtful whether it would have been advisable to levy upon the water-mains under the streets and the electric wires over the streets, in view of the interest which the public had in both the water and the light thereby supplied. The books of the town and county collectors showed the amount of these personal taxes, and that they were unpaid, and showed the particular parcels of land against which they were to be charged. Section 188 of the Revenue Act provides that, "when it becomes necessary to charge the tax on personal property against real property, the county collector shall select for that purpose some particular tract or lots of real property owned by the person owing such personal property tax," etc. 2 Starr & C. Stat. par. 185, p. 2082. The officer will be presumed to have done his duty. Job v. Tebbetts, 10 Ill. 882. Inasmuch as the books of the collectors, when introduced in evidence by the company itself, showed the charge of unpaid personal property taxes against particular parcels of land, it will be presumed that such charge had become necessary, because the tax could not be made out of personal property. Therefore the amendment allowed by the court merely stated what the law presumed without an amendment. Some other objections are made, but we do not deem them of sufficient importance to justify any further discussion. A careful consideration of them has led us to the conclusion that they have reference to such mere irregularities in the proceedings as do not affect the substantial justice of the tax, and consequently are cured by the provisions of said section 191.

The judgment of the County Court is affirmed.

MINNESOTA SUPREME COURT.

E. H. EIDAM, Resp't.,
v.

Andrew J. FINNEGAN et al., App'ls.

(.....Minn.....)

*1. A stipulation by an attorney that the action shall abide the event of another action

*Head notes by GILFILLAN, Ch. J.

NOTE.—Control of guardian ad litem or next friend over the action.

A guardian ad litem will not be permitted to do any act, or make any admission, or enter into any agreement or stipulation which tends in any degree to prejudice or compromise the infant's rights. Revely v. Skinner, 38 Mo. 98.

The guardian ad litem of an infant plaintiff has no authority to bind the infant by a settlement of the action unless made with the express sanction of the court. Edeall v. Vandemark, 39 Barb. 569. The court said, p. 569: "The authority conferred upon him is to prosecute, not to settle, to obtain for the infant an adjudication as to his rights—not to barter away those rights in such manner as the guardian may choose." To the same effect is Isaacs v. Boyd, 5 Port. (Ala.) 388.

The next friend of a lunatic has no power to compromise a suit brought by him as such, without the approval of the court. Clark v. Crout, 34 S. C. 417.

While it may well be considered to be within the official duty of the next friend of an infant plaintiff to negotiate a fair adjustment of the action without subjecting the plaintiff to the expense and risk of a trial, still, a settlement of the action of an infant by a next friend, unless sanctioned by the court or affirmed by entry of judgment in regular course, is invalid, and cannot be shown in bar of the action, nor can admissions made by the next friend in the negotiation for such settlement be pending binds his adult clients, unless it be improvidently, fraudulently, or collusively made.

2. But such stipulation does not bind an infant party unless approved and ratified by the court upon a showing that it is for the interest, or, at least, not prejudicial to the interest, of the infant. It must appear that the matters in controversy in the two actions, so far as affected the infant, are precisely the same, and that proved on the question of damages. Tripp v. Gilford (Mass.) Nov. 30, 1891.

A guardian ad litem cannot bind his ward by a submission of the matters in litigation to arbitration and approval of the award of the arbitrators. Fort v. Battle, 18 Smedes & M. 133; Hannum v. Wallace, 9 Humph. 129.

A next friend has no right to submit the case of an infant plaintiff to arbitration. Tucker v. Dabbs, 12 Heisk. 18.

But the defendant cannot object to the award because of the plaintiff's infancy. Ibid.

A prochein ami has no right to compromise, or to receive the money due upon a judgment recovered by him in the name of an infant. Miles v. Kaigler, 10 Yerg. 10, 30 Am. Dec. 425.

The money must be paid only to a qualified guardian, or, if there be no such guardian, it should remain in court until such guardian qualifies or the minor becomes of age. Galveston City R. Co. v. Hewitt, 67 Tex. 473, 30 Am. Rep. 32.

One acting as a next friend for an infant in litigation has no authority to bind the infant by a contract for attorney's fees. Houck v. Bridwell, 28 Mo. App. 644.

A guardian ad litem cannot make a contract with an attorney for compensation that will deprive the court of the power to fix such compensation at a reasonable amount. Cole v. Superior Court, 63 Cal. 86, 49 Am. Rep. 73.

he is represented in the two actions by the same guardian ad litem.

3. Judgment reversed as to the minor defendants, and affirmed as to the others.

(January 18, 1892.)

APPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the District Court for Hennepin County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to determine adverse claims to certain real estate. Modified.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Edward Savage, for appellants:

The court had no power to render a judgment against infant defendants upon the stipulation.

It is a primary rule that no guardian or attorney can stipulate away in court the rights of infants. No judgment can be given against infant defendants without legal proof of the facts constituting a cause of action.

Mills v. Dennis, 8 Johns. Ch. 867, 368, 1 L. ed. 651; Peak v. Prier, 21 Ill. 184, 165; Edsall v. Vandemark, 39 Barb. 589, 599; Howell v. Mills, 58 N. Y. 822, 835; Verner v. Rice, 44 Ark. 236, 244; Pillow v. Sentelle, 39 Ark. 61, 65; Newins v. Baird, 19 Hun, 806, 807; Hough v. Doyle and Hough v. Canby, 8 Blackf. 300, 301; Richards v. Richards, 17 Ind. 636, 638; Thayer v. Lane, Walker, Ch. 200, 204; Cooper v. Mayhew, 40 Mich. 528; Long v. Mulford, 17 Ohio St. 484, 98 Am. Dec. 638, 646; Bank of United States v. Ritchie, 33 U. S. 8 Pet. 123, 145, 8 L. ed. 890-897; Leyard v. Sheffield, 2 Atk. 977; Revely v. Skinner, 38 Mo.

98, 100; Litchfield v. Burwell, 5 How. Pr. 841; McClure v. Farthing, 51 Mo. 109; Ulery v. Blackwell, 3 Dana, 300; 9 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, pp. 156, 157.

An agreement to let the result of one action determine the result of another is neither itself a "proceeding in an action" (i. e. an ordinary matter of practice in conducting the case), nor is it made in such a proceeding, nor does it purport or attempt "to bind clients in any of the proceedings in an action." It is an agreement or bargain outside of the action altogether, and hence is not binding on any of the defendants.

1 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 956; 2 U. S. Dig. (1st series) pp. 346, 349.

Mr. John H. Steele, for respondent:

Section 9, chapter 88, Gen. Stat. 1878, gives the attorney authority "to bind his client in any of the proceedings in an action or special proceeding by his agreement, duly made or entered upon the minutes of this court."

To determine, then, whether an agreement by the attorney in the name of his client is binding on the latter, it is only necessary to inquire if it be a proceeding in the action. If it be, then it is binding, however disadvantageous it may be to his client.

Bray v. Doheny, 39 Minn. 355; Brigham v. Winona County Suprs. 6 Minn. 136.

Admissions of attorneys of record bind clients in all matters relating to the trial or progress of the cause.

Rogers v. Greenwood, 14 Minn. 333, citing 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 27, 186, 205, 206.

A judgment against all the defendants, entered under a stipulation between the attorney for the plaintiff and certain adult defendants, that it should be in accordance with the decision in another case, should be set aside upon the application of the infant defendants. McClure v. Farthing, 51 Mo. 109.

In the last case the court said: "It is unnecessary to say that when there are several actions pending between the same parties, involving precisely the same facts, the guardian may not agree to submit the whole upon a single examination of witnesses, or, which is in effect the same thing, that the decision of one shall decide the whole. Such an agreement may be consistent with his duty, but that is not this case."

The guardian ad litem has no power to waive the production of legal proof nor to consent to judgment without it, nor can he consent to the use of that as evidence which the law does not recognize as such. Litchfield v. Burwell, 5 How. Pr. 341; Crotty v. Eagle, 35 W. Va. 143.

In Missouri a guardian ad litem in partition suits has, by virtue of statute, authority to bind his ward by stipulation in the nature of a waiver of proof. Le Bourgeois v. McNamara, 32 Mo. 139.

A guardian ad litem for an infant defendant in a partition suit has no right to enter into an arrangement by which the property is bid off for less than its value, whatever advantages to the infant are thereby contemplated. Howell v. Mills, 58 N. Y. 822, 327, 335.

A guardian ad litem has no power to execute a release to a proposed witness for the purpose of making him competent by discharging his interest. Walker v. Ferrin, 4 Vt. 523.

After issue joined a guardian ad litem for an infant defendant can control the due and orderly management of the action. He can accept short 16 L. R. A. notice of trial, but can admit nothing to sustain the action. Newins v. Baird, 19 Hun. 806.

Since, under Cal. Civ. Code, § 705, the general guardian has authority to appear for minors in an action for partition, he may consent to the appointment of the single referees authorized by section 707. Richardson v. Loupe, 80 Cal. 490.

A consent by the next friend or guardian ad litem that a case be heard in a particular division of the Supreme Court of Illinois did not prejudice the substantial rights of the infant, although in the absence of consent the supreme court sitting in one division cannot take cognizance of a case from another division. Kingsbury v. Buckner, 124 U. S. 650, 33 L. ed. 1047.

Consent to take up a case for trial that has been fixed for a different day is not such a consent as will vitiate a judgment, although a minor represented by a special tutor be a party thereto. Succession of Byrne, 33 La. Ann. 513.

The rule that a next friend or guardian ad litem cannot, by admissions or stipulations, surrender the rights of the infant, does not prevent a guardian ad litem or prochein ami from assenting to such arrangements as will facilitate the determination of the case in which the rights of the infant are involved. Kingsbury v. Buckner, 124 U. S. 650, 33 L. ed. 1047.

A statutory provision requiring ten days' notice for the suing out of a commission to take depositions might have been waived by a guardian ad litem or next friend without the imputation upon him of fraud or collusion; nor are fraud and collusion to be imputed to him because he did not, after his appointment, file cross-interrogatories, when cross-interrogatories were filed by another party and were of the most searching character. Ibid.

J. G. G.

Without the aid of any such statute as ours, where the plaintiffs in a number of suits are all represented by the same attorney, the attorney has the power without being specially authorized to stipulate that one of those suits abide the event of another.

North Missouri R. Co. v. Stephens, 36 Mo. 150; Ohlquest v. Harwell, 71 Iowa, 231.

Gillilan, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In this action, brought under the statute to determine adverse claims to real estate three of the defendants are minors. A guardian ad litem for them was seasonably appointed, and the defendants, appearing by the same attorney, answered jointly. After the issues were made, the attorneys for the "respective parties made a stipulation in writing that the action abide the event of another action, which had been tried in the district court, and was then pending on appeal in this court. Final judgment having been rendered in the action referred to, the court, on motion of the plaintiff, directed judgment to be entered for plaintiff pursuant to the stipulation, and from the judgment so entered all the defendants, adults as well as minors, appeal to this court. In the stipulation the plaintiff's name was spelled "Eidem" instead of "Eidam." That would not be a misnomer in any case, but it would not matter if it were, for the court, before acting on the stipulation, could ascertain if it was intended to be one in this case. There can be no doubt it meant that judgment should be entered in this case according to the decision in the action referred to. According to the decisions of this court, such a stipulation made by the attorneys would bind the adult clients, subject to the power of the court to set it aside or disregard it, if improvidently, fraudulently, or collusively made. Bingham v. Winona County Suprs., 6 Minn. 186; Rogers v. Greenwood, 14 Minn. 383; Bray v. Doheny, 89 Minn. 355. There is no suggestion that this stipulation was obnoxious to such an objection. Nothing is called in question but the authority to make it on behalf of the minor defendants. It was therefore valid as to the adult defendants.

While it is true, as a general rule, that an attorney may bind his client by such a stipulation as this, it does not follow that the attorney employed by a guardian ad litem to represent the minor defendants may do so. The authority of the attorney cannot be greater than that of the guardian who employs him. It is necessary, therefore, to consider what is the authority of the guardian. The statute regulates the appointment of guardians ad litem, but does not define their powers. When appointed for an infant defendant, it is to defend the interests of the infant in the action. Some of the decisions limit his power so as practically to deprive him of all discretion or exercise of judgment in conducting the defense. Thus it has been held that the answer made by the guardian should be a full defense, specifically denying the material allegations, without regard to the truth of the denials as to anything which may be prejudicial to the minor (Varnier v. Rice, 44 Ark. 236; Pillows v. Sentella, 89 Ark. 61; Brenner v. Bigelow, 8 Kan. 496;) that he cannot waive any rights of the minor (Cartwright v. Wise, 14 Ill. 417; Litchfield v. Burwell, 5 How. Pr. 841; Howell v. Mills, 53 N. Y. 322;) nor make admissions either in the answer or for the purpose of the trial. Ashford v. Patton, 70 Ala. 479; Quigley v. Roberts, 44 Ill. 503; Tucker v. Bean, 65 Me. 352; Newins v. Baird, 19 Hun, 306.

The decisions we have cited, though they are extreme and go further than we would be willing to go, are in line with all the authorities, and accentuate the proposition that the relation between the guardian ad litem or the attorney whom he employs and the infant defendant is not the same as that between an attorney and an adult client. We would not be willing to assent to the proposition that a guardian ad litem or the attorney may not, in good faith, exercise discretion or judgment in the conduct of the cause. As our system of pleading does not provide any form of answer or verification by a guardian ad litem different from that for any other defendant, we do not think an answer by the guardian can be condemned merely because it does not deny material allegations in the complaint. Nor can we admit that concessions or admissions such as an ordinarily made in the progress of a cause, and which are entirely consistent with good faith, and which it is frequently for the interest of a party to make, may not be made by the guardian. To hold otherwise would impeach any trial in which the guardian or attorney omitted to make objections to evidence or proceedings in the trial which he might have made. So in Re Hawley, 100 N. Y. 206, 1 Cent. Rep. 287, and in Re Tilden, 98 N. Y. 434, it was held that a decree allowing the accounting of an executor could not be vacated on the application of a minor interested in it, and represented by a guardian ad litem, on the ground that items in the account ought not to have been allowed, nor upon any other ground than such as would have been available to an adult. And in Reed v. Reed, 46 Hun, 212, it was held that a judgment in partition could not be assailed, though in the same action, on the ground that the guardian ad litem might have objected, but did not, that the plaintiff had not such interest as entitled him to bring the action. The adult parties to an action have rights in it as well as the parties who are minors. The former are not to be made, without their consent, the guardians to protect the rights of the latter. It is for the court to see that the rights of the minors are protected. This duty it performs by appointing a proper person as guardian in a manner provided by law, and by the exercise, whenever necessary, of its right of supervision and control over the acts and conduct of the guardian thus appointed. In the exercise of this control the court may set aside or disregard acts or concessions of the guardian which have not already passed its scrutiny, and which, though fair on their face, are shown to the court to have been improvidently or fraudulently done or made. And it may and ought to set aside or disregard such acts or concessions as apparently waive or surrender any material right of the minors, such, for instance, as the right to a trial, unless they be shown to be beneficial, or, at any rate, not prejudicial to the rights and interests of the minor. The power of supervision and control over the guardian includes the right to accept and act upon what he has done, or, if proper protection to the interests of the minor requires it, to reject and disregard what he has done. It is a matter for the court in which the action is pending, and no other. It may commit error in the matter; for instance, it may assume to be binding on the court an act, admission, or stipulation of the guardian which it ought to set aside or disregard. In this case the stipulation in effect waives a trial, and it could not be taken as binding and acted upon until the court approved and ratified it, upon a showing that it was not prejudicial to the interest of the minor defendants. Such a stipulation might well be not only not prejudicial, but actually beneficial, to them. For instance, suppose several actions by different plaintiffs against the same defendants, involving precisely the same matters of controversy. An agreement that the others shall abide the event in one of them will save the useless cost and trouble of repeated trials. If there were in all of them the same guardian ad litem for the minor defendants, such a stipulation would put upon him the duty of adequately defending in the action specified the rights of the minor involved in each of the others, and we think the court might approve of that. It would be otherwise where there are different guardians in the action in which the stipulation is made and that specified in it, for that would be, in effect, to cast on another guardian the duty and burden belonging to the stipulating guardian. So far as the record in this action shows, the facts requisite to justify the court in ratifying the stipulation and ordering judgment upon it did not appear. From the moving papers it does not appear with sufficient certainty that the matters in controversy in the two actions were, so far as concerned the minors, precisely the same, and there was no attempt to make it appear that the guardian in this was also the guardian in the other action.

For this reason it was error to order judgment against the minor defendants, Edward A. Finnegan, P. James Finnegan, and J. Henry Finnegan. As to them the judgment is reversed, and affirmed as to the other defendants.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

William MINOT, Jr., Appt.,

v.

Augustus RUSS.

Charles HEAD et al., Appts.,

v.

Henry HORNBLOWER et al.

(.....Mass.)

1. The drawer of a check who gets it certified in his own behalf or for his own benefit and then delivers it to the payee is not discharged, but continues liable where the bank fails before payment of the check.

2. If the payee or holder of a check gets it certified in his own behalf or for his own benefit instead of getting it paid, the drawer is discharged, especially where the certification amounts to an extension of the time of payment.

(June 20, 1892.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior court for Suffolk County sustaining a demurrer to the complaint in an action brought to recover from the drawer the amount of a certified check which remained unpaid because of the failure of the bank. Reversed.

NOTE.—Effect of certification of check on liability of drawer.

The principal case very clearly states the law upon this question and brings out prominently the distinction which harmonizes the cases but which was overlooked for some time by the text-writers with the result of obscuring and throwing uncertainty into the question.

As long ago as 1851 it was held that if the holder of a check has it certified by the bank the fund represented by it is then in the condition of an ordinary deposit. Willets v. Phoenix Bank, 2 Duer, 132. See also Girard Bank v. Bank of Penn Twp., 80 Pa. 99, 80 Am. Dec. 507.

And in 1873, Peckham, J., in delivering the opinion of the court in First Nat. Bank of Jersey City v. Leach, 52 N. Y. 350, said he knew of no direct authority upon the question but upon principle it must be held that when the holder presents the check and has it certified, the bank holds the money, not at the risk of the drawer but of the holder of the check.

16 L. R. A.

This doctrine is recognized and cited in argument by the United States Supreme Court in Washington First Nat. Bank of Washington v. Whitman, 94 U. S. 843, 24 L. ed. 229. See also National Commercial Bank v. Miller, 77 Ala. 174.

And in Thomson v. Bank of British North America, 82 N. Y. 6, Rapallo, J., said in argument that ordinarily where the payee or holder of a check instead of demanding payment procures the check to be certified it is as between drawer and holder regarded as paid.

By having the check certified the holder makes the risk of the bank's failure his own. French v. Irwin, 4 Bart. 401, 27 Am. Rep. 769.

At the same time that the above decisions were being rendered there was a line of authority being established to the effect that if the drawer of the check has it certified before he issues it, the certification does not relieve him from liability. Bickford v. First Nat. Bank of Chicago, 43 Ill. 238, 39 Am. Dec. 436.

This was followed by Rounds v. Smith, 42 Ill.

APPEAL by plaintiffs from a judgment of the Superior Court for Suffolk County in favor of defendants in an action brought to recover from the drawers the amount of a check which plaintiffs had taken and had certified and which remained unpaid because of the failure of the bank. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Frank Brewster for Minot, appellant.

Mr. William C. Loring for Head et al., appellants.

Mr. F. R. Jones for Russ, appellee.

Messrs. M. & C. A. Williams for Hornblower et al., appellees.

Field, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The first case is an appeal from a judgment rendered by the superior court for the defendant on his demurrer to the declaration. The defendant on October 29, 1891, drew a check on the Maverick National Bank payable to the order of the plaintiff, and, being informed by the plaintiff that the check must be certified by the bank before it would be received, the defendant on the same day presented the check to the bank for certification, and the bank certified it by writing on the face of the check the following: "Maverick National Bank. Pay only through clearing house. J. W. Work, Cashier. A. C. J., Paying Teller."

After it was certified the check was, on Saturday, October 31, 1891, delivered by the defendant to the plaintiff for a valuable consideration. The declaration alleges that the bank stopped payment on Monday morning, November 2, 1891, "before the commencement of business hours of said day," and that on that day payment was duly demanded of the bank, and notice of nonpayment was duly given to the defendant.

The second case is an appeal from a judgment rendered for the defendants by the superior court on an agreed statement of facts. On Saturday, October 31, 1891, the defendants drew their check on the Maverick National Bank, payable to the order of the plaintiffs, and delivered it to them in payment of stocks bought by the defendants of the plaintiffs. The check was received too late to be deposited by the plaintiffs for collection in season to be carried to the clearing house on that day, but during banking hours on that day the plaintiffs presented the check to the Maverick National Bank for certification, and the bank certified it by writing or stamping on its face the following:

"Maverick National Bank. Certified. Pay only through clearing house. C. C. Domett, A. Cashier.—, Paying Teller."

At that time the defendants had on deposit sufficient funds to pay the check, and the bank, on certification, charged to the defendants' account the amount of the check, and credited it to a ledger account called "Certified Checks," in accordance with their uniform custom. After certification, the plaintiffs on the same day deposited the check in the Hamilton National Bank for collection. It is agreed that if the check had been presented for payment on Saturday in banking hours it would have been paid; but the Maverick National Bank transacted no business after Saturday, and on Sunday the comptroller of the currency placed a National Bank examiner in charge, and the bank was put into the hands of a receiver. The clearing house on November 2d refused to receive checks on the Maverick National Bank, and the check was on that day duly presented for payment, and due notice of nonpayment was given to the defendants. Each of the checks was in the ordinary form of checks on a bank, and they were payable on demand, and no presentment for acceptance or certification was necessary to charge the drawer. In a sense, undoubtedly, a check is a species of bill of exchange, and in a sense, also, it is a distinct commercial instrument, but according to the general understanding of merchants and according to our statutes these instruments were checks, and not bills of exchange. "A check is an order to pay the holder a sum of money at the bank on presentment of the check and demand of the money. No previous notice is necessary. No acceptance is required or expected. It has no days of grace. It is payable on presentment, and not before." Bullard v. Randall, 1 Gray, 603, 61 Am. Dec. 488. The duty of the bank was to pay these checks 25, in which there seems to have been a slight ground for distinction raised because it did not appear that the check had when certified been charged to the account of the drawer.

But this distinction was held to be immaterial in Brown v. Leckie, 43 Ill. 497, and it was there held that such fact would make no difference.

In Larsen v. Breene, 12 Colo. 484, it was held that a certified check is not a payment of the debt when it was certified at the instance of the drawer.

And in Born v. First Nat. Bank of Indianapolis, 7 L. R. A. 442, 123 Ind. 78, it was held that such acceptance is not ipso facto payment.

In Andrews v. German Nat. Bank, 9 Helsk. 223, 24 Am. Rep. 300, it is said to be a question for the jury whether or not such check is taken as absolute payment.

The distinction between the two classes of cases appears to have been first taken in Essex County Nat. Bank v. Bank of Montreal, 7 Biss. 193, in which the court held that if a bank receives a check for collection and accepts a certification of it by the bank upon which it is drawn in lieu of payment it thereby assumes the risk of payment and becomes liable to the owner for the amount of the check with interest from the date of the certification.

The distinction is broadly made by the Illinois Appellate Court in Continental Nat. Bank of Chicago v. Cornhauser, 37 Ill. App. 475. And the Supreme Court of Illinois in Metropolitan Nat. Bank of Chicago v. Jones (Ill.) 13 L. R. A. 492, decides that the certification of a check on the payee's application releases the drawer and expressly distinguishes the prior Illinois decisions on the ground that in them the certification had been made at the drawer's own request.

As bearing upon the general question it was held in Mutual Nat. Bank v. Rotge, 28 La. Ann. 938, 26 Am. Rep. 123, that certification of a check at the request of an indorser before delivery to the holder does not release the indorser's liability.

H. P. F.

when they were presented for payment if the drawers had sufficient funds on deposit. The bank owed no duty to the drawers to certify the checks, although it could certify them if it saw fit, at the request of either the drawers or of the holders, and if it certified them it became bound directly to the holders, or to the persons who should become the holders. In either case the bank would charge to the account of the drawer the amount of the check, because by certification it had become absolutely liable to pay the check when presented. When a check payable to another person than the drawer is presented by the drawer to the bank for certification, the bank knows that it has not been negotiated, and that it is not presented for payment, but that the drawer wishes the obligation of the bank to pay it to the holder when it is negotiated, in addition to his own obligation. But then the payee or holder of a check presents it for certification the bank knows that this is done for the convenience or security of the holder. The holder could demand payment if he chose, and it is only because instead of payment the holder desires certification that the bank certifies the check instead of paying it. In one case the bank certifies the check, for the use or convenience of the drawer, and in the other for the use or convenience of the holder. In the present cases the checks were seasonably presented to the bank for payment, and on the facts stated the defendants would be liable unless the certification discharged them from liability. It is argued that the certification of a check, whereby the bank becomes absolutely liable to pay it at any time on demand, discharges the drawer, because it is said that the check then becomes, in effect, a certificate of deposit; and it is also argued that the certification is, in effect, only an acceptance of a bill of exchange, and that if payment is duly demanded of the bank, and refused, and notice of non-payment duly given, the drawer is held. So far as the question has been considered, it has been decided that the certification of a bank check is not in all respects like the making of a certificate of deposit or the acceptance of a bill of exchange, but that it is a thing en sui generis, and that the effect of it depends upon the person who, in his own behalf or for his own benefit, induces the bank to certify the check. The weight of authority is that if the drawer, in his own behalf or for his own benefit, gets his check certified, and then delivers it to the payee, the drawer is not discharged; but that if the payee or holder in his own behalf, or for his own benefit, gets it certified instead of getting it paid, then the drawer is discharged. Born v. First Nat. Bank of Indianapolis, 123 Ind. 78, 7 L. R. A. 442; Brown v. Leckie, 48 Ill. 497; Rounds v. Smith, 43 Ill. 245; Andrews v. German Nat. Bank, 9 Heisk. 211, 24 Am. Rep. 800; First Nat. Bank of Jersey City v. Leach, 53 N. Y. 850; Boyd v. Nasmith, 17 Ont. 40; Essex County Nat. Bank v. Bank of Montreal, 7 Biss. 198; First Nat. Bank of Washington v. Whitman, 94 U. S. 348, 345, 24 L. ed. 229-231; Metropolitan Nat. Bank v. Jones (Ill. Sup.) 12 L. R. A. 492; Continental Nat. Bank of Chicago v. Cornhauser, 37 Ill. App. 475; National Commercial Bank v. Miller, 77 Ala. 168; Larsen v. Breene, 12 Colo. 480; Mutual Nat. Bank v. Rotge, 28 La. Ann. 933, 26 Am. Rep. 126; Morse, Banks, §§ 414, 416.

We are of opinion that this view of the law rests on sound reasons. If it be true that the existing methods of doing business make the use of certified checks necessary, the persons who receive them can always require them to be certified before delivery. If they receive them uncertified, and then present them to the bank for certification instead of payment, so far as the drawer is concerned, the certification should be considered as payment. It may also be said that in the second case the certification amounted to an extension of the time of payment at the request of the payees without the consent of the drawers. Before the certification the drawers could have requested the payees to present the check for payment on Saturday, or could themselves have drawn out the money and paid the check. After certification the amount of the check no longer stood to the credit of the drawers, and the payees had accepted an obligation of the bank to pay only through the clearing house, which could not happen before the following Monday.

The result is that in the first case the judgment is reversed, and the demurrer overruled; and in the second case the judgment is affirmed. So ordered.

WISCONSIN SUPREME COURT.

J. W. SIZER, Appt.,

v.

Patrick QUINLAN, Respt.

(.....Wis.....)

The right to fence a right of way is not given by a reservation in a deed of "a reasonable right of way across the land."

(May 24, 1892.)

A PPEAL by complainant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Fond du Lac County dismissing the complaint in an action brought to enjoin defendant from cutting down and destroying complainant's fence. Affirmed. The facts are stated in the opinion.

NOTE.—Brill v. Brill, cited in brief and opinion supra, seems to be the only case which furnishes any direct authority on the point involved in the principal case. Even that authority is in the dicta—16 L. R. A.

tained in the opinion. The decision was that a reservation in a deed of "a free ingress and egress across the above-described premises where the road now is" imposed no obligation on the grantee to

Statement by Pinney, J.:

The plaintiff, Sizer, is the owner of a tract of land on section 2, containing about 17 acres, and also of 40 acres of land on section 1, about 90 rods east of the former tract. The defendant owns a tract of land lying immediately between the plaintiff's two tracts, and both parties derived title from the same common grantor, who, in conveying to the defendant Quinlan, reserved "a reasonable right of way across the land" so conveyed, between the tracts retained by him and now owned by the plaintiff. These tracts the said common grantor subsequently conveyed to the plaintiff's grantor, together with the said right of way. The plaintiff fenced in this right of way to the width of one rod and a half with a wire fence, for the better and more advantageous enjoyment of it, and the defendant, denying his right to fence it in, cut and broke down the fence in part, and sawed off a large number of the posts situate on the premises over which the way passed, and threatened to cut, tear down, and destroy the remainder of the fence, against the will of the plaintiff. Whereupon the plaintiff brought this action to enjoin and restrain the defendant from entering upon the plaintiff's premises, and from interfering with said premises, or with the plaintiff, in any manner, so as to prevent him from a full and free use and enjoyment of the premises as aforesaid, and of the fences situate thereon. The defendant admits the existence of the alleged right of way over his said lands, and alleges that he has not denied and does not deny plaintiff's right to pass over it, but he denies that the plaintiff has any right to fence in or inclose such right of way on the sides thereof. The circuit court at the hearing was of the opinion that the right of way was an easement merely, and that the plaintiff had no right to fence it in, and gave judgment dismissing the complaint, from which the plaintiff appealed.

Messrs. Duffy & McCrory for appellant.

Messrs. Colman, Sutherland & Hiner, for respondent:

The reservation does not describe any particular strip or belt of land or locate or define the right of way. Nothing is reserved but a reasonable right of way.

Respondent therefore owns the fee, and appellant merely an easement.

Washburn, Easem. 2d ed., top. pp. 3, 216; Goddard, Easem. p. 78; Cook County v. Chicago B. & Q. R. Co. 85 Ill. 460, 464; Hzzelton v. Putnam, 3 Pinn. 107, 54 Am. Dec. 158.

Respondent as owner of the servient tenement may use the same in any way not inconsistent with the enjoyment of the easement.

Goddard, Easem. p. 280.

A mere right of way cannot be fenced by the owner thereof.

Brill v. Brill, 11 Cent. Rep. 805, 108 N. Y. 511.

The numerous adjudications asserting the right of the owner of the servient estate to maintain gates at either end of a defined and established right of way are in harmony with the contention of the respondent.

Whaley v. Jarrett, 69 Wis. 618; Short v. Devine, 5 New Eng. Rep. 592, 146 Mass. 119; Goddard, Easem. p. 381.

Pinney, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The right of way reserved by the defendant's grantor, and afterwards conveyed by him to the plaintiff with the lands to which it was appurtenant, created a mere easement. The language of the deed reserving it is "a reasonable right of way," and the common grantor of both parties conveyed it subsequently with the lands to which it was appurtenant as "the right of way across P. Quinlan's land." The plaintiff thus became the owner of the dominant estate for the benefit of which the easement existed, and the defendant's was the servient estate, burdened with the easement in question. It is argued that because the right granted is "a reasonable right of way," and it is necessary to as full and perfect enjoyment of it as is desirable, that, therefore, the plaintiff, for his greater convenience and safety in its use, has a right to fence it in; but we do not think the language in question warrants any such conclusion. The lateral boundaries and width of the way are not specified. The word "reasonable" obviously has reference to the width and limits of the way to be enjoyed but still it is a mere right of way, a mere easement, and no more, and, though a burden, is not an estate or interest in lands, and does not confer on the plaintiff any exclusive or permanent right of occupancy, but merely a transitory use. The defendant, as the owner of the servient estate; is circumstanced in respect to this easement substantially as the owner of an estate along or over which a highway passes is at common law in respect to fencing the highway. He may fence along the highway or not, as his convenience may dictate, but he is not bound to fence it, or to permit any one else to do so. If the plaintiff is allowed to fence in his right of way, it will work, it is manifest, an exclusion of the defendant from the land over which it passes, the full legal title to which still remains in him, which was not contemplated by the language used in the deed reserving the right of way or by the deed conveying it to the plaintiff, and would permit the plaintiff to exercise rights and avail himself of methods of use and enjoyment of the defendant's estate of a more permanent character than a mere right of way over his lands, and not essentially pertaining to or resulting from a mere easement over them. The owner of the soil of a way, whether public or private, may make any and all uses of it to which the land can be applied, and take all profits which can maintain fences along the right of way so reserved. But in the opinion Danforth, J., says, that the grantee was not "in any manner required to abstain from occupying his lands in common without division fences, and with free and unobstructed passage from one side to the other," and that he had the "right to have his lands fenced or unfenced at his pleasure." (The italics are ours.) J. G. G.

be derived from it consistently with the enjoyment of the easement. Washb. Easem. *p. 264 et seq. All rights which are consistent with the reasonable exercise of the easement remain with the grantor, because they are not granted. In this case the lands were conveyed by the common grantor to the defendant, and the mere easement was reserved and conveyed to the plaintiff. He is entitled only to a reasonable and usual enjoyment and use of the easement. Bakeman v. Tulbot, 81 N. Y. 866, 871, 88 Am. Dec. 275; Parker v. Frick, 45 Md. 887, 24 Am. Rep. 506.

In Brill v. Brill, 108 N. Y. 511, 517, 11 Cent. Rep. 805, similar views are expressed, and it is there laid down that "the owner of the soil has all the rights and benefits of ownership consistent with such easement. Among others must be the right to have his lands fenced or unfenced at his pleasure. In the absence of fences, his horses and cattle must not obstruct the way, and the owner of the way is bound to the exercise of due and reasonable care by his own methods to prevent his cattle or other animals from trespassing. An inclosed road might be a convenience, but its creation is not imposed upon the owner of the soil by the terms of the reservation; it is not an actual or direct necessity to the full enjoyment of the privilege reserved, and it cannot be implied as incident thereto." Testimony was given to show that the defendant consented to the erection of the fence, but this was no more than a parol license, which was revocable, and was in fact revoked, by the acts and conduct of the defendant. The judgment of the circuit court is correct, and must be affirmed.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

NORTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

John KELLY et al.
v.
LYNCBURG & DURHAM R. CO. et al., Appts.

(.....N. C.....)

1. An agreement that arbitrators may fix their own compensation is subject to the implied condition that the allowance made to themselves shall not be unreasonable and that its reasonableness may be determined by the court.
2. The court when asked to confirm a report of arbitrators may upon suggestion by exception or by motion determine whether an allowance which the arbitrators have made to themselves by consent of the parties is or is not reasonable and a formal action is not necessary.

(Shepherd, J., dissents.)

(April 26, 1892.)

APPEAL by defendants from an order of the Superior Court for Durham County confirming the report of the arbitrators which had been appointed in the case, allowing their charges for their services as such and overruling defendants' exceptions thereto. Reversed.

By agreement it was ordered that the matters involved in the action should be referred to an umpire and two arbitrators with power to hear the evidence make their award and report the same to the court. By the terms of the submission it was agreed that the arbitrators might "fix their own compensation."

Further facts appear in the opinions.

Mr. W. A. Guthrie for appellants.

Messrs. Fuller & Fuller for appellees.

Avery, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

If the parties had not incorporated into the agreement to submit to arbitration a provision that the arbitrators might fix their own compensation, the duty of determining what would be a just allowance for the service rendered by them, and each of them, would have devolved upon the court, and the judge might have heard evidence in case of dispute, in order to arrive at a fair estimate of the value of the work done, and the expense incurred in performing it. Stevens v. Brown, 82 N. C. 463; Griffin v. Hadley, 58 N. C. 82. Where they assume the right to determine their compensation, without the assent of the parties, that portion of the report will not be sustained, and, if separate from other matters disposed of, may be set aside, while the award in other respects may be enforced as a rule of court. Stevens v. Brown, supra; Knight v. Holden, 104 N. C. 107. The truth of the principle embodied in the old maxim, nemo debet esse iudex in propria sua causa, is self-evident. White v. Connelly, 105 N. C. 70; Freeman v. Person, 106 N. C. 251. While it is admitted that the parties to an action may, by express agreement, clothe arbitrators with

NOTE.—The above case strikingly illustrates the supervisory power of courts over private agreements. The well-recognized instances of affirmative relief from contracts for fraud, duress, or undue influence, and the other instances of refusal specifically to enforce contracts which are inequitable, as well as those which are illegal or against public policy, sufficiently illustrate the fact that private agreements, even between parties competent to contract, will be subject to some review by courts. The protecting power of a court to shield a person from his own inequitable contract must, indeed, be brought within some recognized principle of law or equity, but the wisdom of the courts gradually extends the application of such principles towards a nearer approximation of the legal rules to the rules of enlightened morality and justice. This seems to be done in the above case in applying the maxim, nemo debet esse iudex in propria sua causa, to bring into the contract an implied condition that the arbitrators' allowance to themselves must be reasonable.

B. A. R.

power to fix the amount of their compensation, the law attaches by implication the condition that the allowance shall not be unreasonable, and, upon a proper suggestion that it is extortionate or excessive, it becomes the duty of the trial judge, before giving judgment to enforce the award, as a rule of court, to hear evidence, if necessary, and pass upon the question thus raised. The motion for judgment upon an award which is, by the terms of the submission, to be enforced as a rule of court, may be resisted upon any ground that impeaches its validity generally, or, where it is separable, the validity of a portion of the findings. Metcalf v. Guthrie, 94 N. C. 447; Cowan v. McNeely, 82 N. C. 5. It has been the practice in our courts to attack awards for errors of law apparent from the record by filing exceptions. Long v. Fitzgerald, 97 N. C. 39; Duncan v. Duncan, 28 N. C. 466.

It appears upon an inspection of the charges of two of the arbitrators, (the claim of the third having been compromised pending the dispute,) that they claim each about $50 per diem for every day on which they were actually sitting together, with all expenses for board and transportation; and, moreover, one account contains a charge for one day at the same rate, which was spent previous to the hearing in conference with attorneys of the plaintiff, who had chosen him. The aggregate of one of the contested accounts is $1,220.50; of the other, $982.21. Upon the coming in of the award at the March Term, 1891, Judge Boykin, who then presided, ordered that notice issue to Lutz and Graham to file "verified itemized accounts of the time engaged and expenses incurred by each of them respectively, in the trial of this cause, together with the value of their services." To this order no exception was entered, and in response to it the accounts were filed, to which the defendants have formally excepted. It is too late to object to the order made at the March Term, 1891. The judge who passed upon the exceptions to the accounts filed by the two arbitrators rested his ruling upon the ground that he had "no power to consider the evidence, in the absence of sustained proof or allegation or of some affidavit of a party setting forth and specifically charging fraud, collusion, conspiracy, or unfairness." The court below adopted the language used by Morse, on Arbitration and Award, p. 596, and quoted from an opinion of the Supreme Court of Maine. But it must be remembered that the question under discussion there was not what was the proper method of attacking an allowance of fees, made by two or three arbitrators, each for himself according to his own estimate of the value of his own services, but how the joint work of all the arbitrators, as to which there might be collusion or conspiracy, could be impeached for fraud. His honor adopted the English rule, which has been followed by only a portion of the American courts, (Morse, Arbitration & Award, p. 620;) but admitting, for the sake of argument, that the action of the arbitrators as to all issues upon which they passed as a body could in England have been impeached only by a bill in equity, and that under our Code practice we are bound to preserve the principle by requiring that the equity shall be alleged in some proper way, it does not follow that the account for services which the parties may have consented that each arbitrator shall make out for himself shall be attacked only in the same manner. In the absence of such agreement, the quantum of fees would have been determined at the discretion of the court, while, if the parties had not agreed upon the trial by arbitrators of the matters in controversy between them, the issues of fact raised by the pleadings would have been settled by the jury. An excessive charge of a single arbitrator might, it seems to us, have been corrected under the former practice, without resorting to a court of equity, whatever might have been the rule as to collusive fraud. The permission to each arbitrator to make out his bill of charges is subject to the power of the judge to resume his functions in case the license should appear to him to have been abused. It is a substitution of the arbitrator in his place, with the condition annexed that the allowance may be set aside if unreasonable. If the award is set aside for fraud, the right of trial by jury as to the issues is reinstated. If the allowance to an arbitrator is impeached as unreasonable, the effect is to restore to the court the right to fix a reasonable compensation.

We do not concur with the court below in the view that there must be allegata and probata or proof sustained in any specified formal manner before the court can interpose to supervise an allowance of fees by the arbitrators to themselves. The amount of the fees would be determined, in the absence of any agreement, by the court on motion, and the judge would, in case of dispute as to the character and extent of the services, hear testimony. We see no reason why the judge, upon suggestion by exception, or by motion that the allowance is unfair, should not set aside an unjust allowance in the way prescribed by law for making a just one. This is in harmony with the Code and the general trend of our new practice, in dispensing with useless formality, where it obstructs the administration of justice. We think that the court was at liberty to hear any evidence offered as to the services performed, and, upon that and other material evidence, had the power to pass upon the question whether the charges made were unreasonable.

It would seem, however, that in America the jurisdiction of the courts of equity, in setting aside awards, has not been admitted to extend to all cases where there has been fraud in the arbitration; but it is needless to discuss that question, if we consider the compensation as a matter apart from the issues raised by the pleadings. We think that there was error in the ruling of the court below.

Error.

Shepherd, J., dissenting

I think that his honor very properly refused to allow the award to be impeached in such a summary and informal manner. The compensation of arbitrators may be submitted to them as well as the other matters in dispute, and their award in this respect is equally binding, and must be impeached in the same way. The award in this case does not, upon its face, disclose the specific items of costs and charges as fixed by the arbitrators, and therefore the court could not see that they were so unreasonable as to warrant relief on the ground of fraud or oppression. In such cases the award must be impeached by an action in the nature of a bill in equity, charging fraud, misconduct, or other grounds of relief; and, when the award is to be made a rule of court, there should be, at least, an affidavit setting forth the grounds upon which its enforcement is resisted. The fact that the arbitrators are interested in fixing their own compensation makes no difference, as it is well settled that an award will not be disturbed where parties have knowingly submitted their differences to persons interested in the matters involved. Pearson v. Barringer, 109 N. C. 398, and the authorities cited. See also Fox v. Hazelton, 10 Pick. 275. The ruling of the court below is well sustained by the case of Blossom v. Van Amringe, 68 N. C. 65, in which Chief Justice Pearson says: "It certainly cannot be expected that the court shall wade through all of the voluminous proceedings, accounts, time devoted to the investigation," etc., in order to determine whether the amount of compensation fixed on is too high for the reason that the parties have agreed to leave that question to the arbitrators and they are bound by it except there be an allegation of unfairness so well sustained as to induce the court to interfere in order to prevent fraud and oppression by an abuse of power confided to the arbitrators." See also Adams, Eq. 192. To set aside an award upon a motion, without affidavit or upon a mere exception, is, I think, something new in the practice. As to the fixing of compensation, it reduces the determination of the arbitrators to but little more dignity than an ordinary bill of costs, and I cannot see how this is authorized by the Code of Civil Procedure. His honor seems to have been of the opinion that the new procedure was designed simply for the purpose of enforcing existing principles of law and equity, and not to change them in any respect. Such also seems to have been the view of this court from the adoption of the Code to the present time. Parsley v. Nicholson, 65 N. C. 207; Oates v. Gray, 66 N. C. 442; Katzenstein v. Raleigh & G. R. Co. 84 N. C. 688; and numerous other cases.

The impeachment of an award, like the correction of a deed, is governed by certain principles, and is by no means a simple matter of practice. I can conceive of no greater source of confusion than the idea that the Code of Civil Procedure warrants any departure from well-settled principles, and that in some vague and indefinite way it is to be made a refuge for all of the "hard cases," at the sacrifice of that certainty and uniformity which constitute the beauty and strength of every enlightened system of jurisprudence. I think that the ruling of the court below should be affirmed, and that the impeaching matter should, at least, be supported by affidavit.

ILLINOIS SUPREME COURT.

MUTUAL ACCIDENT ASSOCIATION of the Northwest, Appt.,

v.

Benjamin F. JACOBS et al.

(.....Ill.....)

A deposit is not special by reason of a certificate of deposit showing that it is made to secure the banker against a liability as surety of the depositor where the latter knows that the money is mingled with funds of the bank, but such deposit passes to the banker's assignee in case of his insolvency.

(May 12, 1902.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Appellate Court, First District, affirm-

NOTE.—When a deposit in bank is special so that the title remains in the depositor.

In an early Arkansas case the court defines special and general deposits as follows: "Where money not in a sealed packet or closed box, bag, or chest is deposited with a bank or banking corporation the law presumes it to be a general deposit until the contrary appears, because such deposit is esteemed the most advantageous to the depositary and most consistent with the general objects, usages, and course of business of such companies or corporations. But if the deposit be made of anything sealed or locked up or otherwise covered or secured in a package, cask, box, bag, or chest or anything of the like kind of or belonging to the depositor, the law regards it as a pure or special deposit and the depositary as having the custody thereof only for safe keeping and the accommodation of the depositor." Dawson v. Real Estate Bank, 5 Ark. 297.

16 L. R. A.

So it is said that the deposit is general unless the depositor makes it special or deposits it expressly in some particular capacity. Brahm v. Adkins, 77 Ill. 263.

Money deposited with a bank for which an interest-bearing certificate of deposit is taken is not a special deposit so that it remains the money of the depositor for the purpose of taxation as money, although it may be taxable as a credit. Ruffin v. Orange County Comrs. 69 N. C. 498.

A deposit is not special when made in the ordinary way and mingled with the general funds of the bank merely because it is made by a clerk of the court from funds under the control of the court in a bank designated by the court as the depositary of such moneys. Otis v. Gross, 96 Ill. 612, 33 Am. Rep. 157.

So deposits by a receiver of a railroad company of moneys received and necessary to be used in the railroad business in a bank designated by the court ing a judgment of the Circuit Court for Cook County in favor of defendants in an action brought to recover money which had been deposited with their assignor, Samuel A. Kean. Affirmed.

Statement by Craig, J.:

This was a petition in the county court of Cook county brought by the Mutual Accident Association of the Northwest, in which it was alleged that on the 4th day of October, A. D. 1890, petitioner deposited with Samuel A. Kean the sum of $6,000 as a special deposit, to be held by Kean to indemnify himself and one Jesse H. Cummings from any liability that might be incurred by them, or either of them, by reason of their having signed an appeal bond (as sureties) in a case wherein one Emma A. Tuggle recovered a judgment against petitioner in the circuit court of McDonough county, from which judgment petitioner appealed to the appellate court; that at the time the $6,000 was so left with Samuel A. Kean as aforesaid, to wit, on the 4th day of October, A. D. 1890, he, Samuel A. Kean, was engaged in the banking business at the city of Chicago, in the county of Cook, aforesaid under the name and style of S. A. Kean & Co., having his main banking office or place of business at No. 100 Washington street, in said city, and also having a branch banking office at Nos. 143 & 145 Adams street, in said city, which said branch was then operated and carried on by the said Samuel A. Kean under the care and management of one Wesley L. Knox, as agent and manager for him; that your petitioner deposited the sum of six thousand dollars ($6,000) with Kean at his branch banking office or place of business, and then and there received of and from said Kean, by and through his agent and manager, the following certificate of deposit:

"Chicago, Oct. 4, 1890. This is to certify that the Mutual Accident Association of the Northwest has deposited with Samuel A. Kean, of the county of Cook, state of Illinois, the sum of six thousand dollars, to be held by the said Kean upon the following conditions: Whereas, one Emma A. Tuggle, of the county of McDonough, recovered a judgment against the said accident company for the sum of five thousand dollars and costs, from which the said accident company have taken an appeal to the appellate court; and whereas, the said Samuel A. Kean and Jesse H. Cummings have signed the appeal bond in the said case: Now, therefore, this six thousand dollars deposited with Samuel A. Kean is to be held by the said Kean to indemnify himself and the said Jesse H. Cummings from any loss or liability incurred by them, or either of them, by reason of having signed said appeal bond; and, after the said Jesse H. Cummings, and Samuel A. Kean are fully discharged from all liability under said bond, then the said six thousand dollars is to be returned to the said Mutual Accident Association, but not otherwise. [Signed] S. A. Kean & Co., Branch. Wesley L. Knox, Manager."

It is further alleged in the petition that the $6,000 deposited is no part of the assets belonging to S. A. Kean, or to his estate, but that the same was and still is the property of the petitioner, and placed in the hands of Kean as a special deposit on trust, with the distinct understanding between petitioner and Kean that said $6,000 was to be returned to petitioner by Kean as soon as said Kean & Cummings should be discharged from all liability under the bond, as appears from terms of said certificate. Petitioner prays that the said sum of $6,000 may be declared to be the property of petitioner, and a trust fund in the hands of Benjamin F. Jacobs, assignee of Kean, and that an order may be entered by the court directing him, the assignee, to pay, deliver, and return the same to petitioner, as soon as the said Samuel A. Kean and Jesse H. Cummings are discharged from all liability under the appeal bond. The assignees of S. A. Kean put in an answer to the petition, in which they admit the giving of the receipt as set out in the petition. Further answering, respondents deny that the said $6,000 was not and never became the property of the said Samuel A. Kean, and that it has been since said deposit, and still is, the property of the said petitioner, but aver the truth to be that said deposit became at once, upon its receipt by him, the property of the said Samuel A. Kean. They further deny that the $6,000, or any part thereof, was in the possession of the assignee and state that, immediately upon its deposit by the petitioner, the said sum of $6,000 became the property as a depository of such moneys, when made generally to the credit of the receiver are not special so as to make the officers of the bank after its insolvency subject to a rule for contempt on failure to repay such money. Southern Development Co. v. Houston & T. C. R. Co. 27 Fed. Rep. 344.

The addition of the word "clerk" to a general deposit does not make it special. McLain v. Wallace, 8 West. Rep. 359, 103 Ind. 562.

Neither do the words "Judge of Probate, license money." Alston v. State, 13 L. R. A. 659, 92 Ala. 124.

Money delivered to the cashier of a bank for the purpose of paying a note executed to the bank but not then held by it does not constitute a general deposit, but is held by the bank in a fiduciary capacity, and an assignee of the bank in insolvency cannot hold it as assets of the bank. Peak v. Elliott, 30 Kan. 153, 46 Am. Rep. 90; Elliott v. Barnes, 31 Kan. 170.

To a similar effect is a decision that checks given 16 L. R. A.

a bank to pay notes not yet due in the mistaken supposition that the bank holds them, which checks the bank charges up to the depositor, create a trust fund for him to which he is entitled on the failure of the bank without having paid the notes. People v. City Bank of Rochester, 96 N. Y. 32.

On the contrary, it was held in a bankruptcy case by the United States district court that money delivered to a banker by one who had no deposit at the time to pay a note and mortgage which were to be sent to the banker for that purpose without anything being said as to the nature of the deposit but which in fact the banker credited to the depositor, did not constitute a special deposit; and that on the banker's failure after receiving the note and mortgage, but before remitting the money in payment the depositor must be regarded as a mere creditor of the banker. Re Hosie, 7 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 601. See also Re Law's Est. 14 L. R. A. 106, and note. B. A. K.

of said Kean, and was by him commingled with other moneys and property of the said Kean in said banking business, and used and paid out by the said Kean in the regular course of business.

Messrs. Albert H. Veeder and Mason B. Loomis for appellant.

Messrs. Jesse A. Baldwin and Moran, Kraus, Mayer & Stein for appellees.

Craig, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The $6,000 was not passed over to S. A. Kean in currency or other money, but, as appears from the evidence, the officers of the accident association drew a check payable to the order of S. A. Kean & Co. for $6,000 on the Union National Bank, and delivered the check to Kean & Co. The money was drawn on the check, and used by Kean & Co. in its banking business. It is also plain from the evidence that the accident association knew that the check was paid, and that the money passed into the bank, and was used by the bank in the same manner as other funds which were received by the bank in the usual course of business. Under such circumstances, can it be held that the bank received the money as a special deposit; that the money became a trust fund, and was of such a character that the court was authorized to take it out of the hands of the general creditors, and turn it over to the petitioner? If the evidence established the fact that the $6,000 had been placed in the hands of Kean & Co. as a special deposit, we think the petitioners were entitled to be protected. But was this a special deposit? As we understand the question, there is a wide difference between a special and a general deposit, as these terms are understood, not only by bankers, but by the public, who are transacting business daily with banks. Where money of any description is deposited in a bank, and the identical gold or silver or bank bills which were deposited are to be returned to the depositor, and not the equivalent, the deposit will be special; while, on the other hand, a general deposit is "a deposit which is to be returned to the depositor in kind." Anderson, Law Dict. 344; 1 Morse, Banks and Banking, § 190; 2 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 92; Keene v. Collier, 1 Met. (Ky.) 417. Where gold or silver coin or a package of bills currency are received in a bank as a special deposit, the identical money to be returned, the bank has no authority to use the money in its business. Its duty is to safely keep and return the identical money. But where there is a general deposit, the understanding being that a like sum of lawful money shall be returned, the bank is permitted to use the money in its general business, and the relation of debtor and creditor is created by the transaction. There is nothing in the certificate of deposit which was issued by Kean & Co. which indicates that a package amounting to $6,000 had been deposited there to remain for a time and be returned. That was not the transaction; but, as is clearly shown from the evidence, the petitioner gave Kean & Co. a check on another bank, which went through the clearing house, and was paid; and Kean & Co., with the knowledge of the petitioner, mingled the money with the general funds of Kean & Co. in its bank. This $6,000 was commingled with the general funds of the bank in the same manner as money deposited by other depositors. The money thus became the funds of the bank, and, as such, upon the failure of Kean & Co., could not be followed by the petitioner. If the $6,000 had been placed in a separate package, and thus deposited in the bank, and had never been mingled with the general funds of the bank, the position of the petitioner might be sustained; but such was not the case. Otis v. Gross, 96 Ill. 618, 38 Am. Rep. 157, is a case where the same principle was involved as here. There moneys had been deposited under an order of court, but had not been kept separate from the general funds of the bank and it was held that the deposit was not a special one or a mere bailment, but the money deposited became that of the bank. School Trustees v. Kirwin, 25 Ill. 73, is a case where the same principle is involved. And in Union Nat. Bank of Chicago v. Goetz (Ill. Sup.) 27 N. E. Rep. 909, after referring to the Kirwin Case and various other authorities, it is said: "Many other cases might be cited, but enough has been shown to clearly indicate the line of decisions holding the doctrine that trust funds can only be pursued when they can be clearly distinguished from other property held by the trustee, or by those representing him, and this court is fully committed to this rule." Witherell v. O'Brien (Ill. Sup.) 29 N. E. Rep. 904, is also a case in point. There a deposit had been made with a banker, the intention of the depositor being that the deposit should be invested in a loan on real estate to be procured by the banker, and it was insisted that the money was deposited for a special purpose, and hence a trust for that purpose arose. In the decision of the case it is said: "[Where] the money which is delivered to a bank, even though it be for some specified purpose, as, for instance, investment in a mortgage security, has been mingled with the funds of the bank, as was done here, there is no reason why the depositor should be preferred above any other creditor. Where a trustee changes the form of the trust property, the right of the beneficial owner to reach it, and compel its transfer, may still exist, if the property can be identified as a distinct fund, and is not so mixed up with other moneys or property that it can no longer be specifically separated. If the trust property has been transferred to a bona fide purchaser for value without notice, or has lost its identity, the beneficial owner must, as under other circumstances he may, resort to the personal liability of the wrong-doing trustee,—citing 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1068. Where a trustee has converted a trust fund into money, and mingled it with his other moneys so that it cannot be separated from the latter, the beneficial owner occupies the position of a general creditor of the estate, and cannot follow the fund into the hands of an assignee for the benefit of creditors. Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank of Chicago v. Smith, 21 Blatchf. 275, 15 Fed. Rep. 858, and cases there cited. Its identification is a prerequisite to the exercise of the right to follow it. 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 1259. While it may not be necessary to point to the particular pieces of money, or the particular bank bills, that were deposited with the trustee, if the trust property be money, yet there must be a preservation of the distinctness of the trust fund." Here the money passed into the bank as a general deposit. It was mingled with other funds deposited in the bank, so that there is no means of separating it from other moneys received by the bank in its usual course of business, and the petitioner occupies the position of a general creditor.

The judgment of the Appellate Court will be affirmed.

OREGON SUPREME COURT.

Charles H. FISHER, Resp't.,

v.

OREGON SHORT LINE & UTAH
NORTHERN R. CO., App't.

(.....Or.....)

1. The opinions of railroad experts is not admissible on the question whether or not it is dangerous to run a train at a designated rate of speed as that is a question which the jury are competent to decide.
2. Erroneously permitting an expert to give his opinion on a question which the jury should decide without such aid will not cause a reversal, if the opinion was correct and expressed the conclusion which the jury must necessarily have drawn from the facts in evidence.
3. The conductor of a train ordered to run as an extra to carry snow shovelers to a certain station beyond which the road is blockaded does not assume the risk of a snowslide between the stations on the trip he is ordered to run.
4. A snowslide being usually mingled with gravel and rock is a dangerous obstruction to a railroad distinct in nature from a snowdrift, and a section foreman having knowledge of such an obstruction to the track must give notice thereof to the managers of the road and to the conductor of an approaching train if he has opportunity.
5. A section foreman stands in place of his master in respect of the duty to give notice of a dangerous obstruction on the track, and is not in that respect as to his negligence in failing to do so a fellow servant of a conductor who is injured by reason of such obstruction.

(June 21, 1892.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Union County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have resulted from defendant's negligence.

Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

NOTE.—The duty of a master to warn his servant of extraordinary risks is illustrated well by the above case. For notes on the general duty of the master in this respect, see Sherman v. Menomonee River Lumber Co. (Wis.) 1 L. R. A. 174; Brazil Block Coal Co. v. Gaffney (Ind.) 4 L. R. A. 850; Brennan v. Gordon (N. Y.) 8 L. R. A. 818.

For notes on the question whether or not another employé of the same master is a fellow servant or 16 L. R. A.

Messrs. W. W. Cotton and Jera Snow, for appellant:

In Bryant v. Burlington, O. R. & N. R. Co., 66 Iowa, 305, cited with approval in Carlson v. Oregon S. L. & U. N. R. Co., 21 Or. 454, and Houston & T. R. Co. v. Fowler, 56 Tex. 452, the knowledge on the part of a person injured of the bad state of the track resulting from the weather was simply to be inferred from the fact that a storm or snowfall was shown to have taken place. Yet in both of these cases the court held, as a matter of law, that the person injured must have known that the track was in bad order on account of such snow and storm.

The court erred in allowing the witnesses, Fisher and Hooker, to give their opinion to the effect that the rate of speed at which Fisher's train was traveling at the time of the accident was not dangerous.

The testimony of experts is inadmissible upon a matter concerning which, with the same knowledge of facts, the opinion of any one else would have as much weight. It is only admissible when the facts to be determined are obscure, and can only be made clear by and through the opinions of persons skilled in relation to the subject-matter of inquiry.

Rogers, Expert Testimony, p. 18.

The opinions of mechanics and workmen are not admissible as to matters not of technical skill, and which may be decided by the jury.

Lawson, Expert & Opinion Evidence, 94.

The opinions of witnesses should not be received as to whether certain acts do or do not amount to negligence.

Lawson, Expert & Opinion Evidence, pp. 497-520.

Necessity is the only reason which justifies courts in receiving expert and opinion evidence, and it is only when the jury can receive no light from the facts alone, that opinions, either of experts or others, will be received.

Graham v. Pennsylvania Co. 139 Pa. 149; State v. Anderson, 10 Or. 455; Guetig v. State, 66 Ind. 95, 32 Am. Rep. 99; Muldooney v. Illinois Cent. R. Co. 36 Iowa, 462; Hill v. Portland & R. R. Co. 55 Me. 438; State v. Watson, a representative of the master, see Muhlman v. Union Pac. R. Co. (Colo.) 2 L. R. A. 192; Lindvall v. Woods (Minn.) 4 L. R. A. 703; Murray v. St. Louis Cable & W. R. Co. (Mo.) 5 L. R. A. 735; Howard v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. (Vt.) 6 L. R. A. 75; Hunn v. Michigan Cent. R. Co. (Mich.) 7 L. R. A. 500; Brennan v. Gordon (N. Y.) 8 L. R. A. 818; Ell v. Northern Pac. R. Co. (N. Dak.) 12 L. R. A. 97.

65 Me. 74; Linn v. Sigbee, 87 Ill. 75; Eureka Co. v. Bass, 81 Ala. 200; New England Glass Co. v. Lovell, 7 Cush. 819; National Gas Light & F. Co. v. Miethke, 85 Ill. App. 632; Veerhausen v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 53 Wis. 689; Hopkins v. Indianapolis & St. L. R. Co. 78 Ill. 32; Burton v. Somerset Pottery Works, 121 Mass. 446; Grahman v. Chicago, St. P. & E. C. R. Co. 78 Iowa, 565; Seese v. Northern Pac. R. Co. 89 Fed. Rep. 487; Hamilton v. Des Moines Valley R. Co. 86 Iowa, 36; Lawson v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 64 Wis. 447, 54 Am. Rep. 634; Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Modest, 124 Ind. 212; Pennsylvania Co. v. Lindley, 2 Ind. App. 111.

Opinions are never received if all the facts can be ascertained and made intelligible to the jury or if it is such as men in general are capable of apprehending and understanding. The ordinary affairs of life cannot be made the subject of expert testimony.

7 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 493; Rogers, Expert Testimony, § 6; Muldoney v. Illinois Cent. R. Co. 86 Iowa, 462.

It has been held by a large number of courts, as a matter of law, that it is the duty of the railway engineer to keep a prudent lookout upon the track to warn trespassers of approaching danger and to use ordinary care and diligence to prevent any accident.

Carlton v. Wilmington & W. R. Co. 104 N. C. 365; Virginia Midland R. Co. v. White, 84 Va. 498, and cases cited; Whalen v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 75 Wis. 654; Frazer v. South & North Ala. R. Co. 81 Ala. 185; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Schuster, 85 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 407; East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. White, 5 Lea, 540; Deans v. Wilmington & W. R. Co. 107 N. C. 686.

When errors are committed in the receiving of testimony, the court must grant a new trial whenever it is unable to say, from a consideration of the entire record, that the verdict could not have been different.

National Gas Light & F. Co. v. Meithke, 85 Ill. App. 632; Smith v. Westerfield, 88 Cal. 375.

The court erred in instructing that "there has been some evidence offered tending to show that certain trackmen or section master had notice before this accident that the track at that place was obstructed by a slide; if you find from the evidence that those persons, or any of them, knew the condition of the track there, and knew that it was unsafe, or as reasonably prudent men ought to have known, that it was unsafe for the passage of the train, and that they could have warned the train of the danger and through their neglect they, or any of them, failed to warn the train and that neglect was the cause of the accident, the defendant is liable."

The instruction under consideration assumes, without qualification, that the trackmen referred to by the instruction and Fisher were not fellow servants. Trainmen and sectionmen may be, and frequently are, fellow servants.

Knahtla v. Oregon S. L. & U. N. R. Co. (Or.) June 24, 1891; Weger v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 55 Pa. 461; Slattery v. Toledo & W. R. Co. 23 Ind. 81; Schultz v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 67 Wis. 617, 58 Am. Rep. 881; Whaalan v. Mad River & L. E. R. Co. 8 Ohio St. 251; Heins 16 L. R. A.

v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 58 Wis. 525; Gormley v. Ohio & M. R. Co. 72 Ind. 32; Cooper v. Milwaukee & P. D. C. R. Co. 28 Wis. 699; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Wachter, 60 Md. 395; Collins v. St. Paul & S. C. R. Co. (Minn.) 8 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 150; Holden v. Fitchburg R. Co. 139 Mass. 268, 87 Am. Rep. 343; Blake v. Maine Cent. R. Co. 70 Me. 60, 85 Am. Rep. 297; Howland v. Milwaukee, L. S. & W. R. Co. 54 Wis. 226; Dallas v. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. 61 Tex. 197; Boldt v. New York Cent. R. Co. 18 N. Y. 434; Vick v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 95 N. Y. 267, 47 Am. Rep. 86.

Such sectionmen are vice-principals only when engaged in the performance of some duty which the master must perform; and it is only for their negligence in the performance of such duties that the master is responsible.

Under the facts of this case such sectionmen can only be rendered vice-principals by assuming that the master owed Fisher, in every possible view of the case, an absolute duty to either remove the obstructions from its track or else inform him of the exact location of every particular obstruction and of its probable dangerous character.

Fisher knew the road was blockaded and that no regular trains were being run thereover on account of the snowslides and drifts, and that he was going out as a conductor of a train sent for the purpose of raising such blockade. What duty then exists which the master must personally perform or which, if delegated to any of its servants, would render such servants in the performance of such duty vice-principals?

Defendant did not owe the duty of removing the obstructions before Fisher's train reached them because that was the work that Fisher was going out to do. Neither was it the duty of the defendant to inform Fisher of the fact that the road was blockaded by snow and slides and that regular trains could not pass over, because that was a fact which Fisher already knew, although he might not have known the location of each particular slide.

Carlson v. Oregon S. L. & U. N. R. Co. 21 Or. 454; McKinney, Fellow Servants, § 26; Murphy v. Boston & A. R. Co. 89 N. Y. 146, 42 Am. Rep. 240; Bryant v. Burlington, O. R. & N. R. Co. 66 Iowa, 305; Howland v. Milwaukee, L. S. & W. R. Co. 54 Wis. 226; Brick v. Rochester & N. Y. & P. R. Co. 98 N. Y. 211.

The servant assumes all risks of injury naturally and probably following from the character of the place where he is at work or resulting from the manner in which the master conducts his work.

Stone v. Oregon City Mfg. Co. 4 Or. 52; Tuttle v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co. 123 U. S. 189, 30 L. ed. 1114; Koontz v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 65 Iowa, 224, 54 Am. Rep. 5; Couch v. Charlotte, C. & A. R. Co. 23 S. C. 557; De Forest v. Jewett, 88 N. Y. 264; Dowell v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. 62 Iowa, 629; Hewitt v. Flint & P. M. R. Co. 11 West. Rep. 148, 67 Mich. 61; Hawk v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 31 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 268; Wilson v. Winona & St. P. R. Co. 87 Minn. 826; Rush v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. 86 Kan. 129; Naylor v. New York & H. R. R. Co. 83 Fed. Rep. 801; Simmons v. Chicago & T. R. Co. 110 Ill. 340; Anderson v. Winston, 31 Fed. Rep. 538; Kuhns

v. Wisconsin, I. & N. R. Co. 70 Iowa, 561; Flannagan v. Chicago & N.W. R. Co. 50 Wis. 462; Watson v. Houston & T. O. R. Co. 58 Tex. 434; Fraker v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 82 Minn. 54; Kelly v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. (Pa.) 10 Cent. Rep. 56; Gaffney v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 4 New Eng. Rep. 83, 15 R. I. 456; Rains v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 71 Mo. 184, 86 Am. Rep. 459; Clark v. St. Paul & S. C. R. Co. 28 Minn. 128; Wilson v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 85 Ala. 269; Baylor v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 40 N. J. L. 28, 29 Am. Rep. 208; Gibson v. Erie R. Co. 68 N. Y. 449, 20 Am. Rep. 552; Wells v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. 56 Iowa, 520; Riley v. Connecticut River R. Co. 135 Mass. 292; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Stricker, 51 Md. 47, 34 Am. Rep. 291; Illick v. Flint & P. M. R. Co. 13 West. Rep. 440, 67 Mich. 632; Owen v. New York Cent. R. Co. 1 Lans. 108; Pittsburg & C. R. Co. v. Sentmeyer, 92 Pa. 276; Brossman v. Lehigh Valley R. Co. 4 Cent. Rep. 913, 113 Pa. 490; Clark v. Richmond & D. R. Co. (Va.) 18 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 78; Wabash R. Co. v. Elliott, 98 Ill. 481; Davidson v. Southern Pac. Co. 44 Fed. Rep. 476; Brooks v. Northern Pac. R. Co. 47 Fed. Rep. 687.

The business of Fisher was a hazardous one, arising from the known danger of snow. Under such circumstances the utmost obligation resting upon the master would be to provide such reasonable rules and regulations for the conduct of such business as that, if such rules were carried out, the hazards thereof would be lessened; and that having provided such rules and regulations, the master would not be liable for the failure of any servant to conform thereto.

Hartvig v. N. P. Lumber Co. 19 Or. 522; Slater v. Jewett, 84 N. Y. 61; Fraker v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 82 Minn. 54.

The fact that the place was rendered unsafe by reason of the failure of the trackmen to give signals does not and should not render the master liable.

Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Wachter, 60 Md. 895; Collins v. St. Paul & S. O. R. Co. (Minn.) 8 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 150.

Messrs. J. H. Slater & Sons and R. & E. B. Williams & Carey, for respondent:

By Hill's Code, § 706, evidence may be given on the trial of the opinion of a witness on a question of science, art, or trade, when he is skilled therein.

Mechanics, artisans, and workmen are experts as to matters of technical skill in their trades, and their opinions in such cases are admissible.

Lawson, Expert & Opinion Evidence, p. 70. Appellant's argument fails to distinguish between two kinds of opinion evidence. The opinions of non-experts are sometimes admissible from necessity, either because the subject-matter is so blended with fact and opinion that to exclude the opinion is to exclude the fact, or because as in questions of sanity, hand-writing, etc., the witness has been so situated as to have gained a knowledge that can only be expressed by the statement of his conclusion. Expert evidence is admissible on an entirely distinct ground.

The test of the admissibility of expert testimony is not whether the subject-matter is common or uncommon, or whether many or few have knowledge of it, but whether the witnesses offered have any peculiar knowledge or experience not common to the world, which renders their opinions, founded thereon, an aid to the triers.

Taylor v. Monroe, 48 Conn. 44

Any person, though not an expert, may testify as to the speed of a moving train.

Detroit & M. R. Co. v. Van Steinburg, 17 Mich. 108; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Johnson, 103 Ill. 525; Pence v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 79 Iowa, 389; Evansville & T. H. R. Co. v. Crist, 2 L. R. A. 450, 116 Ind. 446; Walsh v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. 102 Mo. 582.

But no particular rate can be assumed, without proof, to be dangerous.

Detroit & M. R. Co. v. Van Steinburg, supra.

How can proof of this kind be offered but by experts, by the testimony of those whose experience and observation have given them a knowledge that others, however intelligent, can but rudely approximate.

What is or is not dangerous sometimes is not, but often is, a question that can be properly answered only by experts.

Cross v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 14 West. Rep. 181, 69 Mich. 363; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Gregory, 58 Ill. 272; Huizaga v. Cutler & S. Lumber Co. 51 Mich. 272; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Shannon, 43 Ill. 338; Bridger v. Asheville & S. R. Co. 25 S. C. 24; Clinton v. Howard, 42 Conn. 306; Porter v. Pequonnock Mfg. Co. 17 Conn. 258; Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Pratt, 15 Ill. App. 181; Baltimore & L. Turnp. Co. v. Cassell, 66 Md. 419; Laughlin v. Street R. Co. of Grand Rapids, 62 Mich. 321.

For instances of the admission of opinions, see,— Sydeleman v. Beckwith, 43 Conn. 11; Sallwasser v. Hazlitt, 18 Ill. App. 243; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Bock, 17 Ill. App. 20; Camp Point Mfg. Co. v. Bailou, 71 Ill. 417; Eckert v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 18 Mo. App. 854; Shriver v. Sioux City & St. P. R. Co. 24 Minn. 506; Hayward v. Knapp, 23 Minn. 433; Bierce v. Stocking, 11 Gray, 174; Kershaw v. Wright, 115 Mass. 361; McIntosh v. Livingston, 41 Iowa, 223; Chamberlain v. Dunlop, 28 N. Y. S. R. 875; Case v. Simonds, 7 N. Y. Supp. 253; St. Louis, A. & T. R. Co. v. Johnston, 78 Tex. 536; Eureka Co. v. Bass, 81 Ala. 200; Stead v. Worcester, 150 Mass. 241; Lewis v. Seifert, 9 Cent. Rep. 751, 116 Pa. 628; Ward v. Charleston City R. Co. 19 S. C. 521; Maher v. Atlantic & P. R. Co. 64 Mo. 276; Bellefontaine & I. R. Co. v. Bailey, 11 Ohio St. 833; Armstrong v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 45 Minn. 85.

Even non-experts may, after detailing all the facts, state their opinion deducible therefrom.

Lawson, Expert & Opinion Evidence, p. 589; Clinton v. Howard, 42 Conn. 307.

In view of the testimony the admission of the evidence complained of did not affect the verdict. In much stronger cases the error of admitting opinions has been considered harmless.

Mead v. Altgeld (Ill.) Jan. 22, 1891; Gulf, O. & S. F. R. Co. v. Smith, 74 Tex. 276; Aikin v. Leonara 1 Or. 224; Goodale v. Portage Lake Bridge Co. 55 Mich. 413.

Acts which the master, as such, is bound to perform for the safety and protection of his employes, cannot be delegated so as to exonerate the former from liability to a servant who is injured by the omission to perform the act or duty, or by its negligent performance, whether the nonfeasance or misfeasance is that of a superior officer, agent or servant, or a subordinate or inferior agent or servant to whom the doing of the act, or the performance of the duty, has been committed.

Fuller v. Jewett, 90 N. Y. 52.

Lord, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by the negligence of the defendant in suffering its railroad track to be obstructed by a slide of snow, earth, and gravel, at a point named on its road, whereby the train of which plaintiff was conductor, and upon which he was riding, was thrown from the track, and he was injured. The defense set up is contributory negligence, and, as relevant to the matter under review, the defendant alleged that its track had been obstructed for one or two days prior to the accident; that the plaintiff and other men with him went out on a work train for the express purpose of removing slides of snow and earth which had accumulated on the track, so that trains might pass over it; that the plaintiff had full knowledge of the obstructed condition of the track; that, at the time of his injury, the plaintiff was in charge of the train, which was being run by the engineers at a dangerous rate of speed, and without keeping a good lookout ahead of said train, in consequence of which the train struck a slide of snow and earth, and was thrown from the track.

Under this defense, the defendant sought to establish and claimed—First, that the plaintiff assumed as part of his contract of employment the risk of the train striking such an obstruction on the railroad track as that out of which his injury arose; and, second, that the plaintiff's injury was the result of his own negligence in allowing the engineer to run the train at an excessive or dangerous rate of speed, without keeping any lookout for obstructions on the track.

The evidence shows that prior to the day of the accident a good deal of snow had fallen, which the wind, in some places, blew into drifts. Orders had been given that regular trains would not be run. The plaintiff was employed as a conductor of a freight train. On the day of his injury he received an order from the train master as follows: "To Engineers 83 and 86—Engines 83 and 86: Conductor Fisher will run extra from Kamela to La Grande." Soon after this order was received the two engines named were coupled to a caboose, and started from Kamela to La Grande. Hooker was the engineer of 83, the forward engine, and upon it the plaintiff rode. In the caboose was the road master, with several shovellers. When near a place called Stumptown, some fourteen miles from Kamela, the train ran into a slide of snow and gravel, and engine 83 was thrown from the track into the Grande

10 L. R. A.

Ronde river. Both the plaintiff and Hooker, the engineer, went down with it into the river, and the plaintiff was so injured that subsequently his leg had to be amputated. At the point where the accident occurred the roadbed is cut into the side of a hill, and the road forms a curvature, so that the place where the slide obstructed the track could be seen some two or three hundred yards, but not so definitely as to determine whether it was a slide or a drift. The snowplow had been through on the track the day before, and the plaintiff and engineer had a right to suppose that the track was free from obstructions. There were several light drifts of snow blown on the track at places, but none of them were very deep, and were of light soft snow. The engine was not equipped with a regular snowplow, but it had a sheet-iron protection on the pilot to clear the drifts of snow from the track. The day was fair and bright. When the engine would run into these snowdrifts, the engineer would shut the cab windows, as it would cause the snow to fly in all directions, and cover the windows so as to obstruct the view for a moment; but as soon as the drift was passed the side window would be opened, from which a lookout could be kept. The window was open when the engine passed the sectionmen at the crossing. It was closed in passing a snowdrift just before the engine struck the slide, but owing to the curvature of the road, if the window had been open at the time, it is doubtful if the result would have been different, as it was not possible for them to distinguish that it was a slide until the engine got close to it. Carlestone testified that he and Chamberlain saw this slide, and reported it to the section foreman on the evening before; that when he saw it he could see that it was a slide, and not a drift; that the rest of the track was good, and that he did not find anything on the track except the slide. Chamberlain testified that he, too, saw it the evening before; that he could see where two or three slides had come from two or three hundred feet up the mountain, and could see that they had made a slide across the track, and not a drift of snow; and that he reported it that evening at Hilgard to the section foreman. There is a difference between a slide and a drift, and the testimony of these two witnesses, as well as others, seem to take it for granted that a slide is dangerous.

Slides come from the sides of mountains, and are usually mingled snow and gravel and rock, and necessarily a dangerous obstruction on a track. These two witnesses had been sent out by the section foreman, Lee, as track walkers, to examine the track; "to go over it, and see what condition it was in," and to report the condition of the track to him. This they did; yet this section foreman, with this knowledge of the condition of the track, utterly neglected to investigate the matter himself or to give warning of the condition of the track at the place of this slide. The foreman was at a telegraph station, but not even a message was sent to the road master or train dispatcher. Neither the plaintiff nor the engineer knew of the location of the slide. The blockade was east of that point, and, when they received orders to "run extra" to La Grande, they had reason, on this account, to rely on a safe track, as well as to suppose that the road was open and in running order, from the fact that the snowplow had gone over the track to La Grande the day previous. Madden, the road master, whose duty included superintending section men and keeping obstructions from the track, testifies that he had no reason to believe that any slide would be encountered at that point. Nor is this all. When the train passed the foreman on the road, at a crossing only a short distance from the place where it struck the slide and fell over into the river, he neither gave those in charge of it any warning, nor put up any signals to warn them of the danger. The testimony indicates that, at the time the engine struck the slide, it was being run at the rate of fourteen or fifteen miles an hour. Hooker, the engineer, testified that the engine was running at the rate of fifteen miles an hour when it struck the slide. That he had been an engineer seventeen years. Then he was asked: "Is that the fastest rate of speed?" Answer. No, sir; it is not. Q. How fast can an engine be safely operated on a track in the condition that was in between Kamela and the place where the accident occurred? (Defendant objected, and objection overruled.) A. Twenty miles an hour. Q. What was the condition of the track up to that point, as you found it in making that run? A. Very good, so far as the track was concerned. I could not say anything about it; there was some snow on the track. Q. Did you meet with any obstructions or slides? A. No, sir; not to amount to anything. There were no slides of any kind; there were some little drifts of snow across the track." A like objection was raised to the testimony of the plaintiff when recalled, as follows: "Q. From your experience as a railroad man and your knowledge of the railroad track as it existed between Kamela and the place of accident, state whether or not the rate of fifteen miles an hour is a dangerous rate of speed. (Objection to answer overruled.) A. No; I would not consider it so. Q. How fast can trains, such as this was, and under the circumstances under which this train was running there at that place, run with safety in your opinion? (Same objection.) A. A train might run with perfect safety along that point of track anywhere from twenty to twenty-five miles an hour."

The objection to this testimony is that the opinions of Hooker and Fisher were not necessary to aid the jury in determining whether the rate of speed was safe; that the question presented by the case was not one requiring any expert knowledge. The general rule undoubtedly is that witnesses must ordinarily state facts and not give their opinions. Our Code provides that evidence may be given on the trial of the opinion of a witness on a question of science, art, or trade, when he is skilled therein. Hill's Code, § 706. When the matter under consideration is of that character that any one of ordinary intelligence, without any peculiar habits or course of study, is able to form a correct opinion, it is manifest that the opinion of an expert is inadmissible. In such case, his opinion could not operate to aid the jury, but would only serve to anticipate and usurp their duty; nor will it render such opinions admissible as evidence because the witness may be able to reason more logically, or to form a better opinion, than the jury. Mr. Rogers says: "The testimony of experts is inadmissible upon a subject which, with the same knowledge of facts, the opinion of any one else would have as much weight. It is only admissible when the facts to be determined are obscure, and can only be made clear by and through the opinions of persons skilled in relation to the subject-matter of inquiry." Rogers, Expert Testimony, p. 14.

When the nature of a question is such that a man of ordinary intelligence and experience is incapable of drawing correct conclusions from the facts in evidence without the assistance of some one who has special skill or knowledge on the subject, the opinion of an expert is desirable and competent evidence. Chief Justice Shaw said: "It is not because a man has a reputation of superior sagacity and judgment and power of reasoning that his testimony is admissible; if so, such men ought to be called in all cases, and advise the jury, and it would change the mode of trial; but it is because a man's professional pursuits require peculiar skill and knowledge in some department of science not common to men in general, which enables him to draw an inference, when men of common experience, after all the facts proved, would be left in the dark." New England Glass Co. v. Lovell, 7 Cush. 319. It was said by the court in Taylor v. Monroe, 43 Conn. 44, that "the test of the admissibility of expert testimony is not whether the subject-matter is common or uncommon, or whether many or few have knowledge of it, but whether the witnesses offered have any peculiar knowledge or experience not common to the world, which render their opinions, founded thereon, an aid to the jurors." The rule is laid down and illustrated by cases by Mr. Lawson, that "mechanics, artisans, and workmen are experts, as to matters of technical skill in their trades, and their opinions in such cases are admissible." And as corollaries or subrules, he further states "that nautical men are experts on the question of care in marine cases," and "railroad men are experts as to railroad management." Lawson, Expert & Opinion Evidence, p. 70. The competency of the evidence objected to is sought to be upheld upon the ground that no particular rate of speed can be assumed to be dangerous without proof; that the jurors were not experienced railroad men, and could do no more than guess whether it was safe or not to run the train, as was done under the circumstances; and that the required proof could only be offered by the testimony of those whose experience and observation have given them a particular knowledge upon the subject. There may be no doubt that the conductor and engineer based their statements or testimony upon their observation and experience as railroad men. Under the circumstances, it was their opinion, in the light of their experience and knowledge as railroad men in the operation of trains, that the rate of speed at which the train was running was not excessive or dangerous; that its rate of speed, under existing conditions, might have been increased with safety. But it is where matters of technical skill or scientific knowledge are involved that the opinions of mechanics and artisans are admissible. While it is true that what is or is not dangerous is sometimes a question that can only be properly answered by experts, as some of the cases indicate, (Cross v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 69 Mich. 363, 14 West. Rep. 181; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Gregory, 58 Ill. 272; Huizaga v. Cutler & S. Lumber Co. 51 Mich. 272; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Shannon, 49 Ill. 388; Bridger v. Asheville & S. R. Co. 25 S. C. 24,) yet none of them are cases like the present. The opinion asked here goes to the merits. It seems to us upon the facts as disclosed by the record the jury were competent to form an opinion, or draw the proper conclusion from the facts, without the opinion of the witnesses upon the subject. It is not material that the evidence would not justify the construction put upon it by the defendant, or that the witnesses understood it differently, as its competency depends upon a state of facts involving technical skill or knowledge, which the facts in question did not present for consideration. The defendant contended that the running of the train at the rate of 15 miles an hour without keeping any lookout, under the conditions presented by the evidence, was dangerous, and negligence in the plaintiff contributing to his injury, while the witnesses expressed the opinions that the rate of speed, under the circumstances, was not excessive or dangerous, and that it might have been increased without liability to accident; yet the opinion being such as touched the merits, and upon a subject-matter that involved no technical skill or knowledge, and which the jury were competent to decide, we think the opinions of these witnesses as evidence were inadmissible, and that it would have been more consonant with the rules of evidence to reject it. But the question arises whether, upon the facts, the jury could have formed any other opinion, or reached any different conclusion, from that expressed by these witnesses; for, if they could not, the error could affect no substantial right of the defendant, and was not reversible error. The contention of the defendant was that the evidence tended to establish the defense pleaded; that the plaintiff was employed upon a work train, and went out with it upon a track known to be obstructed for the purpose of removing such obstructions; that with such knowledge, and upon a road thus obstructed, he permitted the train to be run at an excessive rate of speed, without keeping any lookout, and when the snow was plastered over the windows so that neither he nor the engineer could see ahead; that under these circumstances, and in violation of the rules of the defendant as to the rate of speed to be used in such case, and in violation of their duty, they recklessly ran the train into the slide, and caused the accident. If this were a proper construction of the facts, or if upon any such state of facts the opinion of these witnesses had been based, we should feel no hesitation in declaring such evidence not only inadmissible, but such error as would entitle the appellant to a new trial. The telegraphic order received by the plaintiff was not to "work," but to "run extra;" that is to say, that the orders which he and the engineers received show that they were led to believe that they had a clear track from Kamela to La Grande as an "extra," and not that they were to "work" between those points. If those in charge of the train had been instructed to clear the track of obstructions, or do other work, on the way to La Grande their orders would have been in an entirely different form, as the rules disclose which are made a part of the so-called bill of exceptions. A rotary snowplow had gone through over the track the day before to La Grande, and the road master and other officers supposed and thought the road was open to La Grande from Kamela, where Fisher and his train were, and where the road master was with a gang of shovelers in a caboose. It was between La Grande and Huntington that the road was blockaded, and the rotary plow, in clearing it, broke, so that the road master, Madden, was telegraphed for from La Grande to bring his shovelers to that place. Fisher, as conductor, and the engineers then received from the train dispatcher their running orders to La Grande, in the course of which journey the accident occurred as already detailed. But it is plain from the telegraphic correspondence between the road master and the train dispatcher that there was no blockade or obstruction thought of between Kamela and La Grande, and, in view of the other facts already stated, the plaintiff had no reason to suppose that he was on a working train for the purpose of aiding in removing obstructions from the track, or that the track was obstructed, or that he was performing other than his customary duty as freight conductor in the run from Kamela towards La Grande. Nor was the train run without any lookout, or the cab windows so covered with snow or kept closed so that they could not see out. It was only when passing through the drifts of snow that the windows were closed, and then only for an instant, as has been already sufficiently explained. The track was not out of order, or in any condition of obstruction, except at the slide, which had been reported by the track walkers to the section foreman. The track walkers did not report the drifts of snow between the slide and Hilgard, for they did not consider them of sufficient importance, but they did report the slide as coming from the mountain, showing that they did consider it as something that merited more than ordinary consideration, and the foreman must have so understood it. Nor in the run, until the engine struck the slide, did they meet with any obstruction upon the track; showing again that the track walkers had reported truly the only obstruction on the track which required to be attended to before a train should be started without notifying its officers of its condition. Under these conditions and circumstances, there is no rule of the defendant company that the running of a train at the rate of fifteen miles an hour is excessive or reckless. On the contrary, it is permissible, and even a greater rate of speed. Madden, the road master, the only one of the defendant's witnesses upon the train, or who knew anything about it, expressly says that he did not consider it dangerous to run at the rate of speed at which the train was going, under the circumstances; that he had no reason to expect that the train would run into a slide, or that there was such an obstruction upon the track; that he did not usually interfere in any way, as he calculated that the men running the train had common sense, but that he would have interfered if he thought there was any need of it. So that, in view of the whole record, the opinion expressed, that the rate of speed at which the train was running when it struck the slide was not excessive or dangerous, is correct, and beyond dispute, upon the facts, and only such a conclusion as the jury must have drawn from the facts. So far as the verdict is concerned, then, it could not have been different if the expert evidence had not been admitted.

There is but one other point we deem it necessary to consider. It is in relation to an instruction given, which, it is claimed, assumes, without qualification, that trackmen and the plaintiff were not fellow servants. That trainmen and sectionmen may be, and frequently are, fellow servants is not disputed, and no authorities need to be cited. In Wellman v. Oregon S. L. & U. N. R. Co., 21 Or. 530, which involved substantially the same pleadings and issues, Wellman being on the same train as fireman, and who was killed by the same accident, it was said by this court: "To avoid misconception, a single observation in relation to instruction number seven seems to be necessary. It is as to the effect to be given to the knowledge acquired by the trackmen or section master on the 15th of January,—the day before the accident. There is evidence tending to show that these persons saw the slide that caused the injury on that day, and communicated the fact to the section foreman the same evening. If such was the fact, he was bound to communicate the information to those in charge of the train which was to pass over the road, and the failure to do so would subject the defendant to liability, independent of anything that has already been said." This was based on the theory that sectionmen, when engaged in the performance of some duty which the master owes to the servant, or is bound to perform, are vice-principals. It is sought to avoid the effect of such conclusion in the present case by claiming that the evidence shows that the plaintiff was employed on a work train at the time of his injury, that went out for the express purpose of removing obstructions upon the track between Kamela and La Grande; that he took charge of such train with full knowledge that the road was obstructed or blockaded, for the purpose of finding, and to aid in removing, such obstructions; and hence the defendant claims that it was not its duty to notify or inform the plaintiff that the track was obstructed, nor to remove any obstruction upon the track before the plaintiff's train should reach them, as this was the identical work that he was going out to do. Upon this assumption of the facts, the defendant claims that liability to injury from obstructions upon the track was incident to the plaintiff's contract of employment, and a risk he voluntarily assumed. In support of this contention, it cites and relies upon the case of Carlson v. Oregon S. L. & U. N. R. Co., 21 Or. 454. This case has no application to the facts involved in the present case. There it was held that a servant engaged in repairing a railroad track, already known to him to be in a dilapidated condition, assumes as part of his contract of employment the risks incident thereto, among which is the dilapidated condition of the track; but the court expressly declared that the servant does not assume the increased risk arising from neglect of the railway company—unknown to him, or not ascertainable by ordinary diligence—to use proper care to learn the condition of the track, and to prevent accident to its servants. Bean, J., says: "The fact that the track was known to be in a dilapidated condition, and out of repair, did not relieve the master from the discharge of his duty in the premises. The deceased could still exact from it the exercise of such care and vigilance, and require it to take such precautionary measures to prevent accidents, as the exigencies of the case, having due regard to the safety of its servants, would suggest to prudent and cautious men, experienced in that particular branch of business." Within the principle declared in this case, it would hardly seem doubtful, if the facts be assumed to exist as claimed by the defendant,—that the plaintiff was going out in charge of a train to find and remove obstructions upon the track between Kamela and La Grande,—that the master, in the exercise of ordinary care, would not have been bound to notify the plaintiff of the existence and location of this slide obstructing its track. The section foreman, whose business it was to inspect the track and keep proper watch and oversight over it, had, in the performance of that duty of the master delegated to him, sent out two track walkers the night before the accident to ascertain the condition of the track, and they had reported to him that there was a slide obstructing the track. The section foreman knew, therefore, of the existence and location of the slide the evening before the train started, and had the means by telegraph to communicate that important fact to the train dispatcher or he could himself have notified the plaintiff or warned him in various ways, and thus avoided any liability to accident on account of such slide. As the foreman stands for the master in such case, it would seem to be a plain dictate of duty for the master, with due regard for the safety of its servants, and in the exercise of that care and vigilance which the exigency of the situation required, to have notified the plaintiff of the existence and location of the slide, and thereby avoided liability to accident. If the exercise of ordinary care required the master to take some such precautionary measures to prevent such an accident to its servant, the plaintiff did not assume the risk of such slide. As Bean, J., said in Carlson v. Oregon S. L. & U. N. R. Co., supra, in speaking of the risks of the servant: "But if it were increased by the neglect of the master to use proper care before the storm to keep the bridge in repair, or to ascertain the condition of the track or bridge after the storm, or to take such due and proper precautionary measures to prevent accidents to its employes as the exigency of the situation might require, he did not assume such risks." But we are not compelled to rely upon this aspect of the case; it is only suggested to show its character, and the difficulty of giving it any solution consistent with the exercise of care in the premises. The case here, upon its facts, is wholly different. As they have already been detailed, it is unnecessary to repeat them, but it will be enough to summarize some of them, to show the inapplicability of the theory of the defense to them. The plaintiff was not on a work train sent out to clear obstructions from the track between Kamela and La Grande; nor did he take charge of the train with any notice or knowledge that his duties involved such work, or other than his customary duty in running the train between Kamela and La Grande. For various reasons, he had a right to suppose that the track was clear or free from obstructions, except light snow blown into drifts, and that the blockaded track was between Huntington and La Grande. The shovelers were being carried to La Grande. The road master in charge of them says he had no reason to expect that they would run into a slide, or that they were running at a dangerous rate of speed. Upon this state of facts, the risks incident to a track, known to be obstructed with slides of snow and earth, as constituting a part of the contract of one accepting service upon it, can have no application. In accepting this employment, and running the train between Kamela and La Grande, the plaintiff did not assume, as a part of his contract, the risks arising from a track obstructed with slides of snow and earth. Nor did the plaintiff know that the track was obstructed by a slide, but the defendant, through its foreman, knew of its existence and location. But, to avoid the effect of this, it is said that the track walkers did not report it as "dangerous;" hence it is argued that the foreman had no knowledge that any dangerous obstructions to the passage of trains were to be found upon the track anywhere along this section. But they did report it as a slide, coming from the mountain, and the difference between a slide and a drift has been sufficiently adverted to as showing the danger of the former when it obstructs the track. They did not report the snowdrifts across the track, but they did the slide that had come down the mountain and obstructed the track, and as indicating that they understood the difference; and the duty of the foreman, when the slide was reported, to give notice of its existence and location, at least, the result verified. The train experienced no difficulty in coming through the snowdrifts, but went to destruction when it encountered the slide. It was clearly the duty of the foreman to have communicated the information he received of the existence of this slide obstructing the track to those in charge of the train, and the failure to do so was negligence for which the defendant is liable. We do not deem it necessary to pursue the record further. We have examined it fully and carefully, and we do not think, upon the entire record, that any substantial right of the defendant has been ignored or prejudiced; and, though there may have been a mere technical error in the admission of the expert evidence, yet it is not possible to see, upon this record, how the verdict could have been different if such evidence had not been admitted. The bill of exceptions, so called, in this case contains the entire evidence, oral and documentary, all the instructions pro and con. and in fact is a transcript of the whole proceedings as extended from the shorthand report of the trial. Necessarily, such a bill of exception is filed with much superfluous and irrelevant matter, imposing needless expense on the parties, and much increased labor upon us. As the judgment was large, we have felt bound to examine the evidence carefully, so as to ascertain the facts involved upon which error is predicated, and then apply the law. This we have done, with the above result, in the hope that hereafter the bill of exceptions will contain no matter not essential to express the exceptions.

The judgment is affirmed.

ARKANSAS SUPREME COURT.

GILKERSON-SLOSS COMMISSION CO.,

Appt.,
v.

Lena SALINGER.

(... Ark.....)

A married woman cannot become her husband's partner in a mercantile business by virtue of a constitutional right to hold separate property and of statutory provisions authorizing her to transfer her separate personal property and carry on any trade or business.

(June 4, 1892.)

NOTE.—Partnership between husband and wife in business.

The power of a married woman to become a partner.
16 L. R. A.

ner of her husband in business was plainly denied her at common law and can exist only under enabling statutes. No authorities are needed for this

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Monroe County in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover from defendant, a widow, a debt which had been contracted by herself and her husband while in partnership in a mercantile business. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Ewan & Thomas and W. S. McCain, for appellant:

The Legislature of Arkansas, in 1878, enacted that any married woman might "carry on any trade or business," and that she might "sue or be sued on account of said business." Digest, 4625.

In Tryber v. Stover, 80 Ark. 727, it was contended that this statute allowed her to sue and be sued only in equity, but the court held this contention to be too narrow.

Abbott v. Jackson, 43 Ark. 212, ruled that the right to contract the relation of partner was implied in the power to "carry on business."

In New York, under a statute not unlike our own, the court of appeals has recently settled this question in favor of the right of husband and wife to form a partnership.

See Suau v. Caffé, 9 L. R. A. 598, 123 N. Y. 808. See also Re Kinkead, 8 Biss. 405.

In Krouskop v. Shontz, 51 Wis. 204, the Supreme Court of Wisconsin held that the husband and wife were jointly liable for supplies furnished to the farm which they owned and operated jointly.

A partnership is little else than a contract of mutual agency.

1 Lindley, Partn. *124, 210.

In May v. May, 9 Neb. 16, 81 Am. Rep. 899, under a statute in the identical words of our own, it was held that a wife might sue her husband on a note made by him and assigned to her by the payee.

See also Pillow v. Sentelle, 49 Ark. 480.

After this court had held that the wife under our statutes might contract for a partnership it was invading the domain of legislation for the court below to make an exception as to her husband. In Hickey v. Thompson, 52 Ark. 287, this court was asked to say that "carrying on business" did not include farming. The court, however, declined to make an exception not made by the statute.

Messrs. W. F. Hill and W. J. Mayo, for appellees:

A partnership is a voluntary contract between two or more competent persons to place their money, effects, labor and skill, or some or all of them, in lawful commerce or business, with the understanding that there shall be a communion of the profits between them.

Anderson, Law Dict. article, Partnership.

There are two currents of authorities in this country in reference to the capacity of married women to make contracts—the one liberal and the other conservative.

Stillwell v. Adams, 29 Ark. 846.

Some few of the courts of the states have held that the ordinary enabling statutes authorize contracts between husband and wife.

9 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, 794.

But it will be found that the great weight of authorities is the other way.

proposition, but it is involved, among other cases, in Chatterton v. Young, 2 Tenn. Ch. 768; Brown v. Jewett, 18 N. H. 280; Mayer v. Soyster, 80 Md. 402.

So in the absence of statutory authority to become a partner of her husband, a married woman cannot be charged as such by holding herself out as a member of a partnership. Montgomery v. Sprankle, 81 Ind. 113.

In Florida it was held as late as 1887 that a married woman had no contractual capacity and therefore could not enter into a partnership with any one. De Graum v. Jones, 23 Fla. 53.

Under the Texas statute allowing a married woman to contract for the benefit of her separate property and for family necessities, she cannot become a partner in business with her husband, or any one else. Miller v. Marx, 65 Tex. 181; Green v. Ferguson, 63 Tex. 525; Brown v. Chancellor, 61 Tex. 437; Cox v. Miller, 54 Tex. 16; Wallace v. Finberg, 46 Tex. 35.

So in Ohio, at least prior to the Statute of 1884, a wife had, although able to contract for the benefit of her separate estate, had no power to become her husband's partner. Payne v. Thompson, 8 West. Rep. 153, 44 Ohio St. 192.

In South Carolina a married woman cannot enter into a partnership contract with her husband or become estopped from denying a partnership liability, although the statutes give her a right to contract and hold separate property as if unmarried. Gwynn v. Gwynn, 27 S. C. 525. But see Alabama cases, infra.

The right to a separate legal estate does not give a married woman power to become a partner. Carrey v. Burrus, 20 W. Va. 571.

Authority to carry on trade as a feme sole does not include the power of a married woman to become a partner. Bradstreet v. Baer, 41 Md. 19.

And the power to own separate property and 16 L. R. A. contract in relation thereto does not give her such power. Howard v. Stephens, 52 Miss. 230.

A statute which merely authorizes a married woman to hold a separate estate and contract in reference to it as if she were unmarried does not authorize her to enter into a partnership with her husband. Artman v. Ferguson, 2 L. R. A. 843, 73 Mich. 146; Speier v. Opfer, 3 L. R. A. 845, 73 Mich. 85; Bassett v. Shepardson, 52 Mich. 3.

The power to enter into any contract with reference to her separate estate in the same manner as if she were sole and to carry on any trade or business does not give a married woman the right to become a partner of her husband. Lord v. Parker, 3 Allen, 127; Plumer v. Lord, 7 Allen, 481; Bowker v. Bradford, 1 New Eng. Rep. 459, 140 Mass. 521; Haas v. Shaw, 91 Ind. 364, 46 Am. Rep. 607.

The strongest of all the cases against a wife's power to become a partner of her husband is the recent case of Seattle Board of Trade v. Hayden (Wash.) May 11, 1892 (post, —), in which the court denies that power, although the statutes had expressly abolished all laws which impose or recognize civil disabilities upon a wife and give her the right to a separate estate and to contract and incur liabilities to the same extent and in the same manner as if she were unmarried.

On the other hand, there are other authorities which interpret the Married Women's Statutes more liberally.

In Re Kinkead, 8 Biss. 405, it was held that a married woman, under a statute giving her a right to separate property and to contract with reference to it, could enter into a partnership with her husband, but this decision was made in respect to the claim of an individual creditor of the husband to share in the partnership assets with creditors of a firm consisting of husband and wife.

In Alabama under statutes which give a married

Harris, Contracts of Married Women, § 582.

And this court, in the cases of Countz v. Markling, 30 Ark. 17, and Pillow v. Wade, 81 Ark. 678, has decided that contracts between husband and wife are void.

These decisions are based on the unity of husband and wife, as it existed at common law; and if this doctrine is still recognized by the court, how could it consistently sustain a contract of partnership between them?

Robinson v. Eagle, 29 Ark. 207; Abbott v. Jackson, 43 Ark. 212; Haas v. Shaw, 91 Ind. 384, 46 Am. Rep. 607; Artman v. Ferguson, 2 L. R. A. 848, 73 Mich. 146, 16 Am. St. Rep. 572; Lord v. Parker, 8 Allen, 127; Plumer v. Lord, 5 Allen, 460; Booker v. Bradford, 1 New Eng. Rep. 459, 140 Mass. 521; Payne v. Thompson, 3 West. Rep. 153, 44 Ohio St. 192; Cox v. Miller, 54 Tex. 16; Mayer v. Soyler, 30 Md. 402; DeGraum v. Jones, 23 Fla. 83; Carey v. Burrus, 20 W. Va. 571; Speier v. Opfer, 2 L. R. A. 845, 73 Mich. 85; Harris, Contracts of Married Women, § 618.

Hughes, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The question is presented by a demurrer, which the court below sustained to the following complaint: "Monroe Circuit Court. Gilkerson-Sloss Commission Company, Plaintiff, v. Lena Salinger, Defendant. Amended Complaint at Law. The plaintiff, Gilkerson-Sloss Commission Company, a corporation incorporated under the laws of Missouri, doing business at St. Louis, states that Louis Salinger died on the 26th day of November, 1890; that at the time of his death and for five years previous thereto the defendant, Lena Salinger, was the wife of said Louis Salinger; that for some time previous to January 20, 1888, the defendant and one William Hooker were partners in trade, under the firm name of William Hooker & Co., doing a general mercantile business at Brinkley, Ark., and on said 20th day of January, 1888, said William Hooker sold and transferred all his right and interest in the property and assets of said firm of William Hooker & Co. to said Louis Salinger, and thereby said Louis Salinger and the defendant, Lena Salinger, became jointly interested in the ownership of said partnership property, and said Louis and Lena then and there agreed to adopt the firm name and style of L. Salinger & Co., and to carry on and continue said mercantile business as partners with each other, and they did adopt said name and style of L. Salinger & Co., and did, pursuant to such partnership agreement, carry on such business from the said 20th day of January, 1888, until the day of said Louis Salinger's death, to wit, November 26, 1890, and while such partnership business of L. Salinger & Co. was being carried on, to wit, during the year 1890, the plaintiff sold and delivered to L. Salinger & Co. goods, wares, and merchandise to the amount of $1,260.36, for part of which said L. Salinger & Co. executed to plaintiff two promissory notes. An itemized statement of plaintiff's account against said L. Salinger & Co., including the amount of said notes, together with the notes, woman the right to her earnings and to a separate estate, and permitting her to contract with her husband and engage in trade on her separate account, she may become estopped from denying the existence of a partnership with her husband as to those who have dealt with and trusted her as such. Schlapback v. Long, 90 Ala. 525.

In Le Grand v. Eufaula Nat. Bank, 61 Ala. 123, it was held that a married woman engaging in business with the addition of "& Co." to her name was estopped to deny that she was a partner as against those who dealt with her on the faith of the partnership.

In Georgia it was held in 1890 that a married woman was liable on a joint lease with her husband of a house in which to carry on a hotel business. Schofield v. Jones, 85 Ga. 816.

This did not expressly decide that a partnership between husband and wife would be valid, but that the wife might be a co-lessee of her husband, and the case is not necessarily in conflict with those which deny the right of husband and wife to be partners in business.

The same may be said of the Wisconsin decision that a statute allowing contracts to be made and remedies in favor of and against a married woman "as if she were unmarried" makes her liable on a purchase of property to be used by them in carrying on her farm. Krouskop v. Shontz, 51 Wis. 204.

In New York it has been decided by the court of appeals (second division), that a married woman may become liable on a partnership debt as a partner of her husband under the statute giving her authority to carry on any trade or business "on her sole and separate account." Suau v. Caffé, 9 L. R. A. 563, 122 N. Y. 308.

The same decision had been made by the supreme court, special term, in Graff v. Kinney, 15 Abb. N. C. 397. Although the same question had been decided the other way by a special term decision in 16 L. R. A.

Fairlee v. Bloomingdale, 14 Abb. N. C. 341, and by the general term of the supreme court in Kaufman v. Schoeffel, 37 Hun, 140, by the city court of Brooklyn in Noel v. Kinney, 15 Abb. N. C. 408 (disposed of in the court of appeals on other grounds, by the New York Common Pleas in Jaquin v. Jaquin, 15 Abb. N. C. 408, note (this being an action for an accounting), by the New York superior court in Chamboret v. Carney, 3 Jones & S. 473, and by a surrogate in Boyle's Estate, Tucker, 4. Again, in Lowenstein v. Salinger, 43 N. Y. S. R. 414 (decided Dec. 31, 1891, and about one year after the decision in Suau v. Caffé), the general term once more held that a wife could not become her husband's partner under the New York statutes, and therefore denied such right under the statutes of Arkansas on a showing that the latter were almost identical with the New York statutes.

But in Mississippi the Arkansas statute, which gives a married woman the power to own a separate estate and to carry on trade or business, has been construed in harmony with the decision in Suau v. Caffé, supra, by the New York court of appeals. Toof v. Brewer (Misc.) Feb. 20, 1893. This, it will be seen, is in conflict with the decision of the Arkansas court in the main case.

If a married woman has actually been engaged in business as a partner of her husband she may take her share of the profits as against his creditors. Huffman v. Copeland, 88 Ind. 224.

So a husband may become estopped from denying that he is a partner of his wife. Rabitt v. Orr, 83 Ala. 185.

The weight of authority at present is undoubtedly against the power of a wife to enter into business partnership with her husband unless expressly authorized to do so, while the general tendency both of statutes and decisions is evidently toward the complete removal from married women of legal disabilities of every kind.

B. A. R.

is herewith filed, showing all credits to which they are entitled, and leaving a balance of $571.59 due and unpaid to plaintiffs."

No part of said indebtedness has been paid except as credited on said statement. Can a married woman become the partner of her husband in a mercantile business? In many of the states it is held that she may, under statutes enlarging the powers of married women, and removing in part their disabilities at common law. It is so held in Suau v. Caffé, 122 N. Y. 808, 9 L. R. A. 598. But the weight of authority is that she cannot. At common law, the legal existence of the wife was merged in that of the husband, and they could not contract with each other. Section 7, art. 9, Const. 1874, provides that "the real and personal property of any feme covert in this state, acquired either before or after marriage, whether by gift, grant, inheritance, devise, or otherwise, shall, so long as she may choose, be and remain her separate estate and property, and be devised, bequeathed, or conveyed by her the same as if she were a feme sole, and the same shall not be subject to the debts of her husband." It has been held that under this section a married woman may convey her separate estate, and acknowledge the execution of a deed for registration as a feme sole. Roberts v. Wilcoxson, 36 Ark. 355. She cannot, however, make an executory contract to convey land which will bind her or her heirs. Felkner v. Tighe, 89 Ark. 357; Chrisman v. Partee, 88 Ark. 81. By section 4625 of Mansfield's Digest it is provided that "a married woman may bargain, sell, assign, and transfer her separate personal property, and carry on any trade or business, and perform any labor or service on her sole and separate account; and the earnings of any married woman from her trade, business, labor or services shall be her sole and separate property, and may be used and invested by her in her own name; and she may alone sue or be sued in the courts of this state, on account of the said property, business or services." Under similar statutes it has been held by some courts that a married woman could not become the partner of any one in business. In Abbott v. Jackson, 43 Ark. 212, Judge Eakin said: "It is well settled, too, that a married woman, under such statutes as that of April 28, 1873, can form a partnership as a sole trader with a third person, other than her husband," etc. But it has not been heretofore determined expressly in this state that a married woman can or that she cannot enter into partnership with her husband. In Counts v. Markling, 90 Ark. 17, it was held that a judgment by confession rendered against the husband in favor of the wife is void, and will be quashed on certiorari. This was on the ground of the legal unity of husband and wife, and the inability of the wife to sue the husband at common law. In Pilow v. Wade, 81 Ark. 678, it is held that husband and wife are incapable of contracting with each other. Under a similar statute to ours it is held in Haas v. Shaw, 91 Ind. 384, 46 Am. Rep. 607, that a wife cannot form a partnership with her husband. See also Lord v. Parker, 3 Allen, 127; Plumer v. Lord, 5 Allen, 460; Speier v. Opfer, 73 Mich. 35, 2 L. R. A. 845; Harris, Contracts of Married Women, § 618; 16 L. R. A.

Mayer v. Loyster, 80 Md. 402; Carey v. Burrus, 20 W. Va. 571; De Graum v. Jones, 23 Fla. 88.

In view of the legal unity and identity of husband and wife at common law, and the wife's incapacity to sue the husband at law, and the rulings of our court upon the incapacity of the wife to contract with her husband, we are of the opinion that the wife, under our statute, cannot form a partnership with her husband. As the credit in this case was given to the firm of which she could not be a member, and as she is sued as surviving partner of that firm, there can be no recovery against her in this action.

The judgment is affirmed.

Hemingway, J., dissenting:

I am constrained to record my dissent from the decision in this case, and from much that is said in the opinion by way of argument. I am of opinion that, under the Constitution and laws of Arkansas, a married woman is, as to her separate personal property, clothed with all the powers of a single woman; that she may make contracts in reference to it with her husband or with others, binding upon her in law, just as though she were single; that she may be sued upon said contracts in a court of law, where the action is otherwise properly cognizable in law; and that, since it is settled that she may engage in business as a partner with others than her husband, it follows from exactly the same reasons that she may embark her property or services in a partnership with him. My reasons in brief are that whatever law can be appealed to as authorizing her to form a partnership with any person is without limitation or restrictions as to the person with whom she may form it; and that, as it confers a power without restriction in that respect, it can be held to exclude the husband only by a system of judicial construction which seems to me to be legislation,—and that towards restraining the power vested under an Act which is highly remedial, and expressly calls for a liberal construction. Manaf. Dig. § 4639. At the common law, a married woman had no power to make a valid contract with her husband, or with anybody else. Her disability was general, and whatever power she now has must be found in the statutes. They authorize her to bargain, sell, assign, or transfer her separate personal property, and carry on any trade or business and perform any labor or services on her sole and separate account. This has been held as authorizing her to make contracts and enter into partnerships; and how it can be said that the right is given to be exercised as to one person, and is not as to any other, I do not comprehend. By its terms it extends as much to dealings with one person as with another, and if it exists at all, it exists generally as to all persons, unless the courts limit a power which came from the Legislature unlimited. If I were attempting to restrict the operation of the Act and limit the exercise of the power to any person or class of persons according to principles of public policy, I should have to consider whether it would not be better to include the husband, and exclude others, than to permit a partnership with all others and forbid it as to him. But as I view the Act, it contains no restrictions, and I have no right to ingraft any to meet my ideas of policy. In the case of Suau v. Caffé, 123 N. Y. 808, 9 L. R. A. 598, a very clear and convincing discussion of the question may be found; and in the case of Toof v. Brewer (Miss.) 3 So. Rep. 571, the question is exhaustively and ably considered. That case depended upon the laws of Arkansas, and the Supreme Court of Mississippi, upon a review of our decisions and statutes and the general current of authorities, held that a woman could become a business partner of her husband in Arkansas. There are decisions that hold otherwise, but they rest upon the legal unity of husband and wife,—a condition that has had no existence, except in law reports, since legislation gave to married women the right to acquire, own, and dispose of their property, and to take and enjoy the income from it, free from any interference or control by their husbands. As such decisions are based upon a condition that has been deliberately abrogated by statute, I think the courts should be controlled by the new law, and not by the old condition. I believe the two decisions cited state the law, and sustain the positions taken with unassailable reasoning, and I beg leave to refer to them for a fuller treatment of the subject. I am authorized to state that Battle, J., concurs in this opinion.

WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT.

SEATTLE BOARD OF TRADE et al., Respts.,
v.

Mary HAYDEN, Appt.

(.....Wash.....)

A partnership between husband and wife is not authorized by statute providing that a wife may make contracts and incur liabilities as if unmarried, and giving her full power to manage and dispose of her own property, and also declaring that all laws which impose or recognize civil disabilities upon a wife that do not exist as to her husband are abolished.

(Dunbar, J., dissents.)

(May 11, 1892.)

A PPEAL by defendant, Mary Hayden, from a judgment of the Superior Court for Whatcom County holding her liable for debts of the firm of J. P. Hayden & Co. Reversed.

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion.

Messrs. Slade, Hadley & Hadley and Bruce & Brown, for appellant:

That a married woman could not make a contract of copartnership, or, indeed, of any other nature, at common law, needs no discussion.

Hoker v. Boggs, 68 Ill. 161; Wilson v. Loomis, 55 Ill. 352; Pike v. Baker, 58 Ill. 163.

The Legislature enacted the statute having reference to that rule of law, and have in words limited their grant of power to married women, only to the extent that "laws which impose or recognize civil disabilities upon the wife, which are not imposed or recognized as existing as to the husband, are hereby abolished."

Code, § 2398.

The Legislature found the husband burdened with the disability to contract with his wife; they left him under that burden.

See Artman v. Ferguson, 2 L. R. A. 243, 73 Mich. 146; Jenne v. Marble, 37 Mich. 326; Lord v. Parker, 3 Allen, 127; Bowker v. Bradford, 1 New Eng. Rep. 459, 140 Mass. 521;

NOTE.—For notes upon the questions involved in this case, see the preceding case of Gilkerson-Sloss Commission Co. v. Sallinger.

16 L. R. A.

Payne v. Thompson, 8 West. Rep. 153, 44 Ohio St. 192; Kaufman v. Schoeffel, 87 Hun. 140; Cox v. Miller, 54 Tex. 16; Mayer v. Soyater, 80 Md. 402; Kelly, Married Women, § 16, p. 159.

Messrs. Dorr & Finch and Strudwick, Peters & Van Wyck, for respondent, Seattle Board of Trade:

The husband and wife may contract as partners and are liable to creditors as such.

Suau v. Caffé, 9 L. R. A. 598, 123 N. Y. 808; Noel v. Kinney, 8 Cent. Rep. 58, 106 N. Y. 74, 60 Am. Rep. 423; Bitter v. Rathman, 61 N. Y. 512.

If the contract is invalid only as between the defendants, the wife, who received the fruits of the transaction, cannot as against a creditor assert its invalidity. Although married, she may be estopped by her acts and declarations in any matter in respect of which she is capable of acting sui juris.

Bodine v. Killeen, 58 N. Y. 98.

The Statute of New York (§ 2, chap. 90, Laws 1860) provides that "a married woman may . . . carry on any trade or business, . . . on her sole and separate account."

Since the enactment of this statute, it has been held that husbands and wives may legally contract with each other in reference to their separate estates.

Owen v. Cauley, 86 N. Y. 600; Bodine v. Killeen, supra.

That they may become agents for each other.

Knapp v. Smith, 87 N. Y. 277.

And that a husband may assign to his wife a chose in action.

Seymour v. Fellows, 77 N. Y. 178.

In Le Grand v. Eufrata Nat. Bank, 81 Ala. 123, 60 Am. Rep. 140, it was held that a married woman could not on the ground of coverture deny the existence of the partnership where its name had been assumed publicly, and credit obtained on the faith of its alleged existence.

The following cases hold that the husband and wife may become partners:

Lyon v. Zimmer, 30 Fed. Rep. 401; Norris v. McCanna, 29 Fed. Rep. 757; May v. May, 9 Neb. 16, 81 Am. Rep. 399; Knox v. Moser, 69 Iowa, 841; Lipcomb v. Lyon, 19 Neb. 511; Youmans v. Lozley, 56 Mich. 197; Clark v. Hezekiah, 24 Fed. Rep. 663; Toof v. Brewer, (Miss.) Feb. 20, 1888; Dunifer v. Jecko, 2 West.

Rep. 452, 87 Mo. 282; Wells v. Caywood, 8 Colo. 489; Hamilton v. Hamilton, 89 Ill. 949.

Many more cases intimate or assume as much.

McKune v. McGarvey, 6 Cal. 497; Guttman v. Seannell, 7 Cal. 456; Melcher v. Kuhland, 22 Cal. 523; Camden v. Mulien, 29 Cal. 566; Dayton v. Walsh, 47 Wis. 118, 82 Am. Rep. 757; Graff v. Kinney, 87 Hun. 405; Rankin v. West, 25 Mich. 195; Bellows v. Rosenthal, 81 Ind. 116.

Looking to the sources of our laws of property rights between husband and wife, we find that by the civil and Spanish law the relation of husband and wife was regarded as a species of partnership.

Schmidt, Civil Law of Spain & Mexico, bk. 1, title 1, chap. 4; Packard v. Arellanes, 17 Cal. 537; Labbe v. Abat, 2 La. 565.

The community of the husband and wife is a species of partnership under the Mexican law.

Fuller v. Ferguson, 26 Cal. 567; Platt, Property Rights of Married Women, § 6.

Messrs. Fairchild & Rawson, for respondent, Risdon-Cahn Co.:

The state of Arkansas has a statute which is similar to our own. Under this statute, the identical question presented in this case was passed by the Supreme Court of Mississippi in Toof v. Brewer, Feb. 20, 1886, where in passing upon the question as to whether or not husband and wife could enter into a contract of copartnership the court cites Bishop, Married Women, § 435; Schouler, Husband & Wife, § 816, and the cases referred to by them, and states that with the exception of the cases from Massachusetts the authorities cited are foreign to the proposition they are relied on to support, and distinguish the Massachusetts cases upon the ground that the section of the statute of that state that permitted her to acquire property excluded the right to acquire it by gift from the husband.

See also Re Kinkead, 3 Biss. 405; Kaufman v. Schoeffel, 87 Hun. 140; Graff v. Kinney, 87 Hun. 405; Fairlie v. Bloomingdale, 38 Hun. 220; Zimmermann v. Erhard, 58 How. Pr. 11; Noel v. Kinney, 8 Cent. Rep. 58, 106 N. Y. 74, 60 Am. Rep. 423.

In the case of May v. May, 9 Neb. 16, the Supreme Court of Nebraska holds that under the statute of Nebraska, husband and wife may contract together, and that the wife can sue the husband upon a promissory note made and executed to her.

See also Logan v. Hall, 19 Iowa, 491; Huber v. Huber, 10 Ohio. 371; Alexander v. Alexander, 85 Va. 353; Wilson v. Wilson, 36 Cal. 447, 95 Am. Dec. 194; Hall v. Hall, 52 Tex. 294, 36 Am. Rep. 725; Brickley v. Walker, 68 Wis. 563; Knox v. Moxer, 69 Iowa, 341; Lipscomb v. Lyon, 19 Neb. 611.

In Dunifer v. Jecko, 2 West. Rep. 452, 87 Mo. 282, it is held that a married woman, under her power to contract and redeem her separate property, may engage with her husband in the publication of a newspaper.

In Wells v. Caywood, 8 Colo. 489, the effect of modern statutes upon the rights of married women is discussed with great clearness and at great length, and as the statute of Colorado is very like our own, the case is peculiarly instructive.

16 L. R. A.

Messrs. Allen & Powell, for respondent J. H. Allen:

Petition for rehearing on behalf of Seattle Board of Trade.

Chapter 183, Code 1881, establishes the law of this territory respecting the rights and capacities of married persons; in its provisions alone are to be sought the spirit and policy of the law and no resort is to be had to the common law or to the civil law or to any other law.

Rosencrants v. Washington Territory, 2 Wash. Terr. 274.

The underlying principle of the status of a married woman at the common law is that her legal capacity is suspended during coverture. Under our statute her capacity is the same during coverture as when sole, and is equal in every respect to that of her husband. The reason of the common-law rule is therefore gone and with it must go the rule.

The evils resulting from this or that statute cannot be considered by a judicial body determining what is or what is not the law.

Brotton v. Langert, 1 Wash. 73.

Stiles, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

These were four cases, the trials of which were consolidated. In two of the cases the theory of complaints was that the appellant and her husband were actual partners in the mercantile business under the firm name of J. P. Hayden & Co. In the other two the theory was that the community composed of the husband and wife was carrying on business, and that the husband and wife were its agents. The evidence did not tend to support either theory as pleaded, but was directed wholly to an effort to show that J. P. Hayden was doing business under the name of J. P. Hayden & Co., and that appellant made herself liable as a partner by "holding out." The real object in making appellant a party, and taking judgment against her, was to subject certain real estate which she claims is her separate property to the payment of debts incurred by J. P. Hayden & Co. The main question involved is, Can a husband and wife become partners in trade in this state? It is claimed that they may, under the Act of November 21, 1881, commonly known as "Chapter 183 of the Code" of that year. Of that chapter the following sections are supposed to be especially pertinent to the matter in hand: "Sec. 2396. Every married person shall hereafter have the same right and liberty to acquire, hold, enjoy, and dispose of every species of property, and to sue and be sued, as if he or she were unmarried." "Sec. 2398. All laws which impose or recognize civil disabilities upon a wife, which are not imposed or recognized as existing as to the husband, are hereby abolished, and for any unjust usurpation of her natural or property rights she shall have the same right to appeal in her own individual name to the courts of law or equity for redress and protection that the husband has." "Sec. 2400. The property and pecuniary rights of every married woman at the time of her marriage, or afterwards acquired by gift, devise, or inheritance, with the rents, issues, and profit thereof, shall not be subject to the debts or contracts of her husband, and she may manage, lease, sell, convey, incumber, or devise by will such property, to the same extent, and in the same manner, that her husband can property belonging to him. Sec. 2401. Should either husband or wife obtain possession or control of property belonging to the other, either before or after marriage, the owner of the property may maintain an action therefor, or for any right growing out of the same, in the same manner and to the same extent as if they were unmarried." "Sec. 2406. Contracts may be made by a wife, and liabilities incurred, and the same may be enforced by or against her to the same extent and in the same manner as if she were unmarried."

Prior to the Act of 1881, but for the Acts commencing in 1869, the common law would have regulated the property rights of husband and wife. It did then, and still does, regulate them, excepting so far as the statute has directed otherwise; and, notwithstanding that this Act provides in section 2417 that the "rule of common law that statutes in derogation thereof are to be strictly construed has no application to this Act," it is not to be supposed that the Legislature intended or proposed to extend the scope of the Act beyond the language used further than the implications naturally flowing therefrom. At the common law, a wife could not be a partner in business with any one because partnership is based on a contract, as to which she was under a disability, and yet in equity she had always been permitted to enforce contracts made for her benefit, even with her husband, and her claim against him as her debtor had always been sustained. Story, Eq. Jur. §§ 1872, 1873; Valensin v. Valensin, 28 Fed. Rep. 599; Clark v. Heskiah, 24 Fed. Rep. 663; Huber v. Huber, 10 Ohio, 872.

She could have a separate estate,—meaning an equitable estate,—held by a third person in trust for her. This estate she could charge in equity, but not at law. Judgments upon her debts went not against her person, when allowed at law, but were allowed as equitable burdens upon her estate or personal property in possession at the time of the marriage and that acquired afterwards. Her choses in action, when reduced to possession, and her earnings became her husband's. In her freeholds and lands in fee the husband took a life estate. He became liable for her antenuptial debts, and, jointly with her, for her torts during coverture. Her responsibility at law for contracts was entirely suspended; and in equity, before the courts would hear anything against her, it must appear that she was possessed of a separate estate in the common-law sense.

Now, this Act of 1881 does certain things for a married woman: First, it gives her full dominion over her own property, whether acquired before or after marriage, to enjoy and dispose of it without the intervention of her husband, or responsibility for him or his debts; second, it removes from her all civil disabilities not imposed upon her husband; third, she can sue and be sued as if she were unmarried, either at law or in equity; fourth, for her debts she alone is responsible; fifth, her property is chargeable with family expenses. In short, the purpose of the Act seems to be to set her free from all influence or dominion of her husband in so far as her property rights are concerned, and leave her to manage, control, and dispose of them as she pleases, whether to her gain or loss.

In this opinion we shall not discuss the question how large her power is, but confine ourselves to the single matter before us. Counsel for respondents contend that, as it is the evident purpose of these provisions to emancipate the wife from the control of the husband, and to enfranchise her with the power denied to her under the common law, to acquire, hold, enjoy, and dispose of property, and do business on her own account as freely as he can, or even more freely than he can, under the same Act, it must follow that she can enter into a contract of partnership in all the ways, and with all the liabilities, that her husband can and that, unless she is permitted and held to be able to enter into the same contracts with him that she can with others, he is deprived of the full measure of liberty which the law intends to confer upon her.

It may be said that she can, and in some cases will be held to, become a general partner with third persons under the terms of the Act, and the necessary implications thereof. It has been so held in Newman v. Morris, 52 Miss. 403; Abbott v. Jackson, 48 Ark. 212, and elsewhere, when one of the persons engaged with her as partners was her husband. But the question still remains, Does the statute intend that she can enter into ordinary contracts with her husband and particularly the contract of partnership?

On this point we think the position of the respondents is antagonistic to itself. In the foreground of the discussion is placed the proposition that the purpose of the statute is to free the wife from the control and influence of her husband, and to relieve her property from his debts and management; but the next following suggestion, that, unless she can become his partner, she will not be wholly free, if yielded to, will place her and her property within touch of the very dangers which it is sought in the first place to withdraw her from. Her improvident husband, by the most ordinary persuasion, or by his mere declaration, made in her presence, as in the case at bar, could, in spite of her, unless she assumed a hostility which would endanger the continuance of the marriage relation, waste and dissipate her entire estate, and thus the very purpose which it seems to us stands out the most clearly in the Act in question, i. e., to secure her protection in the management and enjoyment of her estate, would be defeated.

In Massachusetts the Married Woman's Property Act, which existed until 1874, when the Legislature expressly forbade husband and wife to contract, provided: "Any woman may, while married, bargain, sell, and convey her real and personal property which may be her sole and separate property, or which may hereafter come to her by de-scant, devise, bequest, gift of any person except her husband, and enter into any contract in reference to the same, in the same manner as if she were sole;" and "any married woman may carry on any trade or business, and perform any labor or services, on her own sole and separate account; and the earnings of any married woman from her trade, business, labor, or services shall be her sole and separate property, and may be used and invested by her in her own name; and she may sue and be sued as if sole in regard to her trade, business, etc., and her property acquired by her or her trade, etc., may be taken on any execution against her." This Act covers every material point of our own, and notably the wife is permitted to make "any contract" in reference to her property, which is all that any person can do. But in Lord v. Parker, 8 Allen, 127, it was held that she could not be a partner in a firm where her husband was a partner. Speaking of the statutes, the court said: "Their leading object is to enable married women to acquire, possess, and manage property without the intervention of a trustee, free from the interference or control, and without liability for the debts of their husbands. They are in derogation of the common law, and certainly are not to be extended by construction; and we cannot perceive in them any intention to confer upon a married woman the power to make any contract with her husband, or to convey to him any property, or receive any conveyance from him. The power to form a partnership includes the power to create a community of property, with a joint power of disposal, and a mutual liability for the contracts and acts of all the partners. To enter into a partnership in business with her husband would subject her property to his control in a manner hardly consistent with the separation which it is the purpose of the statute to secure, and might subject her to an indefinite liability for his engagements. The property invested in such an enterprise would cease to be her 'sole and separate' property. The power to arrange the terms of such a contract would open a wide door to fraud in relation to the property of the husband. If she could contract with her husband, it would seem to follow that she could sue him and be sued by him. How such suits could be conducted, with the incidents in respect to discovery, the right of parties to testify and to call the opposite party as a witness, without interfering with the rule as to private communications between the husband and wife, it is not easy to perceive; and the consequences which would follow in respect to process for the enforcement of rights fixed by a judgment, arrest, imprisonment, charges of fraud, proceedings in invitum under the Insolvent Laws, and the like, are not of a character to be readily reconciled with the marital relation. We cannot suppose that an alteration in the law, involving such momentous results, and a change so radical, could have been contemplated by the Legislature, without a much more direct and clear manifestation of its will."

To the same effect is the construction of the similar statute by the supreme court of 16 L. R. A.

the state of Maine. Smith v. Gorman, 41 Me. 405; McKeen v. Frost, 46 Me. 239.

In Michigan, How. Stat., § 6295, provides that the separate property and estate of a married woman "may be contracted, sold, transferred, mortgaged, conveyed, devised, or bequeathed by her in the same manner and with the like effect as if she were unmarried." And section 6297 provides that "actions may be brought by and against her in relation to her sole property in the same manner as if she were unmarried." It is true that these provisions in the Michigan statute (and those of several other states) speak particularly only of her separate estate, but her separate estate is by section 6295 expressly defined to be the same as that which is equally her separate property in this state; but if she be thus enabled to contract with absolute freedom in reference to her separate estate, then according to the logic of respondents' argument, her freedom in that respect would be unlawfully curtailed by holding that she could not contract with reference thereto with her husband. Yet the Supreme Court of Michigan in Artman v. Ferguson, 73 Mich. 146, 2 L. R. A. 843, after alluding to decisions in other states where it is held that a married woman may be, where she has separate estate, a partner with persons other than her husband, uses this language: "It is the purpose of these statutes to secure to a married woman the right to acquire and hold property separate from her husband, and free from his influence and control; and if she might enter into a business partnership with her husband it would subject her property to his control in a manner wholly inconsistent with the separation which it is the purpose of the statute to secure, and might subject her to an indefinite liability for his engagements. A contract of partnership with her husband is not included within the power granted by our statute to married women. This doctrine was laid down in Bassett v. Shepardson, 53 Mich. 3, and we see no reason for departing from it. The important and sacred relations between man and wife, which lie at the very foundation of civilized society, are not to be disturbed and destroyed by contentions which may arise from such a community of property and a joint power of disposal, and a mutual liability for the contracts and obligations of each other."

In Indiana, under the third section of the Act of March 25, 1879, it was provided that a married woman might enter into any contract, in reference to her separate personal estate, trade, business, labor, or services, and the management and improvement of her separate real property, the same as if she were sole; and her separate estate, real and personal, should be held liable and on execution sold. But in Haas v. Shaw, 91 Ind. 384, and in Scarlett v. Snodgrass, 92 Ind. 262, it was distinctly held that she could not bind herself by a contract of co-partnership with her husband. These citations from eminent courts are sustained in Schouler, Husb. & W. § 817, and 2 Bishop, Mar. Wom. § 485.

Opposed to these adjudications, counsel cites us to a line of authorities of which May v. May, 9 Neb. 16, is a sample. There a husband made and delivered his promissory note to a third party, who indorsed and delivered it to the maker's wife; and a second note he made directly to his wife. She brought an action at law against him on both notes, and the court held that the demurrer of the wife to the husband's answer setting up the marriage of the parties in the nature of a plea of abatement should have been sustained. The statutes of that state with regard to the separate property of married women are substantially the same as our own, and we see no reason for dissenting from the views therein expressed and the conclusions therein arrived at. The holding of the court was, in effect, simply to substitute an action at law for a suit in equity. In its decision, on page 226, the court said: "Even under the old system of practice and before the beneficent legislation defining the rights of married women herein quoted, this could have been done by resorting to the circuitry of proceeding in the name of a trustee and a court of equity. But now not only is the administration of law and equity vested in the one court, but all forms of procedure which heretofore distinguished legal and equitable suits are abolished, and the need of the intervention of a trustee is done away with by the statute which provides that 'every action must be prosecuted in the name of the real party in interest.'"

But notwithstanding these cases, and the doctrine established by them, no case is cited, and we have not been able to find one, in which either husband or wife has been permitted, either at law or in equity, to enforce a purely executory contract against the other; and in that lies the kernel of this controversy. Because such a contract must be enforceable by both parties, and at its beginning it is entirely executory. The terms of the partnership may be that it shall continue for a certain length of time; that certain capital shall be invested; that the services of the parties to the contract shall be devoted to the business of the partnership; that the profits and losses of the business shall be divided equally or in certain proportions; and many others, all of which are executory and some of which are absolutely indispensable to the prosecution of any partnership business to advantage.

It is also insisted, and citations are made to authorities to show, that the husband and wife, in states where the doctrine of community property prevails, are, in a sense, partners at all events. One of the citations is Fuller v. Ferguson, 26 Cal. 547, and another is Schmidt's Civil Law of Spain and Mexico; but turning to Fuller v. Ferguson, page 567, we find this language: "The law recognizes a partnership between the husband and wife as to the property acquired during marriage, and which exists until expressly renounced in the manner prescribed. To this community or partnership belongs—First, all the property, of whatever nature, which the spouses acquire by their own labor and industry; second, the fruits and income of the individual property of the husband and wife; third, whatever the husband gains by the exercise of a profession or office; fourth, the gains from the money of the spouses, although the capital is the separate property of one of them." It is scarcely necessary to say that, because the relation of husband and wife as to their common property is likened to a partnership, the reason for the similitude is totally wanting when their separate property is concerned.

But the respondents produce two decisions of New York and Mississippi, respectively, which expressly hold that a husband and wife may be partners.—Suau v. Caffé, 122 N. Y. 808, 9 L. R. A. 593; Toof v. Brewer (Miss.) 3 So. Rep. 571. The statutes of New York governing the former case were almost identical with those of Massachusetts, above quoted. Husband and wife filed a certificate, by which they assumed to form a limited partnership under the firm name of "George Caffé." The husband was the general and the wife the special partner, she contributing $25,000. The firm became indebted, and both husband and wife were sued. The court, after reviewing New York cases only, said: "Upon principle and authority we think that when a husband and wife assume to carry on a business as partners, and contract debts in the course of it, the wife cannot escape liability on the ground of coverture." This as is seen by the facts above stated, was an extreme case, in which the wife had by a solemn instrument, placed upon file among public records, shown her intention of assuming a partnership relation with her husband and contributing to the firm large sums of money. Whether or not the firm was insolvent is not disclosed. All that appears is that she was retained as a party to the action. But we find that of the seven judges of New York Court of Appeals but four joined in the opinion, while three dissent on the very point in question. Haight, J., in his dissenting opinion, reviews the course of decision in the state of New York as well as in other states, and comes to the conclusion—which is, we think, unassailable—that the majority opinion was wrong. The decision in this case is, to us, a curious one, inasmuch as we find the same court, only one year previous, in the case of Hendrick v. Isaacs, 117 N. Y. 411, 6 L. R. A. 559, holding by a unanimous court that under these same statutes a husband and wife could not contract with each other at all.

Toof v. Brewer was a controversy which was controlled by the statutes of Arkansas, which are again almost exact duplicates of those of Massachusetts. The court, after alluding to Abbott v. Jackson, 43 Ark. 212, in which it was held that a married woman could become a partner as a sole trader with a third person other than her husband, and would, as to her property, be bound by all the contracts of the firm as effectually and to the same extent as if she were a man, discusses cases in Massachusetts, New York, and other states, and comes to the conclusion that a married woman, under the law of Arkansas, could also become the business partner of her husband. Just why it becomes necessary for the court in this case to decide this question is not clear from the report. It is said that the Brewers, husband and wife, were carrying on planting operations in Arkansas, and Toof et al. made to them advances of supplies. After this the Brewers moved to Tennessee, and there gave to Toof et al. four notes in payment of the indebtedness due them, in which notes Mrs. Brewer charged her separate estate for their payment. From this it would seem that the question of partnership was not necessarily involved in the case, but that the real question was whether, upon her note, which assumed to expressly charge her separate estate, a personal judgment at law should be entered against her.

The case of Wells v. Caywood, 3 Colo. 489, is also cited by respondents, and the general language used by the court in that case on page 494 is abundantly broad enough to support the citation, were it not that the point in issue had no analogy whatever to that of the case at bar. We conclude, upon the whole, that the better reason as well as authority is with the position that these married women's statutes generally agree on their material points, and that it was not intended thereby that a husband and wife could become partners.

But in our statute there are one or two provisions which we think make this position clearer than it is in perhaps any of the others. Section 2897 substantially makes each of them, as to all transactions between them, a trustee for the other. The burden of proof, as between them, is upon the party asserting the good faith. Persons who are free to contract with each other are not subject to such a rule. They stand at arms' length, and, unless there is actual fraud, the law gives no relief. Again, it would seem that, if husband and wife are at liberty to contract with each other with perfect freedom as strangers, the provisions of section 2416 would have been left out. By that section husband and wife, when they attempt to make any agreement as to the status or disposition of the community property, must do so by the execution of an instrument in writing and under seal, which must be acknowledged and certified as a deed to real estate. Why so much solemnity with regard to her interest in community property and such looseness and absolute want of protection with regard to her separate property, which it is conceded by all it was the first purpose of this Act to secure to her?

The case at bar is, perhaps, as strong an example as experience could produce of the evil effects of such a construction of this statute as is contended for by respondents. The wife held certain real estate, which she claims is her separate property. It is all she has. The husband engaged in a mercantile business in a building built by her upon her land, and painted over the door a sign, "J. P. Hayden & Co." He went to Seattle to buy goods for his stock, and his wife went with him. In a certain store where he was about to make some purchases he was asked who constituted the firm. His answer was,

"My wife is the only partner I have." She sat within a few feet of where this was said, and the witness who testified to the statement of Mr. Hayden thought she might have heard what he said. Again, a traveling agent for a firm in San Francisco, who sought to sell Hayden goods, when in the store at Fairhaven asked a question similar to the one asked in Seattle, and received a similar answer; and on this occasion Mrs. Hayden was sitting at a desk in the view of the two men, and again the testimony was that she might have heard what her husband said. The jury found as a special verdict that these were the only two men to whom any such statement was made, although others were testified to. Yet upon this testimony, and some other of as slight moment, and because, as it is said, the wife remained silent, and did not deny what her husband said in her hearing, she was held to be a general partner by "holding out," and judgment was rendered against her, not only for the claims of the two firms to whose representatives her husband had said that she was his partner, but also for the claims of eighteen or twenty other firms, none of whom, with the exception of one or two, pretended to have heard that she was in any wise interested in the business, or that she existed as the wife of J. P. Hayden. It is clear that to sustain such a judgment would be to render the estate of every married woman wholly unsafe, and all but destroy the most beneficial purpose designed to be subserved by the statute, as we understand it.

Judgment reversed, and cause dismissed.

Anders, Ch. J., and Hoyt, J., concur.

Scott, J., concurring (filed June 14, 1892):

I concur in holding that a husband and wife cannot enter into a partnership with each other to carry on a business. This is the law in most of the states, and all arguments advanced in favor of such a holding elsewhere, in so far as their laws relating to the removal of the disabilities of married women are like our own, derive much greater force in a state where community property laws prevail as here. Our statutes recognize but two kinds of property which can be held or owned by married persons,—separate property and community property. The statutes point out how this property may be acquired, and define what it is, according to the manner and time in which it is acquired. The property and pecuniary rights of every married woman at the time of her marriage, or afterwards acquired by gift, devise or inheritance with the rents, issues, and profits thereof, is her separate property, and the same is true with regard to like property owned by the husband. Section 1399, Gen. Stat. (former § 2409), provides that all property not acquired as prescribed in any one of the ways mentioned which is acquired after marriage by either husband, or wife, or both, is community property. It has been held that their interests in this community property are indissoluble during the existence of the community to the extent that the interests of either therein cannot be reached separately by any third party. The interest of each in the property is equal, and I do not think it would be contended that by any mutual arrangement between themselves they could agree that either could have a lesser interest than the other in said property without destroying its community character.

Section 1401, Gen. Stat., provides that "nothing contained in any of the provisions of this chapter, or in any law of this state, shall prevent the husband and wife from jointly entering into any agreement concerning the status or disposition of the whole, or any portion of community property, then owned by them or afterwards to be acquired, to take effect upon the death of either." This seems to me to clearly preclude the idea of their entering into any such agreement affecting their property interests to take effect prior to the dissolution of the community except as expressly provided otherwise. Section 1448, Gen. Stat., authorizes the direct conveyance by one to the other of his or her interest in all or any portion of their community real property which thereby becomes the separate property of the grantee, but it is apparent that such a deed to be effectual must convey the entire interest of the grantor in the property designated in the deed from the one spouse to the other. No lesser nor partial interest of the grantor could be conveyed in any event because this would have the effect of destroying its community character, and leave it neither separate nor community, which would effect a result the law does not contemplate. If a husband and wife can become partners in business they can form the same kind of a partnership that other persons can, and enter into an agreement whereby one could take a small interest in the business, and the profits thereof, and the other the larger one. The property acquired through the pursuance of this business would not come under either head of the two classes recognized; it could not be held to be separate property for it would not be acquired in any one of the ways specified, and it could not be community property, because, as said, in community property their interests must be equal, while according to the partnership contract their interests might be very unequal. This would create a third species of property owned by husband and wife which the law does not recognize. It seems to me to be clearly the intention of the law that only the two species of property can belong to the community, or to either of its members; that the law is a limitation in this respect, and will not permit the holding or ownership of any other kind of property than that which is designated as separate, and that which is designated as community, and the distinguishing features of its acquisition have been clearly pointed out and define its character; especially for these reasons I think that in this state where community property laws obtain that it would be contrary to the whole law on this subject to permit the husband and wife to enter into any contract or agreement whereby they might acquire property of a character other or different from that specified which the law expressly permits them to hold and enjoy. It is true we have some statutes which construed without reference to others would seem to allow the wife to enter into any contract, and which remove all restrictions in this respect. I think our statute law upon this subject goes to a greater extent than that of the states from which the cases have been cited.

Section 1408 of the General Statute, (§ 2896, Code 1881,) provides that every married person shall hereafter have the same right and liberty to acquire, hold, enjoy, and dispose of every species of property, and to sue and be sued as if he or she were unmarried, and section 1410 (§ 2408, Code 1881,) provides that contracts may be made by a wife and liabilities incurred, and the same may be enforced by or against her to the same extent and in the same manner as if she were unmarried, yet when considered in connection with our other laws relating to the property rights of married persons it is apparent that they are considerably restricted thereby, and it would be wholly incompatible and inconsistent with such other provisions to hold that a husband and wife could enter into any joint arrangement or agreement between themselves creating a different kind of ownership in property from the ones specified, to take effect before the death of either, and it would be strongly against public policy to allow them so to do, and thus likely to give rise to interminable and unfathomable complications.

Our laws cannot in accordance with recognized rules of construction be held to authorize the husband and wife to enter into a partnership with each other for the purpose of trade or business although it may be possible they might form some particular kind of an agreement for such a purpose which might not conflict with their rights of property as defined by the statutes. This is very doubtful, however, and when considered in all its bearings with the rights, duties, and liabilities of partners to each other and to creditors, it is evident that it is not the intent of the law to confer any such authority upon them. The effect that such an arrangement might have or must necessarily have upon their property rights as classified, is the strongest argument that can be advanced against the position of the respondents, as it would destroy the distinction between the classes of property they may own as declared by the statutes.

Section 1444, Gen. Stat., provides that a husband or wife may appoint the other attorney in fact with full power to sell, convey, and incur his or her separate estate both real and personal, and section 1446 makes similar provision with regard to their community property, and with section 1448, further assisted by the broad scope of sections 1408 and 1410 practically subjects the wife to the influence of the husband as to the disposition and control of her property, separate or community, it seems to me as fully as any partnership agreement between them could possibly effect, and I should be forced to the conclusion that they might become partners in trade with each other were it not for the statutes prescribing and defining the kinds of property a husband and wife may own and acquire. It is a matter of experience that their property rights and relations become complicated at best under the practical workings of the law as expressed and interpreted, and as a matter of public policy it would be very undesirable to still further allow them to become involved in mercantile partnership relations with all its possible resulting consequences, conflicts and complications.

Dunbar, J., dissenting (Filed May 28, 1892):

I dissent. It seems to me that the decision in this case is another instance (too common in the history of the courts of the United States) of the judicial repeal of a statute. It is not only a fundamental principle of our government, well understood and universally recognized, that the legislative and judicial departments of the government must be kept distinct and separate, but the first warning note sounded by all writers on statutory interpretation is that, when the language of a statute is plain and unambiguous, the duty of interpretation by the court does not arise.

Section 2896 provides that "every married person shall hereafter have the same right and liberty to acquire, hold, enjoy, and dispose of every species of property, and sue and be sued, as if he or she were unmarried." There seems to be nothing ambiguous or doubtful in the language or provisions of this statute, and, applying any and every known rule of interpretation to it, we must conclude that there is no room for construction, and that the only duty of the court is to declare it the law, and to decree its enforcement. The real intention of the law-makers must be gathered from what they say, and, where the language is not technical, it must be given its ordinary and popular meaning. The statute provides that "every married person can enjoy and dispose of every species of property as if he or she were unmarried." Is there anything doubtful or ambiguous about that language? Could language be more plain, pointed, or incisive? Could the idea of unrestricted enjoyment of one's property be expressed more tersely, plainly, and emphatically? There are no provisos and no exceptions expressed. What right, then, has the court to step in, and, under the guise of construction, inject a limitation which the Legislature did not provide for, and which, in effect, renders nugatory the law passed by that body?

It is an easy but a dangerous thing for courts to wander off in hazy theories and speculations concerning what the Legislature meant, and to base their conclusions on the policy or impolicy of the law. This should only be done when the patent ambiguity of the law compels it. And here, in support of what I have said, I desire to quote from Endlich, on the Interpretation of Statutes, (sec. 4.) which is the embodiment of the authorities upon this subject: "Sec. 4. When, indeed, the language is not only plain, but admits of but one meaning, the task of interpretation can hardly be said to arise, (and 'those incidental rules which are mere aids, to be invoked when the meaning is clouded, are not to be regarded.')

It is not allowable, says Vattel, to interpret what has no need of interpretation. Absoluta sententia expositore non eget. Such language best declares, without more, the intention of the law-giver, and is decisive of it. The Legislature must be intended to mean what it has plainly expressed, and consequently there is no room for construction. (It is therefore only in the construction of statutes whose terms give rise to some ambiguity, or whose grammatical construction is doubtful, that courts can exercise the power of controlling the language in order to give effect to what they suppose to have been the real intention of the law-makers. Where the words of a statute are plainly expressive of an intent, not rendered dubious by the context, the interpretation must conform to and carry out that intent. It matters not, in such a case, what the consequences may be. 'It has therefore been distinctly stated, from early times down to the present day, that judges are not to mold the language of statutes in order to meet an alleged convenience or an alleged equity; are not to be influenced by any notions of hardship, or of what, in their view, is right and reasonable, or is prejudicial to society; are not to alter clear words, though the Legislature may not have contemplated the consequences of using them; are not to tamper with words for the purpose of giving them a construction which is "supposed to be more consonant with justice" than their ordinary meaning.')

Where, by the use of clear and unequivocal language, capable of only one meaning, anything is enacted by the Legislature, it must be enforced, even though it be absurd or mischievous. If the words go beyond what was probably the intention, effect must nevertheless be given to them. They cannot be construed, contrary to their meaning, as embracing or excluding cases merely because no good reason appears why they should be excluded or embraced. However unjust, arbitrary, or inconvenient the intention conveyed may be, it must receive its full effect. (Indeed, it is said that it is only when all other means of ascertaining the legislative intent fail, that courts may look to the effects of a law in order to influence their construction of it. But, whilst it may be conceded that where its provisions are ambiguous, and the legislative intent is doubtful, the effect of several possible constructions may be looked at in order to determine the choice, it is very certain that, when once the intention is plain, it is not the province of a court to scan its wisdom or its policy. Its duty is not to make the law reasonable, but to expound it as it stands, according to the real sense of the words."

And yet the majority, by an argument based on the supposed hardships which would be imposed upon married women, have come to the conclusion that the Legislature did not mean what it plainly said; and, if the language of section 2896 could possibly be tortured into anything doubtful, section 2406 plainly shows that the legislative intent was to remove all civil disabilities, so far as property rights are concerned, when it provides that "contracts may be made by a wife, and liabilities incurred, and the same may be enforced by or against her, to the same extent and in the same manner as if she were unmarried." The Legislature evidently understood the full scope of the law it was enacting, and its far-reaching effects; and where, in its opinion, the limitation was necessary, it provided for it, as in the proviso to section 2398 that "nothing in this chapter shall be construed to confer upon the wife any right to vote or hold office except as otherwise provided by law." Had it intended the law to operate as claimed by the majority it would evidently have incorporated a proviso in section 2406 substantially as follows: "Provided no married woman shall enter into a contract of partnership with her husband." But it is left for the court to enact this proviso by judicial construction,—something very near approaching, in my opinion, a judicial enactment.

As showing the danger of leaving the plain provisions of the statutory law, I note the fact that the majority recite at length the provisions of the common law, and draw deductions from its analogies, when the Act in question, to avoid the very thing which the court now insists on doing, provides especially in section 2417 that the "rule of common law that statutes in derogation thereof are to be strictly construed has no application to this chapter. This chapter establishes the law of this territory respecting the subject to which it relates, and its provisions and all proceedings under it shall be liberally construed with a view to effect its object." The Legislature evidently attempted to emancipate this law from the rule of construction now insisted upon by the court, and the plain rule of construction provided by the Legislature is waived aside by the remark that "it is not to be supposed that the Legislature intended or proposed to extend the scope of the Act beyond the language used, further than the implications naturally flowing therefrom." I think that it is to be presumed that the Legislature realized the fact that it was enacting a statute in derogation of the common law, and that it did not want the law hampered by the rule of construction mentioned. It seems to me that the language of section 2417 is also so plain that there is no room for construction. In fact it seems that, if the plain provisions of this law can be argued out of existence, all the laws of the state are at the mercy of judicial construction.

I am unable to see in what way the enactments of section 2397 and section 2416 sustain the theory of the majority. It is perfectly competent for the law to provide who shall be subject to the burden of proof in any given transaction nor is it by any means a new provision of the law. It is especially a wise provision in this instance, and can in no way that I can perceive throw any light on the subject discussed. So far as section 2416 is concerned, there is the very best of reasons why transactions concerning community property should be attended with solemnity and certainty. Both parties have an interest in such property, and delicate relations exist which do not exist at all concerning the separate property of either of the spouses. The separate property is more independent; and the fact that the law imposes these solemn protections upon community property, and not upon separate property, would rather strengthen the idea that the use of separate property was entirely unrestricted. The fact is that for many years the law, in obedience to popular demand, growing out of feudal education, stood in loco parentis to woman. She was regarded as not being able to transact business, and had to act under a trustee or guardian. Advancing thought has demanded other legislation and woman's independence and capability have been recognized by the legislation of different states in different degrees. In this state, I think, the Legislature has seen fit to grant to married women an untrammelled control of their separate property. The law presumes that they are capable of protecting their own property, and it is not, in my opinion, the duty of the court now to assume to stand in loco parentis, or to sally forth in Quixotic zeal to relieve women from conjugal oppressors, or from burdens real or imaginary. It is argued by the majority that the case at bar is an instance of the evil effect of the construction contended for by respondents, because the wife was held to be a partner by "holding out," when the testimony did not justify such a conclusion. This argument, in my opinion, is entirely without force, and will apply equally to nearly every law on the statute books. Juries are continually rendering verdicts, and courts entering judgments, based on inadequate testimony. It is simply a question of fact to be tried as any other question of fact is to be tried.

Rehearing denied.

CONNECTICUT SUPREME COURT OF ERRORS.

APPEAL FROM PROBATE OF ANN SMITH, Guardian, etc., of Thomas Smith, et al.

(.....Conn.....)

1. A lack of honesty, integrity, and experience in business affairs is not sufficient ground for rejecting an executor under a statute which allows the rejection of one who is "incapable to accept the trust."

2. An executor appointed by will cannot be rejected by the court except where the law has specially so provided.

NOTE.—Requisite moral qualifications of executors. In many of the states, statutes prescribe various 16 L. R. A.

qualifications, moral in their nature, for executors, relating chiefly to security in the administration

(February 20, 1892.)

APPPEAL by contestants from a decree of the Superior Court for New Haven County reversing a decree of a Court of Probate held at Waterbury which refused to approve the appointment of Bryan J. Smith as executor of the will of Bridget Smith, deceased, although he had been named in such will as executor, and in his place appointing James J. Cassin. Affirmed.

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion. Messrs. George E. Terry and Lucien F. Burpee, for appellants, original appellees:

Legislation, both in England and in the United States, has been constantly adding to the number of causes of disqualification, and limiting the number of those who may accept such trusts. The old doctrine that the testator had some absolute and sacred right or privilege to appoint a trustee of his own liking to carry out the purposes of his will has proved unsatisfactory. It is the modern opinion that the execution of the will is rather to be considered than the giving of a lucrative office to any person, and the interests of legatees and creditors are to be promoted rather than the gratification of the testator's caprice in selecting his executor.

Schouler, Exrs. & Admsrs. § 33; 1 Woerner, Exrs. & Admsrs. § 233.

In this state, the Revision of 1885 provided: "If no executor be named in the will, or if the executor named shall have died, or shall refuse or be incapable to accept said trust, or to give bond, the court shall commit the administration," etc.

Conn. Gen. Stat. § 549.

Manifestly this statute was intended to enlarge the discretionary power of the court of probate, as well as to add to the requirements upon those who apply to be made executors. The court of probate may find an applicant incapable. Must that incapability arise from physical and mental disqualifications only, or may it be caused as well by want of common honesty?

See Wilcox's App. 54 Conn. 320; Wickwire's App. 30 Conn. 86; Drew's App. 58 N. H. 820.

The tendency of legislation and decision has been distinctly toward the recognition of two classes of disabilities, namely, absolute disabilities and discretionary disabilities.

Crowell, Exrs. & Admsrs. §§ 103, 104.

Messrs. Wooster, Williams & Gager, for appellee, original appellant:

The incapacity contemplated by the statute is the same as recognized and adopted by the common law.

1 Wms. Exrs. p. 278.

All persons, generally speaking, are capable of becoming executors who are capable of making wills.

Schouler, Exrs. & Admsrs. §§ 32, 33, and notes.

All persons may be made executors unless specially disqualified.

of the estate. In the absence of statutory regulation, the choice of the testator must be respected regardless of the moral character of the nominee.

The person nominated in the will is entitled to qualify as executor, unless under mental or legal disability. Holbrook v. Head (Ky.) Jan. 23, 1883.

It is said by T. A. Johnson, J., in McGregor v. McGregor, 3 Abb. App. Dec. 93, 95: "I am of the opinion that any person appointed or named as executor in a will is to be deemed competent, unless he is declared incompetent by statute, and that it is the duty of the surrogate to grant letters to every person named as executor in a will, upon his application, who is not declared incompetent to serve by statute. He has no discretion to exercise in the matter, but must obey the requirements of the statute, which is the sole source of his power."

From the earliest time it has been a rule that every person may be an executor, saving such as are expressly forbidden. 2 Wms. Exrs. 5th Am. ed. p. 193.

There are few, or none, who by our law are disabled, on account of their crimes, from being executors. Id. p. 204.

The word "integrity," in a statute justifying the rejection of an executor who is wanting in integrity, means soundness of moral principle and character as shown by a person's dealings with others, in the making and performance of contracts, in fidelity and honesty in the discharge of trusts. Re Baugher, 88 Cal. 302.

Under this statute the paramour of a dissolute woman who professed to live "by his wits" is disqualified to act as her executor. Plaisance's Estate, Myr. Prob. 117.

By the New York statute one "convicted of an infamous crime" is disqualified to receive letters testamentary. Under this statute no degree of legal or moral guilt or delinquency is sufficient to exclude a person unless convicted of an infamous crime upon indictment or other criminal proceeding. 26 L. R. A.

Inga. Coope v. Lowerre, 1 Barb. Ch. 45, 5 L. ed. 236; Coggshall v. Green, 9 Hun, 471; McMahon v. Harrison, 10 Barb. 659.

In those of the United States where no statute exists upon this subject it is probably the law that conviction of an infamous crime would render a person incompetent to become either an executor or administrator, and if not so absolutely, yet in cases where a discretion is given to the court in the matter, such conviction would probably have much weight against the appointment. Crowell, Exrs. & Admsrs. § 84.

But in Smethurst v. Tomlin, 2 Swab. & T. 143, it was held that a person appointed executor, and after the testator's death convicted of felony, is not thereby disentitled to maintain a suit in a court of probate to establish the validity of the will by which he was appointed.

The conviction of an infamous crime which will under the New York statute disqualify one from acting as executor or administrator is a conviction in the courts of that state. O'Brien v. Neubert, 3 Dem. 55.

Verdicts against one for feloniously or fraudulently taking property and for criminal conversation do not disqualify. Coope v. Lowerre, supra.

Unless repeated offenses establish "improvidence," which the statute makes a disqualification. Ibid.

A conviction of larceny in another state will not warrant the rejection of an executor as incompetent on account of "improvidence" within the New York statute. O'Brien v. Neubert, supra.

The fact that the applicant for letters is a professional gambler is presumptive evidence of such improvidence as to disqualify him for the office of executor or administrator. McMahon v. Harrison, 6 N. Y. 443.

That an executor has been adjudged an habitual drunkard does not affect the validity of a sale of land made by him under a power contained in the will. Sill v. McKnight, 7 Watts & S. 244. J. G. G.

Redf. Wills, pt. 2, chap. 2, § 6, par. 8. See also par. 8.

One's choice of an executor, by his last will, being so solemn an act, and by a person legally capable of making a choice among friends and kindred, should be heeded.

Schouler, Exrs. & Admsrs. § 83.

Any person may be an executor if mentally capable of executing its duties.

Stewart's App. 56 Me. 300.

It would be arbitrary, as well as unjust, for a court to adjudge that a person of sufficient capacity to make a will had not sufficient to select a trustee to manage his estate as executor.

Shields v. Shields, 60 Barb. 60.

The surrogate has no discretion to exercise in the matter, but must obey the requirements of the statute, which is the sole source of his power.

McGregor v. McGregor, 8 Abb. App. Dec. 93; Berry v. Hamilton, 12 B. Mon. 191, 54 Am. Dec. 515, note, p. 518.

Torrance, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Shortly after the will of one Bridget Smith had been admitted to probate, Bryan J. Smith, as son of the deceased, of full age and of average mental capacity, who was appointed executor by the will, appeared before the probate court, and offered to accept said trust, to qualify as such executor, and to give bond as required by law. The court of probate found that he was not a fit person to execute the trust, refused to approve of his appointment as executor under the will, and thereupon, all of the next of kin having refused to accept the trust, appointed one Cassin as administrator with the will annexed of said estate. From these two decrees an appeal was duly taken to the superior court. In the reasons of appeal filed in that court the above stated facts were, in substance, set forth.

To the reasons of appeal, the appellees in the superior court filed this answer: "(1) The said Bryan J. Smith, who was named as executor of the will of the said Bridget Smith, deceased, was incapable to accept said trust, because he was not a man of honesty and integrity and experience in business affairs. (2) The said court of probate appointed said James J. Cassin to be administrator with the will annexed, because all of the next of kin of the deceased, except the said Bryan J. Smith, neglected to appear and refused to accept said trust."

The appellants in the superior court demurred to this answer, on the ground that the matters therein alleged afforded no justification for the action of the court of probate, were irrelevant and immaterial, and did not show any want of mental capacity in said Smith to accept said appointment as executor. The superior court sustained the demurrer, and subsequently rendered judgment setting aside the action of the court of probate in the premises. The present appeal is brought to review this action of the superior court. The claim of the present appellants is that the superior court erred in holding that Smith was not incapable of accepting the office of executor under the facts admitted by the demurrer, and whether the court did or did not err in so holding is the principal question in the case. In the brief of the present appellants it seems to be conceded that, prior to 1885, the court of probate would have had no power to refuse to approve of the appointment of an executor merely for the causes alleged against Smith. But it is claimed that the power of the court in matters of this kind was enlarged by the changes made in the revision of the Probate Laws in 1885. The statute bearing upon the question under consideration as it appears in the Revision of 1875, reads as follows: "Upon the refusal of an executor to accept the trust or to give a bond, the court shall commit the administration of the estate, with the will annexed, to the widow or next of kin of the deceased," etc. Revision 1875, p. 871, § 12. Prior to 1885 this statute, in substantially the same form, had remained upon the statute book for nearly two centuries. In the year 1885, in the revision of the probate laws, it was made to read as follows: "If no executor be named in the will, or if the executor named therein shall have died, or shall refuse or be incapable to accept the trust, or to give a bond, the court shall commit the administration of the estate with the will annexed to the husband," etc. Pub. Acts 1885, chap. 110, § 141. In this form it now appears as section 549 of the present General Statutes. It will thus be seen that, so far as the present case is concerned, the only change made in the law was made by inserting the words, "or . . . be incapable to accept the trust," and upon the construction of these words the decision of the case at bar must rest.

The present appellants contend that if a person is lacking in honesty or integrity or business experience, or at least, if he is lacking in all three, he is to be deemed "incapable to accept the trust," within the meaning of this statute. We think this claim is not well founded. It should be remembered that, independently of any statute upon the subject, the rule of the common law was that all persons might be appointed as executors who were mentally capable of executing the duties of the trust, or, as it is otherwise stated, who were capable of making a will, or were not specially disqualified. Stewart's App. 56 Me. 300; Schouler, Exrs. § 82; Redf. Wills, pt. 2, chap. 2, § 8. This general rule has been modified by statute in some of our states. It is also, we think, quite clear upon principle and authority that where a testator appoints an executor out of the class recognized, either by the common law or by statute, as capable of accepting and performing the duties of such a trust, the court invested with authority to admit the will to probate cannot reject the person so appointed, or refuse to approve of the appointment, except in cases where the law has specially so provided. In a case decided in New York, in 1864, under a statute of that state, Judge Johnson uses the following language: "I am of the opinion that any person appointed or named executor in a will is to be deemed to be competent unless he is declared incompetent by statute, and that it is the duty of the surrogate to grant letters to every person named executor in a will, upon his application, who is not declared incompetent by some statute. He has no discretion to exercise in the matter, but must obey the requirements of the statute, which is the sole source of his power. To allow surrogates to invent new causes of disqualification, and add to those prescribed by statute, would be conferring novel and dangerous powers upon those officers of special and limited jurisdiction." McGregor v. McGregor, 8 Abb. App. Dec. 92. In the same case Judge Denio said: "The selection of executors is not committed to the surrogate's court. The testator is allowed to appoint such persons as he may select, provided they do not fall within the classes of incompetent persons mentioned in the statute." In a Kentucky case, decided in 1851, the court says: "The moral unfitness of the person appointed as executor of a will cannot be inquired into by the court to which he applies for permission to qualify. He derives his office from testamentary appointment, and, if he is a person not disqualified by law from being an executor, the court has no right to refuse to permit him to qualify, or to refuse to grant him letters testamentary." Berry v. Hamilton, 12 B. Mon. 191, 54 Am. Dec. 515. "One is not disqualified from acting as executor on account of crime. He may act in that capacity, although attainted or outlawed, under the English law. Nor does immorality or habitual drunkenness, by the American practice, disqualify one to act in that office." Redf. Wills, art. 3, chap. 2, § 8. So far as we are aware, these citations are in substantial agreement with our own law upon this subject. Thus Swift says: "Every person who is capable of making a will may be appointed an executor." 1 Swift, System of Laws, 423. In his Digest, Judge Swift says: "An executor is a person appointed by the testator to carry his will into effect. Any person may be appointed an executor, excepting an idiot or alien enemy." 1 Swift, Dig. 442. From a very early period our statutes on this subject have made the power of the court of probate to appoint, in the first instance, an administrator with the will annexed, to depend upon the refusal, express or implied, of the executor named in the will to accept the trust; and they have always contained provisions of a more or less stringent nature, whose object was to compel the executor to produce the will and to accept or refuse the trust. Down to 1885, as we have seen, the statute in terms permitted the court of probate in the first instance to appoint an administrator with the will annexed, only in case the executor named in the will refused to accept the trust or give bond. Under this statute it was doubtless within the power of the court of probate to refuse to approve of the appointment of one as executor who was by common law disqualified to act as such, but even this is, perhaps, left somewhat in doubt by the terms of the statute. Of course, a refusal to accept might, under certain circumstances, be implied. Ayres v. Wood, 16 Conn. 291; Solomon v. Wilson, 27 Conn. 520.

18 L. R. A.

It is obvious, however, that in cases where a will has been proved, contingencies, other than the mere refusal of the executor to accept the trust, might exist which would equally make the appointment of an administrator necessary. The will might not contain the name of any one as executor; the executor, if named, might have died before the will was probated; or, if named and living, might be incapable to accept the trust. This last contingency may arise from two causes. The person named in the will might be by law disqualified to be an executor. In such case, as we have intimated, the terms of the old statute left it doubtful, perhaps, whether the court of probate could commit the administration of the estate to another. If qualified by law to act as executor, his condition or circumstances at the time when it became his duty to accept or refuse the trust might be such that he could not legally manifest or declare his acceptance thereof, and yet, at the same time, it might well be impossible to imply a legal refusal from his neglect or failure to accept. Such cases may easily be supposed, and doubtless had occurred in actual practice, giving rise to doubt and uncertainty as to the course to be pursued under such circumstances. It was, we think, to cover these two classes of cases, and to put an end to all doubt as to the power of the probate court to commit the administration of the estate, under such circumstances, to a person other than the one named in the will, that the words "incapable to accept the trust" were inserted in the statute. The present appellants construe them as adding, to the list of matters which disqualify persons from being executors at common law, certain other matters of the nature of those alleged in the case at bar. The trouble with such a construction is that it leaves the court of probate to determine what such other disqualifying matters are, after the testator has made his choice. The statute has not defined them, nor indicated in any way what they are. The court, rather than the law, will thus largely determine who may be executors. Then, too, the test of moral fitness or want of business experience is a very variable test. The question will ever be largely one of degree, and different men will differ, both as to the test to be applied and as to the kind or degree of immoral character or reputation or want of business experience which will render a person "incapable to accept the trust." Then, again, the trial and decision of questions of this nature is a task of no little delicacy and difficulty. Upon this subject the court of Kentucky, in a case from which we have already quoted, says: "If the opinions of men in regard to the moral character of those who may be appointed executors, and in whom testators repose confidence, whatever those opinions may be, are to be received, and are to constitute the evidence by which, in law, we are to ascertain who may and who may not be appointed executors, we apprehend that but few appointments would fail to be contested by some of the relatives of testators, who are often too easy to be dissatisfied, or by persons who themselves desire to be administrators for personal aggrandizement, or who would rejoice in so fitting an opportunity to gratify some private hatred. Such inquiries would involve questions of very difficult and doubtful decisions, such as, how good a man must be to qualify him for an executor, and how bad he must be to disqualify him. How could any certain rule of determination be established? Inquiries of such a nature would be the most vague and uncertain in their results of any ever instituted in a court of justice, and would, in our opinion, be absurd in the extreme." Berry v. Hamilton, 12 B. Mon. 191.

Prior to 1885, certainly, the law, and not the court of probate, determined who should and who should not be executors, and it defined beforehand with tolerable clearness the matters that disqualified a person from being an executor. It also, to say the least, regarded with a good deal of favor the right of a testator to choose his executor from the class not disqualified. The construction contended for would radically change the law in all these respects. It seems to us this would be a violent construction to put upon the language used. Had the Legislature intended to make so radical a change in our law, it would have used words much better adapted to convey such a meaning than the language now under consideration. For these reasons we cannot adopt the construction contended for by the present appellants, and think the construction we have adopted will give full force and effect to the intention of the Legislature in putting into the statute the words "incapable to accept the trust." If the persons appointed and approved of as executors, under our construction of the law, prove to be incapable of executing the trust, or shall neglect to perform the duties thereof, or shall waste the estate, ample power is given for their removal, and the appointment of better men in their stead.

There is no error in the judgment appealed from.

The other Judges concurred.

TEXAS SUPREME COURT.

Edward ROSS et al., Plffs. in Err.,

A. W. MORROW et al.

(.....Tex.....)

1. A person was held not to be an innocent purchaser of land from heirs without notice that another person was also an heir where he testified that he knew the latter well and was with him much in boyhood; also that he knew the mother for many years while she was living with her second husband, but did not know the relationship of the parties.
2. A person becomes of age on the day before the twenty-first anniversary of his birthday.
3. The period of limitation of an action which accrues at a person's majority begins to run the day before his twenty-first birthday. That day is to be included in the computation of the time, and therefore a period limited by years will expire on the second day before his birthday anniversary.

(June 7, 1892.)

ERROR to the District Court for Burnet County to review a judgment in favor of defendants in an action brought to try title to certain real estate. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the commissioner's opinion.

Messrs. Robson & Rosenthal and Moore & Duncan, for plaintiffs in error:

In computing the time in which an action is barred, the day on which the cause of action accrues, or the day on which an event is to happen, is excluded from the time to be computed. When time is to be computed after an act done, or the happening of an event, the day on

NOTE.—On what day a person becomes of age.

To ascertain when a man is legally "of the age of twenty-one years," we must have reference to the common law and those legal decisions which from time immemorial have settled this matter in reference to all the important affairs of life. When can a person make a valid will; when can he execute a deed for land; when make any contract or do any act which a man may do, and an infant, that is, a person under the age of twenty-one years, cannot do? On these questions the law is well settled; it admits of no doubt. A person is "of the age of twenty-one years" the day before the twenty-first anniversary of his birthday. It is not necessary that he shall have entered upon his birthday, or he would be more than twenty-one years old. He is, therefore, of age the day before the anniversary of his birth, and, as the law takes no notice of fractions of a day, he is necessarily of age the whole of the day before his twenty-first birthday, and upon any and every moment of that day may do any act which any man may lawfully do. State v. Clarke, 3 Harr. (Del.) 557; Hamlin v. Stevenson, 4 Dana, 597; Wells v. Wells, 6 Ind. 447; Bardwell v. Purrrington, 107 Mass. 419; Phelan v. Douglass, 11 How. Pr. 198; Herbert v. Torball, 1 Sid. 162, 1 Keb. 589; Grant v. Grant, 4 Younge & C. 256.

In Fitzhugh v. Dennington, 6 Mod. 250, 1 Salk. 44, Chief Justice Holt says, without citing any case on the point: "It has been adjudged that if one be born on the first day of February at eleven o'clock at night, and the last day in January in the one and twentieth year at one of the clock in the morning he makes his will, and dies, yet such will is good, for he then was of age."

In Redfield on Wills, p. 20, the author, although declaring his personal dissent from the correctness of the doctrine, says: "This rule seems to have maintained its ground for nearly two centuries without question."

The rule is so laid down in Swinburne (pt. 2, § 2, pl. 7); in Blackstone's Commentaries (vol. 1, p. 468); in Kent's Commentaries (vol. 2, p. 293); in Bingham which an act is to be done, or the event is to happen, is to be excluded from the count.

Smith v. Dicky, 74 Tex. 61, and authorities there cited.

Mr. T. E. Hammond, for defendants in error:

The court did not err in finding that defendants in error were innocent purchasers for a valuable consideration and without notice of the claims and rights of plaintiffs in error to the land in controversy in the suit.

Flanagan v. Oberthier, 50 Tex. 379; Clarke v. Koehler, 32 Tex. 679; Hill v. Moore, 62 Tex. 610; Edwards v. Brown, 68 Tex. 329.

In computing the age of a person, the day of his birth is included. A person is therefore of the age of "twenty-one years" the day before the twenty-first anniversary of his birthday. And hence Nathan Ross was twenty-one years of age on the 16th day of April, 1881. He was barred by the five years' Statute of Limitation, on the 15th day of April, 1886,—the day before the institution of the suit of plaintiffs in error.

? Wait, Act & Def. pp. 129, 180, and authorities there cited.

Hobby, P. J., filed the following opinion:

This is an action of trespass to try title to the land described in the petition. It was brought on the 16th of April, 1886, by Edward, Henry, Nathan, and Nancy Ross, the children and heirs of Anderson Ross, against the defendants, A. W. and J. T. Morrow. It was agreed that both parties derive title from Jesse Burnham as a common source, who occupied it in 1857. The land was the community property of Jesse Burnham and his wife, Nancy Burnham, who were married in 1837. Anderson Ross was the child of Nancy Burnham by a previous marriage with J. G. Ross. She died in February, 1863, leaving said Anderson Ross and five other children by her second marriage with Jesse Burnham her heirs. Anderson Ross died in December, 1864, leaving as his heirs the plaintiffs. Jesse Burnham died in 1883. Prior to his death, on January 11, 1864, he conveyed to his children, Emily, Sarah, Waddy, Gid, and Adelia Burnham, by the marriage with Nancy Burnham, the land in controversy. This conveyance was acknowledged and recorded in September, 1865. They took possession of and resided on the land until they sold it to the defendants for a valuable consideration in April, 1870. The defendants have been in possession and have paid the taxes thereon since. The court found that the defendants were purchasers in good faith, for value, and that they had no knowledge of the fact that the plaintiffs had any interest in the land until the institution of this suit. The court also found that Nat. Ross was born on the 17th day of April, 1860, and that he was twenty-one years old on the 16th day of April, 1881, and that the five-years limitation as to him expired on the 15th day of April, 1886, one day before the institution of this suit. Henry Ross, one of the plaintiffs, and Mrs. Josepha Ligon, one of the defendants, are admitted to be barred by limitation, and hence do not appeal from the judgment. Plaintiffs in error Edward and Nathan Ross and Mrs. Homuth bring the case up to review so much of the judge's conclusions of facts and law as holds that the defendants in error are purchasers in good faith, and holds that Nathan Ross is barred by the five-year Statute of Limitation. The errors assigned present only those two points.

The first assignment is that the court erred in rendering judgment against plaintiffs in error, and in favor of defendants in error, "because the facts undisputed show that the land sued for was the community property of Jesse and Nancy Burnham, deceased, at the date of the death of the said Nancy, who died intestate; that at the death of said Nancy she left surviving her six children, one of whom was Anderson Ross, the father of plaintiffs in error; that five of said children of Nancy had conveyed their interest in the land in controversy to defendants in error, but neither said Anderson Ross nor his heirs had ever transferred or parted with their interest; that the said Anderson Ross is dead, and the plaintiffs in error are his heirs, and as such were entitled to a one twentieth each of the land sued for." The finding of the court that the defendants were innocent purchasers without notice of the rights of the plaintiffs, and the further finding that the plaintiff Nat. Ross was barred on Infancy (p. 2); and by Mr. Justice Metcalf, in his valuable commentaries upon Contracts (20 Am. Jurist, 262; Met. Cont. 38). In addition to this great weight of authority, the same rule has been adopted by some of the American courts. (State v. Clarke, 3 Harr. (Del.) 567; Hamlin v. Stevenson, 4 Dana, 597.) To this we may add that the same rule is promulgated in the latest English edition of Mr. Jarman's valuable treatise upon Wills. (1 Jarman, Wills, ed. 1861, 30).

"Full age in male or female is twenty-one years, which age is completed on the day preceding the anniversary of a person's birth." If he is born on the first of January, he is of age to do any legal act on the morning of the last day of December, though he may not have lived twenty-one years by nearly forty-eight hours; the reason assigned is, that in law there is no fraction of a day, and if the birth were on the first second of one day, and the act on the last second of the other, then the twenty-one years would be complete, and in law it is the 16 L. R. A.

same thing whether a thing is done upon one moment of the day or on another. 1 Bl. Com. *463; Metcalf, Cont. p. 38.

In the comparatively recent case of Bardwell v. Purrington, supra, it was held that a person born on the eighth day of September, 1852, would become of the full age of twenty-one years if he should live to the seventh day of that month in 1873. He would be entitled to be considered as having attained his majority at the earliest minute of that day.

The same case held that an instrument executed by the overseers of the poor to bind J. S. as an apprentice under Gen. Stat., chap. 111, § 4, which purports to bind him from its date until a day named, "when the said J. S. will arrive at the age of twenty-one years, during which time the said J. S. shall faithfully serve," is not wholly void because under the rule of law excluding fractions of a day in computation of time J. S. will become of full age on the day next preceding that so named. F. S. R.

by the Statute of Limitation of five years, are both made the basis of assignments, and present the questions decisive of the case. There is no doubt that the plaintiffs inherited the interest of their father, Anderson Ross, in the estate of his mother, Mrs. Nancy Burnham, and that at her death in February, 1863, he inherited one sixth of her community interest in the land in dispute. This being so, the plaintiffs are entitled to recover this interest, unless the defendants are shown to be innocent purchasers for value without notice of the fact that Anderson Ross was the heir of Nancy Burnham at the time of their purchase from the other five heirs of said Nancy and Jesse Burnham, or unless they have acquired title by limitation. The proof relating to the question whether or not the defendant A. W. Morrow was ignorant of the fact that Anderson Ross had any interest in the land is as follows: He testified that he "did not know that Nancy Burnham had any other children except Gid, Waddy, Sarah E., and Adelia Burnham and Mrs. Emily Hunter; that he did not know that Nancy Burnham was the mother of Anderson Ross; that he bought the entire tract in controversy in this suit; that Anderson Ross never lived with Jesse and Nancy Burnham; that he never saw him at their house, and that he had no knowledge of said Anderson being one of the family; that the persons constituting the family of Jesse Burnham at the time of the purchase by witness of the land in controversy were Gid, Waddy, Sarah E., and Adelia Burnham and Mrs. Emily Hunter; and that he thought these people constituted the entire Burnham family. On cross-examination, witness testified that he lived in Fayette county from 1838 to 1852; that he lived at Rutersville, about five miles from La Grange; that he was not acquainted with Jesse Burnham while he lived in Fayette county; that he knew of him, and that he lived at La Grange; that Jesse and Nancy Burnham removed from Fayette to Burnet county in 1853 or 1854; that he knew Jesse and Nancy Burnham well from about 1856, when they lived in Burnet county; that he knew them as man and wife, and was acquainted with their children in Burnet county; that he was at their house in 1862, and lived in their neighborhood in Burnet county from and after the year 1868; that he knew Anderson Ross well; that as boys he and Anderson Ross associated together a good deal; that he did not know that Nancy Burnham was the mother of Anderson Ross; that Anderson Ross lived in Fayette county on what was known as 'Ross Prairie,' about three miles from Rutersville; that he did not live with Jesse and Nancy Burnham in Burnet county." He testified that he paid $3 per acre for the entire tract involved in this suit, 684 acres of which he owns, and 300 acres of which he conveyed to his codefendant, A. W. Morrow. We think that, the defendants having notice of the fact that the property was the community property of Jesse Burnham and his wife, and of the fact of her death, and having bought the land from her heirs, they cannot claim, under the facts of the case, to be purchasers without notice of who her heirs were.

16 L. R. A.

The court found that Nathan Ross was born on April 17, 1860, and that he was twenty-one years old on the 16th day of April, 1881, and that five years had expired on the 15th day of April, 1886, one day before the institution of this suit. The court held, therefore, that he was barred by the Statute of Limitation of five years. The rule adopted in computing the age of a person is that the day of his birth is included; and on the day before the twenty-first anniversary he is held to be twenty-one years of age. Under the operation of this rule, Nathan Ross was twenty-one on the 16th day of April, 1881. 7 Wait, Act. & Def. 129. On that day, April 16, 1881, his disability of minority was removed, and he could have instituted his suit at any moment of that day. The Statute of Limitation, therefore, commenced to run against him on that day. It follows from this that the 16th day of April, 1881, the day on which he attained his majority, must be included in the computation of time against him; and, including it, the five years allowed him under article 3201, Sayles' Civil Stat., expired on the 15th day of April, 1886, one day before the institution of this suit. The court, therefore, correctly held that he was barred. The question is discussed in Phelan v. Douglass, 11 How. Pr. 193. In that case, the plaintiff was born on the 14th December, 1820. "By well-settled rules," it was said, "he was competent to bring suit as being of full age on the 13th December, 1841." By the law of New York, he was allowed ten years after the termination of his infancy within which to sue. He brought suit on the 13th day of December, 1851. It was claimed in that case by the plaintiff that the suit was brought in time. The defendant contended that the right of action expired on the 12th day of December, 1851. The question was whether, under the foregoing facts, plaintiff was barred by limitation. The court in the discussion of the question says: "The rule is well established that, when an act is to be done in a certain number of days, months, or years from the happening of an event or the doing of an act, in computing the time the day on which the event happened or the act was done is to be excluded." Such, too, it is said, is the rule in respect to time of pleading and service of process,—the day of service is excluded. "The reason of the rule is that the law takes no notice of fractions of a day, except in cases where the hour itself becomes material." But "this reason of the rule," the court says, "ceases whenever the party affected has a whole day as one of those to be included in the computation." In the case cited the plaintiff's disability was removed with the last moment of the 12th December, 1841, and he could have sued during the whole of the 13th December, 1841. He had ten years after the removal of such disability to bring his suit. In computing the time, the 13th December was included, because he had the "whole and entire part of that day to sue in; not a fractional part, but every moment of it." So computing the time, the ten years allowed in the case cited expired with the expiration of the 12th December, 1851. As he did not sue until the 18th December, 1851, the entire ten years had elapsed, and he was barred. The case cited is decisive of the question in this case.

But for the error in holding that appellees were purchasers without notice of the rights of Anderson Ross, as an heir of Nancy Burnham, the judgment should be reversed, and the cause remanded.

Adopted by Supreme Court, June 7, 1892.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, FIFTH CIRCUIT.

SOUTHWESTERN TELEGRAPH & TELEPHONE CO. Ptff. in Err.,

v.

J. B. ROBINSON.

(.....Fed. Rep.)

Injury caused by electricity generated by a thunder storm in a telephone wire which was negligently allowed to hang across a highway so low that a traveler came in contact with it in the dark, renders the telephone company liable as the wire furnished the means by which the dangerous force was communicated and the injury caused.

(May 30, 1892.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Texas to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have resulted from defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

Before Pardee, Circuit Judge, and Locke and Bruce, District Judges.

Statement by Bruce, District Judge:

Plaintiff in error was sued by defendant in error in the district court of Cooke county, Tex., for damages in the sum of $12,000. He states his cause of action as follows:

"Your petitioner, J. B. Robinson, a resident of Cooke county, Tex., complaining of the Southwestern Telegraph & Telephone Company, a private corporation incorporated under the laws of the state of New York, but doing business in the state of Texas and having a legal office in Gainesville, Cooke county, Texas, respectfully represents that on or about the 29th day of October, A. D. 1889, the defendant owned and operated a telephone line between the cities of Gainesville and Dallas, Tex., and intermediate points, the connection between said cities being made by a single wire suspended by means of poles in the manner of telegraph wires, usually about thirty feet from the ground; that its said telephone line or wire crossed the public highway between Dallas and McKinney, known as the 'Dallas and McKinney Road,' about five miles south of Plano, in Dallas county; that at said points and over said road on the aforesaid date, and for several weeks prior thereto, the defendant negligently suffered and permitted its aforesaid wires to be and remain suspended over said road within a few feet of the ground, and within such proximity thereto that travelers on the said road unavoidably and necessarily came in contact therewith; that the said wire so suspended over said road, which was a public highway between two large cities, and daily traveled by many people in vehicles and on horseback, all of which was known to the defendant, was a dangerous and unlawful obstruction of said road, and a public nuisance, and that the defendant on the aforesaid date, and long prior thereto, knew of the condition of said wire at said point, or might have known it by the exercise of reasonable care but nevertheless negligently permitted it to remain in the condition aforesaid; that the said wires are the best known conductors of electricity, and are the only vehicles in general use for the transmission of electric currents, and, during electric or thunder storms, such wires ordinarily become heavily charged with electricity, of power sufficient to inflict death or do great injury to those coming in contact with them, and that from this fact arises the peculiar danger of allowing such wires to remain suspended so low that people will come in contact with them,—all of which was on the aforesaid date and long prior thereto well known to the defendant, or might have been known to it by the exercise of ordinary care; that on the afternoon of the aforesaid date, as plaintiff was traveling on horseback on the said Dallas and McKinney highway during the prevalence of a heavy thunder storm, such, however, as is usual in that section at that season of the year, he came in contact with the defendant's said wire at the point aforesaid, in consequence of its being suspended so near the ground; that it was a dark, stormy evening, and that the wire was invisible to plaintiff, and plaintiff came in contact with it through no fault or negligence on his part, but through the gross negligence and carelessness of the defendant, as aforesaid, in leaving said wire suspended over a public highway within a few feet of the ground; that at the time said wire was heavily charged with electricity generated by the storm then prevailing, as aforesaid, and, on coming in contact with it, plaintiff received a full charge of the fluid, which knocked him from his horse and completely paralyzed him for the time being, depriving him of

NOTE.—For notes on proximate and remote cause, see Smith v. Kanawha County Court (W. Va.) 8 L. R. A. 82; Read v. Nichols (N. Y.) 7 L. R. A. 130; 16 L. R. A.

Louisville N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Lucas (Ind.) 6 L. R. A. 193; Smethurst v. Independent Congregational Church (Mass.) 2 L. R. A. 694.

85

See also 17 L. R. A. 726; 18 L. R. A. 479, 759; 22 L. R. A. 635; 25 L. R. A. 552; 26 L. R. A. 101, 810; 27 L. R. A. 365.

the power of speech and locomotion; that plaintiff lay in the road where he had been thrown, in the rain and storm, until picked up by a passer-by, and carried to a neighboring house, and there plaintiff was confined to his bed for more than five weeks, suffering during this period severe bodily pain and mental anguish. Plaintiff represents that he is but little past middle age, and before said injuries was of a vigorous mind and robust constitution, and capable of great endurance and physical and mental activity, but that, in consequence of said injuries, his health and mental faculties have been permanently and seriously impaired, and his capacity to pursue his usual avocation practically destroyed, to his actual damages ten thousand dollars. Plaintiff further represents that, on account of said injuries, he has been put to great expense for medical attention, and that his condition is such as to require, for the future, constant medical treatment and the care of his family, who are thus withdrawn from their customary duties, to his actual damages two thousand dollars. Wherefore, plaintiff sues, and prays that the defendant be cited to answer herein, and that on final hearing he have judgment for his said damages, costs, and for further general and special relief."

The case was removed into the circuit court of the United States for the northern district of Texas, and the defendant answered as follows:

"Now comes defendant, and for answer by way of demurrer to plaintiff's cause of action says, first, that the plaintiff ought not to have and maintain this cause, for that his original petition does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cognizable and enforceable demand before the law. Of this he prays the judgment of the court. And for further answer, if such be necessary, defendant says it denies each and singular the allegations in the plaintiff's petition contained, and says it is not guilty of the wrongs, injuries, and negligent conduct charged; and of this it puts itself upon the country. And, answering further, it says if plaintiff was injured in any manner, it was the result of his negligence,—that he failed to exercise that reasonable degree of care, in traveling at the dangerous time in which he alleges he was traveling, and in avoiding contact with defendant's line during a thunder storm, that a reasonably prudent man ought to have exercised under like circumstances. Wherefore, defendant says plaintiff ought not to recover, and of this it puts itself upon the country."

The case was heard, and the demurrer was overruled, to which ruling the defendant excepted, and the trial before court and jury resulted in a verdict for plaintiff in the sum of $2,500, for which amount, with interest and costs, judgment was afterwards rendered. Motion for new trial was filed, heard, and overruled by the court. The assignment of error is that in the record of the proceedings of the above cause in the trial court there is manifest error, in this, to wit:

"The court erred in overruling the general demurrer of the said Southwestern Telegraph 16 L. R. A.

& Telephone Company to the original petition and cause of action of the said J. B. Robinson, as will appear from an inspection of the said petition, demurrer, and judgment of the court thereon."

Mr. John W. Wray for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. M. L. Crawford, W. O. Davis, and J. L. Harris for defendant in error.

Bruce, District Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

The question and the only question for review here is whether the plaintiff stated a cause of action in his petition, and if the demurrer to the cause of action, as stated by the plaintiff in the court below, was properly overruled. In Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. Jones, 95 U. S. 439, 24 L. ed. 506, it is said negligence is the failure to do what a reasonable and prudent person would ordinarily have done, under the circumstances of the situation, or doing what such a person, under the existing circumstances, would not have done. It would seem too plain to require argument that the allegations of the petition show negligence on the part of the telephone company. Under the facts and circumstances stated the wire was an obstruction upon the public highway. Travelers were liable to collide with it, and injurious consequences to them would follow as the natural and probable result of such contact. Article 623 of the Revised Civil Statutes of Texas provides: "Corporations created for the purpose of constructing and maintaining magnetic telegraph lines are authorized to set their poles, piers, abutments, wires, and other fixtures along, upon, and across any of the public roads, streets, and waters of the state, in such manner as not to incommode the public in the use of such roads, streets, or waters."

The duty on the part of the telephone company was clear to prevent its wire from becoming an obstruction on the highway. Under the circumstances shown the defendant in error might have been hurt by coming in contact with the wire of the telephone company, and injuries to the defendant in error might have resulted, independent of the fact that the wire at the time was loaded with a charge of electric fluid from the clouds and storm then prevailing. So that it is difficult to see how this verdict could be disturbed even if the contention of the plaintiff in error is correct, that the electricity with which the wire was charged at the time was the proximate and immediate cause of injury to the defendant in error, for which the telephone company cannot be held responsible. Negligence is a mixed question of law and fact, and is a question for the jury, under proper instructions from the court. It is not claimed here that the court misdirected the jury in its charge on the law of the case, and the verdict is: "We, the jury, find for the plaintiff in the sum of twenty-five hundred dollars." The jury found negligence on the part of the telephone company, resulting in injuries to the defendant in error, and for which they assess his damages at $2,500. It is not shown that the jury found that the wire of the telephone company was charged with electricity at the time the defendant in error came in contact with it, and that the electric fluid was the cause of the injury to the defendant in error, and so it is not clear that there was any error in the ruling of the court, even upon the theory of the case insisted upon by the plaintiff in error. No point is made on the question of contributory negligence, and the contention of the plaintiff in error seems to be that the petition states the cause of action to have been the injuries which resulted from the fact that the wire at the time of the contact with it by the defendant was charged with electric fluid, for the creation and existence of which the telephone company was in no sense responsible. Persons, however, must be held to know the ordinary operation of the forces of nature, and to use proper means to avert danger. If the electric fluid with which the wire of the telephone company was charged at the time was an element or the main element in the production of the injuries to the defendant in error, still it is clear that the displaced wire furnished the means of the communication of the dangerous force which resulted in the injury to the defendant in error. Science and common experience show that wires suspended in the atmosphere attract electricity in the time of storms, and when so suspended and insulated are dangerous to persons who may at such times be brought in contact with them, and the petition charges that, during electric or thunder storms, such wires ordinarily become heavily charged with electricity, of power sufficient to cause death or great injury to those coming in contact with them; and whether this is so or not is a question of fact. To say that the agency of the telephone wire in the production of the injury was inferior to that of the electric current, which was the main cause, is not satisfactory. It is, in fact, to admit that the company's displaced wire furnished the means by which the dangerous force was communicated to and injured the defendant in error. True, it was a new force or power which intervened, with the production of which the telephone company had nothing to do, but upon this point, in Louisiana Mut. Ins. Co. v. Trood, 74 U. S. 7 Wall. 52, 19 L. ed. 67, the court says: "If a new force or power has intervened, of itself sufficient to stand as the cause of the misfortune, the other must be considered as too remote."

The new force or power here would have been harmless but for the displaced wire and the fact that the wire took on a new force, with the creation of which the company was not responsible, yet it contributed no less directly to the injury on that account. In Gleason v. Virginia M. R. Co., 140 U. S. 485, 35 L. ed. 458, the court held that a landslide in a railway cut caused by an ordinary fall of rain is not an act of God, which will exempt the railway company from liability to passengers for injuries caused thereby while being carried on the railway; and on page 441 of the opinion in that case the court, quoting from an English case, says "that the plaintiff was entitled to a verdict on the ground that, if a person maintains a lamp projecting over a highway for his own purposes, it is his duty to maintain it so as not to be dangerous to persons passing by, and if it causes injuries, owing to a want of repair, it is no answer on his part that he had employed a competent man to repair it,"—citing 1 Thomp. Neg. pp. 846, 847.

No case is cited like the one at bar, but the principles upon which cases of this character have been decided sustain the verdict in this case, and the judgment of the court is affirmed.

MARYLAND COURT OF APPEALS.

David A. FLACK et al., Appts.,
v.

Frank GOSNELL, Trustee of James W. Flack.

(.....Md.....)

One tenant in common has no lien against his cotenant's interest in the property for rents in excess of his share collected and retained by such cotenant before partition of the land.

(June 7, 1892.)

A PPEAL by complainants from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Baltimore City

NOTE.—How far share of cotenant collecting rents is subject to lien in favor of his cotenant.

In Hannan v. Osborn, 4 Paige, Ch. 343, 3 L. ed. 468, the court said such rents although they may form an equitable lien on the premises as between tenants in common while they continue to hold the premises in common yet are a personal charge upon the individual receiving the same and upon his death are primarily payable out of his personal estate.

In an action for partition between the cotenants, the judgment may correctly make the amount found due from the one who has received the rents of the premises liens on his share of the real estate for the excess received beyond the share which belongs to him. Scott v. Guernsey, 60 Barb. 180, affirmed 48 N. Y. 124. See also Wright v. Wright, 59 How. Pr. 186.

And the fact that the rents are collected by the mortgagee of some of the undivided shares is immaterial. Kingsland v. Chetwood, 39 Hun, 606.

But the heir or devisee of the cotenant who collects the rent will not take his interest charged with the lien in favor of the cotenants. Platt v. Platt, 8 Cent. Rep. 61, 105 N. Y. 488.

In Roberts v. Beckwith, 79 Ill. 246, which was an action to recover a one-fifth share of the rents of property of which a man and his wife had been in exclusive possession although owning only four fifths of it, the court said it was proper to render a decree against the wife as well as against the husband.

sustaining a demurrer to so much of the complaint in a partition suit as sought to charge the interest of one of the cotenants with his cotenants' share of rents which he had collected and appropriated to his own use. Affirmed.

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion. Argued before Alvey, Ch. J., and Miller, Robinson, Bryan, McSherry, Fowler and Irving, JJ.

Mr. William E. Hoffman, for appellants: In this state, co-heirs are coparceners. Hoffar v. Dement, 5 Gill, 182, 46 Am. Dec. 628.

Coparceners are like partners. Hamilton v. Consine, 28 Md. 685, 92 Am. Dec. 724.

Cases of accounts between tenants in common, joint tenants, partners, part owners of ships and their masters, fall under the like considerations. They all involve peculiar agencies like those of bailiffs or managers of property, and require the same operative power of discovery and interposition of equity.

1 Story, Eq. 13th ed. § 466; Freem. Coten. 2d ed. § 269.

In cases of partition a court of equity will by its decree adjust all the equitable rights of the parties interested in the estate.

Story, Eq. § 656.

In partition cases this court has held to the general rule with reference to allowances, charges, and liens.

Warfield v. Walter, 11 Gill & J. 68; Lawes v. Lumpkin, 18 Md. 384; Ridgely v. Bond, Id. 443; McLaughlin v. Bornum, 81 Md. 425. See also Israel v. Israel, 30 Md. 120, 96 Am. Dec. 571; Brown v. Thomas, 46 Md. 636; Long v. Long, 62 Md. 74; Gittings v. Worthington, 67 Md. 189; Worthington v. Hiss, 70 Md. 172; Hoffman v. Cromwell, 6 Gill & J. 144.

Freeman on Cotenancy, 2d ed. § 425, says advantages of partition in equity are that the court "may decree a pecuniary compensation to one of the parties for owelty or equality; may compel cotenants to account with one another in regard to rents and profits received," etc.

The usual rule is that one who has actually received rents and profits of the real estate will be charged therefor in partition.

Moak's Underhill, Torts, pp. 881, 882.

This is not a new doctrine contended for by appellants, but is an established rule of law.

Kingsland v. Chetwood, 39 Hun, 606; Scott v. Guernsey, 60 Barb. 164, 48 N. Y. 107; Fisher v. Hersey, 85 N. Y. 633; Green v. Putnam, 1 Barb. 501; Haywood v. Judson, 4 Barb. 228; Hannan v. Osborn, 4 Paige, 836, 8 L. ed. 460; Hitchcock v. Skinner, 1 Hoffm. Ch. 80, 6 L. ed. 1058; Wright v. Wright, 59 How. Pr. 186; McArthur v. Scott, 81 Fed. Rep. 521; Campbell v. Campbell, 11 N. J. Eq. 268; Doughaday v. Crowell, Id. 201; Obert v. Obert, 10 N. J. Eq. 98; Brookfield v. Williams, 2 N. J. Eq. 846; Davidson v. Thompson, 22 N. J. Eq. 88; Roberts v. Beckwith, 79 Ill. 246; Dean v. O'Meara, 47 Ill. 120; Illinois Land & L. Co. v. Bonner, 75 Ill. 315; Honey v. Goings, 13 Ill. 107, 54 Am. Dec. 427; Mahoney v. Mahoney, 65 Ill. 406; Holloway v. Holloway, 97 Mo. 628; Roemer v. Griffith, 81 Mo. 171; Scanlin v. Allison, 82 Kan. 376; Carver v. Coffman, 8 West. Rep. 396, 109 Ind. 552; Alleman v. Hawley, 117 Ind. 587; Bridgeford v. Barbour, 80 Ky. 529; Sneed v. Atherton, 6 Dana, 281, 32 Am. Dec. 70; Graham v. Graham, 6 T. B. Mon. 562, 563, 17 Am. Dec. 166; Talbot v. Todd, 7 J. J. Marsh. 456; Miller v. Mills, 4 Neb. 362; Dall v. Confidence Silver Min. Co. 3 Nev. 531; Puckard v. King, 3 Colo. 211; Goodenow v. Fwer, 16 Cal. 471; Humphrey v. Foster, 18 Gratt. 653; Carter v. Carter, 5 Munf. 108; Arnett v. Munnerlyn, 71 Ga. 14; Hines v. Munnerlyn, 57 Ga. 82; Pope v. Harkins, 16 Ala. 321; Backler v. Farrow, 2 Hill, Eq. 111. See also Lawson, Rights, Rem. & Pr. p. 4464, § 2733; Adams, Eq. 8th ed. p. 282; Lorimer v. Lorimer, 5 Madd. Ch. 363; Wills v. Slade, 6 Ves. Jr. 498; France v. France, L. R. 18 Eq. 178; Story v. Johnson, 2 Younge & C. 586; Hill v. Fullbrook, Jac. Ch. 574; Pascoe v. Swan, 27 Beav. 508.

band and make the amount found due a lien on her interest in the property.

In Hines v. Munnerlyn, 57 Ga. 82, a bill was filed for a partition and to enjoin a sale of the property under a mortgage which had been given by the cotenant in possession. In dealing with the question of rents the court said, while it may be true that the complainants have not strictly a legal lien upon the corpus of the joint property or upon their cotenants one half of it for what he may be indebted to them for the exclusive use of the property, still the complainants have a clear equitable right to have the share of the joint property charged with the indebtedness in the decree for partition, especially where the cotenant is insolvent; and the lien so decreed will be given precedence over the mortgage.

This case was followed in Arnett v. Munnerlyn, 71 Ga. 17.

Where one cotenant is in receipt of all the rents and in the exclusive enjoyment of the whole premises refusing to let his cotenant in, and such ousted tenant has paid money to relieve the common property of incumbrances, the court will declare a charge in favor of such ousted tenant for the amount of his share of the rents and for the amount which his cotenant should contribute toward the incumbrance on the latter's share in the property to be paid out of the proceeds of the partition sale before division is made. Holloway v. Holloway, 97 Mo. 640.

In Beck v. Kallmeyer, 48 Mo. App. 563, the question is discussed quite fully and the court decides that if one tenant mortgages his undivided interest and collects the rents accruing from the property, the lien of the cotenant for his share of those rents takes precedence over the mortgage; and this applies as to rents collected either before or after the mortgage and prior to its foreclosure.

Although in McArthur v. Scott, 81 Fed. Rep. 521, it was decided that the equitable claim of one tenant in common against his cotenant for rents and profits received in excess of his share is superior only to subsequent mortgages or liens.

In contradistinction to the above line of authority is the case of Burch v. Burch, 82 Ky. 622, which held that there is no lien in favor of a joint tenant against his cotenant for rents collected by the latter before a partition of the land. In that case the court considers the question on principle and cites no authority for its conclusions. This decision was followed in Clark v. Hershey, 62 Ark. 473.

H. P. F.

Messrs. Thomas M. Lanahan and Frank Gosnell for appellee.

Irving, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The facts of this case are as follows: Thomas J. Flack died in 1874, seised and possessed of the reversions in fee of several lots of ground in the city of Baltimore out of which rents issued amounting in the aggregate to $800.50 annually. His heirs-at-law consisted of two sons, a daughter, and some grandchildren, the children of a deceased child. One of his sons, James W. Flack, becoming involved, made an assignment for the benefit of his creditors to Frank Gosnell (the appellee) of all his estate, which included his undivided interest in his father's estate. The bill is for partition of this real estate among the heirs-at-law of the intestate; and among other things, charges that James W. Flack had collected all the rents from his real estate, and had not accounted for them to his cotenants; and, among other things, prays that in such partition they may "have the interest and estate of said James W. Flack in said parcels of ground and premises, as well against him as also said Frank Gosnell, [trustee under said deed of trust,] held and made liable for and applied towards the satisfaction of the rents collected, received, and appropriated as aforesaid." In other words, the bill prays that James W. Flack's interest in the undivided real estate shall be impounded for the payment to the several heirs of their interests in the rents of the estate collected by him. To so much of the bill as seeks thus to subject the undivided interest of James W. Flack in this property or its proceeds after sale thereof, to the payment of any rents collected and retained by James W. Flack in excess of his share thereof the appellee demurred. The court sustained the demurrer, and the only question on this appeal is whether that ruling of the circuit court was right. As curtly stated by the appellee in his brief, the question is, Has one tenant in common a lien against his cotenant's interest in the property for rents in excess of his share collected and retained by such cotenant before partition of the land?

The counsel for appellants has exhibited most commendable industry and research in the collection of authorities supposed to sustain his contention. Some of his citations from other states do seem to sustain his view, but they do not commend themselves to us as resting on solid ground of reason and equity. They are certainly not in harmony with the law as it prevails in England, and as it has been understood and adopted in this state. The several text-books cited by the appellant, viz., Freeman, Cotenancy; Moak's Underhill, Torts; and Story's Equity,—according to our understanding of them, do not support the view for which the appellants' counsel contends; while Mr. Jones in his work on Liens, (vol. 2, p. 96, § 1155) says expressly that such lien as that claimed by the bill and in argument does not exist. The only reason he says for enforcing it for improvements put on the land rests on the doctrine of contribution, and arises from the necessity of preserving the estate or enhancing its value for the benefit of the joint owners. Judge Story says that, strictly speaking, no lien exists even for repairs and improvements, but equity compels compensation in that case before partition of the land. Mr. Jones, in the section cited, says: "There is no reason why there should be a charge or incumbrance upon the interest of one joint owner to satisfy a claim of his cotenant for rents and profits received. The right to partition exists, and may be enforced, and, pending the action therefor, the chancellor may amply protect the rights of each joint owner by placing the land in the hands of a receiver. But it is not the policy of the law to enforce liens upon the interest of one joint owner of land in favor of another for unadjusted, and, to innocent purchasers and creditors, often unknown, accounts for rents and profits." Similar reasons are most forcibly assigned by Judge Lewis in Burch v. Burch, 82 Ky. 622, the reasoning and conclusion in which is adopted in Clark v. Hershey, 52 Ark. 498.

The interest of James W. Flack in this real estate of his father was, like that in any other real estate he owned, liable to be sold or mortgaged, and would be subject to the lien of any judgment obtained against him. The fact that it was an undivided interest would make no difference in its liability in these respects. No good reason has been suggested why such an interest should be subjected to secret liens, which the general policy of the state discountenances, with any more readiness by a court of equity than any other real estate. The claims of the several cotenants for their share of the rents received by James W. Flack were recoverable by law, and suit could have been instituted therefor at any time. The Act of 4 Anne, chap. 16, is in full force in this state; and its 27th section makes express provision for such a case; but it gives no lien on the undivided interest in the land of the tenant collecting the rents. The fact that James W. Flack assumed the right or duty of collecting the rents during all those years, in which it is charged he received them without being made a bailiff by express authority, does not change the nature of appellants' claim, nor subject James W. Flack to any other or greater liability for the rents so collected by him than if he had been duly and fully authorized to do all that he did do. We think the case entirely covered by what this court said in Devries v. Hiss, 72 Md. 560, and we see no reason for departing from what the court said in that case. In it the court did lay hands on the share of P. Han-son Hiss in the estate for the payment of the rents and profits he had collected, but they did so because the estate which he took under his father's will was an equitable estate, and not a legal one. The whole question turned upon the inquiry whether his estate was equitable or legal; and the court decided it was an equitable estate, and therefore could be subjected in a court of equity to the payments to the several cotenants their shares of what he had received. The language of the court is: "The equitable interest could be intercepted to make good the defalcation. Mr. Devries took a conveyance from P. Hanson Hiss of his interest subject to this equity, and he cannot claim more than his grantor would have been entitled to receive." If the estate which passed to Gosnell, trustee, had been an equitable estate, it would be subjected, as has been asked by the complainant, precisely as Devries' interest was, to the payment of his grantor's defalcation to his cotenant; but, being a legal estate, it cannot be impounded as asked without disregarding our decision in Devries' Case, and the reasoning which brought us to that conclusion; nor without doing violence to the policy of the state in respect to liens on real estate. The circuit court was clearly right in its ruling on the demurrer, and it will be affirmed.

Affirmed and remanded.

RHODE ISLAND SUPREME COURT.

STATE OF RHODE ISLAND

v.
John J. MURPHY.

(.....R. L.....)

1. Forgery is not a felony at common law.
2. An indictment for forgery need not allege that the offense was feloniously committed; at least not unless drawn under a statute declaring it to be a felony.
3. There is no duplicity in an indictment for forgery by reason of an allegation that defendant had in his custody a false, forged, and counterfeit order, and did feloniously utter and publish the same as true knowing it to be forged.
4. The name of the person to whom the forged instrument was passed should be given in an indictment for uttering such instrument, or if not known this fact should be stated as an excuse for its omission, since it is a material part of the description of the offense.
5. The existence of a corporation whose ownership is alleged in an indictment is not sufficiently proved by evidence that certain persons were doing business under a company name and owned all the property of the company, and that a statute had been passed incorporating the company where there is no further proof of any organization effected under the statute.

(May 7, 1892.)

PETITION by defendant for a new trial after being convicted upon an indictment charging him with forgery. Granted.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Charles C. Mumford, for defendant, in support of the petition:

The first count was fatally defective in that it did not state that the forgery was feloniously done.

It has never been decided what constitutes a felony in this state.

Some states have by statute declared any offense punishable by imprisonment in the state prison to be a felony. And in other states, independent of statute, crimes punishable by imprisonment in state prison are declared felonies.

State v. Felch, 58 N. H. 1; State v. Smith, 8 Blackf. 489.

In view of these cases it is submitted that any crime which the Legislature has regarded as of such considerable gravity as to be punishable by imprisonment in the state prison, should be deemed a felony.

Another reason for considering such offenses felonies arises from the fact that by the statutes of this state a sentence to imprisonment in state prison renders the convict incapable of holding any office of honor, etc., or of acting as an elector.

Pub. Stat. chap. 248, § 61.

In Massachusetts, where the court declared the crime of receiving stolen goods to be a felony, the decision is rested largely on the ground that the conviction would render the offender incapable of testifying as a witness.

Rohun v. Sawin, 5 Cush. 281.

If this view is correct then it follows that the word "feloniously" is a term of art, and its place cannot be supplied by any circumlocution.

Reg. v. Gray, 9 Cox, C. C. 417, 1 Leigh & C. 865; State v. McCarron, 51 Mo. 27; Cain v. State, 18 Tex. 387; Bowler v. State, 41 Miss. 570; Mott v. State, 29 Ark. 147; Edwards v. State, 25 Ark. 444; State v. Gilbert, 24 Mo. 880; State v. Jesse, 19 N. C. 297; State v. Scott, 72 N. C. 461; Randall v. Com. 24 Gratt. 644; Mears v. Com. 2 Grant Cas. 895.

The second count is fatally defective in that it does not set forth to whom the alleged forged paper was uttered.

It has been held in this state that a complaint for the illegal sale of intoxicating liquor is fatally defective if it does not contain the name of the purchaser.

State v. Doyle, 11 R. I. 574.

It is equally essential that there should be some party to whom the uttering was made, as that there should be a purchaser; and the argument in the case of a sale is equally strong in this case.

See also McClellan v. State, 83 Ark. 609; Buckley v. State, 2 G. Greene, 162.

Mr. Robert W. Burbank, Atty-Gen., for the State.

NOTE.—In many of the states the question of whether or not forgery is a felony can be definitely settled by examining the statutes. The common-law authorities upon the subject are so fully collected in the above case that any note upon the subject would of necessity be drawn from the same sources and would therefore furnish little material that cannot be obtained from the opinion.

Tillinghast, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant petitions for a new trial on the following grounds, viz.: First, because of erroneous rulings by the court below in matters of law; second, because the verdict was against the evidence and the weight thereof; third, because of newly discovered evidence; and, fourth, because the defendant did not have a full, fair, and impartial trial. The indictment, omitting the formal part thereof, was in the following form, viz.:

"That John J. Murphy, alias John Doe, of Pawtucket, in said county of Providence, on the fifteenth day of January, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and ninety-one, without force and arms, at Pawtucket aforesaid, in the aforesaid county of Providence, falsely and fraudulently did make, forge, and counterfeit a certain order and request for the delivery of goods, which said order and request is of the tenor following, that is to say:

Pawtucket, Jan. 14, 91.
Pawtucket Steam & Gas Pipe Co.: Please deliver to bearer:
1 16-in. Stillson wrench.
1 18 " "
2 3/4 " St. cocks.
3 1 " "
6 3/4x1/4 sur. yds.
Obligd. Wm. L. Graham.
E. F. Graham.
379 Main St.

—with intent thereby then and there to injure and defraud the said Pawtucket Steam & Gas Pipe Company, a corporation legally created, organized, and located at said Pawtucket, against the form of the statute in such case made and provided, and against the peace and dignity of the state." "And the jurors aforesaid, upon their oaths aforesaid, do further present that said John J. Murphy, alias John Doe, on the day, month, and year last aforesaid, with force and arms, at said Pawtucket, in the county last aforesaid, did have in his custody and possession a certain false, forged, and counterfeit order and request for the delivery of goods, to wit, tools, which said order and request is of the tenor following, that is to say:

Pawtucket, Jan. 14, 91.
Pawtucket Steam & Gas Pipe Co.: Please deliver to bearer:
1 16-in. Stillson wrench.
1 18 " "
2 3/4 " St. cocks.
3 1 " "
6 3/4x1/4 sur. yds.
Obligd. Wm. L. Graham.
E. F. Graham.

—and that the said John J. Murphy, alias John Doe, did then and there feloniously utter and publish the same as true, with intent thereby then and there to defraud the Pawtucket Steam & Gas Pipe Company and others; he, the said John J. Murphy, alias John Doe, then and there knowing the same to be forged, false, and counterfeit, against the form of the statute in such case made and provided, and against the peace and dignity of the state."

Before the case was opened to the jury in the court of common pleas, the defendant's counsel moved to quash the indictment on 16 L. R. A.

the ground that the first count thereof was defective, in that it did not contain the word "feloniously," and that the second count was defective for duplicity, and also because it did not give the name of the person to whom the order in question was supposed to have been uttered. This motion was overruled by the court, to which ruling the defendant duly excepted. The first question, therefore, is whether this ruling was correct. As to the first objection which the defendant made to the indictment, namely, that the first count thereof did not contain the word "feloniously," we are of the opinion that it was not well taken. We understand the rule of pleading in criminal cases to be that in the absence of any statutory provision as to what constitutes a felony, or as to the form of the indictment, the word "feloniously" should be used in all cases where the offense charged was a felony at the common law, and that in all other cases said word is not essential, but, if used by the pleader, it may be rejected as surplusage. In several of the United States there is a statutory provision that all offenses which are punishable either by death or by imprisonment in the state prison shall be felonies. There is no statute in this state, however, declaring what crimes are felonies and what are misdemeanors, nor has it ever been decided, so far as we are aware, what constitutes a felony. We must therefore resort to the common law in order to determine the question. Felony is ordinarily defined to be an offense which occasions a total forfeiture of either lands or goods, or both, at the common law, and to which capital or other punishment may be superadded, according to the degree of the guilt. 1 Bishop, Crim. Law, § 448; 4 Bl. Com. 94-96; 1 Russell, Crimes, § 42. Of course, it is to be borne in mind that this definition of felony is mainly historical, and shows what it was several centuries ago, while it conveys only a faint conception of what it is now. In fact, there is not, nor ever was, practically any such thing as felony in the United States. For while we speak of certain crimes, such as larceny, robbery, burglary, rape, arson, murder, etc., as felonies, yet it is mainly because we have been taught that at the common law they are so denominated. But when we come to apply the ancient English test of felony, as set forth in the above definition, we find that there is not, strictly speaking, any such crime known to our law. Indeed, the rigor of the common law itself has been so far modified by statute in England that there now remain but very few of the characteristics of the ancient crime of felony. The change in the form of the indictment, however, has not kept pace with the change in the consequences of the crime, so that it is still necessary to allege in all of those cases where the crime was a felony at the common law, and where the statute has not provided what should constitute the offense, or prescribed a form of indictment, that it was done "feloniously." Edwards v. State, 25 Ark. 444, and cases cited; Mott v. State, 29 Ark. 147; Cain v. State, 18 Tex. 387, and cases cited; Bowler v. State, 41 Miss.

570; State v. Gilbert, 24 Mo. 380; Reg. v. Gray, 9 Cox, C. C. 417, 1 Leigh & C. 365-371; Mears v. Com. 2 Grant, Cas. 385.

The question, then, which presents itself in this case is whether forgery was a felony at common law. We do not find that it ever was. The definition of forgery at common law as given by Blackstone (4 Com. 247) is: "The fraudulent making or alteration of a writing to the prejudice of another man's right." As given in 2 East, P. C. 861, which is supported by Bacon, Abr. "Forgery," B. and followed in 2 Russell on Crimes, 358, "the counterfeiting of any writing with a fraudulent intent, whereby another may be prejudiced, is forgery at common law." Wharton, in his excellent work on Criminal Law, (vol. 1, § 654) says: "By the common law forgery is a misdemeanor." "By statutes passed in England and the United States, various kinds of forgery are made felonies. Whether in particular cases the statute has absorbed the offense is a matter of special statutory construction. It may be generally stated that unless the statute in its terms undertakes to be absorptive, establishing a statutory offense coextensive with the offense at common law, forgery may still be pursued as a common-law misdemeanor in cases to which the statute does not reach in those states where a common-law criminal jurisdiction exists. On the other hand, when the statute in its terms is coextensive with the common law, then the statutory remedy must be exclusively followed; and eminently important is it for the pleader to recollect this in cases where by statute the offense is made a felony." The same author, in giving a form of indictment for forgery at common law, (1 Precedents of Indictments & Pleas, 264,) does not use the word "feloniously." The same is true of the form given in 2 Bishop, Crim. Proc. § 357. See also Train & H. Precedents of Indictments, 223, 224. According to 1 Hale, P. C. 682, 683, it appears that by the Statute of 5 Eliz. chap. 14, forgery was not made a felony unless it was a second offense. It has been held by very high authority that, even in cases where certain crimes are declared by statute to be felonies, if the felonious intent constitutes no part of the crime, that being complete under the statute without it, and depending upon another and different criminal intent, the rule requiring the use of the word "feloniously" can have no application. Thus, in United States v. Staats, 49 U. S. 8 How. 41, 12 L. ed. 679, which was an indictment under the Act of Congress approved March 3, 1823, making the forging of any deed, power of attorney, order, receipt, etc., for the purpose of obtaining or receiving from the United States any sum or sums of money, etc., a felony, it was held that the indictment was sufficient to charge the offense without the use of the word "feloniously." In delivering the opinion of the court Mr. Justice Nelson said: "The general rule is that the charge must be laid in the indictment so as to bring the case within the description of the offense as given in the statute, alleging distinctly all the essential requisites that constitute it. Nothing is left to implication or intendment. Generally speaking, it is sufficient to pursue the words of the Act; but if in pursuing them, there should be any ambiguity or uncertainty in charging the offense, the pleader should regard the substance and legal effect of the enactment; and, when words or terms of art are used in the description that have a technical meaning at common law, these should be followed, being the only terms to express in apt and legal language the nature and character of the crime. In all cases of felonies at common law, and some, also, by statute, the felonious intent is deemed an essential ingredient in constituting the offense; and hence the indictment will be defective, even after verdict, unless the intent is averred. The rule has been adhered to with great strictness; and properly so, where this intent is a material element of the crime. Sir William Blackstone observes that the term 'felony' originally denoted the penal consequences of the crime, namely, the forfeiture of the lands and goods, but that by long use it came at last to signify the actual crime committed. He further remarks that the idea of felony is so generally connected with that of capital punishment that it is difficult to separate them, and the interpretation of the law conforms to that usage; and therefore, if a statute makes any new offense felony, the law implies that it shall be punished with death, that is, by hanging as well as by forfeiture, unless the offender prays the benefit of clergy. 4 Bl. Com. 97. This view accounts for the necessity of the averment of a felonious intent in all indictments for felony at common law, and also in many cases when made so by statute; because, if it is used in the sense of the law, to denote the actual crime itself, the felonious intent becomes an essential ingredient to constitute it. The term signifying the crime committed, and not the degree of punishment, the felonious intent is of the essence of the offense,—as much so as the intent to maim or disfigure in the case of mayhem, or to defraud in the case of forgery, are essential ingredients in constituting these several offenses. But in cases where this felonious intent constitutes no part of the crime, that being complete, under the statute, without it, and depending upon another and different criminal intent, the rule can have no application in reason, however it may be upon authority." In the case at bar the essence of the offense charged is the "intent to defraud." It is therefore complete without the use of the word "feloniously." And, even though the offense was made a felony by our statute, the word "feloniously" would not be necessary under the decision from which we have just quoted. But, however this may be it is sufficient to say that, the offense charged not being a felony at common law, it is unnecessary to allege that it was feloniously committed. The cases cited by the defendant's counsel in support of his contention that the word "feloniously" is essential are either cases in which the offense charged was a felony at common law, or was made such by the statute of the state in which it was committed. But, as the case before us does not fall within either of those classes, the authorities have no bearing upon this branch of the case. We therefore decide that the first count in the indictment is good, and hence that the ruling of the court below in this regard was correct.

The second part of the defendant's objection to the ruling of the court is that it refused to rule that the second count in the indictment was bad for duplicity. We think this ruling also was correct. The statute under which the indictment was framed (R. I. Pub. Stat. chap. 243, § 1) provides that "every person who shall falsely make, alter, forge, or counterfeit, or procure to be falsely made, altered, forged, or counterfeited, any public record, . . . bill of exchange, promissory note, . . . order, . . . with intent to defraud, or who shall utter and publish as true, or who shall procure to be uttered and published as true, any such false, forged, altered, or counterfeited record, . . . knowing the same to be false, forged, altered, or counterfeited, with intent to defraud, shall be imprisoned not exceeding ten years nor less than two years." This statute, while it enumerates many forbidden acts, yet creates but one offense, if committed by one and the same person at the same time. The offense may be committed in various ways; but, however committed,—whether by forging, counterfeiting, or procuring to be forged or counterfeited, or by uttering and publishing, or procuring to be uttered and published, etc., or by doing all of these together,—subjects the offender to one and the same punishment. In Bishop, Crim. Proc. § 436, the author says: "It is common for a statute to declare that if a person does this, or this, or this, he shall be punished in a way pointed out. Now, if in a single transaction he does all the things, he violates the statute but once, and incurs only one penalty. Yet he violates it equally by doing one of the things. Therefore an indictment upon a statute of this kind may allege in a single count that the defendant did as many of the forbidden things as the pleader chooses, employing the conjunction 'and' where the statute has 'or,' and it will not be double, and it will be established at the trial by proof of any one of them." In Wharton on Criminal Pleadings & Practice, 9th ed. § 251, it is laid down that "where a statute as has already been observed, makes two or more distinct acts connected with the same transaction indictable, each one of which may be considered as representing a phase in the same offense, it has in many cases been ruled they may be coupled in one count. Thus, setting up a gaming table, it has been said, may be a distinct offense; keeping a gaming table and inducing others to bet upon it may constitute a distinct offense; for either, unconnected with the other, an indictment will lie; yet, when both are perpetrated by the same person at the same time, they may be coupled in one count." In State v. Nolan, 15 R. I. 529, 4 New Eng. Rep. 753, this court recognized the rule laid down in State v. Wood, 14 R. I. 151, viz., that, where several cognate acts are forbidden dis-junctively, the complaint or indictment may ordinarily charge them all conjunctively in a single count. See also cases cited. See also other cases cited in the opinion by Stiness, J., in support of said rule. See also Com. v. Hall, 4 Allen, 805. We are therefore of the opinion that there is but one offense alleged in said second count, and hence that it is not bad for duplicity.

As to the third and last ground of the defendant's objection to the second count, viz., that it does not give the name of the person to whom the order in question was supposed to have been uttered, we think it was well taken. The name of the person to whom the forged instrument was passed, being a material part of the description of the offenses, should have been given if known, or, if not known, this fact should be stated as an excuse for the omission. 2 Bishop, Crim. Law, § 379; Buckley v. State, 2 G. Greene, 162; McClellan v. State, 32 Ark. 609; Butler v. State, 5 Blackf. 280; State v. Doyle, 11 R. I. 574; State v. Smith, R. I. Index II., 17. We are therefore of the opinion that the second count is bad for insufficiency of description, and that the motion to quash the same should have been granted.

The second ground upon which the petition for new trial is based is that the verdict was against the evidence, and the weight thereof. The only evidence introduced at the trial of the organization of the Pawtucket Steam & Gas Pipe Company under its charter was the following, viz.: Charles A. Lloyd, called in behalf of the prosecution, testified that the Pawtucket Steam & Gas Pipe Company was located at Pawtucket, and that it paid him his wages. He also testified that he took his pay out of the safe; that James H. Andrews was the treasurer, and D. L. Fales secretary; that witness was one of the clerks, and R. C. Fletcher the other; that Mr. Andrews owns part of the property and Fales owns some. In cross-examination he testified that "the Pawtucket Steam & Gas Pipe Company owns all the pipe, wrenches, fittings, and stock in the shop." "Andrews does not own any of it." "Fales does not own any of it." "I mean that they owned stock in the Pawtucket Steam & Gas Pipe Company when I said they owned part of the property." The attorney-general offered in evidence the "schedule" containing the act of incorporation of the Pawtucket Steam & Gas Pipe Company. After the state rested the case for the prosecution the defendant's counsel moved that the jury be directed to bring in a verdict of not guilty, as the organization of the Pawtucket Steam & Gas Pipe Company under its charter was not shown. This motion being denied, the case was submitted to the jury upon the evidence for the prosecution. In the charge to the jury the court instructed them that, unless they were satisfied upon the evidence that the Pawtucket Steam & Gas Pipe Company had organized under its charter, it would be their duty to return a verdict of not guilty. The defendant's counsel then asked the court to charge the jury that the testimony of Lloyd to the effect that he was employed by the Pawtucket Steam & Gas Pipe Company, and giving the names of its president and treasurer, was no proof of its organization under its charter. This instruction was refused, and the court instructed the jury that the testimony of Lloyd was evidence of the organization of the corporation, and it was for the jury to say whether or not it was sufficient to satisfy them of the fact of organization; to which instruction and refusal to instruct as requested the defendant, by his counsel, then and there duly excepted. The jury returned a verdict of guilty, and the only question raised upon this branch of the case is whether the evidence above set out was sufficient to prove the organization of said corporation. We think it was not. The evidence simply shows that James H. Andrews and D. L. Fales were doing business at Pawtucket under the name of the Pawtucket Steam & Gas Pipe Company, the former as treasurer and the latter as secretary, and that this concern owned all of the property in the shop. It also shows that an act had been passed by the General Assembly incorporating said company. But we do not think the proof was sufficient to establish the fact that any organization under said act was ever effected. It being necessary for the state to prove the organization of the company under said act in order to show that it had been defrauded as alleged in the indictment, and having failed to do so, the case was not made out and the defendant was entitled to an acquittal. The verdict was therefore against the evidence, and must be set aside. The other grounds set forth in the petition need not be considered.

Petition for new trial granted.

PENNSYLVANIA SUPREME COURT.

Thomas GATES, Appt.,
v.
PENNSYLVANIA R. CO.

(.....Pa.....)

For injuries caused by defects in a highway bridge which a railroad company is bound to maintain over its tracks, the railroad company cannot escape liability on the ground that an action would lie for the injury against the township.

(July 12, 1892.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment non obstante veredicto of the Court of Common Pleas for Huntingdon County in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have resulted from defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion.

Mr. George B. Orlady, for appellant:

The duty to keep county roads reasonably safe for public travel is parallel with the duty of borough and city councils, who are required by similar statutes to keep the public streets in proper repair for safe use by the public, and it has been determined frequently that

NOTE—Right of one injured on highway to proceed in the first instance against the one ultimately liable.

In view of the multitude of cases in which actions have been maintained directly against the one responsible for a defect in a highway to recover for injuries resulting from such defect, it seems remarkable that so few attempts have been made to defeat a recovery on the ground of the primary liability of the municipality in which the highway is situated. Without doubt the true explanation of this dearth of authority is the one suggested in the principal case, viz., the absence of any serious doubt upon the question.

In Tobin v. Portland, S. & P. R. Co., 59 Me. 183, 8 Am. Rep. 415, it was contended that defendant was not liable for the injury for which the suit was brought because the locus in quo was within the limits of a highway which the town was bound to keep in repair. The court said that the city might possibly be liable; but, if so, it would have a right of reclamation against those creating the nuisance. Much more then could the party injured maintain his action directly against the corporation causing the injury.

In Davenport v. Ruckman, 97 N.Y. 568, the court held that there was no objection to joining the town and the person ultimately liable in one action.

In Calder v. Smalley, 66 Iowa, 219, in which the action was brought against the person ultimately liable, the court said we need not inquire whether the city may be liable as well as defendant. It is sufficient for the purpose of this case to hold that defendant is liable.

And in Landru v. Lund, 38 Minn. 538, it was held that where an individual and the city are both liable, suit may be brought against both or either at the pleasure of the one injured.

In Wisconsin the charters of many of the cities require the bringing of the action in the first instance against the one ultimately liable, and those provisions have been several times before the courts. They have been held valid. Hincks v. Milwaukee, 46 Wis. 559, 22 Am. Rep. 735.

The plaintiff in order to recover against the city must exhaust his legal remedy against the one who is responsible for the defect in the street. Raymond v. Sheboygan, 70 Wis. 318; Hiner v. Fond du Lac, 71 Wis. 74.

Even to the extent of obtaining judgment and having an execution thereon return unsatisfied. Henker v. Fond du Lac, 71 Wis. 616.

And he must have brought his action against such person with reasonable diligence. McFarlane v. Milwaukee, 51 Wis. 691.

Although the fact that he had not exhausted his legal remedy is a matter of defense on the part of the city and the plaintiff need not plead and prove it in the first instance. Amos v. Fond du Lac, 46 Wis. 695.

Such provisions are not applicable where the actual negligence of the city concurs with the negligence of the lot-owner in causing the injury, and in such case the action may be brought against either in the first instance. Passworth v. Milwaukee, 64 Wis. 389.

In Minnesota a statute which attempted to impose on the lot-owner a liability in the first instance to third persons for injuries arising from defects in sidewalks was held unconstitutional. Noonan v. Stillwater, 33 Minn. 204, 53 Am. Rep. 23.

H. P. F.

an action will lie against the person or corporation causing the injury independent of the right of action against the municipality.

Oakland R. Co. v. Fielding, 48 Pa. 320; 2 Wood, Railway Law, 958.

Where a railroad company erects a bridge across its tracks to supply a public road appropriated in building the railroad, it is its duty to keep in repair the whole structure, the approach and embankments, even where they extend beyond the boundaries of the location of their line.

1 Redf. Railways, 6th ed. 428; White v. Quincy, 97 Mass. 430; Tilcomb v. Fitchburg R. Co. 12 Allen, 254; Burritt v. New Haven, 42 Conn. 193; Hayes v. New York Cent. & H. R. Co. 9 Hun, 63.

A railway is liable to passers on the highway for a crossing so negligently constructed as to cause injuries to persons lawfully using it.

Person, Railway Accident Law, § 158; Pennsylvania & O. Canal Co. v. Graham, 68 Pa. 294.

Where the defect in the highway is caused by the works of the railway company, the latter will be responsible for all injuries in consequence, although the party might also obtain a redress from the town bound to maintain the highway.

1 Redf. Railways, p. 420; Gillett v. Western R. Corp. 8 Allen, 560.

Messrs. W. & J. D. Dorris for appellee.

Mitchell, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The jury found a verdict for the plaintiff under instructions which are not now before us, and the court below entered judgment for the defendant, non obstante veredicto, on a point reserved. The learned judge held that the railroad company defendant was bound, not only to build, but to maintain, the bridge. This conclusion is not challenged by the present appeal, and we must accept it as correct. But the learned judge further held that, as the primary duty to the public to keep the highways in safe condition rests upon the township, the plaintiff's action should have been brought against it, and not against the railroad. This is the only question raised by this record. For the purposes of this case as now presented, it might be sufficient to say that it appears to be conceded, all through the evidence, that the township never did any repairs on the bridge or its approaches, including the place of the accident, and never in any way showed an acceptance of the work or an assumption of duty in regard to it. Whether or not the defendant was legally bound to continue the exclusive care and maintenance, it did so in fact, and, having undertaken the duty, was liable for negligence in its performance. That the town might have neglected its duty, either in not assuming charge itself, or in not enforcing proper performance by the defendant, was a question that might arise between the party injured and the town when the latter should be sued, but, clearly, cannot affect the question of the defendant's liability for the negligent performance of a duty it had in fact undertaken.

16 L. R. A.

But it is desirable to consider the case upon a somewhat broader view. The basis of the opinion of the learned judge below, and the argument of the appellee, is that the township is liable to the plaintiff, and it seems to have been accepted without question that in such case the defendant was not liable. But this does not appear to us to be a necessary or just conclusion. It is opposed, in the first place, to the general rule that a party injured by the concurrent tort of two may sue either, and this right is not affected by any considerations of primary or secondary duties of the tortfeasors as between themselves. But, further, if the railroad is charged with the duty of maintaining the approaches of the bridge in a safe condition for travel, then it is the party ultimately liable. Its duty in that regard is a duty absolute, not to the township merely, but to the public, to be enforced generally by the supervisors as the representatives of the public, but specially for his own relief, by any person specially injured by neglect of it. As against such person, the failure of the township to enforce performance would not excuse the railroad. If the supervisors accepted the performance as sufficient, and thought the bridge safe, that would not be a defense if the jury were of a different opinion. The township and the railroad are not in the relation of master and servant or principal and agent, nor in any position for the application of the rule respondet superior. They are independent parties, each charged with a duty to the public, involving liability to an individual specially injured by neglect of such duty. It is no defense to either to say, "You might have sued the other;" and certainly none for the railroad to say, "You can sue the township, and then the township can sue me." When it is said in the cases that the town is primarily liable, it is not meant that the town must be sued first, but that it has a duty to the party injured which cannot be escaped by showing that there is another party secondarily liable to it; and it would be contrary to all our legal reasoning to permit the second party, thus finally liable to pay, to defend on the ground that it is sued in the first instance. The towns have made a strenuous, but vain, struggle to establish the converse proposition, that they should not be liable because there was another party ultimately liable over to them. That effort failed because the parties were charged with independent duties, and each was directly responsible to those injured by its own neglect. After such failure, it would seem to be a fortiori that the converse proposition is untenable.

Again, it is unquestionable that any one negligently leaving an obstruction in the highway is at once liable to a party injured. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. McTigue, 46 Pa. 316. The municipality does not become liable until notice, express or implied from lapse of time. To hold that the liability of the obstructor ceased when that of the city began would be to hold that a liability for a wrongful act might be escaped by the continuance of the wrong.

Turning, now, to the authorities, we have not found any decision upon the precise point, but the general drift of analogous cases seems to support the views already expressed. That the party who places or is responsible for permitting an obstruction in the highway is liable to one injured thereby is very ancient common law, and has been uniformly held in this state from Beatty v. Gilmore, 16 Pa. 468, to Dickson v. Hollister, 123 Pa. 421, while the unsuccessful effort of municipalities to escape liability where there is another party who may be charged has already been alluded to. See Newlin Twp. v. Davis, 77 Pa. 817; Dalton v. Upper Tyrone Twp. 187 Pa. 18. I have not found in either line of decisions a single one which is rested upon grounds that would make the right of action against either party a defense for the other against the party injured. On the contrary, while this point is nowhere specifically raised or passed upon, with reference to the party ultimately liable, the intimations tend clearly against such a defense. Thus Philadelphia v. Weller, Leg. Gaz. Rep. 400, 4 Brewst. 24, was an action for injuries resulting from a hole in the street, which a passenger railway company was charged with the duty of repairing. The city defended on the ground that the action should be against the company. Hare, J., instructed the jury that the liability of the railway company was not exclusive, and this was affirmed by this court, Woodward, Oh. J., saying, "It is not worth debating whether the primary duty to keep the streets in repair is upon the city or the railway company, for both are liable in damages to a citizen injured by neglect to repair, and he may recover against whichever party he sues." And in Oakland R. Co. v. Fielding, 48 Pa. 820, it was held that a passenger railway company charged with the duty of keeping a street in repair was liable for an injury resulting from a defect in the cartway, though the defect arose from the imperfect replacing of the pavement which had been removed for the introduction of water pipes into an abutting property. The defendant asked the court to charge that "the city of Pittsburgh, or the owners of the property adjacent, are in law liable, for any want of care in putting any street in repair, which may have been opened for the purpose of putting in water pipes;" but the court, Williams, J., negatived the point, and charged that defendants were liable whether the other parties would also be or not, (see page 324,) and the case was affirmed on this charge. And in Borough of Brookville v. Arthurs, 180 Pa. 501, it was held that permitting a defect in the sidewalk was negligence in both the property owner and the borough, and inferentially, therefore, both or either would be liable to the party injured, though they were not such joint wrong-doers as to preclude the borough from recovering over against the owner the damages it had been compelled to pay, if as between themselves the owner was ultimately the responsible party.

Looking beyond our own state, we find the law thus unqualifiedly stated in Dillon on Municipal Corporations, ed. 1890: "No 16 L. R. A. person . . . has the right to do any act which renders the use of the street hazardous, or less secure than it was left by the municipal authorities. Whoever does so . . . is liable to any person who sustains any special injury therefrom." Section 1032. "The ultimate liability in such cases is upon the author or continuor of the nuisance; but if the party injured elects to proceed against the municipal corporation for failing in its duty. . . . he must show notice," etc. Id. § 1034. Where a street is rendered defective by the act of a railroad company, "the question arises, Who is responsible—the railroad company, which caused the defect, or the town, which is charged with the general duty of keeping in repair the public ways? The course of decision is to hold the town primarily responsible to the person sustaining the injury, thus compelling it, when liable, to seek indemnity from the railroad company." Section 1037. But it is added in the note to the same section: "The traveler may, of course, elect to proceed at once against the railroad company, if he chooses." Among the cases cited for this is Lowell v. Boston & L. R. Corp., 23 Pick. 24, 84 Am. Dec. 83. The railroad company had made a cut across the highway, and its servants had neglected to replace the barriers. The person injured sued the town, and recovered, and the town then brought this suit against the company for indemnity. It was held that the town could recover, and in the opinion Wilde, J., says, (p. 81:) "The defendants were answerable to the parties injured for all damages. But the doubt is whether they are responsible to the plaintiffs." And again, (p. 84:) "If the defendants had been prosecuted instead of the town, they must have been held liable for damages, and from this liability they have been relieved by the plaintiffs." In Elliott v. Concord, 27 N. H. 204, where the town was held liable in the first instance to the party injured, it was said for the plaintiff arguendo, "plaintiff may have a remedy against the town or the railroad corporation;" and this argument prevailed with the court, though the liability of the railroad company was not specially noticed in the opinion. In Willard v. Newbury, 22 Vt. 458, Redfield, J., charged the jury: "The town were liable to the plaintiff, and he was not obliged to look to the company, even if they had also been negligent, and might so have become liable to any one suffering injury on that account." This was affirmed by the court, and it is plainly intimated that there was no doubt of the railroad's liability. This was followed and affirmed in Ratty v. Duxbury, 24 Vt. 155, where the gist of the decision is that the party injured is not bound to sue the railroad, but it is clearly implied that he may do so. The New England decisions, as noticed by Judge Dillon, are influenced to some extent by the fact that the duty of towns there is entirely statutory, but the principles upon which the foregoing cases are decided are equally applicable in Pennsylvania, where the duty of the municipalities, whether at common law or by statute, is essentially the same as by the statutes of the states above cited from. It is quite clear to us from our examination of the subject that the general consensus of judicial opinion, and the basis of the reasoning on which many of the decisions are rested, is that the party injured may, if he so elects, sue at once the active wrong-doer who is ultimately liable; and the absence of any express adjudication of the point is due mainly, if not altogether, to the absence of any serious doubt on that question, and the fact that the real struggle has uniformly been by the towns to escape their primary liability.

Judgment reversed, and judgment entered for plaintiff on the verdict.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

Honora HART

v.

Ann COLE.

(.....Mass.....)

The risk of defects in a tenement building, such as unsafe outside steps, is assumed by one who goes there to attend a wake, at least where there is nothing to show that he had an invitation or was in any way related to any of the occupants.

(June 22, 1892.)

EXCEPTIONS by defendant to rulings of the Superior Court for Suffolk County made during the trial of an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have resulted from the defective condition of defendant's premises, which resulted in a verdict in plaintiff's favor. Sustained.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. E. M. Johnson for defendant.

Mr. H. F. Naphe for plaintiff.

Knowlton, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This case presents for consideration important questions which have never been decided in this commonwealth. The defendant was a tenant for life of a building consisting of several tenements, which she let to different tenants, who used the outside steps in common as a means of access to their tenements.

These steps were in the possession of the defendant, and it was her duty to keep them in a reasonably safe condition for the use of her tenants, and of other persons who were using them by her invitation, express or implied. There was evidence tending to show that the plaintiff, while coming from a wake in one of the tenements, was injured in passing down the steps by a defect negligently suffered by the defendant to be there. The deceased person was a brother of the wife of one of the tenants, and there was no evidence that he was an acquaintance of the plaintiff, or that she was expressly invited to the wake, or that she was in any way related to any of the occupants of the house. The jury were instructed that the defendant was liable to any one injured by a defect negligently suffered to be in the steps if the injured person was lawfully going to or from the house in the exercise of due care, having lawful business there, and if the steps were apparently designed and intended as a means of access to the house and of egress from it. In Plummer v. Dill (Mass.) 81 N. E. Rep. 128, we considered at some length the question whether an owner of real estate fitted up for use in business is liable for its unsafe condition to one who goes there on business of his own not connected with the business actually or apparently carried on there; and it was held that such a person was a mere licensee, to whom the owner owes no further duty than to refrain from putting traps or pitfalls in his way, and from negligently doing injurious acts to his prejudice. We have now to consider how far an owner of a dwelling-house is liable for its condition to one who comes there without express invitation, and not for the transaction of any kind of business carried on by any of the occupants; and also what should be deemed an implied invitation in a case of that kind. The defendant is liable to a visitor of the tenant for the condition of the steps if the tenant himself would have been liable had the steps been included in the tenement let and not otherwise. It seems clear that one coming to a dwelling-house to do business in which he alone is interested cannot expect a warmer welcome, or claim greater care for his safety, than if he went for the same purpose to the place of business of the occupant. In either case he is a mere licensee. In preparing a convenient entrance to his house one does not invite there peddlers, book agents, and others who come solely for their own convenience or profit. So far as they are concerned, his preparation of his premises for travel is an indifferent act. It has no such relation to them as it has to those who come to do business which he carries on there. The inducement, invitation, and implied representation of safety which he holds out to the latter are not for

NOTE.—There seems to be no doubt that the owner of a tenement house remains responsible to strangers for the safety of those portions of the building the possession of which he retains. See note to Dollard v. Roberts (N. Y.) 14 L. R. A. 238.

The owner of premises is not, however, bound to answer to a mere licensee upon the premises for injuries caused by defects therein. Gordon v. 16 L. R. A.

Cummings, 9 L. R. A. 640, and note, 152 Mass. 518.

How far an invited guest is a mere licensee is an interesting question which has as yet been considered very little, and the slight discussion of the question in the above case is therefore regarded as worthy of note as well as the application by the court of the licensee doctrine to one entering the building because of curiosity.

them, and the law imposes no affirmative obligation, and creates no active duty, to those who come as volunteers. He merely gives them free license and permission to use his premises, and impliedly agrees that he will not set traps for them, or wrongfully do anything to their injury. But, in general, they must take his premises as they find them.

How far an implied invitation is held out under all conceivable circumstances, and whether an implied invitation to come as a guest for friendly intercourse can create a liability greater than that to an ordinary licensee, it is not easy to decide. No case in this country involving these questions has been brought to our attention. In Southcott v. Stanley, 1 Hurlst. & N. 246, it is said, in substance, that the liability of an owner of a dwelling-house to a visitor who is there on his express invitation is no greater than that to a licensee. The ground taken by Chief Baron Pollock and his associates seems to be that a guest, gratuitously enjoying hospitality by express invitation at the house of his friend, must be presumed to have accepted the invitation with an understanding that he is to enjoy only such things as his host possesses, and that to such a guest the host owes no legal duty to furnish him with anything better than he has for himself. In the late case of Indermaur v. Dames, L. R. 1 O. P. 274, Willes, J., treats a guest as a mere licensee, and says that the protection in ordinary cases "depends upon the fact that the customer has come into the shop in pursuance of a tacit invitation given by the shopkeeper with a view to business which concerns himself. . . . The class to which a customer belongs includes persons who go, not as mere volunteers or licensees, or guests, or servants, or persons whose employment is such that danger may be considered as bargained for, but who go upon business which concerns the occupant, and by his invitation, express or implied." In Pollock on Torts, at page 417, the author says: "With regard to the person, one acquires this right to safety by being upon the spot, or engaging in work on or about the property whose condition is in question, in the course of any business in which the occupier is interested." In Campbell on Negligence, 2d ed. at page 64, is this statement: "Invitation," therefore, in the technical sense of the word as employed in this class of cases, differs from 'invitation' in the ordinary sense, implying the relation between host and guest. In the case of host and guest it would be thought hard that the hospitality of the former should expose him to the responsibilities implied by business relations. A guest must take the premises as he finds them, with any risk owing to their disrepair, although the host is bound to warn his guest of any concealed danger upon the premises known to himself." It seems to be the rule in England that an ordinary guest in a dwelling-house, although expressly invited, has no greater rights than a licensee. The case at bar does not require us to decide whether that rule should be applied in Massachusetts, for the plaintiff was not on the defendant's premises under an invitation, express or implied. We have already said that the same rule should be applied to one visiting a dwelling-house out of curiosity or for his own convenience as if his visit were to a shop or other place of business. We do not doubt that such relations of friendship or of social intimacy may exist between individuals as to warrant a finding of an implied invitation to come as a friend at any time, and that one in such relations visiting his friend would have the same rights as if expressly invited, whatever those rights may be. Under the doctrine as above stated the plaintiff is forced to contend that whenever a wake is held there is an implied invitation to every one of the same nationality and religion as the deceased person to attend it. Whatever ground there may be for holding that there is an invitation to relatives or near friends, there is no evidence to warrant the application of such a rule in this case; and there is no evidence, and there are no facts of common knowledge, to support it in reference to strangers. It may be true that strangers to the deceased person and to his family sometimes go to a dwelling-house, and attend his wake or his funeral. But, in the absence of clear proof to support the contrary view, it must be held that such persons are mere licensees, and that the family of a deceased person, in having a funeral or a wake in their dwelling-house, do not invite the whole world to come there. In the present case there was no evidence to warrant the submission to the jury of the question whether the plaintiff was on the defendant's premises under an implied invitation, and the ruling that the defendant's liability extended to all persons lawfully on the premises was too broad. For these reasons there must be a new trial. We see no other error in the rulings.

Receptions sustained.

MISSOURI SUPREME COURT (1st Div.).

Simpson C. YOUNGER, Appt.,

v.

Abram JUI'AH, Resp't.

(.....Mo.....)

1. The rule of a theater that colored people can sit in the balcony only does not violate the 14th Amendment, which declares that "no state shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges and immunities of the citizens of the United States."

NOTE.—For notes on the subject of civil rights, see People v. King (N. Y.) 1 L. R. A. 202; Ferguson v. Gies (Mich.) 9 L. R. A. 339. 16 L. R. A.

2. Colored persons to whom tickets for the orchestra of a theater are sold at the box office may be prevented from using them and required to give them up for balcony tickets, or for the return of their money, where the tickets were sold without knowledge that the persons who were to use them were colored, and the rule of the theater as well as a custom and usage prevailing in the state permit colored persons in the balcony only.

3. A discrimination against colored persons by permitting them to sit only in the balcony of a theater is not unlawful, in the absence of any statute to the contrary.

(July 2, 1892.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Jackson County sustaining a demurrer to the complaint in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged wrongful refusal of defendant's servants to permit plaintiff to occupy seats in defendant's theater, for which he had purchased tickets. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Henry R. Hall, for appellant:

A theater is a public place.

When an owner of property devotes it to a use in which the public has an interest, he in effect grants to the public an interest in such use, and must to the extent of that interest submit to be controlled by the public for the common good, as long as he maintains the use.

Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 118, 24 L. ed. 77; Joseph v. Bidwell, 28 La. Ann. 382; Bowlin v. Lyon, 67 Iowa, 536; Peik v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 94 U. S. 164, 24 L. ed. 97; Donnell v. State, 48 Miss. 661.

An owner of property to whose use the public has an interest or, in other words "quasi public" in its nature can make no discrimination against a certain class of people, on account of color.

U. S. Const. 14th Amend.; Mo. Const. art. 2, § 10, Bill of Rights; Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 118, 24 L. ed. 77; Ex parte Virginia, 100 U. S. 339, 25 L. ed. 676; Strauder v. West Virginia, 100 U. S. 303, 25 L. ed. 664; Noel v. Delaware, 103 U. S. 870, 26 L. ed. 567; Coger v. North West U. Packet Co. 87 Iowa, 145; Baylies v. Curry, 128 Ill. 287; 8 Bl. Com. p. 166, *212; People v. King, 1 L. R. A. 298, 110 N. Y. 418; Donnell v. State, 48 Miss. 661; Ferguson v. Gies, 9 L. R. A. 589, 82 Mich. 358.

The sale of the ticket with coupons attached for certain seats, created an interest in the purchaser thereof in the seats so designated by the coupons, and a refusal to allow plaintiff to occupy his seats so purchased was a breach of the duty owing by defendant to plaintiff, and if such breach of duty was coupled with a tort, the defendant was liable to plaintiff for exemplary or punitive damages.

Sedgwick. Damages, pp. 44, 48, and note; Kennedy v. North Missouri R. Co. 86 Mo. 864; Hyatt v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 19 Mo. App. 287; McGinnis v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. 21 Mo. App. 399; 2 Parsons, Cont. pp. 161, 162.

The case should have gone to the jury to pass on the question of punitive or exemplary damages, also indignities imposed willfully, maliciously or wantonly committed.

Brasfield v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 19 Mo. App. 651; Perkins v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. 55 Mo. 201; Hicks v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 16 L. R. A.

68 Mo. 829; Smith v. Pittsburgh, Ft. W. & Q. R. Co. 23 Ohio St. 10.

The doctrine of revocable license will not apply in a case of this character.

A license for the enjoyment of certain privileges for land, obtained under an executed verbal contract founded on a sufficient consideration, is irrevocable by the licensor.

Washb. Easem. 4th ed. p. 8; Taylor v. Waters, 7 Taunt. 874; Thompson v. McElarney, 82 Pa. 174; Baylies v. Curry, 128 Ill. 287; Drew v. Peer, 93 Pa. 284; Lacy v. Arnett, 83 Pa. 169; Snowden v. Wilas, 19 Ind. 10, 81 Am. Dec. 370; Mumford v. Whitney, 15 Wend. 880; Fuhr v. Dean, 26 Mo. 116; Baker v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 57 Mo. 285; Gibson v. St. Louis Agr. & M. Assn. 83 Mo. App. 165; Hous v. Montgomery, 19 Mo. App. 170.

Messrs. Henry Wollman and Alexander New, for respondent:

The Supreme Court of the United States has decided that in so far as the Federal legislation known as the "Civil Rights Bill" attempted to operate directly upon theater owners, it was unconstitutional, it being within the province of the state government (and not the Federal) to pass such laws, if they saw fit.

109 U. S. 8, 27 L. ed. 886.

Therefore there being no Federal legislation on this subject that has any application at all to this case, the whole subject, by the decision of the "civil rights" cases, is relegated back to the common law, or to the statutes of each particular state.

The state of Missouri has passed no Civil Rights Act, so we must be governed in this case by the common law.

At common law a theater was regarded, as it should be, private property, and the owner thereof had a right to admit or exclude any person whom he saw fit.

Bowlin v. Lyon, 67 Iowa, 536.

Theaters being private property, the courts hold that the owner thereof can admit or exclude any person whom he sees fit, and that even after having admitted a person, his right to remain was simply in the nature of a revocable license, and if the owner so desires, such party must withdraw.

Clifford v. Brandon, 2 Campb. 358; Wood v. Leadbitter, 18 Mees. & W. 837; Burton v. Scherpf, 1 Allen, 188, 79 Am. Dec. 717; Pearce v. Spalding, 12 Mo. App. 141.

A parol license is revocable. If a theater ticket is not merely a revocable license, it would be necessary to bring an action of ejectment or unlawful detainer against the occupant, if he refused to give up possession after the performance.

Fuhr v. Dean, 26 Mo. 119.

Even if a theater were a "public place," still the proprietor would have a right to make regulations as to where white and colored people should sit.

Hall v. DeCuir, 95 U. S. 485, 24 L. ed. 547.

No class of people have a right to demand that necessarily they should receive exactly the same accommodations that another class of people have. The plaintiff in this case was offered seats in another part of the house, which by rule, was set apart for colored people and there is nothing in the testimony to show that it was an inferior part of the house. Even in the public schools, which are supported by the public, and in the public cars, a distinction can be made between white and colored people and separate schools and separate cars may be maintained.

State v. McCann, 21 Ohio St. 198; Bertonneau v. Directors of City Schools, 3 Woods, 177; Cory v. Carter, 48 Ind. 327; Roberts v. Boston, 5 Cush. 198; People v. Easton, 3 Abb. Pr. N. S. 159; Dallas v. Foadick, 40 How. Pr. 249; United States v. Buntin, 10 Fed. Rep. 780; People v. Gallagher, 98 N. Y. 438, 45 Am. Rep. 232; Westchester & P. R. Co. v. Miles, 55 Pa. 209; The Sue, 23 Fed. Rep. 848; Logwood v. Memphis & C. R. R. Co. 23 Fed. Rep. 318; Chesapeake, O. & S. R. Co. v. Wells, 85 Tenn. 613; Murphy v. Western & A. R. Co. 23 Fed. Rep. 637; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Williams, 55 Ill. 185; Day v. Owen, 5 Mich. 520, 72 Am. Dec. 62; Ward v. Flood, 48 Cal. 36, 17 Am. Rep. 405.

The proprietors of theaters in order to make their businesses succeed are bound to maintain their businesses in a way that will make them popular with the public, or, in other words, they must satisfy the public demands, in every way possible.

See Westchester & P. R. Co. v. Miles, 55 Pa. 209.

Black, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The questions presented for our consideration in this case arise out of the action of the court in sustaining a demurrer to the plaintiff's evidence. The substantial averments of the petition are that the defendant was the lessee of the Ninth Street Theater in Kansas City; that plaintiff purchased two tickets calling for seats in the orchestra, and that defendant and his employes unlawfully and maliciously refused to seat him in the seats so purchased. There is the further allegation that defendant and his agents unlawfully, maliciously, and insultingly ejected plaintiff from the theater. The evidence discloses these facts. After the plaintiff had purchased the tickets as alleged, he and his companion, a colored woman, passed up a flight of stairs. An employé, stationed at the upper landing, received the tickets, detached portions of them, and handed the seat coupons back to the plaintiff. He and the woman passed to the orchestra floor, where he gave the seat coupons to an usher, and they all three started towards the seats. On their way, this usher was met by another one, and the two had a conversation. Plaintiff, in his evidence, says they held a "whispered confab for a few minutes;" that during this conversation he overheard the word "nigger;" that one of the ushers informed him he could not have the seats; that there had been some mistake. After a further conversation the usher said: "You cannot stay here. It is against the rules." The usher then proposed to exchange the tickets for others, and seat him in a different part of the house, and for that purpose started up to the balcony, but the plaintiff refused to follow. As to what then occurred, the plaintiff testified: "I went on down to the box office, and presented the tickets to the person who sold them to me, and asked him why I could not have the seats. He seemed to be indignant, and said, 'You can have them.' He looked at me again, and I suppose he discovered that drop of African blood in me, and said: 'It is a mistake; those seats are occupied.'" The person in charge of the ticket office offered to exchange the tickets for tickets in the balcony, or refund the money paid by plaintiff, but the latter refused both offers, and left of his own volition. He and his companion went to another theater, where he procured seats set apart for colored persons. He had attended entertainments at the defendant's theater on former occasions, and, when in company with colored persons, took a seat in the balcony, but when alone was admitted to the orchestra. He says the usher on the occasion in question used sneering language, but his further examination shows clearly that the usher did no more than say in firm but respectful language that he could not have the seats because it was against the rules of the house. The charge made in the petition that defendant ejected plaintiff from the theater is not supported by any evidence, and must therefore be disregarded.

The tickets for seats in the orchestra were sold to plaintiff on the supposition that they were to be used by white persons. This is evident. It is clear, too, that defendant had a rule to the effect that colored persons attending his place of amusement should occupy seats in the balcony; and the only real question in this case is whether he had a right to make and enforce such a rule. If he had, the plaintiff had no cause of action. It is earnestly insisted on behalf of the plaintiff that such a rule amounts to discrimination against colored persons, and that such discrimination is prohibited by the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States. The clauses of that Amendment relied upon by the plaintiff are those whereby it is declared that "no state shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges and immunities of the citizens of the United States; . . . nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws." These clauses do not undertake to confer new rights, nor do they undertake to regulate individual rights. They are simply prohibitory of state legislation, and of state action. All this was held and ruled in the Civil Rights Cases, 109 U. S. 8, 27 L. ed. 836. As there stated, "individual invasion of individual rights is not the subject-matter of the Amendment." This state has enacted no law having any application to the present case. It does not undertake to say how theaters and other places of amusement shall be managed. As the state does not by itself or through the city of Kansas undertake to regulate theaters, and as the clauses of the Fourteenth Amendment before noted are prohibitory of state action only, they have nothing to do with the question in hand. There is nothing upon which the prohibitions can operate. Many of the states have enacted laws known as "civil rights statutes," and we are cited to cases upholding and giving effect to such laws. Under them it has been held that the proprietor of a theater will be liable in damages for a refusal to admit a colored person, (Joseph v. Bidwell, 28 La. Ann. 882; Donnell v. State, 48 Miss. 661;) and for a refusal to admit a colored person to the several circles or grades of seats in a theater, (Baylies v. Curry, 128 Ill. 287,) and for refusing a colored person admission to a skating rink, (People v. King, 110 N. Y. 418, 1 L. R. A. 293,) and for drawing any line of distinction between a white and black man at a restaurant, (Ferguson v. Gies, 82 Mich. 358, 9 L. R. A. 589.) But, as we have no such statute, these cases furnish no aid in the solution of the question now in hand. We have held that our statute which establishes separate schools for colored children does not violate the Fourteenth Amendment, and this for the reason that separation of children for such purposes is but a reasonable regulation of the exercise of a right conferred upon all children, whether white or black. (Lehew v. Brummell, 103 Mo. 546, 11 L. R. A. 828. And so it has been held in several states, as will be seen by the authorities cited in that case, and in the brief of defendant in this one. We believe it is conceded on all hands that a common carrier of passengers may make and enforce reasonable rules for seating passengers; and it has been held that such a carrier, in the absence of any statute to the contrary, may separate white or black passengers in a public conveyance, as a railroad car. West Chester & P. R. Co. v. Miles, 55 Pa. 209. In Hall v. De Cuir, 95 U. S. 485, 24 L. ed. 547, the defendant was the master and owner of a steamboat enrolled and licensed under the laws of the United States. The plaintiff, a colored woman, being refused accommodations, on account of her color, in the cabin specially set apart for white persons, brought suit for damages. She based her cause of action upon a statute of Louisiana, which provided that the rules prescribed by common carriers should make no discrimination on account of color. The state court construed the law as applying to those engaged in interstate commerce; but the supreme court of the United States held the Act unconstitutional so far as it applied to foreign and interstate commerce. Says the court: "Congressional inaction left Benson [the defendant] at liberty to adopt such reasonable rules and regulations for the disposition of passengers upon his boat, while pursuing her voyage within Louisiana, or without, as seemed to him most for the interest of all concerned. The statute under which this suit is brought, as construed by the state court, seeks to take away from him that power so long as he is within Louisiana. . . . We think the statute, to the extent that it requires those engaged in the transportation of passengers among the states to carry colored passengers in Louisiana in the same cabin with whites, is unconstitutional and void. If the public good requires such legislation, it must come from Congress, and not from the state." While the statute was held void as to cases like the one then in hand, because it interfered with interstate commerce, still the opinion, as we view it, proceeds upon the theory that, in the absence of valid legislation, the defendant had the right to set apart a portion of the steamboat for the special and exclusive use of white passengers. If common carriers may make and enforce such rules, there can be no good reason assigned why proprietors of theaters may not do the same thing. This being so, it is not necessary to a proper disposition of this case to say how far or to what extent theaters are to be regarded as public places; nor is it necessary to say to what extent they may be made public places by statute or local municipal laws. In any event, the proprietors of theaters may make and enforce such rules as the one now in question. Colored persons have their own schools, their own churches and often their own places of amusement. Whites attending places of amusement designed specially for colored persons may be required to occupy separate seats. When colored persons attend theaters and other places of amusement conducted and carried on by white persons, custom assigns to them separate seats. Such separation does not necessarily assert or imply inferiority on the part of one or the other. It does no more than work out natural laws and race peculiarities. It ordinarily contributes to the convenience and comfort of both. The colored man has, and is entitled to have, all the rights of a citizen, but it cannot be said that equality of rights means identity in all respects. Here the defendant did not exclude, or attempt to exclude, colored persons from his theater. He provided accommodations for them, but in doing so required them to purchase tickets for and take seats in the balcony, and this rule adopted by him accords with the custom and usage prevailing in this state. Such custom has the force and effect of law until some competent legislative power shall establish some other and different rule. The defendant's rule was no more than a reasonable regulation which he had a right to make and enforce.

The judgment is therefore affirmed.

All concur.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS (2d Div.).

Charles H. SOUTHARD, Appt.,

v.

John J. CURLEY et al., Repts.

(.....N. Y.)

Proof beyond a reasonable doubt is not necessary in an action to reform a written contract because of a mistake.

(Follett, Ch. J., dissents.)

(June 7, 1892.)

NOTE.—The question involved in the above case is so thoroughly examined in the opinion and the 16 L. R. A.

authorities so fully reviewed that a note could add little value to the case.

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the General Term of the Supreme Court, Second Department, affirming a judgment of the Queen's County Circuit in favor of defendants in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged breach of a contract to purchase certain hotel property. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Horace Secor, Jr., for appellant:

A party who seeks to establish a mutual mistake in a written contract must prove it beyond a reasonable doubt.

Mead v. Westchester F. Ins. Co. 64 N. Y. 458; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. 11th ed. § 157, and notes; Deveraux v. Sun Fire Office of London, 51 Hun, 147; Tucker v. Madden, 44 Me. 206; Linn v. Barkey, 7 Ind. 69; Emmons v. Stahlnecker, 11 Pa. 886; Newton v. Holley, 6 Wis. 592. See also Ford v. Joyce, 78 N. Y. 618; Gillespie v. Moon, 2 Johns. Ch. 585, 1 L. ed. 500; Lyman v. United Ins. Co. 17 Johns. 376; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. 18th ed. §§ 156, 157; Neivus v. Dunlap, 83 N. Y. 680; Kerr, Fraud & Mistake, 2d ed. 491.

Mr. Charles N. Morgan, for respondent Curley:

There is no rule of law applicable to the trial of issues of fact in civil actions which requires a party to prove his case beyond a reasonable doubt.

Seybolt v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 95 N. Y. 570; Probst v. Delamater, 1 Cent. Rep. 507, 100 N. Y. 286.

Even where the effect of a verdict is to declare a person guilty of a crime, the rule is declared inapplicable in civil actions.

People v. Briggs, 114 N. Y. 66.

Mr. August Kohn, for respondent Jeremiah M. Brosnan:

While all the cases reported require clear and positive and satisfactory proof, none require the jury to be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt of the existence of a mistake.

Martin v. Bennett, 26 Wend. 169; Lyman v. United Ins. Co. 2 Johns. Ch. 680, 1 L. ed. 519; Getman v. Beardley, 2 Johns. Ch. 274, 1 L. ed. 376; Gillespie v. Moon, 2 Johns. Ch. 585, 1 L. ed. 500; Phaniz F. Ins. Co. v. Gurnee, 1 Paige, 278, 2 L. ed. 646; Boardman v. Davidson, 7 Abb. Pr. N. S. 489; Neivus v. Dunlap, 83 N. Y. 676; Hill v. Hill, 10 N. Y. Week. Dig. 239.

Parker, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was instituted for the purpose of recovering the damages which the plaintiff claims to have sustained by reason of a breach by the defendants of the following agreement:

"September 10, 1889. I, C. H. Southard, of Baldwins, Queen's County, N. Y., agreed to sell to John J. Curley and J. M. Brosnan, of Rockaway Beach, L. I., said county and state, all [here follows a description of the property in question,] for the sum of thirty-one thousand dollars, to be paid at 30 or 60 days from date of this agreement; and I hereby acknowledge the receipt of check of one hundred dollars from John J. Curley and J. M. Brosnan, both of Rockaway Beach, N. Y. C. H. Southard. Signed and delivered in presence of J. M. Brosnan and John Curley."

16 L. R. A.

The property described in the agreement was a portion of the Mammoth Hotel at Rockaway Beach. The answer averred the purchase of the building by the plaintiff of the owners of the land on which the building was located, the securing of an option by the defendants to purchase the premises from the owners within a given period; their desire to secure an option for the purchase of so much of the hotel building as remained standing; and that the agreement which they in fact made with the plaintiff was to pay him $100 for an option to purchase the building within 30 or 60 days for the sum of $31,000, but the defendant Brosnan, in the haste of drafting the memorandum of agreement, omitted to insert that the sale was optional with the defendants. The answer demanded, among other relief, that the writing be so reformed as to express the true meaning of the parties.

No exceptions were taken to the admission of testimony, but an exception was taken to the refusal of the court to direct a verdict in favor of the plaintiff, at the close of the case, and the appellant urges that an error is thus presented. We do not so regard it. The issue presented by the pleadings permitted the introduction of testimony tending to show that the writing relied on by the plaintiff did not state the agreement which the parties made. On the trial evidence tending to establish the allegations of the answer in such respect was without objection introduced; and, without stopping to recite it, it is sufficient to say that it would support a decree so reforming the writing as to provide that the $100 was paid for the right to purchase the property described within the period provided, and for the sum named. The denial of plaintiff's motion to direct a verdict, therefore, was not error.

No exception was taken to the charge of the court, but the plaintiff requested the court to charge "that the burden of proof is on the defendants to satisfy the jury, beyond a reasonable doubt, that there was a mutual mistake in this case;" and the exception taken to the refusal of the court to charge as requested is now assigned for error. It is a rule of the criminal law that the guilt of the accused must be fully proved; that neither a preponderance of evidence nor any weight of preponderant evidence is sufficient for the purpose, unless it generate full belief of the fact to the exclusion of all reasonable doubt; a degree of conviction, it is said which ought only to be produced when the facts proved coincide with and are legally sufficient to establish the truth of the hypothesis assumed, namely, the guilt of the party accused, and are inconsistent with any other hypothesis. But a distinction has always been recognized and maintained between criminal and civil cases in respect to the degree or quantity of evidence necessary to support a judgment; in the latter class of actions the law being satisfied with a finding in accordance with the preponderance of, or weight of preponderating, evidence. The difference in the form of oath administered to jurors in civil cases and criminal actions is in accordance with this fundamental distinction. But it is urged that in an action brought to reform a written contract on the ground that, owing to a mistake, it fails to express the agreement which the parties to it actually made, the courts have at last adopted the rule of criminal actions, that the evidence must be such as to establish the mistake beyond a reasonable doubt. That such was not always the rule is conceded, but it is claimed that the later adjudications have settled the rule in accordance with the appellant's contention. In 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 157, the doctrine is stated as follows: "Relief will be granted in cases of written instruments only when there is a plain mistake, clearly made out by satisfactory proofs. It is true that this, in one sense, leaves the rule somewhat loose, as every court is still left free to say what is a plain mistake, and what are proper and satisfactory proofs. But this is an infirmity incident to the very administration of justice; for in many cases judges will differ as to the result and weight of evidence, and consequently they may make different decisions upon the same evidence. But the qualification is most material, since it cannot fail to operate as a weighty caution upon the minds of all judges, and it forbids relief whenever the evidence is loose, equivocal, or contradictory, or it is in its texture open to doubt or to opposing presumptions." The rule declared by Story was in accordance with the adjudications at the time of his writing, and in accordance, doubtless, with the general understanding of the profession at the present time. Judge Redfield, in his revision, has added to section 157, Story, Eq. Jur. 11th ed., the following: "The proof must be such as will strike all minds alike as being unquestionable and free from reasonable doubt. The distinction here attempted to be defined, in regard to the measure of proof, is much the same which exists between civil and criminal cases." Mr. Pomeroy, in his work on Equity Jurisdiction, (vol. 2, § 859) reaches the same conclusion. He says: "The authorities all require that the parol evidence of the mistake and of the alleged modification must be most clear and convincing,—in the language of some judges, the strongest possible,—or else the mistake must be admitted by the opposite party. The resulting proof must be established beyond a reasonable doubt." We have examined all of the authorities cited by Judge Redfield and Mr. Pomeroy in support of the rule which they have attempted to deduce from them, as well as those cited by the appellant. It would hardly be proper in this connection to attempt a review of them all, but we have selected from different jurisdictions a number of cases which are fairly representative, as to the expressions made use of by the courts, touching the degree or quantity of proof essential to support a decree reforming a written instrument on the ground of mistake. It should be observed in passing, however, that in none of the cases was the court called upon to determine whether the trial court observed the proper rule in passing on the evidence, or whether, as here, it had correctly or not instructed the jury in that regard. What rule should guide the trial court was not, therefore, necessarily discussed by counsel; and we have failed to find any evidence of a discussion by any of them of the question whether the rule in criminal actions, touching the degree and quantity of proof necessary to support a judgment of conviction, is applicable to cases of this character. It should also be remarked that the expressions in the several opinions relied on as establishing the rule contended for were generally, if not universally, made in connection with such a discussion of the evidence as induced an affirmation or reversal of the judgments under review.

Lord Hardwicke, in Henkle v. Royal Exchange Co., 1 Ves. 817, said: "There ought to be the strongest proof possible." In United States v. Munroe, 5 Mason, 572, the court said: "The evidence must be clear, unequivocal, and decisive,—not evidence which hangs equal, or nearly equilibratio." In Andrews v. Essex F. & M. Ins. Co., 3 Mason, 6, by Story, J.: "But a court of equity ought to be extremely cautious in the exercise of such an authority, seeing that it trenches upon one of the most salutary rules of evidence, that parol evidence ought not to be admitted to vary a written instrument. It ought, therefore, in all cases, to withhold its aid where the mistake is not made out by the clearest evidence, according to the understanding of both parties, and upon testimony entirely exact and satisfactory." In Gillespie v. Moon, 2 Johns. Ch. 585, 1 L. ed. 500, Chancellor Kent remarks: "Does it satisfy the mind of the court?" Fry, Spec. Perf. 2d Am. ed.: "The proof must be clear, irrefragable, and the strongest possible." Bold v. Hutchinson, 5 De G. M. & G. 558: "If it is perfectly palpable that there has been a mistake, the court will correct it. The question before me is whether I am satisfied that a settlement has been made in error." Coale v. Merryman, 85 Md. 882: "The evidence must be such as to satisfy the mind of the court." Lyman v. Little, 15 Vt. 576: "Equity will not correct a mistake in a written instrument except on clear and undoubted testimony." Miner v. Hess, 47 Ill. 170: "It must leave little, if any, doubt." Stockbridge Iron Co. v. Hudson Iron Co. 102 Mass. 45: "The proof that both parties intended to have the precise agreement set forth inserted in the deed, and omitted to do so by mistake, must be made beyond a reasonable doubt." In laying down this rule the court did not refer to other adjudications. Sawyer v. Hovey, 8 Allen, 381, 81 Am. Dec. 659: "The mistake must be made out according to the understanding of both parties, by proof that is entirely exact and satisfactory." White v. Williams, 48 Barb. 222: "The relief will not be granted except when the mistake is very plain, and operates contrary to the intention of the parties." Tufts v. Larned, 27 Iowa, 380: "The evidence of mistake must be such as will strike all minds alike as being unquestionable and free from reasonable doubt." Nevius v. Dunlap, 83 N. Y. 676: "To entitle a party to the decree of a court of equity, reforming a written instrument, he must show first a plain mistake, clearly made out by satisfactory proofs." Mead v. Westchester F. Ins. Co., 64 N. Y. 453: "The proof upon this point should be so clear and convincing as to leave no room for doubt." Ford v. Joyce, 78 N. Y. 618: "The mistake should be proved as much to the satisfaction of the court as if admitted." Newton v. Holley, 6 Wis. 564-578: "The mistake must be made out in a most clear and decisive manner, and to the entire satisfaction of the court." Linn v. Barkey, 7 Ind. 69: The mistake "must be established beyond a reasonable controversy." Hill v. Hill, 10 N. Y. Week. Dig. 239: "The proof of the mistake should be clear and positive. It should not leave a reasonable doubt." Boardman v. Davidson, 7 Abb. Pr. N. S. 439: The mistake "must be shown by clear and entirely satisfactory proof; and the relief will not be granted when the evidence is loose, equivocal, or contradictory, or is in its texture open to doubt or to opposing presumption." In Devereux v. Sun Fire Office of London, 51 Hun, 147: The evidence of mistake "should be clear and convincing, and such as to leave no reasonable doubt as to the existence of the mistake alleged." Little v. Webster, 16 N. Y. S. R. 107: "The evidence should be strong and conclusive, and in some cases it has been held, should be beyond all reasonable doubt. But perhaps this expression is too strong. There must be at least very conclusive evidence that by mistake the contract does not represent the intention of the parties." Simmons Creek Coal Co. v. Doran, 142 U. S. 417-435, 35 L. ed. 1062-1070: "But to justify such reformation the evidence must be sufficiently cogent to thoroughly satisfy the mind of the court."

The quotations made indicate a universal agreement that a contract shall not be reformed on loose, contradictory, and unsatisfactory evidence; a settled determination that, when a mistake is alleged, it must be clearly established by satisfactory proofs, or the contract will stand as made. But, in giving expression to the necessity of observing such caution, some judges have employed conservative language; others, extreme,—a difference doubtless due to the fact that the question before the court for discussion in the different cases was not, what is the abstract rule as to the degree or quality of the evidence required? but rather whether the particular evidence under consideration justifies a reformation. While in a few instances apparently unconsidered expressions may be found to the effect that the mistake must be established beyond a reasonable doubt, so may a variety of other expressions, differing in form, but equally well supported, be found, such as: "It must be proved as much to the satisfaction of the court as if admitted;" "the proof must be clear, irrefragable, and the strongest possible;" or "there must be a plain mistake established by satisfactory proofs." A situation which suggests that we heed the caution of Folger, J., in Taylor v. New York, 82 N. Y. 17: "It is not always well to take particular phrases and sentences from an opinion, and read them as giving the core of the judgment." The same thought was expressed in Hastings Bank v. Hibbard, 48 Mich. 457: "It must always be remembered that general language in legal discussions is to be construed with its surroundings, and cannot be dealt with in the abstract."

Bearing in mind these admonitions as we examine the opinions alluded to, we reach the conclusion that they do not require us to declare that this strong rule of criminal procedure has become a part of the practice in civil actions. Certainly, this need not be done, in view of the many authorities which, both before and since Judge Story penned the rule that "relief will be granted in cases of written instruments only when there is a plain mistake, clearly made out by satisfactory proofs," have asserted the same doctrines in terms or in substance.

We think the refusal to charge as requested was not error.

The judgment should be affirmed.

All concur, except Follett, Ch. J., dissenting.

ALABAMA SUPREME COURT.

GAY, HARDIE & CO., Appts.,

v.

BRIERFIELD COAL & IRON CO. et al.

(.....Ala.....)

1. A suit in the circuit court of the United States to foreclose a mortgage and an unexecuted decree of foreclosure and sale, in which case the issue of certificates had been authorized, does not prevent a state court from taking jurisdiction of a suit by creditors of the mortgagor who are not parties to the suit in the Federal court but who alleged in their bill that the mortgage and bonds secured thereby are fraudulent and void as well as the issue of certificates and the decree of foreclosure although it may be that the relief sought cannot all be granted.

2. A stipulation for the removal of a cause to another county waives an objection that it was not brought in the proper county.

(November 26, 1891.)

APPEAL by complainants from a decree of the Chancery Court for Jefferson County

NOTE.—The leading authorities on the question when and how far one court may entertain a suit which affects to some extent matters which are in process of litigation before a court of concurrent jurisdiction are so fully collated in the above case 16 L. R. A.

that no further attempt to collate authorities will be here made, but the subject will be found to have been treated in notes to Sharon v. Terry (Cal.) 1 L. R. A. 572; Carson v. Dunham (Mass.) 3 L. R. A. 308; Tefft v. Sternberg (Ga.) 5 L. R. A. 221.

sustaining a demurrer to a bill filed to collect a claim held by complainants out of assets of the defendant corporation. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinions.

Mr. Alexander T. London, for appellants:

A third person who may be affected by a judgment or decree may impeach it in equity for fraud.

Bigelow, Fr. 90; Michaels v. Post, 88 U. S. 21 Wall. 426, 22 L. ed. 521; Rand v. Walker, 117 U. S. 845, 29 L. ed. 907; Eslava v. Eslava, 50 Ala. 32; Stallworth v. Blum, Id. 46; Lee v. Lee, 55 Ala. 590; Dunklin v. Harney, 56 Ala. 177; Dunklin v. Wilson, 64 Ala. 163; Humphreys v. Burleson, 73 Ala. 1.

One court, whether state or Federal, will not take jurisdiction, so as to deprive another court, which had previously acquired jurisdiction over property, of its control or possession of the property.

Winall v. Sampson, 55 U. S. 14 How. 52, 67, 68, 14 L. ed. 323, 328, 329; Heidritter v. Elizabeth Oil Cloth Co., 112 U. S. 302, 28 L. ed. 729; Barton v. Barbour, 104 U. S. 126, 26 L. ed. 672; Taylor v. Curry, 61 U. S. 20 How. 558, 15 L. ed. 1028; Fraeman v. Howe, 65 U. S. 24 How. 450, 16 L. ed. 749; Covell v. Heyman, 111 U. S. 176, 28 L. ed. 890.

A person not a party to the suit or proceedings in a Federal court, and whose claim is not one which could have been properly set up there, notwithstanding the fact that the property may be in the possession of a receiver appointed by another jurisdiction, can maintain a bill to impeach the whole proceedings under which the receiver was appointed, provided he does not seek to disturb the possession of the receiver. So long as the assertion of the rights claimed by the third person does not affect or disturb the possession of the receiver or the court first acquiring jurisdiction, it can be maintained.

Buck v. Colbath, 70 U. S. 3 Wall. 334, 342, 18 L. ed. 257, 260; Watson v. Jones, 80 U. S. 13 Wall. 679, 20 L. ed. 666; Tua v. Carriere, 117 U. S. 208, 29 L. ed. 855; Holladay Case, 27 Fed. Rep. 880, 843; Beach, Receivers, § 20; Covell v. Heyman, 111 U. S. 176, 28 L. ed. 890.

The suit in the Federal court was a bill to foreclose a mortgage as alleged in the bill here, and an adverse claimant cannot be made a defendant to such a bill.

Dial v. Reynolds, 96 U. S. 340, 24 L. ed. 644; Peters v. Bowman, 98 U. S. 58, 59, 25 L. ed. 91, 92; 1 Dan. Ch. Pr. 277, note 2, 839, note 2; Wiltse, Foreclosure, § 192; Hambriek v. Russell, 86 Ala. 199.

The case at bar does not differ in principle from Drury v. Cross, 74 U. S. 7 Wall. 299, 19 L. ed. 40.

Messrs. Pettus & Pettus for appellees.

Coleman, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Complainants, as simple contract creditors of the Brierfield Coal & Iron Company, file their bill on behalf of themselves, and all other creditors who may come in as such and contribute to the prosecution of the suit. The case made by the bill, so far as is necessary to be stated, omitting names, is this: That on May 4, 1882, the Brierfield Coal & Iron Company was organized, as a corporate body, with an authorized capital stock of $750,000 divided into 7,500 shares of $100 each, of which amount $375,000 was subscribed. That after organization, and before any business was done, the president, in pursuance of a resolution adopted by the stockholders, opened other books of subscription, for the purpose of raising money to purchase the necessary property and machinery and outfit to open and operate coal and iron mines, and manufacture coke and iron, etc. The last subscription was made under the following agreement: "Now, therefore, the undersigned agree to pay to said company the amounts respectively set opposite our names, in such sums and at such times as the directors of said company may require, and to receive from said company for each nine hundred dollars paid in the sum of one thousand dollars in a six per cent mortgage bond of said company, and nine hundred dollars in the capital stock of said company; not more than . . . per centum of each subscription to be called for during one month." Four hundred and twenty thousand dollars of this last subscription was taken. No report of the last subscription was made, or in any manner made public. That on 1st of September, 1882, the stockholders, who were the subscribers, authorized the issue of $500,000 of first mortgage bonds, to run 30 years, and to bear 6 per cent interest, payable semi-annually, and to secure their payment authorized the execution of a trust mortgage on all its property and effects. That the bonds were issued, $1,000 in bonds for each $900 paid in as aforesaid; and also, in addition to the bonds issued, to each subscriber, for $900 paid, $900 of stock was issued, which purported on its face to be fully paid for. That the mortgage was executed and duly recorded, and is made Exhibit A to the bill. That nothing was paid for the stock and bonds, except certain amounts paid on account of the subscription; and that the bonds were issued to and are now held by parties having full notice and knowledge of the agreement on which the same were issued, and the larger part are held by the original subscribers. That during the years 1886 and 1887 the Brierfield Coal & Iron Company became indebted to orators for a large amount. That in July, 1887, the said company became financially embarrassed, and the trustee named in the deed of trust, in pursuance of a provision in the deed of trust, demanded and received "a further assurance" to secure the bonds which had been issued, and within a few days thereafter demanded and took possession of all the property of said company; and on the 3d day of August, 1887, the said trustee filed his bill in the circuit court of the United States for the middle district of the state of Alabama, and asked authority from the said circuit court to issue certificates, which should be a first lien upon the property of said corporation. That when the bill was filed by the trustee there was due and unpaid of the subscription for the stock a large amount, to wit, $500,000, and with the knowledge of these facts the trustee, with the knowledge and Iron Company was organized, as a corporate body, with an authorized capital stock of $750,000 divided into 7,500 shares of $100 each, of which amount $375,000 was subscribed. That after organization, and before any business was done, the president, in pursuance of a resolution adopted by the stockholders, opened other books of subscription, for the purpose of raising money to purchase the necessary property and machinery and outfit to open and operate coal and iron mines, and manufacture coke and iron, etc. The last subscription was made under the following agreement: "Now, therefore, the undersigned agree to pay to said company the amounts respectively set opposite our names, in such sums and at such times as the directors of said company may require, and to receive from said company for each nine hundred dollars paid in the sum of one thousand dollars in a six per cent mortgage bond of said company, and nine hundred dollars in the capital stock of said company; not more than . . . per centum of each subscription to be called for during one month." Four hundred and twenty thousand dollars of this last subscription was taken. No report of the last subscription was made, or in any manner made public. That on 1st of September, 1882, the stockholders, who were the subscribers, authorized the issue of $500,000 of first mortgage bonds, to run 30 years, and to bear 6 per cent interest, payable semi-annually, and to secure their payment authorized the execution of a trust mortgage on all its property and effects. That the bonds were issued, $1,000 in bonds for each $900 paid in as aforesaid; and also, in addition to the bonds issued, to each subscriber, for $900 paid, $900 of stock was issued, which purported on its face to be fully paid for. That the mortgage was executed and duly recorded, and is made Exhibit A to the bill. That nothing was paid for the stock and bonds, except certain amounts paid on account of the subscription; and that the bonds were issued to and are now held by parties having full notice and knowledge of the agreement on which the same were issued, and the larger part are held by the original subscribers. That during the years 1886 and 1887 the Brierfield Coal & Iron Company became indebted to orators for a large amount. That in July, 1887, the said company became financially embarrassed, and the trustee named in the deed of trust, in pursuance of a provision in the deed of trust, demanded and received "a further assurance" to secure the bonds which had been issued, and within a few days thereafter demanded and took possession of all the property of said company; and on the 3d day of August, 1887, the said trustee filed his bill in the circuit court of the United States for the middle district of the state of Alabama, and asked authority from the said circuit court to issue certificates, which should be a first lien upon the property of said corporation. That when the bill was filed by the trustee there was due and unpaid of the subscription for the stock a large amount, to wit, $500,000, and with the knowledge of these facts the trustee, with the knowledge and consent of the directors and of said corporation, procured an order of the court for that purpose, and issued $85,000 in certificates, which were to be a first lien or charge upon the property. That on 28th July, 1887, the corporation was insolvent, and after the trustee took possession of the property it ceased to carry on the business for which it was organized. That the bonds were issued without consideration, and, under the laws of Alabama, were void. That under the bill filed in the said circuit court of the United States, with the consent of the corporation, the court has decreed a foreclosure of the mortgage, and further assurance and a sale of the property. That the debts of the corporation not included in the mortgage amount to $150,000, and that the issue of the bonds was a fraud on the creditors, and the "deed of further assurance" was fraudulent, and made with intent to hinder, delay, and defraud the creditors; and that the bill was filed and prosecuted in the Federal court, and the certificates were issued for the purpose of hindering, delaying, and defrauding the creditors of said corporation. Other facts to show fraud are averred.

The bill states that complainants and the other creditors had no notice or knowledge or information of the terms upon which the bonds were issued, or the consideration of the same; or of the mortgage or further assurance until after the bill was filed in the circuit court of the United States. The bill prays that the bonds be declared fraudulent and void, and that the mortgage and further assurance be decreed fraudulent and void, and the issue of certificates be declared fraudulent, and that the decree of foreclosure and sale be declared fraudulent and void against complainants, and for an account. Only the trustee and the corporation are made parties defendant in the present bill. To the bill as a whole the respondents severally demurred and each assigned several grounds of demurrer, but all raise, and were intended to raise, in different ways, the question of the jurisdiction of the chancery court; the plaintiffs' bills showing that the circuit court of the United States, under a bill filed by the trustee, had decreed a foreclosure and sale of the property, which was then unexecuted, and had authorized the issue of the certificates. No other question is raised by the demurrers, and none other will be considered.

The principle is universally acknowledged that, when two courts have concurrent jurisdiction, that which first takes cognizance of the cause has the right to retain it to the exclusion of the other; that if a trust estate is being administered by a court of competent jurisdiction, or where property is in gremio legis, if a court of rightful jurisdiction, no other court can interfere, and wrest from it the possession and jurisdiction first obtained. As was said in Peck v. Jenness, 48 U. S. 7 How. 624, 625, 12 L. ed. 846: "Where a court has jurisdiction, it has a right to decide every question which occurs in the cause; and, whether its decision be correct or otherwise, its judgment, till reversed, is regarded as binding in every other court; 16 L. R. A.

and that where the jurisdiction of a court, and the right of a plaintiff to prosecute his suit in it, has once attached, that right cannot be arrested or taken away by proceedings in any other court. These rules have their foundation not merely in comity, but in necessity; for if one court may enjoin, the other may retort by injunction, and thus the parties be without remedy, being liable for a process for contempt in one if they dare to proceed in the other. Neither can one take property from the custody of the other by replevin, or any other process, for this would produce a conflict extremely embarrassing to the administration of justice."

The rule here declared has been adopted and followed invariably by all subsequent decisions. Many of them, however, have given it a very broad and extensive significance, while others have limited its meaning, and consequently the application of the principle has not, in all respects, been uniform. In the case of Vaughan v. Northrup, 40 U. S. 15 Pet. 1, 10 L. ed. 639, it was held that an administrator appointed in one state must account for the assets received by him, according to the law of his appointment, and could not be sued in the court of another state for the assets he received, and held by him in his official capacity. Williams v. Benedict, 49 U. S. 8 How. 107, 12 L. ed. 1007, was a case where an estate had been declared insolvent, and the assets were being administered in the state courts for the benefit of all the creditors. It was held that the property was in gremio legis, and not subject to levy by the United States marshal at the suit of a creditor suing in the Federal court. In the case of Peale v. Phipps, 55 U. S. 14 How. 872, 14 L. ed. 460, commissioners had been appointed to settle up and distribute the assets of an insolvent bank, and it was held that no other court had jurisdiction to interfere at the suit of creditors, and apply the assets to the payment of their claims; that it was the duty of all creditors to apply to the state court, which had taken jurisdiction of the settlement and distribution of the assets. The principles declared in this decision are reaffirmed in Barton v. Barbour, 104 U. S. 126, 26 L. ed. 672. In the case of Taylor v. Carryl, 61 U. S. 20 How. 583, 15 L. ed. 1028, a writ of attachment issued by a state court had been levied upon a vessel, and the vessel replevied. Suit was afterwards begun in a court of admiralty to enforce seamen's wages, and the writ placed in the hands of a marshal. It was held that the state court, having possession first, the possession would not be interfered with by the admiralty court,—citing Hagan v. Lucas, 35 U. S. 10 Pet. 400, 9 L. ed. 470. In this case there was a dissenting opinion by Taney, Ch. J., who recognized the general principle, but held that because of equities of the claimants, (the lien of seamen's wages,) of which alone the admiralty court had jurisdiction, the jurisdiction of the admiralty court did not violate the rule.

The rule declared by Taney, Ch. J., seems to be the law in this state, in which it has been declared that although the probate and chancery courts may have concurrent jurisdiction, yet if there are peculiar equities of which the probate court cannot take jurisdiction, then the chancery court may proceed, without a violation of the rule. Gould v. Hayes, 19 Ala. 448; Wilkinson v. Stuart, 74 Ala. 198. The case of Freeman v. Howe, 65 U. S. 24 How. 450, 16 L. ed. 749, after reaffirming the principle in 7 How. supra, declared that property in the hands of the United States marshal, seized by him upon a writ from the circuit court of the United States, could not be replevied or interfered with by a writ from a state court; and further held that the principle did not depend upon the rights of the parties involved, and that it applied to persons who were not parties to the original or first suit. In Riggs v. Johnson County, 78 U. S. 6 Wall. 166, 18 L. ed. 768, it was declared that the rendition of a judgment did not exhaust the jurisdiction, but that it continued until the judgment was satisfied. Process subsequent to the judgment was as necessary as process antecedent. That process of the state courts could not interfere with the jurisdiction of the Federal courts; neither the Federal courts with the state court; that, where there was concurrent jurisdiction, the one which first had jurisdiction of the matter continued to exercise it without interference. In the case of Barton v. Barbour, 104 U. S. 126, 26 L. ed. 672, Woods, J., declared that the rule was not limited to cases where the purpose was to interfere with the possession of the receiver, but extends to suits in assumpsit, or other cases where the effect of the suit or judgment against the receiver would be to diminish the assets in his hands. Miller, J., in a dissenting opinion, uses the following language: "I know of no principle or precedent whereby a court of law, having before it a plaintiff with a cause of action of which it has jurisdiction, and a defendant charged with an act also within its jurisdiction, is bound, or even is at liberty, to deny the plaintiff his lawful right to a trial because the defendant is a receiver, appointed by some other court, and to leave the suitor to that for remedy," and, quoting approvingly from Kinney v. Crocker, 18 Wis. 75, continues: "There can be no room to question this conclusion [the right to sue a receiver without leave of the court] in all cases where there is no attempt to interfere with the actual possession of property which the receiver holds, under the order of a court of chancery, but only an attempt made to obtain a judgment at law in a claim for damages." In Winwall v. Sampson, 55 U. S. 14 How. 52, 66, 14 L. ed. 822, 823, it was held that property in the hands of a receiver for one court could not be sold so as to pass title to the purchaser under execution issued from another court. If such a sale was pronounced valid, it would have the effect to wrest from another court its rightful possession of the property. In Buck v. Colbath, 70 U. S. 3 Wall. 334, 18 L. ed. 257, —opinion by Miller, J.,—it was held that whenever property has been seized by an officer of a court, the property is in possession of the court, and no other court can take possession of it. This general principle has its limitations. It is only while the property is in the possession of the court, actually or constructively. When the litigation is ended, or the possession discharged, other courts can then deal with it. No contest can then arise about the possession. Officers of the court seizing property described in the mandate, such as writs of replevin at common law, orders of sequestration in chancery, or process in rem, will be protected; but when the writ issued is to be levied generally, without particular instructions or description of the property to be taken in possession or levied upon, and the officer exercises a discretion in the execution of the writ, he may be sued in trespass for an abuse of the discretion, or a wrongful use of the writ, but no suit can be maintained to take from him the possession of the property.

The chancery court of Louisville, Ky., by a decree directed its marshal to deliver the church (the matter of controversy) to Watson and others. While this suit was pending, and the church was in the possession of the marshal of the chancery court, Jones and others filed a bill in the United States court to get possession of the church, and to enjoin the marshal from delivering the church to Watson, and to enjoin Watson from taking possession of the church. In Watson v. Jones, 80 U. S. 18 Wall. 713, 20 L. ed. 670, Miller, J., said: "The decisions of this court in the cases of Taylor v. Carryl, Freeman v. Howe, and Buck v. Colbath are conclusive that the marshal of the chancery court cannot be displaced as to the mere actual possession of the property, because that might lead to a personal conflict between the officers of the courts for the possession; and the cases of Diggs v. Wolcott, 8 U. S. 4 Cranch, 179, 2 L. ed. 587, and Peck v. Jenness are conclusive against any injunction from the Federal court forbidding Watson et al. from taking possession of the church which the decree of the chancery court required the marshal to deliver to them." But the court held, under the prayer for general relief, the court was authorized to grant any relief to the plaintiff, authorized by pleadings and proof, "which did not enjoin the defendants, Watson and others, from taking possession of the church, or which did not disturb the possession of the marshal of the Louisville chancery court." We do not cite this case as indorsing altogether the conclusion reached by the court in the relief granted, but as an authority recognizing and declaring the limitations placed upon the general rule laid down in 7 How. supra, and which has been followed in so many decisions.

The case of Krippendorf v. Hyde, 110 U. S. 276, 28 L. ed. 145, arose in this way: Hyde & Bro. brought suit in the United States circuit court against Frey et al., and sued out an attachment, which was levied upon a large stock of goods in the possession of Krippendorf, who claimed them as his own. Krippendorf executed a forthcoming bond to the marshal. After judgment against Frey,—the goods having been disposed of,—Krippendorf paid their value to the marshal. He then filed his bill on the equity side of the same court in which the attachment suit was brought, made the marshal and the attaching creditors defendants, set up his claim to the money in the hands of the marshal, and prayed that the marshal be enjoined from paying it over to the creditors. The court held that Krippendorf might have maintained trespass against the marshal, but that he could not replevy the property in a state court, as it must be regarded as in the custody of the United States circuit court. It was held that the bill was maintainable, not as an original bill in equity, but as ancillary to the principal action at law, in which the attachment issued, and should be regarded as merely a petition in that cause, and on account of the peculiar relations of the court of the states and the United States it was permissible as a necessary result to prevent a failure of justice, and to furnish in such cases a certain, adequate, and complete remedy against injurious abuses of the processes of the court, by supplying a means in the principal suit of trying the title to property in the custody of the law. The case of Correll v. Heyman, 111 U. S. 176, 28 L. ed. 890, reaffirms the doctrine declared in Krippendorf v. Hyde, 110 U. S. 276, 28 L. ed. 145, and holds that it is error for a state court to permit the recovery of the possession of property by the rightful owner against a marshal of the United States, held by him by the levy of an attachment or execution issued from a Federal court; that the property is in the custody of the law, and its possession cannot be disturbed by the process of any state court. This case further holds that the owner could maintain suit in trespass against the marshal, or by petition in the court from which the writ issued to the marshal the owner could be fully protected, either in her rights of ownership to the property or the money in the hands of the marshal; citing a number of authorities, which have been referred to and quoted from in this opinion.

In the case of Heidritter v. Elizabeth Oil-Cloth Co., 112 U. S. 294, 28 L. ed. 729, Heidritter brought suit in assumpsit in the state of New Jersey, and in the same suit averred facts to fix and establish a mechanics' lien upon a building of the defendant. At the time the suit was commenced to fix and enforce the mechanics' lien, the premises in controversy were in the actual possession of the United States marshal, having been seized by the collector of internal revenue, and were being held pending the prosecution of a suit to have the premises condemned and declared forfeited for having been unlawfully used as a distillery. The building was sold under the judgment of the state court, and plaintiff Heidritter became the purchaser. The defendant held under the marshal's deed,—the premises having been sold by him on execution from the Federal court. The court held that the proceedings in the state court to enforce the mechanics' lien took place when the property was in the exclusive custody and control of the district court. The substantial violation of the jurisdiction of the district court consisted in the control over the property in its possession, assumed and asserted in commencing the proceedings to enforce against it the lien claimed by the plaintiff, prosecuting the claims to judgment, and consummating them by a sale,—citing Winwall v. Sampson, supra, and others. The opinion proceeds, however, as follows: "But it is to be understood, as a qualification of what has been said, that we do not mean to decide that the plaintiffs in the action in the state court might not, without prejudice to the jurisdiction of the district court, commence their actions, so far as that was a step required by the Mechanics' Lien Law of New Jersey, for the mere purpose of fixing and preserving their rights to a lien, provided always, they did not prosecute their actions to a sale and disposition of the property, which by relation would have the effect of avoiding the jurisdiction of the district court under its seizure. . . . The distinction seems reasonable and just, and is supported by decisions,"—citing Clifton v. Foster, 108 Mass. 283, 4 Am. Rep. 539; Williams v. Benedict, 49 U. S. 8 How. 107, 12 L. ed. 1007; Yonley v. Lavender, 88 U. S. 21 Wall. 276, 23 L. ed. 586.

In the case of Walling v. Miller, 108 N. Y. 178, 10 Cent. Rep. 494, it was held that the possession of the receiver must not be disturbed, except by permission of the court, by persons having adverse, though paramount, claims; and a sale under execution of property in the custody of a receiver, though under a levy made prior to his appointment, is void, unless authorized by the court. That before the sale was made leave to make the sale should be granted by the court which appointed the receiver. That the appointment did not destroy the lien and application might also be made to the court for payment of the execution out of the proceeds of the sale made by the receiver.

In the case of Drury v. Cross, 74 U. S. 7 Wall. 290, 19 L. ed. 40, the directors fraudulently procured a mortgage to be foreclosed for a much larger sum than was due, by which, by a fraudulent combination with the purchaser, they were to be benefited. Upon a bill by creditors it was decreed that the purchaser should be held liable as a trustee for the creditors.

In the case of Stout v. Lye, 103 U. S. 66, 26 L. ed. 428, the general principle of law under consideration was conceded. The real question before the court for decision, and which was decided, was whether the state court or the Federal court first had jurisdiction, and it was held that by the filing of the petition and the proceeding in the state court for the foreclosure of the mortgage that court was the first to assume and exercise jurisdiction; and the court further held that the decree ascertaining and fixing the amount of the indebtedness of the mortgagor to the mortgagee was conclusive and binding upon other creditors of the mortgagor, so far as it fixed a liability of the mortgagor, and its amount, to the mortgagee. The principles of law raised by the demurrers of the respondents in the case under consideration were not involved in the case of Stout v. Lye, supra.

The Holladay Case, in 27 Fed. Rep. 880, was a bill in equity in the Federal court by Hickox against Holladay to set aside a fraudulent conveyance made by Ben Holladay to his brother, Joseph Holladay. After disposing of other questions which arose in the case, the opinion proceeds as follows: "The answer of Holladay also contains an allegation in bar of this suit, to the effect that on November 7, 1883, and prior to the commencement thereof, the circuit court of the state for the county of Multnomah, in a suit then pending therein between Ben Holladay and Joseph Holladay, appointed a receiver of all the property mentioned in the bill herein, who is now in possession of the same as such receiver, which suit is still pending in said court. In support of this defense, counsel submit the proposition that, while property is in the hands of a receiver appointed by a court, no other court can acquire or take jurisdiction of a suit concerning such property, and cite a number of authorities in support thereof. But the proposition is altogether too broad, and is unsupported by the authorities cited. The receiver has no right in the property, but only the possession thereof. So long as that is not disturbed or questioned, parties may litigate in the same court, or elsewhere, questions concerning the ultimate right and title to the property. And therefore, notwithstanding the suit of Holladay v. Holladay, and the possession of the receiver therein, this court may take jurisdiction of a suit to set aside or postpone an alleged fraudulent conveyance of any of this property by Ben Holladay which hinders or delays the plaintiff in the enforcement of his judgment against said Holladay.

"In Buck v. Colbath, 70 U. S. 8 Wall. 334, 18 L. ed. 257, this question is examined by Mr. Justice Miller, and the conclusion reached that the rule among courts of concurrent jurisdiction that the one which first obtains jurisdiction of a case has the exclusive right to decide every question arising therein, is subject to limitations." See also Andrews v. Smith, 19 Blatchf. 100, 5 Fed. Rep. 833. "The object of the suit in the state court between the two Holladays is not stated in the answer. But, in the nature of things, it cannot involve the matters in controversy here, and particularly the question of whether the plaintiff is entitled, as a creditor of Ben Holladay, to have these conveyances to Joseph Holladay set aside or postponed in favor of the judgment against the former. If this court should find that these conveyances were made with intent to hinder and delay the plaintiff in the collection of his demand, under such circumstances as makes the grantee therein a participant in the fraud, it would be its duty to decree that they be set aside or postponed in favor of the plaintiff's judgment. So far there would be no interference with the process of the state court, or the possession of its receiver. Whether this court will stop there, and remit the plaintiff to his execution out of the same state court on his judgment therein, or provide for the sale of so much of the property by a master as may be sufficient to satisfy the same, together with the costs incurred in this court, will depend on circumstances. The latter course cannot be pursued while the receiver is in charge, for that would necessarily interfere with his possession. But so long as the plaintiff's right to enforce the judgment, and for the amount found due him, depends on a decree of this court, it is proper, and very convenient, that any disposition of the property in question to satisfy the same should be made on its process. And provision may be made in the decree that the sale shall be delayed until the receiver is discharged, or that the plaintiff may apply on the footing of the decree for an order of sale as soon as such discharge takes place."

In the case of The Daniel Kaine, 85 Fed. Rep. 786, Payne recovered a judgment in the state court of Pennsylvania against James Linn, a tenant in common of the steamboat Daniel Kaine; execution issued, and the sheriff made this return: "Levied upon all the right, title, and interest of the defendant in the steamboat Daniel Kaine in the hands of the United States marshal, and gave notice to the United States marshal, Miller, of said levy, and made claim upon proceeds of boat." After stating these facts, the court proceeds: "Was it, then, beyond the reach of his execution creditors whose judgment was in the state court? It is, indeed, undeniable, that this court has obtained exclusive jurisdiction over the vessel for all the purposes of the suit which had been here instituted, (Heidritter v. Elizabeth Oil-Cloth Co., 112 U. S. 294, 28 L. ed. 739,) and it is not to be doubted that property once attached or levied on is in the custody of the law, and is not liable to be taken by another execution in the hands of a different officer, especially if that officer is acting under a different jurisdiction, (Hagan v. Lucas, 85 U. S. 10 Pet. 400, 9 L. ed. 470; Taylor v. Carryl, 61 U. S. 20 How. 538, 15 L. ed. 1028; Freeman v. Howe, 65 U. S. 24 How. 450, 16 L. ed. 749.) It will be perceived, however, that the sheriff's levy here did not involve the disposition or control of the property. It was made in manifest subordination to and in recognition of the right of the marshal to hold and dispose of the vessel. Nor was actual seizure necessary to give efficacy to the sheriff's levy, as it was made, not upon the res itself, but merely upon the defendant's interests. Srodes v. Caven, 3 Watts, 258; Welsh v. Bell, 82 Pa. 13. But the execution creditor here need not stand on the sheriff's levy. In Pennsylvania a fi. fa. binds all the defendant's personal property in the bailiwick, whether there is a levy or not; and the lien attaches from the time the writ is put in the sheriff's hands. Duncan v. McCumber, 10 Watts, 212. The issuing of the execution from the court of common pleas was not an interference with the marshal, and in no wise tended to bring about a conflict of jurisdiction. What good reason, then, is there for denying to this execution creditor the benefit of a lien? In Heidritter

v. Elizabeth Oil-Cloth Co., supra, the court noticed and carefully distinguished between the proceedings in the state court for the purpose of declaring and establishing the mechanics' lien, and the subsequent proceedings involving the sale of the property, the latter only being adjudged void."

In the case of Ball v. Tompkins, 41 Fed. Rep. 486, after stating the general principle that "this court cannot invade the possession of the subject-matter of controversy already taken by the state court having concurrent authority, and in the exercise thereof; for the rule is here, as elsewhere, that the court which first acquired possession of the subject will retain it and the power to dispose of it, by its own adjudication,"—citing 8 How. 12 L. ed. supra; 24 How. 16 L. ed. supra; 21 Wall. 276, 23 L. ed. 586—proceeds as follows: "And this brings us to the pivotal question in the present inquiry: What is the nature and character of the possession of the state or Federal court which excludes the exercise of authority over the subject or thing by the other? From the authorities on this subject, (which in the circuit courts are not altogether harmonious,) and from the reasons for the rule, I apprehend it to be substantially that the possession contemplated as sufficient to make it exclusive is that which the court by its process, or some equivalent mode, has, either for the direct purpose of the proceeding, or for some other purpose ancillary to the main object, drawn into its dominion and custody some thing. That thing may be corporeal or incorporeal, a substance, or a mere right. These may be the subject-matter of jurisdiction in a pending cause, which often proceeds from the beginning to the judgment without the court's having taken actual dominion of anything. But there is no exclusive jurisdiction over such a matter. The result may be a judgment which will establish a right, but the court has not had any possession. The pendency of a controversy in a suit in a state or Federal court is no bar to a suit in the other court involving the same controversy, (Stanton v. Embrey, 98 U. S. 548, 23 L. ed. 988,) and each will proceed in its own course to a judgment establishing the right. The control which each court has over its own processes has always been found adequate to prevent mischief from diverse judgments in the several jurisdictions. But in proceeding on its way, whenever either court finds that the other has already taken actual dominion over some subject, it will let the thing alone, so long as that dominion is retained, and proceed if there be enough material besides to support the exercise of its jurisdiction, and the pursuit may reach fruit; if not, it will stop. There are many cases in the Supreme Court Reports where this subject has been discussed, and these principles applied. Some of them have been already cited. Others are Heidritter v. Elizabeth Oil-Cloth Co. 112 U. S. 294, 28 L. ed. 729; Rio Grande R. Co. v. Vinet, 132 U. S. 478, 33 L. ed. 400.

Under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1887, receivers appointed by the courts of the United States may not be sued without leave in any court having jurisdiction over the subject. No court can interfere with the custody of property held by another court through a receiver, but may establish by its judgment a debt against the receivership, which must be recognized, even by the court appointing the receiver, and is not open to revision by it if the court rendering the decision had jurisdiction of the subject-matter and the parties. The manner in which it shall be paid, and the adjustment of the equities between all persons having claims on the property and effects in the hands of a receiver, must be under the control of the court having custody through its receiver, but this does not affect the jurisdiction of other courts, conclusively to establish by judgment the existence and extent of a claim. Dillingham v. Anthony, 73 Tex. 47, 8 L. R. A. 634. It is a well-established rule that when there is a fund in court for distribution, creditors, or those entitled to share in the distribution, may come in by petition, and have their claims adjusted by the court administering the trust, and receive their distributive share. Such were the facts in the case in Williams v. Benedict, 49 U. S. 8 How. 107, 12 L. ed. 1007, and Peals v. Phipps, 55 U. S. 14 How. 872, 14 L. ed. 460, and some others cited. But when a bill is filed to foreclose a mortgage the proper parties are the mortgagor and mortgagee. The fund primarily is applied to the mortgage debt, and balance to the mortgagor. A stranger to the mortgage, in the absence of a statute or rule of court, cannot have himself made a party without the consent of the complainant. Renfro v. Goettler, 73 Ala. 318; Flournoy v. Harper, 81 Ala. 494; Hambrick v. Russell, 86 Ala. 199.

Neither do the complainants in the case under consideration have that relation to the matter or parties in the foreclosure suit which would enable them to file a bill of review of the decree in that case, and show error, apparent on the record, or by bill in the nature of a bill of review, and show that they were overreached and defrauded by its procurement. They were neither parties nor privies to that proceeding, and have no title or claim of ownership to the property conveyed by the mortgage. Whiting v. Bank of United States, 38 U. S. 13 Pet. 6, 10 L. ed. 33; Humphreys v. Burleson, 72 Ala. 1, 6; Dunklin v. Harvey, 56 Ala. 181; Newlin v. McAfee, 64 Ala. 364; Curry v. Peebles, 83 Ala. 226; Lee v. Lee, 55 Ala. 602; Opelika v. Daniel, 59 Ala. 215.

Extracts at length have been quoted from leading cases that the reasoning and conclusions of the different courts construing, limiting, and applying the general principle stated in 7 How. 12 L. ed. supra, may be the better understood and appreciated. All the authorities recognize the importance of carefully preserving the boundary line between courts of concurrent jurisdiction, in order to prevent conflicts, and to preserve in harmony their relations to each other. Harmony between the state and Federal courts is the life of our complex system of government, and should be guarded by a "flaming sword which turns every way." To prevent abuse of the principle and the successful perpetration of injustice or fraud, through forms of law, courts accord to suitors and litigants all necessary latitude, and they are not restricted to any one form for the adjudication of any question or right, provided only that such adjudications are not upon questions pending in another concurrent court which had prior jurisdiction, and provided that its writs or process shall not hinder the performance of any lawful mandate of such concurrent court, or interfere with or disturb the possession of any subject-matter then in gremio legis. Possibly plaintiffs might sue the Brierfield Coal & Iron Company in a court of law, and recover judgment, and have execution, as in the case of The Daniel Kaine, in 35 Fed. Rep. 736, supra; or file a bill on the judgment as in the Holladay Case, 27 Fed. Rep. 830, supra; or, when necessary to fix and establish a lien, they may proceed for this purpose as in the case of Heidritter v. Elisabeth Oil Cloth Co., supra; and in neither instance transgress the domain of the United States court. Any attempt to enforce the judgment or lien thus established by interfering with the possession or subject-matter under the control of the concurrent court would be nugatory. In accordance with the principle declared by Miller, J., in the case of Watson v. Jones, the court should grant any relief authorized by the pleadings and proof, which did not conflict with the decree of the United States court, or disturb the possession of the property in the hands of the court, although the bill may ask for some relief which perhaps cannot be granted. It may be that, notwithstanding the complainants do not claim any ownership in the property conveyed by the mortgage, or may not have that relationship to the foreclosure suit, which, under the decisions of this state cited above, would authorize them to file a bill of review, or an original bill in the nature of a bill of review, to correct or set aside the decree rendered in the circuit court of the United States for error apparent, or for fraud in its procurement, under the liberal system declared in the case of Krippendorf v. Hyde, supra, to prevent abuse and injustice, plaintiff might get relief by filing a petition as ancillary to the foreclosure suit. We express no opinion as to that question. We do hold, however, that if the trustee in the deed of trust, and the defendant corporation, the Brierfield Coal & Iron Company, and the stockholders and directors, with the knowledge and assistance of the bondholders, fraudulently combined and colluded together to hinder, delay, and defraud the creditors of the defendant corporation, and to carry out this fraudulent purpose procured the certificates mentioned in the pleadings to be fraudulently issued, and fraudulently procured the execution of the deed of further assignment, and that the bonds secured by the trust were without consideration, and issued in violation of law, of which the holders had notice, and a decree of foreclosure of the deed of trust was procured in the United States court for the same fraudulent purpose and intent, which facts seem to be substantially averred in the bill, and which, on demurrer, must be regarded as true, the complainants, as creditors, are entitled to relief in some court. We further hold that the jurisdiction of the chancery court of the state of Alabama of all these matters is full and complete, and, unless these questions are pending in some other court of concurrent jurisdiction in such way and manner as may be pleaded in bar to this suit, the complainants, upon proof of the averments of the bill, are entitled to every relief in this court. Watson v. Jones, supra. In granting relief, if the pleadings and proof justify it, the chancery court will be controlled by the limitations and principles herein declared, so as not to conflict with the jurisdiction of the Federal court. We do not wish to be understood as intimating that the bill is in all respects without defect as to parties, or that a proper decree could be rendered upon the pleadings in their present shape, or that any decree would affect the rights of bondholders, or holders of the certificates, who have not been made parties to the cause. We simply adjudge the grounds of demurrer assigned, being against the bill as a whole, are not well taken, and should have been overruled.

Reversed and remanded.

Stone, Ch. J., concurring:

In this case the chancellor sustained the demurrer to the bill, and, no amendment being offered, there was a decree declaring the bill contained no equity of which that court could entertain jurisdiction. From that interlocutory decree the present appeal is prosecuted. The demurrer admitted the truth of every material averment that is well pleaded. Flewelling v. Orans, 58 Ala. 627. We will treat the material averments as admitted facts. The Brierfield Coal & Iron Company was incorporated in 1882, with an authorized capital stock of $750,000. The amount of stock actually issued and disposed of is not expressly shown. It is shown, however, that by a resolution of the board of directors, adopted soon after the organization, $500,000 of the mortgage bonds of the company were issued, having 80 years to run, bearing 6 per cent interest, and the interests to be paid in semi-annual installments. The payment of the interest and principal of these bonds was secured by a first mortgage, executed and recorded, conveying all the property of the corporation, real and personal. The mortgage created a trustee, and clothed him with authority to execute its power and purposes. The bonds are not negotiable securities, according to the averments of the bill. This issue of $500,000 of coupon bonds was not intended for sale in the market as bonds. Stock in the company to the amount of $450,000 was ordered to be sold, and was sold at par, with the agreement and understanding that to every purchaser of $900 of the capital stock there should be delivered, and was delivered, $1,000 of the bonds, on no consideration other than the $900 of stock purchased and promised to be paid for. So, when the stock should be paid for in full, the subscribers, or owners of the shares of the capital stock, would have received, for $900 paid out, $900 of the paid-up capital stock of the company, and the corporation's coupon bond for $1,000. To what extent calls were made for payment of this $450,000 of stock, or any other stock taken in the company, was not known to the complainants, and is not shown in the bill of Gay, Hardie & Co. It is averred, however, that the sum of $500,000 of the subscriptions for stock remains unpaid. These bonds for $500,000 were subscribed for by eight persons in unequal amounts, who still claim to own the same, or the great bulk of it. The husband of one of these eight is named as trustee in the mortgage given for the security of the bonds. Pursuant to authority and power expressed in the said first mortgage, the trustee, in July, 1887, obtained from the Brierfield Coal & Iron Company a further assurance for the security of said bonds, which described and conveyed to him, for such purpose, all the real and personal property of every description owned by said corporation. In less than a month after obtaining this further assurance, to wit, in August, 1887, the trustee or assignee named in the mortgage filed a bill in the circuit court of the United States, and made defendants to his bill the said Brierfield Coal & Iron Company, the said original stock and bondholders, and certain named creditors of the corporation. The bill set forth the said $500,000 of bonds as a debt of the corporation, and certain other alleged debts incurred in running the works of said iron and coal company, for which Peter, the president of the corporation, had rendered himself or his property liable. According to the averments of that bill, a considerable part of the subscription of $450,000 of stock has not been collected, and no excuse is rendered why this has not been done. The object of the bill was to have the effects of the corporation placed in trust or in the hands of a receiver, and to have that trustee or receiver clothed with authority to borrow money, and to that end to issue receiver's certificates of indebtedness. This for the purpose of keeping the works of the corporation in operation, and to meet current expenses. There was no expressed wish or prayer to have the mortgage foreclosed, and the property sold at that time; but the averred object was to save the property by continuing the works in operation, and thus paying the corporation's debts. The bill and its prayer, however, were so framed as that a foreclosure and sale could be effected under it. The circuit court of the United States took jurisdiction of the case, placed the property in the hands of a trustee or receiver, and authorized him to issue certificates of indebtedness, which were declared to be a first lien on the property and its earnings. Under this authority certificates of indebtedness were issued to the extent of $65,000. In 1889 the circuit court of the United States made a decree in said cause foreclosing said mortgage and further assurance, and ordering an account to be taken of said bonded and other named indebtedness of the corporation, and ordering a sale of its property and effects. Under this decree the property was advertised to be sold, the sale to take place August 19, 1889. On that day the present bill was filed in the state chancery court by a nonsecured creditor of the Brierfield Coal & Iron Company.

The bill in the present case, filed by Gay, Hardie & Co., sets forth that during the years 1886 and 1887 the said Brierfield Coal & Iron Company became indebted to them for goods, wares, and merchandise sold to said corporation in the sum of near $11,000 of principal indebtedness. It charges that said alleged bonded indebtedness of $500,000 was issued and incurred in direct contravention of the Constitution and statutes of the state of Alabama; that they were issued upon no consideration whatever, and are fraudulent. It charges further that said suit by the trustee to foreclose said mortgage and further assurance was and is, by reason of the legal invalidity of the bonds, fraudulent, and instituted and prosecuted with intent to delay, hinder, and defraud the creditors of the corporation, and that the corporation is insolvent. The bill is so framed as that other creditors can come in and make themselves parties, and share in the fruits of the recovery. The prayer and purpose of the bill are to have the alleged bonded indebtedness annulled as fraudulent, and to have the effects of the corporation applied to its bona fide debts. It will thus be seen that before this suit was instituted the circuit court of the United States, by virtue of the bill previously filed in that court by the trustee, had taken jurisdiction of the affairs of the corporation, and, through a receiver, or quasi receiver, of its own appointment, had taken control and possession of its entire effects; and that possession had not been relinquished by a final determination of the suit. The present bill makes only two defendants,—the Brierfield Coal & Iron Company, and the trustee in the mortgage, the complainant in the said suit in the circuit court of the United States. Each of these defendants demurred to the bill, specifying several grounds of demurrer, but they are all reducible to a single proposition, namely, that the circuit court of the United States, having acquired jurisdiction and possession of the effects of the corporation, no other court can, by any process at its command, interfere with that possession, or prevent or obstruct that court in the complete administration of the effects of the corporation.

Ours is a compound government. We have a Federal government, which, for certain specified purposes, and to a certain extent, makes us one. The dominating aim of this union of states had two main objects: First, in all our relations, political and commercial, with other countries, we are a unit; second, in those matters which pertain to the harmony, good neighborhood, and equal civil rights of the citizens of the several states out of which conflicts and collisions might arise, the general government is clothed with all the power which the framers of our institutions deemed necessary to prevent such conflicts and collisions. But the powers of the Federal government are the creatures of grant. Each of the governments, Federal and state, has a judiciary, a necessary arm for the enforcement of delegated power and preservation of good order. And in the administration of justice controversies may and do arise, in the adjustment of which the courts of the two governments have concurrent jurisdiction. Here we approach the danger line, and we should take our steps cautiously, lest we tread on forbidden ground. Properly administered, each tribunal can exercise all its rightful jurisdiction, and grant all rightful relief to the suitors before it, without abridging the equal rights of other equally meritorious suitors before other tribunals, having equal power. The difficulty lies in determining when or from what arbiter the mandate can be authoritatively uttered, "Thus far shalt thou go." That two material bodies cannot occupy the same space at the same time, is an established law of physics. If this impossible feat be attempted, collision must be the result. So, when one court has acquired and is in the exercise of jurisdiction over a subject-matter inter partes, no other court of simply concurrent power can take jurisdiction of that same subject-matter between the same parties. And the rule is much more inflexible when, under some order or process of its own, the court first acquiring jurisdiction has obtained possession of the res, which is the subject of the suit. When this is the case, the thing is in the custody of the court, and, until disposed of by final judgment or decree, that possession cannot be interfered with by any other court of concurrent jurisdiction, whether its powers be invoked by a party to the first suit or by a stranger to that litigation. This, it has been justly said, is not alone a duty of comity. It is an edict of necessity. Its nonobservance would lead to all the conflict and confusion so well expressed by Justice Grier in Peck v. Jenness, 48 U. S. 7 How. 612, 12 L. ed. 841.

The exhaustive opinion of my Brother Coleman in this case has rendered it not only unnecessary, but improper, that I should again collate the authorities. I fully concur with him in his statement of the rule, and the extent of it. The reason of the rule exists in the prevention of collisions between courts of concurrent jurisdiction. Neither the reason nor the rule finds any field of operation when the proceedings in one jurisdiction do not in any manner interfere with those in the other; and in this connection it is immaterial whether the two courts of concurrent jurisdiction derive their powers one from the Federal and the other from a state government, or both from the same government. The same rule and measure of non-interference apply in the one category as in the other. Under the suit by the trustee in the United States court, all the property of the Brierfield Coal & Iron Company was placed in the hands of a trustee or receiver, to be administered for the purposes specified in the mortgage and further assurance. Until that court finishes the litigation there pending, and relinquishes its possession of the property, no other court can disturb that possession, or interfere with the untrammelled adjudication of the issues raised in that suit.

16 L. R. A.

And the decision or decree rendered or to be rendered in that suit will bind all the parties to it, and their privies, unless it is reversed by a court having authority to revise its judgment. Stout v. Lye, 103 U. S. 86, 26 L. ed. 428. In other words, while the proceedings in that court are in fieri, and the corporation's effects are in the hands of that court's trustee or receiver, no other court of concurrent jurisdiction, and no suitor in such court, can disturb or interfere with such possession, or with that court's untrammelled adjudication of the questions before it. The rule has no greater extent than this. 2 White & T. Lead. Cas. Eq. pt. 2, p. 1402.

As has been shown, the bill in the circuit court of the United States was filed and is prosecuted by the trustee appointed in the mortgage and deed of further assurance executed by the Brierfield Coal & Iron Company. Its ultimate object was and is to foreclose those conveyances, and with the proceeds to pay the quasi receiver's certificates, and the $500,000 of bonds hereinbefore described. Only the corporation, the holders of those bonds, and certain creditors with whom some of those bonds have been deposited as security for money borrowed, are made parties to that bill. Gay, Hardie & Co. are neither made parties, nor is their claim mentioned in the bill. Not being defendants to that suit, they cannot be heard in defense of it; and the law furnishes them no coercive means of having themselves made defendants. The law arms the complainant with the supreme discretion and option of determining whom he will make parties defendant to his bill, and the only risk he incurs is that, if he omit a necessary party, he is liable to suffer in the decree he obtains. There is no process known to the law by which a stranger to the record can procure himself to be made a defendant. Remfro v. Goetter, 78 Ala. 811; Flournoy v. Harper, 81 Ala. 494; Ex parte Printup, 87 Ala. 148. True, in the prayer of the bill is found this clause: "If any of the creditors of said Brierfield Coal & Iron Company, who are not made parties defendant to the bill, or any persons holding and asserting claims against the trust estate in the hands of orator, desire to have their rights determined in this honorable court, that they be permitted [to make] themselves parties defendant in this cause, on filing their petition therein, setting forth their said debts, demands, and claims, and that said matters shall be heard and determined in this cause." Under the authorities cited above, the practice here invited would have been patently irregular, and we know of no precedent for it. Moreover, it does not appear that Gay, Hardie & Co. had notice of said offer, or even of the filing of that bill, in time to avail themselves of it for any practical purpose in that suit. We will not comment further on that clause at this time. Should it occur in the further progress of said suit in the circuit court of the United States that the creditors of the Brierfield Coal & Iron Company are notified to come in, and propound and prove their claims, that would be no adequate remedy to Gay, Hardie & Co. if the averments of their bill be true.

Under such notice they would come in as claimants under that suit, and not as defendants, armed with the power to controvert the legality of the bonds and mortgage. They could claim only in subordination, not in antagonism, to the purposes of that suit. Thus handicapped their claim would be subordinated to the certificates of indebtedness which have been issued, and to the $500,000 of bonds already decreed by that court to have a paramount lien on all the property embraced in the mortgage and further assurance. Gay, Hardie & Co. are simple contract creditors, without a judgment and without a lien. Their bill may be in part rested on section 8544 of the Code of 1886, which is in the following language: A creditor without a lien may file a bill in chancery to discover or to subject to the payment of his debt any property which has been fraudulently transferred or conveyed, or attempted to be fraudulently transferred or conveyed, by his debtor." See the many rulings on that statute cited in the note Gibson v. Trowbridge Furniture Co. (Ala.) 9 So. Rep. 870. We say the bill rests on that statute because its averments tend to make a case therein provided for, as we will hereafter show. See also Montgomery & F. R. Co. v. McKenzie, 85 Ala. 546; Lawson v. Warren, 89 Ala. 584; Martin v. Carter, 90 Ala. 96.

The charges of fraud and fraudulent purposes, as set forth in the present bill, may be briefly summarized as follows: First. The bonds for $500,000, and the mortgage given to secure their payment, were given upon no consideration, and in violation of article 14, § 6, of the Constitution of Alabama. Whepatrick v. Dispatch Pub. Co. 83 Ala. 604; Williams v. Evans, 87 Ala. 725, 6 L. R. A. 218. Second. A large amount of the stock subscription to the corporation remains unpaid, and it is not shown that the corporation has made, or is making, any attempt to collect it, and no excuse is offered for the failure. The said bill in the circuit court of the United States, as represented in the present bill, admits this sum to be large. The bill in this case charges it is $500,000. Third. The said trustee's bill, if correctly set forth, while it admits this large unpaid balance of stock subscription, seeks to sell the entire effects of the corporation for the payment of illegal and worthless bonds, and this in a bill which has for its parties only those persons who are interested in their payment and collection. If the averments of the present bill be true, (and in this hearing we must treat them as true,) there is not only no adversary interest presented in the suit by the trustee, but, in the nature of things, none could be regularly presented. A judgment thus obtained is collusive, and can have no binding effect on creditors who are not, and have no legitimate means of making themselves, parties. Only parties and their privies in estate or blood are estopped from disputing the ascertained facts on which judgments of courts are founded. As to creditors who are strangers to the record, if fraudulent they are of no avail. When they are made a fraudulent contrivance, or aid in hindering, delaying, or obstructing creditors in the enforcement of their just demands, they acquire no additional force by the circumstance that, in form, they are the solemn judgments of a court. Nothing is simpler or easier of accomplishment than to reduce an unfounded or fraudulent claim to judgment, when the ostensible antagonists concur in the desire to do so; and the court or presiding judge, being ignorant of the secret intent, and acting only on the case shown in the pleadings, is without knowledge of the purpose intended. He is thus sometimes made the innocent instrument of a most atrocious fraud. Chancery sweeps away such contrivances as chaff before the wind. 1 Black, Judgm. §§ 593 et seq.; Michaels v. Post, 88 U. S. 21 Wall. 898, 23 L. ed. 520; Belava v. Belava, 50 Ala. 82; Lee v. Lee, 55 Ala. 590; Dunklin v. Wilson, 64 Ala. 162; Dunklin v. Harvey, 56 Ala. 177; Humphreys v. Burleson, 72 Ala. 1; Metropolitan Bank v. Durant, 23 N. J. Eq. 85, 24 N. J. Eq. 556; 2 Pom. Eq. §§ 919, 970; 1 Story, Eq. § 252a et seq.; Johnson v. Waters, 111 U. S. 640, 28 L. ed. 547; Sawyer v. Hoag, 84 U. S. 17 Wall. 610, 620, 21 L. ed. 731, 735.

As we have said, we are dealing with the case made by the averments of the bill. According to those averments, the bonds were issued without any consideration, and in direct violation of the Constitution of this state. It is not shown, nor can it be presumed, that the corporate effects sold under the circuit court's decree will bring a sum in excess of the amount of the quasi receiver's certificates and the bonded indebtedness. If they do not, the other creditors have nothing to look to for payment of their demands, unless they can successfully controvert the legality of the bonded indebtedness. No answers have been filed to the present bill, and we cannot know what the defense may be. It would be worse than idle for us to speculate about it, and we will not attempt it. Let us charitably hope the grave charges made may prove unfounded. At this stage of the litigation, we will not comment on the frauds that may be, and sometimes are, perpetrated through the seeming forms of law. We have said that the chancery court must not and cannot interfere with the possession acquired by the circuit court of the United States until that court finishes its work, and relinquishes its possession. What steps can be taken in the chancery court, while the conditions remain as they are shown in the transcript before us? It is certainly true that no court will or can restrain or intermeddle with another court of co-ordinate jurisdiction. It does, however, often interfere with parties who are conducting litigation before another tribunal.

It would seem there can be no objection to taking testimony to establish the justness of complainant's claim, and, if true as charged, the fraud of the corporation through its officers in placing or attempting to place its effects beyond the reach of its bona fide creditors. Nor does it appear that steps cannot be taken to subject the unpaid subscriptions of stock in the corporation, if there be such, to the payment of the demand of complainants. It is not shown that the circuit court of the United States has taken any jurisdiction of this subject, or has been asked to do so. In the averments and prayer of the bill, if correctly stated, it rather appears to have been given the go-by. Glenn v. Semple, 80 Ala. 159, 60 Am. Rep. 92, and authorities cited.

What recourse complainants can assert against the property of the corporation itself, or against its proceeds, after it shall have passed out of the possession of the circuit court of the United States, would seem to depend on the inquiry whether it passes to the bondholders or to strangers as purchasers. Possibly, in the one case, if the averments of the present bill be true, the property itself may continue subject, while in the other, only the proceeds could be reached. We make these suggestions, without intending to commit ourselves absolutely to their correctness. I concur in the reversal of the chancellor's decree.

An application for rehearing was subsequently filed in response to which Stone, Ch. J., on behalf of the court, delivered the following opinion:

It is contended before us that the bill in this case ought to have been dismissed, because of an error in the local jurisdiction: that is, that the bill was filed in Colbert county, the residence of Chambers, the trustee, but of no other party to the suit. The contention is that Chambers was a naked trustee, having no interest in anything involved in the litigation, and that his residence did not and could not constitute him a material defendant, so as to authorize the suit to be brought in that county. Code 1886, § 3421. This case was not heard in Colbert, but in Jefferson county. It was removed to the latter county by an order entered on the minutes of the Colbert court, as follows:

"580. Gay, Hardie & Co. v. Brierfield Coal & Iron Co., W. L. Chambers, as Trustee. By the consent of counsel for the respective parties in the above-entitled cause the same is removed for trial from the chancery court of Colbert county to the chancery court of Jefferson county, and the register of Colbert county is hereby directed to transfer to the chancery court of Jefferson county all the original process and papers in said cause, and a bill of his cost to this date. The register of Colbert county will file in his office the consent of counsel and this decree. December 18th, 1889. Thomas Cobbs, Chancellor."

In addition to the foregoing, the following orders were made and filed in the chancery court of Jefferson county after the cause was removed to that county, and this without any reference being made to the irregularity of filing the bill in Colbert county, if that be an irregularity:

"Gay, Hardie & Co. v. Brierfield Coal & Iron Company, et al. In chancery. Fall term, 1889-1890. It is ordered by the court that this cause be, and the same is hereby, submitted on demurrer to bill, to be heard on briefs. . . ." Gay, Hardie & Co. v.
16 L. R. A.

The Brierfield Coal & Iron Co. In chancery. This cause, coming on to be heard, was submitted upon the demurrers to the bill, and was argued by counsel, and, being duly considered, it is ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the demurrers are well taken, and are sustained. Thomas Cobbs, Chancellor. Filed and enrolled this June 26, 1890. Chas. A. Senn, Register."

We considered it unnecessary to decide whether or not the suit was properly brought in Colbert county. If not, then the conduct of the parties was a waiver of the irregularity. Hair v. Moody, 9 Ala. 399; Byrd v. McDaniel, 26 Ala. 582.

We should do injustice to the research of counsel, if we did not pronounce the application for a rehearing on this case to be able, and fully up to the merits of the question it discusses. It certainly demonstrates that, so long as the circuit court of the United States has control and possession of the property and effects of the Brierfield Coal & Iron Company, no other court can interfere with that possession, or hinder it in any way in the free consideration and adjudication of the questions before it. And the judgment or decree it may render will, unless reversed on appeal, be determinative of the rights involved, as between the parties to that suit. Does it or can it extend any further? When that court pronounces judgment, and relinquishes possession, it cannot be affirmed that any right or claim has become res judicata, unless both the claim and claimant have been before the court. Such is the mandate of all enlightened jurisprudence. 2 Black, Judgm. §§ 500, 504; 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 584, 535.

No particular claim can attach to the fact that the suit of Preston B. Plumb, referred to in the present bill of Gay, Hardie & Co., was pending in a court deriving its powers from the government of the United States. The same doctrine of noninterference will apply, and only the same, as if that suit had been pending in a state court, with a limited exception, not material to this case. The present suit does not propose to obstruct or hinder the United States court in the free control of the property it has in its possession, or in the untrammelled administration of justice between the parties it has before it. It claims, however, and rightfully claims, that the judgment of that or of any other court, rendered on issue joined between the parties to that suit, does not and cannot determine property rights against other claimants who were not parties to that litigation. It founds its claim on the fundamental principle that judgments bind, and only bind, parties to the suit, and their privies. It claims that if, in a contention between A and B, the right be adjudged in A, this does not estop C from asserting and proving that the paramount title is in him.

Another argument in support of the main ground on which the equity of the bill in this case is rested. As we have shown in a former opinion, taking the averments of the bill for our guide, when the projectors of the Brierfield Coal & Iron Company placed its stock on the market with a view to organization, it was done with the agreement that every subscriber who would purchase and pay for the stock of the corporation should, without further payment or consideration, receive a thousand-dollar bond of the company for every $900 of stock subscribed and paid for; and the payment of these bonds was to be secured by a mortgage on the entire property and effects of the corporation. This agreement was made good, and the subscribers for the stock received not only the certificates of stock they subscribed and paid for, but, in addition, the said bonds of the company, in excess of the money paid, secured by a first mortgage on the entire property of the corporation. Ten dollars of this first and highest secured debt and obligation of the company for every nine dollars subscribed and paid in. We have recently had occasion to consider the nature and purpose of capital stock in business corporations, and the legislative policy which requires such stock as a condition on which it grants a corporate franchise. The liabilities of corporations, unlike the debts of natural persons, impose no personal debts on any one. Only the corporation's effects can be reached for the satisfaction of its debts. Hence the purpose and policy of requiring a capital stock to be subscribed and paid in. It is intended as a security and pledge for the payment of any liabilities the corporation may incur, and partakes largely of the nature of any other pawn or pledge required and given as security for the fulfillment of a promise. It is a pledge in trust, primarily for the security of creditors, and cannot rightfully be withdrawn until all debts and liabilities of the corporation are paid. Gibson v. Trowbridge Furniture Co. (Ala.) 9 So. Rep. 870; Corey v. Wadsworth (Ala.) 11 So. Rep. 850.

In the organization of the Brierfield Coal & Iron Company, as the pleadings show, this policy was entirely disregarded. True, the capital stock was to be subscribed and paid for, but the money was not to be left in safe pledge for the security of persons that might become its creditors. Stripped of circuity, the money received for stock subscriptions was only borrowed from the stock subscribers, to be repaid to them, not contingently, but in any event that might occur; repaid, not as an ordinary debt of the corporation, but as a preferred and secured debt; preferred and secured by bonds and a first mortgage on all the property of the corporation. So, if the averments of the bill be true, the Brierfield Coal & Iron Company, instead of having a capital stock subscribed and paid on call, commenced operations upon no capital stock of its own, either in possession, or in prospect, but on borrowed money, secured to be repaid with a premium by a first mortgage on all its effects, present and prospective, with nothing in pledge for other debts it might incur and without other security for the payment of such debts, except a possible surplus of assets, left after repaying the borrowed capital stock. In this way it went through the form of organizing and exercising its corporate powers. Instead of requiring a capital stock to be paid in and administered as a security for creditors, it practically dispensed with it altogether. Instead of holding the capital stock as a trust fund primarily for the benefit of creditors, and secondarily for the stockholders, it reversed this natural order of things, transformed the stockholders into creditors, and made them a preferred class, with a prior, paramount mortgage lien over all other creditors who may have trusted or may trust the corporation. So then we have the case of an incipient corporation issuing $500,000 of its bonds upon no consideration, and secured by a first mortgage, as shown in our first opinion, or, as we have attempted to set forth above, a simple act of borrowing from so-called "stockholders" the entire capital stock on which it proposed to do business, secured to be repaid in preference to all other liabilities by a first mortgage on all the property of the corporation. If the bill of Gay, Hardie & Co. truly represents the facts, can further comment be necessary?

The application for a rehearing must be denied.

Wiley E. CROCKER, Appt.,

B. F. SMITH et al.

(.....Ala.....)

The inclusion of after-acquired property in an instrument of conveyance and the reservation of all the property for the payment of the grantor's debts will compel its construction as a will rather than as a deed when its character must be determined from its face, especially if it provides that it shall not take absolute effect until the grantor's death.

(November 24, 1901.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Pike County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover an interest in certain real estate. Reversed.

The rights of the parties depended upon whether the following instrument was a deed or a will:

"State of Alabama, }
"Pike County. }

"Know all men by these presents, that I, David Fleming of the County of Pike and State of Alabama, being moved and influenced as I have uniformly been, from the natural love and affection which I have and bear for and toward my beloved wife Sarah Ann Fleming, being able to provide well for her in after life, as well as for her present comfort, that she may have and enjoy a permanent and substantial estate and property, and from the further consideration of one dollar, and further, that my said wife has aided me in the accumulation of the estate I am possessed of, I hereby give, convey, and confirm unto my said wife

NOTE.—This case is reported as another of the many instances of the expression of testamentary intention in language ordinarily appropriate to deeds rather than to wills.

For another class of informal wills—letters,—see note to Re Richardson (Cal.) 15 L. R. A. 685.

and her heirs in absolute right, all my entire estate, real and personal, lands, negroes, stock, and all manner of property I now or may hereafter own, except a negro girl named Elizabeth, aged four years, which girl I give, convey, and confirm unto my sister-in-law, Margaret S. Carr, wife of Calvin Carr, of said county, reserving a lifetime estate and enjoyment of said property to myself, and for the payment of all my just debts. This deed of gift to take effect absolutely at my death, and to be valid and conclusive.

"In testimony whereof, I, the said David Fleming, have hereunto set my hand and seal. Signed, sealed, and delivered this 17th of Sept. 1887.

"In the presence of

"Gappa T. Yelverton,

"J. A. Whaley.

"David Fleming."

The further facts are stated in the opinion. Mr. Alex. T. London, for appellant:

If it was intended to pass a present interest and has the other requisites essential to its operation as a deed, it will in law be so regarded; while, on the contrary, if the interest was entirely posthumous, then it is a will if properly executed as such.

Elmore v. Mustin, 28 Ala. 809; Adams v. Broughton, 13 Ala. 781; Golding v. Golding, 24 Ala. 122; Jordan v. Jordan, 65 Ala. 801; Trawick v. Davis, 85 Ala. 842.

If a paper cannot have operation as a deed, but may as a will, then in doubtful cases we should pronounce it a will ut res magis valeat.

Sharp v. Hall, 86 Ala. 110; Kyle v. Perdus, 87 Ala. 428.

This instrument could not be effectual as a deed to convey property that he might thereafter own.

Devlin, Deeds, § 945; Tillotson v. Doe, 5 Ala. 418, 89 Am. Dec. 830; Jamaica Pond Aqueduct Corp. v. Chandler, 9 Allen, 159.

Messrs. W. L. Parks and John Gamble, Sr., also for appellant.

Mr. P. O. Harper for appellees.

Clouton, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The parties having agreed in the circuit court that if the instrument executed by David Fleming, September 17, 1887, is construed to be a deed, judgment should be rendered for plaintiffs; and if a will, for defendant; and, this being the only question on which any ruling was asked or made by the court, the judgment on this appeal must also depend on the interpretation of the instrument. The general characteristics which distinguish deeds from wills have been repeatedly declared, yet no definite uniform test has been stated by which to determine the character and operation of each particular instrument, and none can well be. The intention of the maker is the ultimate object of inquiry,—whether it was intended to be ambulatory and revocable, or to create rights and interests at the time of execution which are irrevocable. If the instrument cannot be revoked, defeated, or impaired by the act of the grantor, it is a deed; but if the estate, title, or interest is dependent on the death of the testator, if in him resides the unqualified power of revocation,—it is a will. Jordan v.

Jordan, 65 Ala. 806. Ordinarily the intention is to be collected from the terms of the instrument, considered in the light of the surrounding circumstances; but, there being no proof of the circumstances under which the instrument was executed, consideration is necessarily limited to the operation of its terms. The purpose and consideration are expressed as follows: "Being moved and influenced, as I have uniformly been, from the natural love and affection which I have and bear for and towards my beloved wife, Sarah Ann Fleming, being able to provide well for her in after life, as well as for her present comfort, and that she may have and enjoy a permanent and substantial estate and property, and from the further consideration of one dollar, and, further, that my said wife has aided me in the accumulation of the estate I am possessed of;" followed by these words of conveyance: "I hereby give, convey, and confirm unto my said wife, and her heirs in absolute right, all my entire estate, real and personal, lands, negroes, stock, and all manner of property which I now, or may hereafter, own," excepting a negro girl, which was given to his sister-in-law. The instrument was sufficiently executed to operate as a deed or will, and has appended a certificate of proof of execution and of registration. It has been said that these facts raise the presumption of delivery, and are persuasive to show that the maker regarded the instrument as a deed but they bear little, if any, significance, in the absence of proof that the instrument was delivered or recorded in the lifetime of the donor. The fact that it is designated on its face as a deed of gift is ordinarily regarded of little moment; though it may become of more or less importance when, upon a comparison of the terms of the instrument, and consideration of the bearing of each on the others, the meaning is ambiguous, and the mind is left in doubt as to the intention of the makers. Though the instrument may be in the form of a deed of gift, and designated as such, it is a will; if its purpose be testamentary, it cannot operate during life, and is only consummated by death. Dunn v. Bank of Mobile, 2 Ala. 152. While the passing of present and immediate right of possession and enjoyment is not essential to constitute the instrument a deed, and the reservation of the use and enjoyment of the property to the grantor during his life does not, of itself, make it a will, yet if it has not present effect in fixing the terms of such future enjoyment, and requires the death of the alleged testator for its consummation,—when the interest and enjoyment are posthumous,—it is a will, if properly executed as such. Trawick v. Davis, 85 Ala. 842; Griffith v. Marsh, 86 Ala. 803; Sharp v. Hall, 86 Ala. 110; Elmore v. Mustin, 28 Ala. 809. By reference to the instrument, it will be observed that the right or interest which it purports to pass is not only of all the property, real and personal, which the maker then owned, but also of all that he might thereafter own. It is manifest, in the absence of covenants of warranty, it is ineffectual to convey property thereafter acquired. As to such property, it can have no operation as a deed, but may as a will. In doubtful cases, the instrument will be pronounced a will when it cannot have operation as a deed, but may as a will. Sharp v. Hall, supra. The inclusion of after-acquired property seems to indicate an intent that the instrument should not pass any present right or interest. Also the last clause reads as follows: "Reserving a lifetime estate and enjoyment of said property to myself, and for the payment of my just debts. This deed of gift to take effect absolutely at my death, and to be valid and conclusive." The reservation is not only of a lifetime estate and enjoyment, but also of all the property for the payment of his just debts. All the property is made subject to the payment of debts thereafter contracted, and only so much of the estate as remains after the death of the donor, and the payment of his debts, can pass by the terms of the instrument,—tantamount to a general power of disposition. Furthermore, it expressly provided that it shall not take absolute effect until his death, at which time it is to be valid and conclusive. When there is a reservation of a general power of revocation or disposition, and a provision that the instrument shall not be in force or take effect until the death of the maker, it is in its nature ambulatory and revocable. "When there is a general reservation, or something like a reservation, of the maker's right to deal with the property as his own, notwithstanding the instrument, and no conclusive effect can be given to it until the death of the maker, the law regards the instrument as testamentary." Gillham v. Mustin, 43 Ala. 865. The reservation of the property for the payment of his debts, and the provision as to the time when it should take effect, seems to have been incorporated for the purpose of limiting or qualifying what might otherwise be the legal operation of the preceding words, "give, convey, and confirm in absolute right." Applying the foregoing principles and tests, we are forced to pronounce the instrument to be a will.

Reversed, and judgment rendered for defendant.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

COMMONWEALTH of Massachusetts

Theodore G. GRAHAM.

(.....Mass.....)

1. A minor's marriage valid in the state where it is made is not invalid in the state of his residence because of the fact that he went out of the state to be married for the sole purpose of evading a statutory provision requiring his father's consent; at least it is not if the laws of his domicile do not so declare it.
2. An infant husband is entitled to his own wages so far as they are necessary for his own support and that of his wife and children, even if he married without his father's consent.

(June 24, 1893.)

NOTE.—How far marriage of infant works his emancipation.

So far as the right of the parent to the services and earnings of his minor child is concerned, marriage of a male of itself works a legal emancipation and entitles him to the proceeds of his labor, independent of any act on the part of his father. Dick v. Grisson, Freem. Ch. 434.

The legal marriage of a daughter, although without the father's consent, works her emancipation. Aldrich v. Bennett, 68 N. H. 415, 56 Am. Rep. 529.

The legal marriage of a female after attaining the statutory age of lawful wedlock discharges her from all further duties to perform service for her parents. Hervey v. Moseley, 7 Gray, 479, 56 Am. Dec. 515.

And in England it seems there can be no emancipation unless by marriage. Rex v. Wilmington, 5 Barn. & Ald. 525.

It has been held, however, that a minor son is not emancipated by a marriage without the consent and contrary to the directions of his father. White v. Henry, 24 Me. 581.

Also that where the minor goes to another state and is married without the consent of his tutor, and in violation of the law of his domicile, he does not become emancipated. The statute providing 16 L. R. A.

EXCEPTIONS by defendant to rulings of the Superior Court for Middlesex County made during the trial of a prosecution against him for nonsupport of his wife which resulted in his conviction. Overruled.

Defendant was under twenty-one years of age at the time of the swearing out of the complaint. He was nineteen at the time of his marriage. The marriage was solemnized in Maine whither defendant and his prospective wife had repaired for the sole purpose of evading that provision of Massachusetts law which requires the written consent of a minor's father to his marriage. Such consent was never given and defendant's father had always claimed and taken defendant's wages. The defendant, after his marriage, lived with his wife for six weeks at the home of his parents, in Somerville. The father was in poor health and needed his son's wages for his that marriage shall work an emancipation refers to a marriage authorized by law. Maillefer v. Saillet, 4 La. Ann. 375.

And this applies to a female as well as to a male. Babin v. Le Blanc, 12 La. Ann. 367.

Although consent may be implied from circumstances. Bucksport v. Rockland, 56 Me. 22.

Hence after such marriage the tutor of the minor cannot be held liable for affording shelter and protection to his ward. A man who marries a minor in fraud of the law of her domicile acquires no right over her estate, and perhaps none over her person, except so far as yielded to him (Clement v. Wafer, 12 La. Ann. 599); although in general marriage defeats the rights of a guardian appointed by the court (Porch v. Fries, 13 N. J. Eq. 204); for the husband is entitled to the guardianship of his infant wife. Kettletas v. Gardner, 1 Paige, 485, 2 L. ed. 725.

The parents have no authority to compel the daughter to leave her husband. Holts v. Dick, 43 Ohio St. 23, 51 Am. Rep. 791.

A minor cannot maintain an action against her parent for wrongful confinement in an insane asylum where the relation of parent and child has been resumed between them after the separation of the minor from the man to whom she had been own support and the support of other members of his family. The defendant had no property other than said wages, and his wife had no separate property, and was unable to work, at the time of the making of the complaint. The father testified that he allowed the son to retain from his earnings from one to four dollars a week for the first six months after his marriage. At the time of the complaint the defendant's wife was quick with child; and since February, 1891, to the date of the complaint, he has made no provision whatever for her support. This period was after he was allowed from one to four dollars, as previously stated.

The defendant requested the court to rule: First. "A father is legally entitled to the wages of his minor son, and his marriage without the consent of his father does not of itself work his emancipation, and entitle him to his earnings. If the defendant's father claimed and took his wages, and thereby deprived the defendant of the means of supporting his wife, he cannot be convicted."

Second. "A marriage in another state, in violation of the laws of this state, will not have the effect to emancipate here the minor party to such marriage."

The court refused so to rule, but did instruct the jury that the marriage in Maine without the father's consent was valid in this commonwealth, and imposed upon the defendant all the duties and responsibilities of the marital relation; that his wife would be entitled to receive support from him; that the defendant would be entitled as of right to such portion of his wages as to enable him to support his wife; that the father could only claim the rest; and that it was for the jury to say whether the defendant had any income, and if so whether his neglect to support his wife was, upon all the evidence, unreasonable.

Messrs. Joseph Cummings and R. G. Fairbanks, for defendant:

At common law, a husband is not liable criminally for the nonsupport of his wife.

Ex parte Jackson, 45 Ark. 158.

This is a penal statute in derogation of the common law, and must be construed strictly.

The marriage was solemnized in Maine, in violation of Pub. Stat., chaps. 145, 146; nevertheless it is binding upon the parties to the contract.

Medway v. Needham, 16 Mass. 159, 8 Am. Dec. 131; Hiram v. Pierce, 45 Me. 387, 71 Am. Dec. 555; Parton v. Hervey, 1 Gray, 119.

It is not contended that the marriage is illegal, but that the father cannot, without his consent, be deprived of his right to his son's wages. The marriage took place without the knowledge or consent of the father, who has always claimed and taken his son's wages.

A marriage in one state in violation of the laws of another will not have the effect to emancipate the party to such marriage in the latter state.

Babin v. Le Blanc, 12 La. Ann. 367, affirming Maillefer v. Sailot, 4 La. Ann. 375. See also Clement v. Wafer, 12 La. Ann. 599.

A father is legally entitled to the wages of his minor son, and his marriage without the consent of his father does not of itself work his emancipation and entitle him to his earnings.

Benson v. Remington, 2 Mass. 118; Taunton v. Plymouth, 15 Mass. 204; White v. Henry, 24 Me. 531; Buckport v. Rockland, 56 Me. 22.

Emancipation will not be presumed, but must be proved.

Sumner v. Sebec, 3 Me. 228; Lowell v. Newport, 66 Me. 78.

The law of England does in some cases privilege an infant under the age of twenty-one as to common misdemeanors, so as to escape fine, imprisonment, and the like; and particularly in cases of omission, as not repairing a bridge or a highway, and other similar offenses; for, not having the command of his fortune till twenty-one, he wants the capacity to do those things which the law requires.

4 Bl. Com. 22, where is cited 1 Hale, P. C. 20-22.

The plea of infancy, when justified by the facts, is honorable and proper, and is not discouraged by the courts.

married. Hewlett v. George, 13 L. R. A. 682, 68 Miss. 708.

The question has frequently arisen in connection with the determination of pauper settlements.

In Taunton v. Plymouth, 15 Mass. 203, the court said the marriage may have removed the pauper from the control of his father, and perhaps have given him a right to apply all his earnings to the support of his family; but it did not give him the capacity to make binding contracts beyond other infants, or any political or municipal rights which do not belong by law to other minors; and it held that he could not acquire a new settlement of his own.

But it had formerly been held in that state that the marriage of a female infant prevents her taking the settlement afterwards acquired by her parents. Charlestown v. Boston, 13 Mass. 460.

And in Vermont it was decided that marriage of a male emancipates him within the provisions of the pauper law providing for the warning out of a town of persons coming thereto, to prevent their acquiring a settlement therein. Sherburne v. Hartland, 37 Vt. 529. See also Bradford v. Lunenburg, 5 Vt. 490; Northfield v. Brookfield, 50 Vt. 62.

16 L. R. A.

Marriage is recognized as an act which will permit a minor to gain a settlement apart from his father, in Rex v. Witton, 3 T. R. 355; Reg. v. Selborne, 2 El. & El. 275; and Bozrah v. Stonington, 4 Conn. 373.

Outside of his relation to his parents, a minor's marriage seems to have little effect.

The disabilities of infancy remain. Bool v. Mix, 17 Wend. 119.

An infant feme covert cannot execute a deed even in the statutory form. Sanford v. McClean, 3 Paige, 117, 3 L. ed. 80.

Marriage does not increase the minor's power over his real estate. Porch v. Fries, 13 N. J. Eq. 204.

Under the Louisiana Code a minor emancipated by marriage may dispose of her personal but not of her real estate. Grigsby v. Louisiana Bank, 3 La. 492.

After an interesting discussion of the Spanish Law of Emancipation by marriage, the court in Burr v. Wilson, 18 Tex. 367, concludes that the privilege of pleading infancy to a suit on a note was not removed.

H. F. F.

Delafield v. Tanner, 5 Taunt. 856, 1 Eng. C. L. Rep. 486.

Mr. Charles N. Harris, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the Commonwealth:

The marriage of a minor gives him a right, as against his father, to apply all his earnings to the support of his wife.

Taunton v. Plymouth, 15 Mass. 208; Davis v. Caldwell, 12 Cush. 512; Sherburne v. Hartland, 37 Vt. 528; Aldrich v. Bennett, 63 N. H. 415, 56 Am. Rep. 529; Burr v. Wilson, 18 Tex. 367.

The marriage was valid in this Commonwealth. The defendant was nineteen years of age, and although the age of his wife does not appear, yet it not being shown that the parties separated during their nonage, that question is not open.

Parton v. Hervey, 1 Gray, 119; Pub. Stat. chap. 145, § 8.

The fact that the marriage was solemnized in another state by residents of this state, for the purpose of evading a provision of law not contained in the first five sections of Pub. Stat., chap. 145 (Pub. Stat. chap. 145, § 10) does not render the marriage invalid under the laws of this commonwealth.

Field, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The exceptions recite that the "defendant was nineteen at the time of his marriage and twenty when the complaint was made." The age of the wife nowhere appears, but it was not contended that she was under the age of consent. If the marriage had been solemnized within the commonwealth, it would have been valid. Pub. Stat. chap. 145, § 6; Parton v. Hervey, 1 Gray, 119. It is not contended that the marriage was void by the laws of Maine, but we cannot take judicial notice of the statutes of Maine; and the common law of that state must be presumed, in the absence of evidence, to be the same as the common law of Massachusetts. See Hiram v. Pierce, 45 Me. 367, 71 Am. Dec. 555. Section 10, chap. 145, Pub. Stat., was intended to define the cases in which a marriage should be deemed void which was solemnized in another state by persons resident in this commonwealth, who went into the other state for the purpose of having the marriage solemnized there, and afterwards returned to and resided in this commonwealth; but the present case is not within this section. The general rule of law is that marriage contracted elsewhere, if valid where it is contracted, is held valid here, although the parties intended to evade our laws, unless the statutes declare such a marriage void, or the marriage is one deemed "contrary to the law of nature, as generally recognized in Christian countries." Com. v. Lane, 113 Mass. 458, 18 Am. Rep. 509; Sutton v. Warren, 10 Met. 451; Com. v. Hunt, 4 Cush. 49. The consequences of this marriage must be the same as if it had been solemnized in this commonwealth; and the presiding justice, therefore, correctly ruled that this marriage "imposed upon the defendant all the duties and responsibilities of the marital relation."

The real question is whether, when a minor son marries without the consent of his father, and the father never consents to it, and needs the son's wages for his support and the support of his family, the father is entitled to the son's wages during minority in preference to the wife, who also needs the wages for her support. The ruling was that the "wife would be entitled as of right to receive support from" her husband, and that he "would be entitled as of right to such portion of his wages as to enable him to support his wife; that the father could only claim the rest." It seems to be settled that the marriage of a minor son, with the consent of his father, works an emancipation; and is not clear that the marriage of a minor son without his father's consent does not have the same effect, although the decision in White v. Henry, 24 Me. 581, is contra. It has been said that "the husband becomes the head of a new family. His new relations to his wife and children create obligations and duties which require him to be master of himself, his time, his labor, earnings, and conduct." Sherburne v. Hartland, 37 Vt. 528. There seems to be little doubt that, when an infant daughter marries, she is emancipated from the control of her parents. Aldrich v. Bennett, 63 N. H. 415, 56 Am. Rep. 529; Burr v. Wilson, 18 Tex. 367; Porch v. Fries, 18 N. J. Eq. 204; Rez v. Wilmington, 5 Barn. & Ald. 525; Rez v. Eberton, 1 East, 526; Northfield v. Brookfield, 50 Vt. 62. See, however, Babin v. LeBlanc, 12 La. Ann. 367. The meaning of emancipation is not that all the disabilities of infancy are removed, but that the infant is freed from parental control, and has a right to his own earnings. In Taunton v. Plymouth, 15 Mass. 204, it was intimated that the marriage of an infant son with the consent of the father entitled the son to his own earnings for the support of his family; and in Davis v. Caldwell, 12 Cush. 512, it was said that an infant husband is liable for necessities furnished for himself and his family. It is clear, we think, that it is the duty of an infant husband to support his wife, and that, if he have property and a guardian, it is the duty of the guardian to apply the income, and, so far as is necessary, the principal, of his ward's property, to the maintenance of the ward and his family, under Pub. Stat., chap. 139, § 30. We are of opinion that these considerations make it necessary to hold that an infant husband is entitled to his own wages, so far as they are necessary for his own support and that of his wife and children, even if he married without his father's consent, and that the ruling of the court was sufficiently favorable to the defendant. Whether sound policy does not require that in every case in which the marriage is valid an infant husband should be entitled to all his earnings need not now be decided.

Exceptions overruled.

WISCONSIN SUPREME COURT.

FOND DU LAC WATER CO., Appt.,

v.

City of FOND DU LAC, Resp.

(.....Wis.....)

1. The assessment for taxation of the lots, whereon are the pumping station and works of a water company, separate and apart from the water mains, franchises, and other property constituting its plant is erroneous.
2. The water mains, franchises, etc., of a water company are not properly assessed for taxation by an entry in the tax book of an assessment against the lots on which the pumping works are situated by their numbers and that of the block in which they are situated; and such assessment cannot be enlarged or extended by parol proof of intention.
3. The board of review cannot obviate a defect in the assessment of property so as to sustain an unjust and excessive valuation of it as described by receiving proof of the value of property subject to taxation and alleged to have been intended by such description.
4. The rights and franchises of a water company are proper subjects for taxation under a statute requiring all property in the state not exempted to be taxed.
5. The board of review has no authority to increase the assessment of property described upon the roll as certain lots in a certain block so as to include the water mains, rights, and franchises of the water company which owns the lots and has located its pumping station upon them.
6. The board of review cannot arbitrarily raise the valuation of property as fixed by the tax assessor, without evidence or against the evidence, under a statute requiring it to hear and examine any person who shall appear before it in reference to any assessment and when satisfied from the evidence that the assessment is wrong to change it.

(Orton, J., dissentia.)

(May 24, 1892.)

APPPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Fond du Lac County dismissing the complaint and dissolving a preliminary injunction in a proceeding instituted to enjoin the levying of certain taxes against plaintiff's property until there had been a revaluation of it and a revision of the assessment. Reversed.

Statement by Pinney, J.:

This action was brought to enjoin and restrain the defendant city and its clerk from proceeding to levy taxes upon lots 87, 88, 89, 40, 48, 49, and 50, of block 28 of the original plat of the city, the property of the plaintiff, valued for taxation in 1890 by the assessor at $40,000, and increased by the board of review to $55,000, until a revision and revaluation of the same might be had; and that, if the tax shall have already been levied, the defendants be restrained from delivering the warrant to the city treasurer until such revision could be had; and the plaintiff prayed for a perpetual injunction, and for such further and other relief in the premises as might be just, upon the ground, among others, that said assessment, and the increase thereof by the board of review, were largely in excess of the true valuation, and that the rule of valuation applied to it was different and of a higher rate than the rules of valuation applied to other corporate property of the same and kindred classes in the city; that the plaintiff was cited before the board of review to show cause why the assessment of $40,000 should not be raised, and its treasurer appeared before the board, and asked for a reduction of the assessed value of $20,000, and tendered proof on the subject of value, which the board declined to receive; that the board without proof or other inquiry, increased the assessment as aforesaid, instead of reducing it, which increase it is alleged was fraudulent, willful, and malicious. The answer denies these allegations, and alleges that at the time the value of the plaintiff's property was much greater than the valuation placed upon it by the board of review. The court found that on said premises, at the time of the assessment and levying of the tax, were located the pumping house and pumping machinery of the plaintiff, and appurtenant thereto, and connected therewith, were iron water mains and pipes extending under certain streets of said defendant, with hydrants and laterals attached, by means of which the plaintiff company carries on its business of supplying the defendant city and its inhabitants with water; that the plaintiff's said real estate, and the buildings and machinery thereon, and the water mains, pipes, laterals, and hydrants, cost and were worth at least $150,000 at the time of the assessment and the action of the board of review; that the assessors of the city for 1890, in making their assessment, assessed plaintiff's said property, including said water mains, pipes, laterals, and hydrants, at the sum of $40,000, and the board of review raised it to the sum of $55,000; that during the session of the board of review the plaintiff appeared before the board, and made a statement of its earnings and expenses, and its treasurer was orally examined by said board in regard to the value of said property for taxation; that the assessment was made by the assessor and raised by the board in good faith, and not fraudulently, or with any intention to place

NOTE.—As to what should be considered as part of the franchise of a corporation for the purpose of taxation, see note to Yellow River Imp. Co. v. Wood County, post, —.

As to the character of the mains, hydrants, etc.,

16 L. R. A.

of a water company for purposes of taxation, see Oskaloosa Water Co. v. Oskaloosa Board of Equalization (Iowa) 15 L. R. A. 296, and note; Shelbyville Water Co. v. People (Ill.) ante, 505.

an excessive valuation on said plaintiff's said property, and that the action of the board of review in raising the assessment was taken on sufficient evidence; that the full value of the property which could ordinarily be obtained therefor at private sale exceeded the valuation fixed thereon by the board of review, and that the assessment as fixed by said board was not excessive; that the income of the plaintiff from its property for the year 1890 was not less than $16,000. The city clerk, and ex officio clerk of the board of review, testified to the appearance of the treasurer of the plaintiff company before the board of review, and filing with it a communication protesting against any increase of the assessors' valuation for the purposes of taxation of the property of the company, and asking that the assessors' valuation be reduced to correspond with the taxable value fixed on other property in the city somewhat similarly situated. This communication stated that the company has never declared a dividend; that its earnings do not clear its expenses; that it was hoped to make the property valuable; that it was organized with a capital stock of $200,000, and bonded indebtedness of $155,000; and its income last year from private sources was less than $6,000; that its expenses exceed its income; officers' salaries, except superintendent, are not included, not being paid them; that the lots, buildings, and machinery, which were assessed at $40,000, cost the company only about $26,500, and insisting that $15,000 or $20,000 was a large present valuation of them for taxable purposes. By this communication he offered to submit to inspection the books of the company, and the treasurer offered to be examined under oath as to the truth of his statement. The clerk further testified that there was no proof taken under oath by the board of review in relation to this assessment; that the treasurer was sworn and repeated this statement, and no other proof was taken. On cross-examination he said there was no other record made than that L. Muentner appeared, in response to notice, was duly sworn, and made statement as to increase and expenses of the company, and presented a written document protesting against any increase of the assessors' valuation of the water-works, and requested that the valuation be reduced to correspond with the value of their property; that is all of the record testimony; that he did not remember that any other questions were asked him; that he read some other papers to the board besides those filed; that the assessment did not state the property included, the entry being, "The Fond du Lac Water Company, 48 feet of lot 37, all of 88, 39, 40, 48, 49, 50 of block 26, original plat, valuation by assessors, $40,000." Question arose at the trial as to what was considered by the board of review as included in said assessment, or what formed the basis on which the board raised it. The court allowed the witness to testify, and other proof to be given, to show that the assessment was intended to cover the real estate, including the hydrants, mains, the plant, and connections generally of the plaintiff. Objection to this testimony was made on the ground that there was nothing else entered on the roll than the mere description of the lots as a subject for taxation, but the court permitted the testimony to be given. It appeared, among other things, that the company had cast-iron mains and wrought-iron laterals, about four miles of mains through the town, and fifteen miles of pipe; and considerable other testimony was given on the trial tending to show that the entire property of the plaintiff, consisting of pumping works, mains, laterals, hydrants, and plant, was worth much more than $55,000. The plaintiff put in evidence an ordinance of the city granting to the plaintiff corporation, during the term of its existence, the franchise and privileges stated in the opinion. The plaintiff corporation was organized under the general law of the state. Rev. Stat. chap. 86. The defendant called a member of the board of review to testify, in answer to a question, what property the board considered as pertaining to the lots assessed, in raising the valuation, which was objected to by the plaintiff, and he answered all the hydrants and pipes leading thereto and the plant; that the company had down at that time about fifteen miles and a half of pipe. The court held that the valuation placed by the board on said property was just and proper; and the tax was valid and lawful, and entered judgment dismissing the complaint, and dissolving the injunction theretofore granted. Exceptions were taken to the finding, particularly to that portion that the action of the board of review was taken on sufficient evidence, and that the court did not find that the increase by the board was a mere exercise of arbitrary power, and to the finding that the tax as fixed by the board was not excessive, and the part that the property assessed included water mains, pipes, laterals, and hydrants, etc.

Mr. E. S. Bragg for appellant.

Mr. J. W. Hiner for respondent.

Pinney, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The corporation plaintiff was organized and exists as such under chapter 86, Rev. Stat., and by section 1780 had the power to make and enter into any contract with the city defendant to supply it with water for fire and other purposes, upon such terms and conditions as might be agreed upon, and might, by the consent of and in the manner agreed upon with its proper authorities, use any street, alley, lane, park, or public grounds for laying water pipes therein, provided no permanent injury should be done thereto and the city might by contract acquire the right to use the water supplied by such corporation, or such portion of it as it might desire, upon such terms and conditions as might be agreed upon by such corporation and the authorities of such city. The corporation plaintiff and the city entered into arrangements as contemplated by the statute, evidenced by an ordinance of fourteen sections, regulating their respective rights and duties. The more important provisions of this ordinance consist of a grant to the plaintiff of the franchise for and during the term of its corporate existence, subject to the right of purchase, and the conditions and the forfeiture therein provided, "to erect, construct, complete, maintain, and operate water-works in said city for supplying it and the inhabitants thereof and its vicinity with water for public and private purposes, and to use, in the present and future limits of the city, subject to the limitations," etc., "therein fixed, the streets, alleys, public ways, and the bridges and beds of Fond du Lac river, and its forks, and of De Neveu creek and other waterways, for the purpose of laying, taking up, and repairing mains, pipes, hydrants, and other apparatus," vesting in the plaintiff all the powers possessed by the city, and which it could lawfully grant for that purpose, under its charter and acts amendatory thereof; and as the inducement for the plaintiff to enter upon the construction of such works, the franchise thereby vested in it was to remain in it during its term of corporate existence, and the city agreed to rent of it 140 hydrants for and during the term of thirty years from the completion of such works.

The company thus acquired, not only the corporate rights and franchises resulting from its organization under the general law, but the valuable and important franchises and rights granted to it by the city, which will doubtless increase in value from year to year as the city becomes more populous and prosperous. These franchises were grants in gross of incorporeal hereditaments, and not grants, appurtenant to any particular land, lots, or estate, in the strict technical sense of the term. They were granted to the plaintiff without reference to its ownership of these or any particular lots, and it was not necessary that it should purchase or own any lots or lands in fee to carry out its enterprise, and make the franchises with which it had been clothed, for important public purposes, available, as it might well secure all it needed as to lots or lands by a lease for a long period of years, with the right of renewal from time to time. The plaintiff corporation, though created primarily for private gain, was a quasi public corporation, clothed with an important public trust; and having secured these valuable rights, proceeded to lay its water mains and pipes to the extent mentioned in the preceding statement; but it built its pumping works and station on the several lots of land purchased by it, herein mentioned, as the subject of the assessment in question. The questions presented by the record are: (1) Whether an assessment of the several lots described in the complaint, on which the pumping works and station of the plaintiff are situated, merely by their numbers and the number of the block in which they are situated, is an assessment of the mains, pipes, hydrants, and the rights and franchises of the plaintiff, or merely of the lots themselves, and, if so, whether it is a valid assessment; (2) whether the action of the board of review in arbitrarily and without evidence raising the valuation of these lots, alleged to be excessive, from $40,000 to $55,000, was void, so that the tax levied thereon should be enjoined.

1. Taxes are to be levied upon all property in this state, except such as is exempted therefrom, (Rev. Stat. § 1034,) and it will be seen that none of the property of the plaintiff hereinbefore mentioned is within the category of property exempt from taxation, (Rev. Stat. § 1038.) Inasmuch as the property of the corporation is not exempt, but is taxable, stock therein is exempt from taxation. Rev. Stat. § 1038, subd. 9. The franchises, rights, and privileges acquired as hereinbefore stated are property, the title to which is vested in the plaintiff, and the mains, pipes, hydrants, and machinery are really of little or no value without the franchises annexed, which render the use of them valuable and productive, and without which they could not be used or operated. In short, the entire plant and works are to this extent, no doubt, an entirety within the rule laid down in Yellow River Imp. Co. v. Wood County (Wis.) 51 N. W. Rep. 1004, 1005; and in this sense the lots in question, used with these franchises, mains, pipes, and hydrants, etc., are a part of such entirety, and are all taxable together as such, but not in separate parcels or items. In virtue of the intimate and necessary relation of the lots, and the mains, pipes, and hydrants, which extend to most parts of the city, with the franchises and privileges of the plaintiff, it would seem that, as a subject of taxation as well as of sale under judicial process, they are to be regarded as an entirety; and as the plaintiff is a quasi public corporation, a dismemberment or separation of the entire plant under such proceedings cannot be allowed, for the reasons fully set forth in the opinion of Mr. Justice Cassoday in the case above referred to, wherein it is stated that "the cases go upon the theory that the rights, franchises, and plant essential to the continued business and purposes of such corporations are not to be severed, broken up, or destroyed without express legislative authority, but, on the contrary, are to be preserved in their entirety." This rule applies, however, only to property and lots, the use of which is essential to the exercise and enjoyment of the franchises of the corporation. All such property of the corporation must be regarded and entered upon the assessment roll, and treated throughout, for all purposes of taxation, as an entirety, and valued as such. Property not so annexed and necessary or essential to the exercise and enjoyment of the franchises of the corporation may properly be treated and dealt with separately, as in the case of property belonging to a natural person. Within this rule, the assessment and taxation of these particular lots whereon the pumping station and works of the company are situated, separate and apart from the rest of the property, and merely as so many lots, cannot be justified. It is not necessary to do more than refer to the rule so well stated in that case, and abundantly fortified by the best-considered cases on the subject.

The only subject of taxation entered upon the assessment roll in this case is simply certain specified lots in block 26, without the least reference to the works of the plaintiff, its mains, pipes, and hydrants, or its corporate rights or franchises, either in detail or as a plant or entirety. The proceeding must be regarded and treated as one against the lots only, particularly as it does not appear that the franchises, mains, pipes, etc., are by the grant by which the company holds the title to the lots made appurtenant thereto, nor are the rights, franchises of the plaintiff, etc., made appurtenant to the lots by the grant under which it received them. All that can be reasonably claimed is that the word "appurtenances" will carry with it easements and servitudes used and enjoyed with the lands for the benefit of which they were created. Even an easement will not pass as an appurtenance unless it is necessary to the enjoyment of the thing granted. Lenthicum v. Ray, 76 U. S. 9 Wall. 248, 19 L. ed. 657; Humphreys v. McKissock, 140 U. S. 818, 814, 35 L. ed. 475, 476. The only union between the subjects mentioned is in their use to enable the plaintiff to carry out the purposes of its corporate existence. It cannot, we think, be contended that a sale of these lots under the tax levied upon this assessment, as thus specified and entered upon the roll, could be followed by a tax deed that would be operative to convey the mains, pipes, hydrants, and franchises and privileges of the plaintiff. If the taxing officers designed to proceed against and assess for taxation this entire property, it was certainly indispensable that it should have been entered upon the roll by some general, yet, apt, words, describing it as embracing the plant, pipes, and franchises, as a subject of assessment, with reasonable certainty.

The assessment of the lots, as such merely, cannot be extended or enlarged by parol proof of intention, nor could the assessors or board of review obviate the defect by receiving proof of the value of property of the plaintiff subject to taxation, but not properly entered on the roll, to sustain or justify an assessment of the specific property entered, at an unjust and excessive valuation for it, as thus entered. It is entirely plain from the evidence that the assessor, as well as the board of review, in valuing the lots included in their valuation the entire value of the mains, pipes, hydrants, etc.,—in short, of the entire plant, works, and franchises of the plaintiff; and their action in thus making such valuation of the lots was attempted to be sustained at the argument. The valuable rights and franchises of the plaintiff would not pass by a mere conveyance of the lots, without further description, and without these rights and franchises the pumping works, mains, pipes, and hydrants, would be of little or no value, and, as we have seen, could not be used or operated at all.

It was contended by the appellant that these rights and franchises are not taxable, and authorities under the New York statute were cited to that effect. Boreel v. New York, 2 Sandf. 552; People v. Brooklyn Assessors, 89 N. Y. 81. If it could be maintained that the franchises and privileges in question cannot be taxed, and as without them the works of the plaintiff will be of little or no value, then it would be plain that the valuation of the lots is grossly excessive. But we think that our statute is broader in its terms, requiring all property not exempted to be taxed, and that it not only justifies, but requires, that the franchises and privileges of a corporation, which are clearly property of the corporation, should be taxed. By section 1085, Rev. Stat., it is provided that the terms "real property," "real estate," and "land," in the statute relating to taxation, "shall include, not only the land itself, but all buildings, fixtures, improvements, rights, and privileges appertaining thereto;" and this statute, it is urged, warrants the assessment as made in this case. But this statute does not imply that such property as the mains, pipes, and hydrants, with the rights and franchises of the plaintiff by which alone its works are made valuable and productive, can be assessed by a mere description of the lots on which the pumping works are situated, and this, too, without any reference to the water-works in connection with which the lots are used. Indeed, the water-works and franchises of the company are the principal thing, to which the ownership and use of the lots in connection therewith is in a practical point of view rather an incident, instead of being the principal thing, embracing in their description the water-works and franchises of the company. We hold, therefore, that the assessment on the roll returned to the board of review by the assessor was not sufficient to lay any foundation for or to give the board jurisdiction to make a valuation of the entire property, as against these particular lots.

2. It was held by this court, under the Statute in force from 1868 to 1871, (Laws 1868, chap. 180, § 25,) both as to real and personal estate, that the board of review could not arbitrarily increase the valuation of the assessor without any proof being furnished, but could do so only upon the testimony of persons examined under oath, and that all examinations were required to be reduced to writing, and carefully preserved on file in the office of the clerk; that, if the board proceeded without such proof, its act in raising the valuation "would be unauthorized, and impose no obligation upon the property owner to pay the taxes." Phillips v. Stevens Point, 25 Wis. 594, 596; Steele v. Dunham, 26 Wis. 894; Milwaukee Iron Co. v. Schubel, 29 Wis. 444, 452, 9 Am. Rep. 591. In the latter case the court says: "The board arbitrarily affixed values to the property, in utter disregard of the sworn statements of witnesses examined before them. This action of the board was wholly unauthorized, and plainly in excess of their jurisdiction. There was no conflict in the testimony whatever. The board were bound to take these uncontradicted statements of the witnesses under oath as to the value of the property, and should have corrected the assessment accordingly. . . . Where there is a conflict of evidence, and the real facts are in dispute, the decision of the board fixing the valuation might well be held final.

It appeared from all the evidence that the real estate of the company had been valued too high by the assessor, and the law required them to act upon that evidence, and fix a valuation in accordance with it." Such was clearly the law applicable to the proceeding in the present case before the board of review; for although the section referred to was amended by chapter 166, § 1, Laws 1871, by adding a proviso by which the board of review were authorized to increase or diminish the assessors' valuation without hearing witnesses, as explained and held in McIntyre v. White Creek, 43 Wis. 620, and Shove v. Manitowoc, 57 Wis. 7, yet the section as revised, and now appearing as section 1061, Rev. Stat., is the same in substance, as to the matter here in question, as the Original Act of 1868, with power granted to the board to compel the attendance and examination of witnesses. The board, by Rev. Stat., § 1061, are required, "under their official oaths, to carefully review and examine said roll and statement, and all valuations of real and personal property," and they are required "to hear and examine any person or persons who shall appear before them in relation to the assessment of any property upon said roll; . . . and if it shall appear that any property has been valued by the assessor too high or too low, they shall increase or lessen the same. The board of review shall, when satisfied from the evidence taken that the assessor's valuation is too high or too low, lower the same accordingly, whether the person assessed appear before them or not; . . . but they shall not raise any assessment . . . unless the person assessed, if a resident of the town, city, or village, shall have been duly notified in time to appear and be heard before the board in relation thereto;" and the clerk is required "to keep a careful record of all changes made and valuations determined on by the board, and shall reduce to writing and preserve the examinations and the statements of every person and witness taken by the board."

The claim that the board of review may arbitrarily, and without evidence, raise the valuation of real estate by the assessor, and that the provisions requiring them to act only upon and according to evidence for that purpose apply only to valuations of personal estate, derives no support from the language of the Act, or the decisions of this court made under it. The case of McIntyre v. White Creek, 43 Wis. 620, was decided while the proviso of 1871 was in force, and before the section as thus amended was revised and materially changed, requiring the action of the board in all cases to be based on the evidence taken, and that the evidence shall be reduced to writing and preserved. The case of Shove v. Manitowoc, 57 Wis. 7, related only to personal estate, and there is nothing in the case to warrant the inference that any different rule applies under the statute as it now stands, in the case of real estate, than in respect to personal estate.

There is no competent evidence to show that any other witness was sworn and examined before the board than Muentner, the treasurer of the company, nor that any testimony was given materially controverting his statement. The testimony of the city clerk is positive and decisive on this point, and the statement of the treasurer, uncontradicted, shows that the assessment should have been reduced. It did not appear from any proper evidence adduced before the board that the assessment ought to be raised. The statute regulates the method of proceeding before the board, and any action not in conformity with its warrant was without jurisdiction, and void. The radical departure from the course of proceeding prescribed by the statute, resulting in the arbitrary raising of the valuation without and against the evidence, when it ought to have been lowered upon the showing made, deprive the plaintiff of important rights secured by the law, going to the justice and ground-work of the tax levied on the increased valuation, and entitles the plaintiff to relief just as clearly as if, having paid the taxes under protest or duress of property, it had brought an action for money had and received, which is an equitable action, to recover it back, and in which it would be entitled to recover under the decision in Phillips v. Stevens Point, 25 Wis. 596.

For these reasons the judgment of the circuit court must be reversed, and the case remanded for further proceedings according to law.

Orton, J., dissenting:

I fully agree with the decision and opinion in this case on the questions legitimately presented by the record. The complaint is: (1) That the assessor, in valuing the lots and the buildings, reservoirs, and machinery thereon, took into consideration the water mains, lateral pipes, and conduits connected therewith for distributing the water throughout the city, together with the rights, privileges, and franchises of the company under which they were used, as appurtenant thereto, and enhancing the value thereof, and by reason whereof assessed said lots and improvements thereon 100 per cent higher than their true value. (2) That the board of review arbitrarily, and without evidence, raised said assessment $15,000, notwithstanding the company plaintiff appeared before them, and attempted to show that said assessment was too high, and asked for a reduction thereof. These were the only questions before this court, and the decision is: (1) That the assessment was illegal and void by reason of the assessor so taking into consideration the mains, pipes, etc., and the franchises of the company, as appurtenant to said lots, and as enhancing their value. (2) That the adjudication of the board of review was void, because arbitrary and without evidence. To the decision and opinion, to this extent, I fully assent, and submit and protest that these were the only questions before the court, and the only questions presented or argued by counsel on either side. But the able and learned opinion is carried much further, so as to embrace and decide one of the most important and doubtful questions connected with the subject of taxation, and a question entirely new to this court, and not presented by the record in this case, or by counsel outside of it, and to establish a principle against the universal practice of the taxing officers of this state, so far as I have been able to ascertain. That question is: Are the franchises of this corporation assessable as its property, separate and distinct from its other property? It is decided in this case that its lots and improvements thereon ought not to have been assessed in connection with the mains, pipes, etc., and the franchise as appurtenant thereto. The lots are the subject of taxation in the list, and the mains, pipes, etc., and franchises are considered only as appurtenances thereto to enhance their value. There was no assessment of franchises, as separate property in the case. But outside of the case it is decided, also, in the opinion, that the franchises of this corporation are assessable, separate and distinct from its other property. From this part of the opinion I most respectfully dissent. I do so, however, not because I might not have the same opinion if the question should be raised in a proper case, but because the question is not presented in this case. It will be timely to decide such an important question when it is presented, and fully argued, examined, and considered.

SOUTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

Ex Parte Daniel Huger BACOT.

(.....S. C.....)

1. The condemnation of the right of way for a railroad to be built by a manufacturing company to connect its manufacturing establishment with another railroad may be authorized by statute under Const., art. 1, § 23, declaring that private property shall not be taken or applied "for public use or for the use of corporations or for private use" without consent of the owner or just compensation, but providing that laws may secure to persons or corporation a right of way for works of internal improvements by payment of just compensation.
2. The general law upon the subject of highway crossings by railroads applies to such crossings by a railroad built under the South Carolina statutes merely to connect a manufacturing establishment with another railroad.
3. The title "An Act to Provide for the Promotion of Certain Corporations under General Laws" is sufficient to include the powers to be given to such corporations.

(April 12, 1892.)

APPPLICATION for a writ of certiorari to the clerk of the Court of Common Pleas for Colleton County to remove into the Supreme Court certain proceedings which had been instituted to procure a right of way over petitioner's land, and which were alleged to be illegal because of the unconstitutionality of the statute under which they were instituted. Denied.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Thomas W. Bacot, for petitioner:

The convention which adopted the Constitution when using the words of the 25th section of article 1 of the Constitution had in mind the meaning as well as the principles of "eminent domain."

As to the meaning of "eminent domain," see Cooley, Const. Lim. chap. 15, p. 524;

NOTE.—As to the constitutionality of condemnation proceedings to establish a private road, see Latah County v. Peterson (Idaho) ante, 51, and note, 16 L. R. A.

Mills, Em. Dom. § 1, p. 1; Lewis, Em. Dom. § 1, p. 1.

The underlying immutable principles of eminent domain have ever been that the purpose for which the right may be exercised must be a public purpose.

Cooley, Const. Lim. chap. 15, p. 530; Mills, Em. Dom. chap. 2, § 10; Lewis, Em. Dom. chap. 7, § 157; 4 Wait, Act. & Def. p. 621; Louisville, O. & O. R. Co. v. Chappell, 1 Rice, L. 383; State v. Dawson, 3 Hill, L. 107; South Carolina R. Co. v. Blake, 9 Rich. L. 234; Feldman v. Charleston, 28 S. C. 57; Palaisre's App. 67 Pa. 479; Edgewood R. Co's App. 79 Pa. 257; Finney v. Somerville, 80 Pa. 59, 6 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law. 526, note 10, citing Lowell v. Boston, 111 Mass. 454, 15 Am. Rep. 39, 6 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law. 609, note 10, 515, notes 3 and 52; 4 Am. Lead. Cas. Real Prop. 436-443.

The Constitution is not a grant of power to the state but only apportions and imposes restrictions upon the powers which the state inherently possesses and has never been without.

Cooley, Const. Lim. pp. 1, 36, 87.

Constitutional provisions as to taking of property (such as those in our present Constitution) are limitations upon the power of eminent domain as vested in the legislative department of the state, and are neither to be regarded as declaratory of what the law would be without them nor as grants of the power in question to the Legislature.

Lewis, Em. Dom. p. 22, and note 4.

If the section means what respondents would have it mean, then the framers would be in the absurd position of having endeavored to contravene a fundamental and absolute right and rule of civilized society and free government which must underlie every Constitution.

See also East & West R. Co. v. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. 75 Ala. 275.

In the case of Sholl v. German Coal Co., 8 West. Rep. 94, 118 Ill. 427, it was distinctly held that land belonging to a private individual is not subject to condemnation for the extension of a tramway belonging to a corporation organized for the purpose of mining.

See also People v. Pittsburgh R. Co. 53 Cal. 694.

Mr. W. Perry Murphy, for respondent: The power of the Legislature to provide for the taking of private property for private use, to wit, a right of way, was fully recognized in State v. Stackhouse, 14 S. C. 417.

Before the adoption of our present Constitution, the several Constitutions of this state contained no provisions on the subject; and yet proceedings were constantly instituted in the courts of this state for the purpose of condemning private property for public use and quasi public use.

Lindsay v. Street Commissioners, 2 Bay, 88; Stark v. McGowan, 1 Nott & McC. 387; Patrick v. Charleston Neck Cross Roads Comrs, 4 McCord, L. 541; State v. Dawson, 8 Hill, L. 100; Louisville, O. & C. R. Co. v. Chappell, 1 Rice, L. 388; State v. Charleston, 12 Rich. L. 702.

Up to the time of the adoption of the present Constitution, the following points had been fully settled:

That the right of eminent domain existed, and could be exercised as incident to, and as inseparable from, the state's sovereignty.

That private property could be taken for public use, without express grant in the Constitution, and without compensating the owner.

That the state (sovereign) had the power to delegate this authority to a corporation; and therefore, that the provision, in a Constitution, providing for taking private property for public use, on condition that compensation was made to the owner, was not an enabling clause, but one restricting the exercise of the power.

Building up the phosphate industry is a public use.

See Cooley, Const. Lim. 659; Harvey v. Thomas, 10 Watts, 63, 86 Am. Dec. 141; Hays v. Risher, 82 Pa. 169; New Central Coal Co. v. George's Creek Coal & L. Co. 87 Md. 562; Dalles Lumbering Co. v. Urquhart, 16 Or. 67; Biljings v. Hall, 7 Cal. 22; Sherman v. Buick, 82 Cal. 255, 91 Am. Dec. 577; People v. Gallagher, 4 Mich. 250; Sharpless v. Philadelphia, 21 Pa. 167, 59 Am. Dec. 759; West Virginia Transp. Co. v. Volcanic O. & C. Co. 5 W. Va. 382.

If the property taken in any way inure to the public benefit or advantage, it is a public use.

Lewis, Em. Dom. 165; Scudder v. Trenton Delaware Falls Co. 1 N. J. Eq. 694; Norfleet v. Cromwell, 70 N. C. 634, 16 Am. Rep. 787; Hand Gold Min. Co. v. Parker, 59 Ga. 419; Dayton G. & S. Min. Co. v. Seawell, 11 Nev. 394.

The state has the right to delegate to a corporation the exercise of the power of eminent domain. Acting under its charter, the company has the right to determine what particular land is necessary and best suited for its purposes, upon which and over which to construct and operate its railroad, and the court has no right to interfere with the exercise of this power.

Louisville, O. & C. R. Co. v. Chappell, 1 Rice, L. 388; Ex parte South Carolina R. Co. 2 Rich. L. 434.

Messrs. A. S. Farrow and John D. Edwards also for respondent.

McGowan, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an application to this court, in its original jurisdiction, for a writ of certiorari. The facts are somewhat complicated, 16 L. R. A.

and it will be necessary to make a statement as condensed as possible to be intelligible.

The petition of Daniel H. Bacot, among other things, states that on or about August 20, 1890, a paper was served upon him signed by Howell, Murphy & Farrow, and Edwards, attorneys of the Horseshoe Mining Company, purporting to be a notice that said company required a right of way over a tract of land known as the "William Lowndes Tract," alleged to belong to the petitioner, (the same paper being served also upon others, as to other tracts of land.) That the petitioner served upon said attorney a return in writing, showing that he was not the sole owner of the said tract; that although the legal title was in himself alone, yet the real owners thereof, besides himself, were his mother, Julia A. Bacot, and his brothers and sisters, (naming them,) reserving to himself any objection to said notice, and signifying his refusal of consent to enter upon said lands without previous compensation. Other land-owners also signified their refusal to consent to the entry upon their lands without previous compensation. That thereupon the Horseshoe Mining Company applied by ex parte petition to his honor, Judge Aldrich, for an order to impanel a jury to assess the damages or compensation for the right of way required, which order was granted, directed to the clerk of Colleton county, commanding him to impanel a jury for the purpose aforesaid; and the said clerk, in obedience to said order, gave notice to the parties in interest of the time and place appointed for impaneling the jury, etc. Before the day fixed for drawing a jury, upon the suggestion of the petitioner, a rule was issued, requiring the said company to show cause why a writ of prohibition should not issue to prohibit further proceedings in the matter of the right of way, which, after return and argument, Judge Aldrich refused. From this order of refusal, notice of appeal was given; but as we understand it, upon some agreement and by consent of parties, the appeal was "withdrawn without prejudice," and this proceeding for a writ of certiorari was instituted.

The petitioner insists that in a proceeding to acquire such right of way as the said company is said to require an appeal is allowed on the question of compensation only, and that the tribunal constituted by the General Assembly for the subject-matter of conducting proceedings to acquire rights of way by railroad corporations, though having general jurisdiction of the subject, has yet not acquired jurisdiction in the proceedings sought to be instituted on behalf of the said Horseshoe Mining Company, "and said proceedings are an unwarranted invasion of the rights of your petitioner, and the other owners of said lands, and are illegal and void, and also irregular, on the following grounds, and for the following reasons: First. Because the Act of December 23, 1886, or rather the 15th section hereof, is unconstitutional, in that it is repugnant to or in violation of article 1, § 23, of the Constitution of the state, and the underlying and immutable principles of so-called 'eminent domain;' the road proposed to be constructed and operated by the said Horseshoe Mining Company over the aforementioned tract of land being for its own private use and purposes, and other than a right of way by necessity, and not for a public or even quasi public purpose or use. Second. Because the said proposed road will cross a public road or highway without authority so to do, and to the serious obstruction thereof to your petitioner and others aforesaid. Third. Because the said company is not authorized by its charter or otherwise to construct a railway, canal, turnpike, or other public highway in the state. Fourth. Because (a) the said company has given no notice as required by section 1550 of the General Statutes; (b) that said company did not apply by petition to the judge, etc., as required by section 1551, Gen. Stat.; (c) the petition by which application was made to Judge Aldrich did not set forth a description of the lands, in that it did not state where they were situated, nor did it set forth the names of the owners of the said William Lowndes tract, as required by section 1551, Gen. Stat.; (d) the application by petition to Judge Aldrich, and his order thereon, of September 26, 1890, were ex parte, and without any notice whatever thereof to the owners of said tracts of land, or any of them, and therefore in violation of the said section 1551, and of article 1, § 14, of the Constitution of the state; (e) and the clerk of the court of common pleas of the county of Colleton did not give notice of the order of Judge Aldrich of September 24, 1890, to your petitioner, or to any of the other owners of said tracts, as required by said section 1551; (f) it is not shown that the proposed road is to connect with some navigable stream, or with some existing railroad, turnpike, or other public highway, and does not exceed ten (10) miles in length. Fifth. Because the said proceeding is otherwise irregular, in that (a) the same proceeding for such purpose cannot be had against separate and distinct owners of separate and distinct tracts of land jointly; and (b) such a proceeding should be against all the owners of a tract of land through which right of way is acquired, and cannot be against one of them only for all." Wherefore the petitioner prayed to be relieved, and that said proceedings might be removed to this court, and that a writ of certiorari be directed to the clerk of the said court of common pleas of the county of Colleton, commanding him, without delay, to certify the said proceedings and record, together with all papers thereto appertaining, that such further proceedings may be had as to this honorable court shall seem meet, etc. The Horseshoe Mining Company, having been served with a rule to show cause why the writ should not issue, answered, among other things, as follows: It is a mining company incorporated under and in pursuance of the law of the state, contained in an Act "to Provide for the Formation of Certain Corporations under General Laws," which said Act authorizes the company to construct and operate a railroad for its own use and purposes, to and from its works, with some existing railroad; and for that purpose the company is authorized and empowered to condemn for the use of such road the right of way in lands over which the road may pass on payment to the owner thereof of "just compensation;" such compensation to be determined in the manner provided by law for railroad corporations. That finding that a railroad was necessary for the purpose of conducting its business, through its attorneys thereunto duly authorized, it caused the notice required by law to be served on the petitioner and others, requiring a right of way over his and their lands, for the purpose of constructing a railroad "from its works to Ashepoo station, and there connecting with an existing railroad, to wit, the Charleston & Savannah Railway; said railroad to be five and one-half miles in length. That about two and one-half miles had been previously constructed, and a temporary landing secured, on leased premises on the Ashepoo river, but the short line was and is wholly inadequate to the business necessities of the company. That the company has erected expensive works, putting in costly machinery, and has expended large sums of money in the development and prosecution of its business, employing many men in its mining operations. The return then goes on to set out in a formal way matters referred to in the petition, as to the notice to the petitioner and others that certain lands were "required" for the purpose aforesaid, their refusal to give consent without previous compensation, and making full exhibits of said answers; and after stating the proceedings by petition to have a jury impaneled to assess the damages, and the application of the petitioner for a writ of prohibition, which was refused, the respondent company prays that the writ may be refused, and for costs. The questions involved in this case have been argued with learning, showing much research on both sides. We have very grave doubts whether this is a proper case for certiorari. The proceeding below is not finished, but is still in progress. We do not understand that the clerk of the court of common pleas of a county is an "inferior court," in the sense of the limit on the authority of this court to issue such a writ. In proceedings to assess damages for a right of way the clerk has certain duties to perform, in impaneling a jury, etc.; but that is rather ministerial in character, done under the orders of the court of common pleas, whose officer he is. What right have we to order the clerk of Colleton, who is not before the court, to certify up the record of certain proceedings of the court of common pleas? And, if we had the power, what record could he certify to this court, except, perhaps, the order made, on which he acted, and his own notice to the parties of the time and place appointed for drawing a jury? The real matter in contention is not the single act of the clerk in giving notice as to the organization of the jury, but it lies further back, as to whether the circuit judge could make the order to assess damages without having first determined the rights of the parties. But as it concerns the correct administration of the law that the question raised by the relator should have a solution, and as it seems to be conceded that prohibition is not the remedy, and that there has been some agreement between the parties on the subject, we have concluded to consider the case; remarking, however, that it must not be drawn into a precedent, as we make no ruling upon the subject. Upon an application for a writ of certiorari, this court cannot be expected to try the whole case de novo, with its numerous parties and details, involving questions of procedure, practice, regularity, etc. We regard it settled, at least in this state, under our Constitution, that the jurisdiction of the supreme court embraces the writ of certiorari only when necessary to exercise a general supervisory control over an inferior court; that is, especially in respect to its jurisdiction and not to determine whether, in the matter complained of, it has committed errors of law or of fact. Ex parte Childs, 12 S. C. 111; State v. Fort, 24 S. C. 516; State v. Columbia, 16 S. C. 418, 17 S. C. 80.

Now, the only question is whether any of the grounds urged for the writ of certiorari are necessary to enable this court to exercise a supervisory control over the court below. Assuming for the present that the Act incorporating the Horseshoe Mining Company is constitutional, the circuit court had jurisdiction of the subject-matter, and the procedure was to be in the manner provided by the general law for railroad corporations. Sections 1550 and 1551, Gen. Stat., provide as follows: "Whenever any person or corporation shall be authorized by charter to construct a railway, canal, turnpike, or other public highway in this state, such person or corporation, before entering upon any lands for the purpose of construction shall give to the owners thereof (if he be sui juris) notice in writing that the right of way over said lands 'is required' for such purpose, which notice shall be given at least thirty days before entering upon said lands.

... If the owner of such lands shall signify his refusal of consent to entry upon his lands without previous compensation, the person or corporation requiring such right of way shall apply by petition to the judge of the circuit where such lands are situated for the impaneling of a jury to ascertain the amount which shall be paid as just compensation for the right of way required, in which petition shall be set forth a description of the lands, the names of the owners, the purposes for which the lands are required, and such other facts as are deemed material. On the hearing of such petition the circuit judge shall order the same to be filed in the office of the clerk of the court of common pleas, to impanel a jury," etc.

Having jurisdiction of the subject-matter did the court acquire jurisdiction of the persons of the landowners by following the above directions of the law as to notice, petition for jury, etc.? In reference to the objection embraced in the fifth ground for the writ, we think there is nothing beyond possible irregularity. Whether, in a proceeding to acquire a right of way over land, several landowners may be joined, or whether all the parties having equitable interest must be served with personal notice, are questions merely of practice, and are certainly in no way jurisdictional. See Tompkins v. Augusta & K. R. Co. 21 S. C. 431; Tutt v. Port Royal & A. R. Co. 28 S. C. 899. In reference to the numerous objections in the fourth ground for the writ, we would make the same general remark. It might possibly become a jurisdictional question if the court were proceeding to judgment without giving the parties any notice, but we see no reason why the company could not give notice and file the petition by attorney. The parties seem to have been notified, and the objection is rather as to the manner in which it was given. That the parties had notice is shown by their appearing and making return that "they refused consent without previous compensation," and also by the fact that they are here resisting the proceeding. It is true that the parties in their original return did not do more than refuse consent without compensation, and did not in express terms deny the right of the company, as was done in the case of State v. Columbia & A. R. Co., 1 S. C. 50. But it seems to us that it might have been better if the law had required that the petition to the judge to appoint a jury to assess damages should be served on the parties, so that they might, then and there have made the question of right. It is, however, enough for us to say that the law did not require it. As to the alleged description of the land, see Ex parte Bennett, 26 S. C. 819.

1. Then as to grounds urged for the writ, alleging that the 15th section of the Act of 1886, under which the Horseshoe Mining Company was incorporated, is unconstitutional and void. We will suppose that question to have been considered by the circuit judge when the ex parte application was made to him for the order to impanel a jury to assess the damages, and in granting that order that he assumed its constitutionality. The relator, however, complains that he was not heard on that question, and that he could not now appeal to this court, except as to the amount of damages. Is that a jurisdictional question? The matter is important, and although the relator did not, in the first instance, deny the right, we think he should be heard upon this subject. The Act of December 28, 1886, is entitled "An Act to Provide for the Promotion of Certain Corporations under General Laws," (19 Stat. p. 540,) of which section 15 reads as follows: "Corporations organized under the provisions of this Act, for mining or manufacturing purposes, shall have power to construct and operate a railroad, tramway, turnpike, or canal, for their own use and purposes, to and from their works or place of business, or to connect with some navigable stream or with some existing railroad, turnpike, or other public highway, not to exceed ten miles in length, and shall have the right to condemn for the use of such road the right of way in lands over which the road may pass, on payment to the owner thereof just compensation, such compensation to be determined in the manner now provided by law for railroad corporations." Under and by authority of this section the secretary of state, J. Q. Marshall, Esq., on March 29, 1889, certified that the Horseshoe Mining Company had been fully and regularly "organized" according to the laws of the state, under the name and for the purposes indicated in their declaration. The question now is whether section 15 of the Act of 1886 is constitutional; for, if so, we may consider it as incorporated into and made part of the certificate or charter. The question is a new one in the state. Having no beds of coal, we have had occasion for very little mining until the phosphate beds were discovered and are being developed. Article 1, § 23, of the Constitution, declares as follows: "Private property shall not be taken or applied for public use, or for the use of corporations or for private use, without the consent of the owner, or a just compensation being made therefor: provided, however, that laws may be made, securing to persons or corporations the right of way over the lands of either persons or corporations, and for works of internal improvements, the right to establish depots, stations, turnouts, etc.; but a just compensation shall in all cases be first made to the owner." This court has often had occasion to say that it is no small matter to declare an Act of the Legislature unconstitutional. Mr. Cooley (Const. Lim. § 87) says: "That the constitutionality of a law must be presumed until the violation of the Constitution is proved beyond all reasonable doubt, and a reasonable doubt must be resolved in favor of legislative action, and the Act be sustained." In the light of this safe and sound principle, is the aforesaid section of the Act of 1886 repugnant to the Constitution? Is it beyond doubt in violation of it, either in express terms or in spirit? The provision above quoted of the Constitution, as its terms indicate, was inserted for the double purpose of maintaining the sanctity of private property, and at the same time of promoting internal improvements, especially in respect to rights of way over lands, and in establishing stations, etc., to facilitate transportation. It will be observed that the powers given in section 15 of the Act of 1886 are limited to mining and manufacturing purposes; that the railroad to be constructed and operated must "run to and from the works" of the company, or connect with some navigable stream or some existing railroad and not to exceed ten miles in length. It would seem that a railroad to run to and from the phosphate works of the company, five and one-half miles, to Ashpoo station, on the Charleston & Savannah Railroad, is not repugnant to the aforesaid provision of the Constitution, but on the same plane, and in exact conformity thereto. The objection seems to touch more the Constitution itself than the Act. It is urged, however, that the Horseshoe Mining Company is a "private corporation," and therefore may not condemn lands for a right of way, even after paying a just compensation; that an attempt to do so is an invasion of the proprietary right of the landowner, and in violation of the Constitution. It certainly does not seem to violate the words of the Constitution, as above cited,— "that laws may be made, securing to persons and corporations the right of way over the lands of either persons or corporations," and for works of internal improvement, to establish depots, etc. Mr. Lewis on Eminent Domain, at pages 162 and 238, says: "The necessity or expediency of exercising the power of eminent domain, and the extent and manner of its exercise, are questions of general public policy, and belong to the legislative department of the government." The matter is somewhat like the Lateral Railroad Act of Pennsylvania, which was declared constitutional; and, in delivering the judgment of the court, Mr. Justice Woodward said: "The truth is, when a lateral railroad is laid upon intervening lands, private property is not taken for private use, but for public use,—for clear and definite objects of a public nature, which are of sufficient importance to attract the sanction of the sovereign." We think it unnecessary, however, to say more upon the subject than to quote our own case of State v. Stackhouse, 14 S. C. 422, in which it was held that the Act of 1872, which empowers a landowner to secure a right of way over the lands of another, violates none of the provisions of the Constitution of this state. In delivering the judgment in that case the late chief justice construed the provision of the Constitution now under consideration (sec. 23) in connection with section 14 of the first article, and said: "Hence the framers of the Constitution, while recognizing the sanctity of the rights guaranteed in the first section, (14,) thought proper to make provision in the second, (23,) not only in the appropriation of private property for public use, but in the matter of the right-of-way property even for private use; and, to this end, in the second section above will be found an express grant of power to the Legislature to secure by proper laws a right of way both to corporations and to persons over the lands of others upon just compensation being first made to the owners of said lands."

2. As to the proposed railway crossing a public highway. In the view that the company was granted the power to construct and operate the short road to and from its works, we can see no reason why the general law upon the subject of such crossings should not apply to this proposed railroad as well as to others.

3. We have already held that the Horseshoe Mining Company has all the powers embraced in section 15 of the Act of 1886; and, as we understand it, that gives the power to construct and operate the railroad to and from the works of the company, connecting with the Charleston & Savannah Railroad at Ashpoo, and as an incident the right to condemn for the use of the road the right of way over intervening lands, upon paying just compensation. Then as to the supplemental objection in reference to "the title" of the Act of 1886. That Act is what is called a "General Incorporation Act," as its title indicates: "An Act to Provide for the Promotion of Certain Corporations under General Laws." We do not think that it is contended that the Act, as such, is necessarily unconstitutional and void. In its very nature, various matters were to be considered under it; somewhat like an appropriation Act with a general title covering many particulars. The "subject" was the promotion of certain corporations, and it would seem that the right to form corporations would include the powers to be given to such corporations. How else could they be "formed?" "When an Act of the Legislature expresses in its title the object of the Act, the title embraces and expresses every lawful means to achieve the object; thus fulfilling the constitutional injunction that every law shall embrace but one subject, and that shall be expressed in the title." San Antonio v. Mahaffy, 96 U. S. 815, 24 L. ed. 817, cited by Chief Justice McIver in our own case of Connor v. Green Pond W. & B. R. Co., 23 S. C. 427, which we regard as conclusive of the matter here.

The writ of certiorari is refused.

McIver, Ch. J., and Pope, J., concur.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

Joseph E. STANWOOD

v.

City of MALDEN.

(.....Mass.....)

The discontinuance of part of a street does not entitle a landowner to any damages if his access to the system of public streets remains substantially unimpaired although he finds travel less convenient and his shop has suffered by the diversion of travel.

(June 23, 1892.)

REPORT by the Superior Court for Middlesex County for the opinion of the Supreme Judicial Court of an action brought to recover damages for the discontinuance of a portion of a highway which was alleged to have decreased the value of plaintiff's property, in which a verdict had been directed in defendant's favor. Judgment on the verdict.

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion.

Messrs. Bradley W. Palmer and Moorfield Storey, for plaintiff:

To recover, the petitioner must show that he "has received particular damage which is not common to all the people,"—"a particular injury different in its character from that which is common to all the citizens,"—"a special damage more than the rest of the king's subjects."

Stetson v. Faxon, 19 Pick. 147, 31 Am. Dec. 128; Beckett v. Midland R. Co. L. R. 8 C. P. 82.

Where the petitioner can show that his property has sustained such special damage, he can recover.

Such special damage is done when the access to an estate is made less convenient, when it is left with a front on a less desirable street, when the current of travel is diverted from it, when its market value for sale and hire is reduced, when its availability for any natural and reasonable use is impaired,—when, in a word, the owner by reason of the discontinuance is left with a less valuable piece of property than he had before.

Stetson v. Faxon, supra; Chamberlain v. West End L. & O. P. R. Co. 2 Best & S. 605; Ricket v. Metropolitan R. Co. L. R. 2 H. L. Cas. 175, Beckett v. Midland R. Co. L. R. 8 C. P. 82; Metropolitan Board of Works v. Mo-

Orthy, L. R. 7 H. L. Cas. 243; Caledonian R. Co. v. Walker, L. R. 7 App. Cas. 259.

The same principle is well established by the decisions of this court in cases where damages are claimed for the laying out of highways and in cases arising under the Betterment Acts, where it has been necessary to determine what are the special and particular benefits which may be offset to damages or considered in assessing betterments.

Allen v. Charlestown, 109 Mass. 248; Bancroft v. Boston, 115 Mass. 877; Hilbourne v. Suffolk County, 120 Mass. 898, 21 Am. Rep. 522; Benton v. Brookline, 151 Mass. 264.

There are, however, certain decisions in Massachusetts which seem to depart from this principle, and to hold that in cases of discontinuance no landowner is entitled to damages unless his estate abuts on the part of the highway discontinued.

Smith v. Boston, 7 Cush. 255; Castle v. Berkshire, 11 Gray, 26; Davis v. Hampshire County Comrs. 11 L. R. A. 750, 153 Mass. 218.

If the doctrine of these cases is to prevail, the court, while in form adhering to the rule that the landowner whose estate suffers a special and peculiar injury can recover damages, does not permit the inquiry whether such injury has as matter of fact been suffered, but draws an arbitrary geographical line, and decides as matter of law that beyond this line no such injury is possible. It decides that a special and peculiar benefit can be added to an estate wherever, as a matter of fact, it is shown; but it refuses to recognize the converse of the proposition.

It is submitted that in no other class of cases has the court attempted as matter of law to draw such a line, and that these decisions should be reconsidered.

Messrs. A. H. Wellman and J. F. Wiggin, for defendant:

The discontinuance of a part of Summer street upon which the petitioner's land, on account of which he claims damages, does not abut, so long as his land is accessible by other public streets, gives the petitioner no right to claim damages of the city. The damage is contingent, remote, and indefinite.

Smith v. Boston, 7 Cush. 254; Castle v. Berkshire, 11 Gray, 26; Davis v. Hampshire County Comrs. 11 L. R. A. 750, 153 Mass. 218; Eames v. New England Worsted Co. 11 Met. 570; Proprietors of Locks & Canals v. Nashua & L. R. Corp. 10 Cush. 385; Boston &

NOTE.—As to the right to recover damages for the vacation of a street, see note to Selden v. Jacksonville (Fla.) 14 L. R. A. 370.
16 L. R. A.

W. R. Corp. v. Old Colony R. Corp. 12 Cush. 605; Fuller v. Chicopees Mfg. Co. 16 Gray, 46; Massachusetts Cent. R. Co. v. Boston, C. & F. R. Co. 121 Mass. 124.

The petitioner had no vested rights in that part of Summer street that was discontinued. His interest was one which belonged to him in common with the whole public, and any inconvenience or damage suffered by him is of the same kind sustained by the public generally, and in a greater degree only by all the residents on Summer and Florence streets.

Spaulding v. Nourse, 148 Mass. 490; Brainerd v. Connecticut River R. Co. 7 Cush. 506.

Holmes, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a petition to recover damages for the discontinuance of a part of Summer street, in Malden, which runs into Florence street obliquely, just opposite the petitioner's land. The petitioner's means of access to his estate remain ample, but it is possible, if not probable, that its money value is diminished by diverting the stream of travel which formerly flowed towards it over Summer street.

The petitioner begins by asking us to overrule Smith v. Boston, 7 Cush. 254, and the cases which have followed it. He cites the English decisions ending with Metropolitan Board of Works v. McCarthy, L. R. 7 H. L. Cas. 243, and Caledonian R. Co. v. Walker, L. R. 7 App. Cas. 259, which show a tendency to establish a more liberal rule of damages than ours; and he argues further that laying out the discontinued piece of street would have been a benefit for which the petitioner might have been assessed, (Allen v. Charlestown, 109 Mass. 243; Hilbourne v. Suffolk County, 120 Mass. 393, 21 Am. Rep. 522); and that it follows conversely that it must be a damage for which he should be paid if it is taken away. He might have added that there are Massachusetts decisions or other statutes giving damages which adopt a more liberal test even than the English cases, and give damages for which an action would not have lain had the act been done without authority of statute. Woodbury v. Beverly, 153 Mass. 245, 247, 248. See Metropolitan Board of Works v. McCarthy, L. R. 7 H. L. Cas. 252.

None of the considerations which have been urged seem to us to warrant our overruling a construction of a statute which has been settled for forty years, seemingly to the satisfaction of the Legislature, and which has been followed elsewhere by courts of the highest respectability. Smith v. Boston, supra; Castle v. Berkshire, 11 Gray, 26; Davis v. Hampshire County Comrs. 153 Mass. 218, 11 L. R. A. 750; Hammond v. Worcester County Comrs. 154 Mass. 509; Coster v. Albany, 43 N. Y. 399, 414; Fearing v. Irwin, 55 N. Y. 486; Paul v. Carter, 24 Pa. 207, 64 Am. Dec. 649; McGee's Appeal, 114 Pa. 470, 6 Cent. Rep. 623; Gerhard v. Seekonk River Bridge Comrs. 15 R. I. 334; Clark v. Providence, 16 R. I. 337, 1 L. R. A. 725; Polack v. San Francisco Orphan Asylum, 48 Cal. 490; Kimball v. Homan, 74 Mich. 699; Chicago v. Union Bldg. Assn. 102 Ill. 379; East St. Louis v. O'Flynn, 119 Ill. 200, 59 Am. Rep. 793; Barr v. Oakaloosa, 45 Iowa, 275; Dillon, Mun. Corp. 4th ed. § 666. The authority of cases like Woodbury v. Beverly is met by decisions directly in point, and the English decisions, whatever the respect to which they may be entitled, of course are not authority. Moreover, if there is a difference between the law of this state and that of England, probably it goes further than the counsel for the petitioner pointed out, and more cases than were cited might have to be overruled. Smith v. Boston, and the cases which followed it, no doubt would have recognized the English test or rule to which we have referred, namely, that those damages can be recovered which could have been recovered at common law had the acts which caused them been done without authority of statute. But our decisions as to when an action by the common law could lie for obstructing a highway probably are less favorable to landowners than the English one. It is not likely that Harvard College v. Stearns, 15 Gray, 1, would have been decided the same way in England. But, if that decision was right, Smith v. Boston was right, on English principles. We express no opinion as to how we should have decided any of the foregoing cases had they arisen before us for the first time. It is enough to say that Smith v. Boston is intelligible, even if, with justice, it might have been more liberal. It would have been intelligible for the Legislature to say that when a benefit is conferred upon a landowner, the value of which he does not pay for, he takes it upon the implied condition that he shall not be paid for it when it is taken away. It will be remembered that there were no betterment laws when the meaning of this Act was settled. It was intelligible for them to say that only the loss of access—the comparatively palpable injury—should be paid for, and not the advantage which the landowner had had the luck to enjoy of being where the crowd was, somewhat in the same way that the common law refuses to recognize the damage, often very great, even as measured with money, caused by cutting off a view.

No doubt there are many cases in which it is left to the jury to fix the difference of degree at which liability begins. Very likely this is one of them in England. But there are also many, and a constantly increasing number, in which the law draws the line. The principles on which it has done so may not have been consistent, because it has acted sporadically, and not always upon a general theory, consciously held. Nevertheless one may doubt whether substantial justice has not been approached most nearly when it has not been a matter of course to leave every nice question of the standards of conduct to the jury.

The petitioner further contends that he brings himself within the principles of Smith v. Boston, because, as he says, a small point of land, of which he owns the fee, subject to the public right of way, touches the discontinued part. We do not pause to consider whether the fact is as alleged, because, if it is, it would not affect our decision. The proposition on which Smith v. Boston was decided was that, to lay a foundation under our statute for a claim of damages for discontinuing a highway, it is not enough to show that a shop has suffered by the diversion of travel, or that the owner finds travel less convenient at a distance from his place, if the access to the system of public streets remains substantially unimpaired.

Judgment on the verdict.

OREGON SUPREME COURT.

Jane SKOTTOWE, Resp't.,v.
OREGON SHORT LINE & UTAH
NORTHERN R. CO., *App't.*J. T. MULLEN, Admr., etc., of Nicholas J.
Skottowe, Deceased, *Resp't.*v.
SAME, App't.

(.....Or.....)

1. Evidence of repairs to a place where an injury occurred is proper when admitted only for the purpose of showing acts of ownership or control over the place and not as an admission of negligence.
2. The fact that an elevated walk to a boat landing is upon a public street does not relieve the carrier which maintains it from liability for injuries caused by its dangerous condition where the street has never been opened as such or used except by the carrier and those doing business with it.
3. A carrier's liability for the unsafe condition of and lack of proper lights on a walk leading to its boat landing, on account of which persons are injured while on their way to the boat in the evening, is not defeated by the fact that the boat did not start until morning, where passengers were provided with sleeping accommodations on the boat at an extra charge.

4. The court cannot declare it to be contributory negligence for persons to walk off from an elevated walk in the dark, at a place where there is no railing, while they are on their way to a boat landing.
5. A verdict for $10,000 will not be set aside as excessive, especially if approved by the trial judge, where it is given for injuries by which a woman is made a cripple during life and subjected to much pain and suffering.
6. The earning power of a wealthy man living on his income for which damages on account of his death may be given to his administrator may include his skill in the management of wealth or capacity to manage affairs which would be of advantage to an estate.

(June 13, 1902.)

APPEAL by defendant from judgments of the Circuit Court for Wasco County in favor of plaintiffs in actions brought to recover

NOTE.—Duty of carrier to maintain safe approaches beyond its own premises.

The duty of the carrier to maintain the approaches to its station in a safe condition is well established. See notes to Kelly v. Manhattan R. Co. (N. Y.) 8 L. R. A. 74; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Lucas (Ind.) 6 L. R. A. 193; Walker v. Vicksburg, S. & P. R. Co. (La. Ann.) 7 L. R. A. 111; and Pennsylvania Co. v. Marien (Ind.) 7 L. R. A. 687.

The language in many of the cases in which such duty is adjudged is broad enough to include the liability to maintain the safe condition of approaches which are in the possession and control of the company and have been established by it for the furtherance of its own business, although it does not actually own the land over which the approaches are constructed.

The Supreme Court of the United States in a case in which the question was not directly involved stated that the companies are liable for injury occasioned by the unsafe condition of the land or its approaches. Bennett v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 102 U. S. 577, 20 L. ed. 236.

There seems to be no question but that the company is liable in case there is a continuous platform joining its station with that of another road, which is used and is intended to be used for the transfer of passengers from one road to another, for the safe condition of such platform through its entire length even upon the land owned by the other company. Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Lucas, 6 L. R. A. 193, 119 L. ed. 583; Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Wolf, 13 Ill. App. 437.

The company was also held liable where it had constructed a cattle-guard in the highway at a place so near to the pathway leading from the highway to its station that one in attempting to reach the highway fell into the guard and was injured. Hoffman v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 73 N. Y. 605.

In Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Fillmore, 57 Ill. 206, the company was held liable for injuries caused by falling through a bridge over a public highway which it kept in repair and which was used as an approach to its trains.

16 L. R. A.

Where the company constructs its platform in a public highway, it is liable for defects therein although the municipality may also be liable for permitting a nuisance in its streets. Tobin v. Portland, S. & P. R. Co. 59 Me. 183, 8 Am. Rep. 415.

Where the company permitted private parties to construct and maintain a stairway leading from the public highway to the station grounds, it was held liable for an injury caused through a defect therein although it maintained another approach to its station which was convenient and safe. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Trautwein, 7 L. R. A. 435, 52 N. J. L. 106.

And where an express company maintained a stairway for its own use from the station platform to the public street, and a passenger in attempting to leave the station went down that way and fell from the platform which the express company had constructed for loading and unloading its wagons, the railroad company was held liable, and the court stated that the fact that the bottom of the stairway was beyond the line of ownership of the railroad company neither relieved it from duty nor mitigated its fault. Beard v. Connecticut & P. R. R. Co. 48 Vt. 101.

Where the company stops its train to permit passengers to obtain refreshments at a hotel it is responsible for the safe condition of the passengers leading from the train to the hotel although they are not on its property. Peniston v. Chicago, St. L. & N. O. R. Co. 34 La. Ann. 777.

The liability of the railroad company ceases, however, in case its approach is over a public highway when the municipality assumes control over the approach and undertakes to keep it in repair. Quimby v. Boston & M. R. Co. 69 Me. 312.

In the case of Eisenberg v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 38 Mo. App. 85, in which the company's liability was denied, it appeared that the road was constructed by some person unknown and formed a convenient way for reaching freight cars upon the defendant's track. The defendant had once improved it but it was not the approach which was maintained and held out by the carrier for the convenience of passengers in reaching trains.

H. P. F.

damages for personal injuries alleged to have resulted from defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. W. W. Cotton, Zera Snow and Wallace McCamant, for appellant:

The court did not caution the jury that the testimony admitted over the objection of the defendant was evidence only of control, and was not to be taken into consideration by them on the question of negligence on the part of the defendant. This was error.

Morse v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 80 Minn. 465; Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. Clem, 7 L. R. A. 588, 128 Ind. 15; Nalley v. Hartford Carpet Co. 51 Conn. 524, 50 Am. Rep. 47; Hudson v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 59 Iowa, 581, 44 Am. Rep. 692; Cramer v. Burlington, 45 Iowa, 627.

In view of the heavy damages awarded plaintiffs in these cases and the limited amount of evidence going to show negligence on the part of the defendant, the probability is very strong that this error of the court contributed not a little to the injury of the defendant and should cause a reversal.

Baird v. Daly, 68 N. Y. 547; Salters v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. 3 Hun, 838; Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. Clem, 7 L. R. A. 588, 128 Ind. 15; Payne v. Troy & B. R. Co. 9 Hun, 526; Dougan v. Champlain Transp. Co. 56 N. Y. 1; Isaacs v. Southern Pac. Co. (Or.) 49 Fed. Rep. 797.

The duty of a carrier to provide reasonably safe approaches to a landing place or a station is confined only to the immediate vicinity of its landing or station, and to approaches on its own ground or right of way. Even there the liability is much relaxed from that of the carrier to a passenger actually en route on the carrier's train or boat. The duty of the carrier as to approaches, even when it does attach, is no greater than the duty of one who has invited another to call upon him; the duty in the latter case is simply to see that there is no pitfall or trap into which the guest might reasonably be expected to fall between the front gate and door. The duty is one of ordinary care, equal to but no greater than that of the passenger or guest to care for himself.

Pennsylvania Co. v. Marion, 2 West. Rep. 284, 104 Ind. 239; Moreland v. Boston & P. R. Corp. 1 New Eng. Rep. 909, 141 Mass. 81; Indiana Cent. R. Co. v. Hudson, 18 Ind. 325, 74 Am. Dec. 254; Kelly v. Manhattan R. Co. 3 L. R. A. 74, 112 N. Y. 448; Quimby v. Boston & M. R. Co. 69 Me. 340; Robbins v. Jones, 15 C. B. N. S. 231.

The defendant was not bound to provide a road or way from the business part of the city to its landing place. Indeed, the defendant lacked the power so to do. It had no right to occupy the streets of Dallas City for this purpose.

Fanning v. Osborne, 84 Hun, 121.

Nor could it condemn private property for the purpose of doing so.

Witham v. Osburn, 4 Or. 318, 18 Am. Rep. 237.

The act of the defendant by its predecessors in interest, in constructing the bridge in question was a voluntary one. They were under no legal obligation so to do. Not only so, but the repairs they put upon the bridge several times were put there freely and voluntarily. So far from it being the duty of defendant to make them, it laid itself open to an action for trespass by so doing.

Quimby v. Boston & M. R. Co. and Fanning v. Osborne, supra.

Does the law require an unlawful act of anyone? Was it the duty of this defendant to lay itself open to an action of trespass by repairing the bridge in question? The answer should be "No."

Fisher v. Prosser, 31 L. J. Q. B. 212; Eisenberg v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. 38 Mo. App. 85; Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Dessommes (Tex.) March 8, 1891; Cusick v. Adams, 115 N. Y. 55.

Can there be any doubt that the facts made a case of clear contributory negligence against plaintiff and deceased? If they carelessly stepped off the bridge at a point where they knew or had reason to know a railing was off, why should they not be held guilty of negligence contributing to their injury?

Reed v. Richmond & A. R. Co. 33 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 503; Bedell v. Berkey, 76 Mich. 436.

Mr. Alfred S. Bennett, for respondents:

While evidence of additional precautions or subsequent repair is not competent for the purpose of proving antecedent negligence, it is competent for the purpose of showing that the place where the injury was received was under the control of the defendant.

Readman v. Conway, 126 Mass. 374; Elliott, Roads & Streets, 650; Lafayette v. Weaver, 92 Ind. 479; Manderschid v. Dubuque, 29 Iowa, 78, 4 Am. Rep. 196; Folsom v. Underhill, 36 Vt. 580.

A common carrier is liable for negligence in the construction of or failure to repair its station approaches.

Patterson, Railway Accident Law, p. 253; Quimby v. Boston & M. R. Co. 69 Me. 340; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Fillmore, 57 Ill. 265; Hulbert v. New York Cent. R. Co. 40 N. Y. 145; Hartwig v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 49 Wis. 358; Carleton v. Franconia I. & S. Co. 99 Mass. 216; Barrett v. Black, 56 Me. 498, 96 Am. Dec. 497.

It makes no difference upon whose land such walk was situated. If it was constructed and controlled by the defendant, it is liable.

Tobin v. Portland, S. & P. R. Co. 59 Me. 198, 8 Am. Rep. 415; Quimby v. Boston & M. R. Co. supra.

Lord, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

These actions are brought by Jane Skottowe in the one case, and by J. T. Mullen, as administrator of the estate of Nicholas Skottowe, in the other case, against the defendant, to recover damages resulting from a fall by Jane Skottowe and her deceased husband from an elevated way leading from The Dallas City to the defendant's boat landing; which fall caused serious injury to Jane Skottowe, and the death of her husband. The liability of the defendant is predicated on the ground that the defendant was negligent in failing to keep in repair the elevated way or bridge, from which the plaintiff and the deceased fell, and were injured, and in failing to provide such place with proper lights.

The answer of defendant put in issue all the material allegations of the complaint, and further alleged that the elevated way or bridge causing the injury and death was not the property, or in the possession, or under the control, of the defendant, and, as a separate defense, that the plaintiff and her deceased husband were guilty of contributory negligence.

The facts are substantially these: The plaintiff and her deceased husband were citizens of Ireland, traveling in this country with the double purpose of visiting a son who resided in the state of Wyoming, and such places as would interest them or contribute to their pleasure. It would seem that they had secured a round-trip ticket from Portland to The Dalles, and return, and that they had come up to The Dalles, by railroad, with the intention of returning to Portland by the river, on one of the boats of the defendant, for the purpose of obtaining a more complete view of the Columbia river scenery. The boats of the defendant were fitted up with staterooms and other adjuncts for the comfort and accommodation of its passengers. As the hour at which the defendant's boats were accustomed to leave in the morning was early,—7 o'clock,—the company, for its own advantage, and for the convenience of its passengers, allowed them to come on board of its boats at night, and to sleep there. For this accommodation the defendant charged and received a specified consideration, and by reason of it its passengers were saved from the necessity of arising at an inconvenient hour in the morning in order to reach the boat. The plaintiff and her husband reached The Dalles some time about the middle of the day and during the afternoon went down to the wharf-boat, as it would seem, for the purpose of acquainting themselves with the way to the boat's landing, and ascertaining what arrangements were necessary to be made to get on board of the boat. The agent of the defendant informed them at the office that they could come on board of the boat that night, as soon as it came in, and sleep there until morning, so that they would be on the boat at its hour of starting. Concluding to avail themselves of this accommodation, they returned up town, and after getting a meal at a restaurant, and walking and looking around until the time had come for the boat to arrive, they started down to its landing. It was after dark when the defendant's boat came in, but, owing to the fact that it had a barge in tow, it proceeded up the river, under slow bells, past its landing place, to a point on the river about opposite the place where the accident occurred, for the purpose of landing the barge, when it turned back to make its landing. Her lights were lit, and it was while some of these things were occurring that the accident happened. The landing place of the defendant's boat is some distance below the inhabited portion of The Dalles, and is reached by a long elevated incline and narrow roadway which passes over Mill creek by means of a bridge. One portion of this roadway, at the point where it leaves the inhabited portion of The Dalles, is occupied by the defendant's railroad tracks and leads to its shops, while the other portion of it gradually inclines, and leads to its wharf or boat landing. These two ways, at the point where the injury occurred, are connected, and rest on the same timbers. The situation is difficult to describe, but it is shown on the photographic exhibits. These different ways were originally built by the Oregon Steam Navigation Company, the defendant's predecessor in interest, for the purposes specified, and since then have been constantly used as a means of access to and from its shops and the landing place of its boats. At different times the company has rebuilt and repaired this roadway, raised and changed it, and exercised various acts of control over it. The place where the accident occurred, and over which the elevated roadway or bridge crosses Mill creek, is a short distance below the last building in the inhabited portion of the city. The land under the bridge was doubtless a public street at the point of the accident, as it seems to have been platted as such, but the city has never opened it as a street, nor exercised any control or ownership over the elevated roadway or bridge.

16 L. R. A.

"There was no evidence," the record says, "in the case tending to show that Dalles City, or any one except the railroad company, and its predecessors in interest, had exercised any control of the bridge at the place where the accident occurred, or had ever operated or repaired the same." The bridge is from twelve to twenty feet from the ground, which is of a rocky and uneven character, and along the bridge there has always been a "rail running," which, a short while before the accident, got loose and came off, and never was replaced until after the injury occurred.

The circumstances of the fall from the bridge are thus related by the plaintiff: "We had passed the town and got to the way leading to the boat, it being then nearly dark. We suddenly fell down a height. The fall rendered me unconscious. I was aroused by my husband's calls for help. I became unconscious again, and then got conscious again, when the men came to carry me up from where I had fallen. Shortly before the accident we remarked to each other on the want of light. We were feeling our way cautiously along, immediately before the accident. My husband's calls for help at the place of the accident were the first thing I knew after the accident, while we were lying on the stones near the river."

The injury to the husband of the plaintiff was of such a character as to cause his death a day or two afterwards. The injury to the plaintiff confined her to bed for many months, and, the evidence indicates, will render her subject perhaps to much suffering, and a cripple for the remainder of her life. From these facts and circumstances it seems evident that the plaintiff and her deceased husband, while passing over the bridge or elevated roadway, seeing the boat out in the river, which was lighted up, and supposing that they had reached the landing, walked through the opening occasioned by the want of railing, and were precipitated upon the rocks below.

Upon this state of facts, the most vital point of the contention for the defendant is that the duty of a passenger carrier to provide reasonably safe approaches to a landing place or station is confined only to the immediate vicinity of its landing or station, and to approaches on its own ground or right of way, and that, as the facts show that the land over which the bridge was constructed, and where the accident occurred, was a public street, the defendant was under no obligation to keep such bridge in repair or properly lighted. There are other questions connected with this upon which error is alleged, and to which we shall advert at the proper time.

There is, however, a preliminary question upon the evidence, to which an exception was taken, that must be first disposed of. One Mr. Allen was called as a witness for the plaintiff, and testified that he was in the employ of the defendant, and engaged in carpenter work; that about two days after the accident he repaired the bridge, by replacing the missing railing. He was then asked the question, "Under whose direction?" To this question the defendant objected, as incompetent and immaterial; whereupon plaintiff's counsel stated in open court, and in the presence of the jury, that he did not offer the testimony for the purpose of showing negligence, but for the purpose of showing acts of ownership and control over the bridge, and the court ruled that the evidence should be received for that purpose, and that purpose only. The witness then answered that he was instructed by Mr. De Huff, the company's foreman or superintendent at the shops. It is conceded that this evidence is hardly sufficient to show that Mr. De Huff had authority from the railroad company to make the repair in question, but no proper means were taken to get rid of this aspect of it. As already disclosed, this evidence was offered for the purpose of showing that the bridge or place where the injury was received was under the control of the defendant. As applicable to this object, no objection is made, if the evidence shall be restricted exclusively to this purpose. It is not the fact that repairs were actually made by the defendant, or the inference of control or ownership sought to be drawn, to which objection is urged, but that such evidence is inadmissible for that purpose unless the jury were instructed, or expressly cautioned by the court when it was received, that it could not be considered by them on the question of negligence. Hence, it was argued, notwithstanding counsel for the plaintiff stated that the evidence upon objection was only offered to prove the control of the defendant of the place of injury, and not to prove negligence, and the court ruled, in the presence of the jury, that it would only be admitted for the purpose of showing control, that this statement and ruling were not enough to remove the objection for incompetency, unless the court went further when 16 L. R. A.

the evidence was received, and instructed or cautioned the jury that they could not take it into consideration upon the question of negligence on the part of the defendant; otherwise the jury would be authorized to consider such evidence as proof of negligence or to treat it as a link in the chain of such proof, contrary to the well-established rule that subsequent repairs are not competent for the purpose of proving antecedent negligence. That this rule is now to be regarded as settled law in a proper case is not controverted, as the authorities in support of it fully indicate. Morse v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 80 Minn. 465; Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. Clem, 123 Ind. 15, 7 L. R. A. 588; Nalley v. Hartford Carpet Co. 51 Conn. 524, 50 Am. Rep. 47; Hudson v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 59 Iowa, 581, 44 Am. Rep. 692.

But the principle seems equally as well established that, while evidence of additional precautions or subsequent repair is not competent for the purpose of proving antecedent negligence, it is competent for the purpose of showing that the place where the injury was received was under the control of the defendant, who may require the court, if he chooses, to restrict it to that point by a proper instruction. As the court said, in Lafayette v. Weaver, 92 Ind. 479, such evidence "was not admissible to prove negligence on the part of the city, the question as to which was to be determined by what was known before and at the time of the accident; but it was evidence of the city's recognition of the defect in the sidewalk as one which the city was bound to repair, and was admissible for such purpose."

By proper request the appellant could, through an instruction, cause the restriction of the evidence to its legitimate effect." See Elliott, Roads & Streets, 650, and authorities cited in notes. Independent of these considerations we do not think there was any liability of the jury considering the evidence for any other purpose than showing control or authority over the locus in quo, as the circumstances under which it was admitted expressly restricted it to this purpose, and exclude the idea of its being admitted to prove negligence. So that, as the exception stands, while we agree that such evidence is and ought to be regarded under any circumstances as incompetent as an admission of negligence, we do not understand it is incompetent to show authority over the locus in quo, or control over the place where the injury occurred. If the evidence was competent for this purpose there was no other defect, except possibly to show the authority of De Huff to order the repairs,—his agency to connect the company with the making of the repairs,—but this was regarded as of no consequence, and merited little attention of counsel, for the reason, doubtless, that there was other evidence, before the accident, indicative of the defendant's control over the place of the injury, or recognition of its duty to keep the bridge in good condition and repair, such as the construction and repair of the bridge, and the exclusive use of it as a means of access to its boat landing. Moreover, as the question was asked, the answer might have been that the repair of the bridge was directed to be done by the representative of the defendant, so far as the court could know, but if the answer did not sufficiently connect the company—turned out to be improper—it was the duty of the defendant claiming to be injured by it to move to strike it out. Still, if we thought the evidence was incompetent, as the case stands, in view of its importance and liability to arise frequently in the trial court, we should hesitate to excuse the error, solely because no motion was made to strike it out.

The next alleged error is the refusal of the trial court to direct a verdict for the defendant. The contention is that the undisputed evidence shows no liability upon the part of the defendant. This is based upon the assumption that the undisputed evidence shows that the elevated walk or bridge to the boat landing of the defendant is upon a public street, and, as a consequence, neither the defendant nor its predecessors had any right to occupy the street by a bridge for this purpose, and that, even if they did so originally by constructing, and subsequently by keeping it in repair, it was a voluntary act, and placed the defendant under no obligation to keep it in repair, or liability for want of repair.

As the question involved is important and vital as affecting the liability of the defendant, it deserves to receive, despite the pressure of our duties, our best consideration. At the risk, therefore, of some repetition of the facts already stated, but to make more clear, if possible, the relation of the defendant to the locus in quo, as a part of its means of approach to its boat landing, and the relation of the city to it, as showing its control over it we quote from the bill of exceptions the following facts: "Plaintiff also called as witnesses John Cates, R. A. Roscoe, and George H. Knaggs, whose evidence tended to show that the bridge in question, from which it is claimed that the fall occurred, was constructed by the Oregon Steam Navigation Company, a transportation company engaged in operating boats and portage roads from The Dalles, on the Columbia river; that the Oregon Railway & Navigation Company succeeded to the Oregon Steam Navigation Company; and further tended to show that the Oregon Railway & Navigation Company continued to operate and control the bridge until their railroad and boat line was leased to the defendant as shown herein; and that the bridge in question was the bridge extending on from Main street, in Dalles City, across a ravine through which Mill creek runs, and leading to the lower boat landing used by the Oregon Railway & Navigation Company as a landing for the boats operated by them on the Columbia river; that it was such bridge, leading to such landing, at the time of the lease, and since then it had been used by the present company in operating boats on said river, as a means of access to and from the town of The Dalles and the boat landing. The evidence further tended to show that the bridge had been raised once or twice by the Oregon Railway & Navigation Company 16 L. R. A.

and the defendant company, and that the defendant company had exercised acts of control over the bridge in keeping the same up, and preventing it from being floated away by high water, and by its means the route over this bridge was the only route to the lower boat landing; and no other person or persons had anything to do with the control of said bridge, or keeping it in repair, from the time it was built up to the time of the injury to the plaintiff. The evidence of these witnesses also tends to show that there was no business other than that connected with the defendant company's business, west of the bridge in question, which would take persons thereover, and that the bridge was used only by persons having business with the defendant company, and that it was used by such persons in traveling to and from its wharf, for the purpose of traveling over its line, and in shipping and receiving freight. The testimony of these witnesses further tended to show that one side of the bridge in question was a railroad bridge used exclusively by the defendant as a means of access to its shops and round-houses, the other portion of the same being a narrow plank roadway used as a means of access to and from its boat line and wharves, with the two ways separated and deflected from each other some distance west of the place where plaintiff was injured."

In view of these facts, it is important to ascertain the duties of the defendant, as a public carrier, to keep all the approaches to its boat landing or depot, owned by it or constructed by it, and under its control or in its possession, and used in connection therewith, safe and convenient for the use of its patrons, or those who have lawful occasion to use them. Dillon, Ch. J., laid down the rule as founded upon reason and authority, that "railroads are bound to keep in safe condition all portions of their platforms and approaches thereto to which the public do or would naturally resort, all portions of their station ground reasonably near to the platforms, where passengers or those who have purchased tickets with a view to passage on their cars would naturally or ordinarily go." McDonald v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 26 Iowa, 145, 96 Am. Dec. 114.

Such corporations are not only bound to keep their platforms and landing places safe and convenient for all who make use of their cars or boats as a means of conveyance, but they are bound to make the approaches over their own premises, or premises in their possession and used in connection therewith, safe and convenient for passengers. The liability for the nonperformance of this duty by such corporations is founded on the general principle that a person injured without neglect on his part, by a defect or obstruction in a way or passage over which he has been induced to pass, for a lawful purpose, by an invitation express or implied, can recover damages for the injury sustained against the individual so inviting, and being in default for the defect. Barrett v. Black, 56 Me. 498; Carleton v. Franconia I. & S. Co. 99 Mass. 219.

This principle finds its illustration in Tobin v. Portland S. & P. R. Co., 59 Me. 183, 8 Am. Rep. 415. There a hackman, while carrying a passenger to the depot for transportation, stepped, without fault, into a cavity in the platform, and was injured; and it was held that the company was liable, and that the liability was the same, notwithstanding the platform was within the limits of the highway. The court, after stating that it was the duty of such corporations to make the approaches to their depots safe and convenient, and likewise to so keep their platforms and landing places not only for those who are passengers, but for all who have rightful occasion to use them, says: "It is objected that the defendant built the platform within the limits of the public highway. But it is no answer to the plaintiff, when seeking compensation for the consequences of their neglect, that they have trespassed upon the rights of the public. They have built the platform, and used it. Their passengers and those having rightful occasion to be upon it are there by their invitation, and they are responsible for its condition. It may be that the city of Portland might be liable for a nuisance within the limits of its public highways, erected and maintained by the defendant corporation. But, if so, the city has the right of reclamation against those creating the nuisance. Much more, then, could the party injured maintain his action directly against the corporation causing the injury."

In Quimby v. Boston & M. R. Co., 69 Me. 340, these principles are reasserted, but the fact that the sidewalk where the injury occurred was not in the possession and control of the defendant as one of the approaches to their station defeated a recovery. The court says: "A railroad corporation is bound to keep its depot and the grounds around it, owned by the corporation, or in its possession, and used in connection with it, safe and convenient for persons who have lawful occasion to use them. It is bound to keep all approaches to its depot, constructed by it and under its control, for the use of persons having lawful occasion to use them, to go to or from its depot or cars, safe and convenient for such use, even though the same may be within the limits of the highway. The burden was on the plaintiff to show that the walk where he received his injury was constructed by the defendants, and was in their possession and control as one of the approaches to their station." The court then proceeds to state the facts, showing that the sidewalk was not in the possession of the defendant, but that the city had resumed control of it, and kept it in repair, and, as a consequence, that the defendant corporation was not liable. The court says: "Upon this state of facts, we think it clear that the defendants were under no obligation to keep the sidewalk in repair. It was no part of their bridge. It was a part of the public street, under control of the city. The defendant had no right to enter upon it to make any changes or repairs. Their liability ceased when they restored the condition of the sidewalks to the acceptance of the city." This case is cited by 16 L. R. A.

the defendant, but the principle it declares and recognizes is fatal to its contention.

Mr. Hutchinson says: "It is the duty of the carrier to provide a reasonably safe means of getting to and from the station, and it will be liable for an injury resulting from its failure to do so; and if passengers habitually, naturally, and with the acquiescence of the carrier, adopt a certain route, especially a route pointed out by the customs and methods of the carrier, it is the duty of the latter to take reasonable precautions to so guard and maintain it that passengers will not thereby suffer injury. It is immaterial in this respect whether the carrier furnished the route, or provided or constructed the means of passage, or not. If, with full knowledge of the facts, it permits an unsafe and dangerous means to be provided and used, it is as much liable for an injury arising therefrom as though it had itself set up and maintained the dangerous way. The same rules apply to carriers by water who are liable for furnishing dangerous gang planks for use by passengers." Hutchinson, Carr. 2d ed. § 519; Cross v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 69 Mich. 363, 14 West. Rep. 181; Hoffman v. New York Cent. & H. R. Co. 75 N. Y. 605; Green v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 36 Fed. Rep. 68; Texas & St. L. R. Co. v. Orr, 46 Ark. 195; Wallace v. Wilmington & N. R. Co. (Del.) 18 Atl. Rep. 818; Collins v. Toledo, A. A. & N. M. R. Co. 80 Mich. 390.

Plainly, then, it is the duty of such corporations to provide reasonable accommodations at their stations and landing places, to keep in safe condition all portions of their platform and approaches thereto and furnish safe and proper means of ingress and egress therefrom, even though some part of it may be constructed upon a highway, if the same be in their possession, or under their control, and used in connection with them. This duty and the liability of such corporations for its nonperformance, when an injury occurs in respect to such places, platforms, approaches as well as to furnish lights, is also fully stated, and the cases maintaining it collected, in Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Arnold, 80 Ala. 600, 20 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 555, note; but by this is not meant that such companies are bound to keep their premises absolutely safe, or that they are liable for accidents due to want of ordinary care on the part of the injured person. They are only bound to exercise ordinary care in view of the dangers to be apprehended. The distinction between such liability for an injury to a passenger occurring on their cars or boats, and for an injury occurring on their platforms or approaches to the station or landing places, is well recognized. Pennsylvania Co. v. Marion, 104 Ind. 239, 2 West. Rep. 234; Moreland v. Boston & P. R. Corp. 141 Mass. 31; Kelly v. Manhattan R. Co. 112 N. Y. 443, 8 L. R. A. 74.

Nor is there any claim that the defendant is an insurer, but that it was bound to use ordinary care to keep its approaches to its boat landing safe and convenient, and that to leave a railing off of a bridge of this kind, at such a place, and at such a height from the ground, for a period of several weeks, was a want of ordinary care, if not gross negligence.

Nor do the cases cited by the defendant conflict with these principles, as declared by the authorities, or support its contention. It will be sufficient to notice those claimed to be most in point. In Eisenberg v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 38 Mo. App. 91, it did not appear that the road had been built by the defendant, and held out to its patrons as a way to its depot. There was another and safer road, and the exact situation of the defect was known to the plaintiff. The only element in the case is that, prior to the accident, the company had improved it, but, upon the plaintiff's own testimony, the case was void of all elements of negligence upon the part of the defendant. The court says: "In the case at bar, the danger was neither a hidden nor recent danger. The excavation existed before the road was built. The plaintiff knew the exact situation for years. His drivers knew it. This very driver had traveled over the road repeatedly on the day of the accident. He discussed such dangers when they were in full view, in broad daylight, with his fellow servant, and, knowing what risk he undertook, voluntarily assumed it, although he might have used another and safer road." It was a clear case of contributory negligence.

In Cusick v. Adams, 115 N. Y. 58, the bridge was built for the convenience of the defendant. The plaintiff was a stranger to him, and to whom he owed no duty. Nor was the plaintiff upon the bridge upon the defendant's invitation, nor to do any business with him, but for the purpose of seeing a shooting match upon an island with which the defendant had no connection whatever.

In Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Dessommes (Tex. Sup.) 15 S. W. Rep. 806, the testimony was so positive and definite that the defendant had nothing whatever to do with the crossing at the place of the injury that the verdict was held contrary to the evidence.

There is no relevancy in these cases or the others cited, to the case at bar; nor is there anything in the fact, if it be admitted, that the land where this bridge was constructed and maintained by the defendant was platted as one of the public streets. It by no means follows that the city was bound to open the same to public travel. As Thayer, Ch. J., after showing that the dedication of streets by maps and plats was irrevocable, and vested them in the public, said: "But it does not follow that the city is under any obligation to open and improve such streets at once; they may be allowed to remain dormant until their use becomes a public necessity." Meier v. Portland Cable R. Co., 16 Or. 500, 1 L. R. A. 856. There is no pretense or evidence to show that the city had opened this street beyond its inhabited portion. The evidence is undisputed that the defendant built the bridge partly upon it for its own purposes, and has ever since used it, exclusively, as a railroad bridge, and as a way to its boats. The city had nothing to do with it. "There was no business other than that connected with the defendant company's business, west of the bridge in question, which would take persons thereover, and it was used only by persons having business with the defendant company, in traveling to and from its wharf for the purpose of traveling over its line, and in shipping and receiving freight." So runs the record.

16 L. R. A.

Nor do we think there is anything in the contention that the defendant is not liable because the plaintiff and her husband started to go on the boat in the evening, instead of in the morning. It was the custom of the defendant to receive passengers on its boats in the evening, and allow them to sleep there, for which they were charged extra, or "fifty cents for single berths, and six bits for double." Its officers at the wharf boat informed the plaintiff and her husband of the custom, and they were going to the boat to avail themselves of it when the injury occurred. By so doing the defendant invited its patrons to take passage on its boats in the evening instead of in the morning, and was bound to make its approaches safe for the travel of such persons as it was for persons who came on board of the boat in the morning. We think there was no error.

It is next objected that the court erred in declining to instruct the jury that the plating of the ground under the bridge in question as a public street, and selling lots by reference to the same, constituted a dedication of the street. This objection is embraced in five long instructions out of the numerous instructions asked, and are justly subject to the criticism suggested by counsel. The proposition itself was not disputed as a matter of law, nor was the refusal of the court to give the instructions asked in conflict with it. It was the fact that the instructions ignored the distinction between the dedication of a street and the opening of that street as a public highway, by which the defendant sought to excuse liability that caused the court to refuse them; but the view we have taken renders their further consideration unnecessary. The evidence shows that the street was not opened by the city, nor used by it, but that it was exclusively occupied by the defendant with its bridge as a means of access to its boat landing, and under its control at the time of the accident.

It is next objected that the trial court erred in refusing and modifying instruction No. 16, upon the question of contributory negligence. This instruction is objectionable, but instruction No. 39, as given by the court, better states the law as applicable to the facts. There can be no doubt but the bridge was a place where a railing or guard on it was necessary at all times, but especially after dark, when passengers were expected to travel over it to and from the landing place. The plaintiff and her husband were strangers, and the circumstances already stated were not such as the court could declare contributory negligence.

The next objection is that "the court erred in instructing the jury that the defendant was bound to keep its approaches safe and well lighted at all hours of night, regardless of the time set for the departure of its boats." This refers to the court declining to give certain instructions asked by the defendant, and giving certain others asked by the plaintiff. By the instructions thus given and refused, it is claimed that the court imposed upon the defendant the duty to keep the approaches or bridge constructed by it, and under its control, leading to its steamboat landing, in such order and repair, and so well lighted, as to be reasonably safe at all hours of night. The complaint is that this laid the duty on the defendant regardless of time, and of the fact that the boat did not leave until the next morning. Upon this point the instruction given by the court was: "If the defendant had been in the habit of and accustomed to take passengers on the boat in the evening and permitting them to sleep thereon, then its liabilities as to a passenger passing over its walks and ways in the evening for such purpose would be just the same, and its duties as to keeping its ways to its boat would be just the same, as it would towards a passenger going to the boat at the hour of starting in the morning." The court did not, therefore, instruct the jury that the defendant was bound to keep its approaches safe and well lighted at all hours of the night. The plaintiff and her husband were going down to the boat, as the evidence indicates, between 6 and 8 o'clock in the evening. It was the usual time when the defendant was in the habit of receiving passengers. They were invited to come on board, and they had a right to be there; they were going there to do business with the defendant,—to sleep on board of the boat all night, and pay for the accommodation. The benefit was mutual. It was not a gratuitous privilege for their own special convenience. The boat was just coming into its landing, and the time was in the evening, and appropriate. There is no claim, nor can be on the facts, that it was the duty of the defendant to keep its approaches to its landing safe at all hours of the night, but that it was its duty in the evening, when it was accustomed to receive passengers. Whether it was the duty of the defendant to keep them in that condition at other later hours in the night was a matter with which the plaintiff in this case has no concern. It is next objected that the damages awarded are excessive. The damages assessed by the jury are large. The evidence tends to indicate that the plaintiff is permanently injured. "I think," says the medical witness, "that if she does regain the use of her limb, and it becomes free from pain, it will be several years. It will take a long time to fully recover, if she ever does. She is unable, now, to stand without support, and altogether unable to walk, and still suffers great physical pain from the injury. The probabilities are that she will be a cripple during her life, and subject to much pain and suffering." In such case different individuals would vary in their estimate of the sum which would be a just pecuniary compensation. "It is one thing," said Mr. Justice Story, "for a court to administer its own measure of damages in a case properly before it, and quite another thing to set aside the verdict of a jury because it exceeds that measure." Thurston v. Martin, 5 Mason, 497. Nor is the fact to be overlooked that the judge who heard the testimony, in refusing the motion for a new trial, approved the verdict of the jury. In such case, it has not been the practice of this court to interfere, nor, if such was not the practice, are the damages given so excessive as to justify our interference. Many larger verdicts for less injuries have been sustained by the courts.

Thus far, the cases have been considered together; but the point is made in the administrator case that no earning power was proven on the part of the deceased. This is based on the inference that the deceased was a wealthy man, living on his income. Under the statute, the age and sex, the general health and intelligence of the deceased, his habits and capacity, mental and physical, to earn and acquire property, are all to be considered. The deprivation of his affection and society cannot be taken into account. This would include skill in the management of wealth, or capacity to manage affairs, which would be of advantage to an estate, and the loss of which would prove a detriment to it.

In view of all the circumstances, we are unable to say there was error, and must affirm the judgments, or judgment, in both cases.

ALABAMA SUPREME COURT.

J. W. HUGHES, Admr., etc., of B. M. Hughes, Deceased, Appt.,

G. M. TORGERSON.

(..... Ala.)

1. Services by an architect in the preparation of drawings, plans, and specifications for a building and in superintending its erection are "work or labor upon . . . a building or improvement on land" within the meaning of a statute providing for mechanics' liens.

2. The heirs of the owner of a building who dies before the filing of a lien thereon are necessary parties to a proceeding for its enforcement.

(May 23, 1892.)

NOTE.—Right of architect to a mechanics' lien. Architects were entitled to a lien under the civil law. Domat, pt. 1, bk. 3, title 1, § 5, art. 9.

In this country they are given a lien by statute in several of the states, and where the statute does 16 L. R. A.

not expressly name them the general rule is that there is a lien for furnishing the plans and specifications and superintending the construction of the building. Arnold v. Gouin, 22 Grant, Ch. 314; Knight v. Norris, 13 Minn. 477.

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court from Jefferson County in favor of plaintiff in a proceeding instituted to enforce a mechanics' lien. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Ward & John, for appellant:

The lien is statutory. Its character and extent must be ascertained by the terms of the statute creating and defining it.

Copeland v. Kehoe, 87 Ala. 594.

The Code of 1836, § 8018, the law in force when the work was done, declares: "Every mechanic or other person who shall do or perform any work or labor upon, or furnish any material, fixtures, engine, etc., for any building, etc., under or by virtue of any contract with the owner, etc., shall have a lien."

The architect does not work upon or furnish materials for a building. In those states where the courts have held that architects have a lien the statute provides for a lien in favor of those who perform labor for a building, while in those states where the words of the statute are like § 3018, Code of 1836, the courts have held the architect has no lien.

Price v. Kirk, 90 Pa. 47.

Under a statute giving carpenters and all others performing labor and furnishing materials, etc., a lien, it was held that architects had no lien.

Phillips, Mechanics' Liens, §§ 156, 158, p. 266; Foushee v. Grigsby, 12 Bush, 88; Whitaker v. Smith, 81 N. C. 840, 81 Am. Rep. 508; Little v. Hobbs, 58 N. C. 179, 78 Am. Dec. 275.

The owner of the fee not being a party to the statement filed and not a party to the suit, no lien attached.

See Macintosh v. Thurston, 25 N. J. Eq. 242.

Suit for a mechanics' lien cannot be maintained without joining as a party the legal owner of the building or structure upon which the lien is sought to be enforced.

15 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 165.

No proceedings under the Lien Law can be maintained against executors unless it is in proof that title to the property, on which the lien exists passed to them.

15 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 118, ¶ 5, citing Crystal v. Flannelly, 2 E. D. Smith, 588.

When the title of the property upon which a lien is claimed is changed between the time of making the contract ordering the work and the time of filing the lien, the person owning the property when the lien is filed is the proper one to be made a party as owner.

15 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 168, note 5, citing Edwards v. Derrickson, 28 N. J. L. 39; Derrickson v. Edwards, 29 N. J. L. 468, 80 Am. Dec. 220; Robins v. Bunn, 34 N. J. L. 322.

Heirs having direct interest in the land are also necessary parties to the suit and are properly joined with the administrator.

Phillips, Mechanics' Liens, § 898, p. 687; Guerrant v. Dawson, 34 Miss. 149; Belcher v. Schaumburg, 18 Mo. 189.

Where the title of the premises is in the ancestor at the time of his decease, his heirs should be made parties.

Phillips, Mechanics' Liens, § 849, p. 646.

"Every mechanic or other person," etc., in Performing the work of architect and superintendent is "performing labor" so as to entitle one to a lien. Taylor v. Gildesdorf, 74 Ill. 354.

The words "other person" in a statute giving a lien to every mechanic, workman, or other person performing labor, are broad enough to include one performing services as architect and superintendent. Mulligan v. Mulligan, 18 La. Ann. 21.

A statute giving a lien for work done for or about the construction or erection of a building is broad enough to include one who devotes his time in making the plans and drawings for the work and in overseeing its execution. Bank of Pennsylvania v. Gries, 36 Pa. 423; St. Clair Coal Co. v. Martz, 76 Pa. 368.

The one who draws the plans and superintends the building is within the terms of a statute giving a lien to "any person for labor performed for the erection or construction of a building." Mutual Benefit L. Ins. Co. v. Rowand, 26 N. J. Eq. 397.

A statute giving a lien to "any person who shall perform any labor" in building, altering, or repairing a house, is broad enough to include the services of an architect in superintending such work. Stryker v. Cassidy, 76 N. Y. 50, 32 Am. Rep. 202.

Planning and superintending development work upon mines is "performing labor" within the meaning of the mechanics' liens statutes. Rara Avis G. & S. Min. Co. v. Bouscher, 9 Colo. 385.

But a statute giving a lien to architects does not include one performing labor as superintending architect of grounds and accessories. Adler v. World's P. Exposition Co., 126 Ill. 377.

In conflict with the above cases it has been held that the architect or superintendent of a building has no lien by reason of his services. Foushee v. Grigsby, 12 Bush, 88.

So an architect has no lien for drawing plans and 16 L. R. A.

specifications and giving general directions to the builder under whose special superintendence the building is being constructed. Raeder v. Bensberg, 6 Mo. App. 448.

Simply furnishing plans.

In Bank of Pennsylvania v. Gries, 36 Pa. 423, it was intimated that merely furnishing plans for approval would not entitle one to a mechanics' lien.

And it was subsequently decided that simply providing the plans and specifications does not entitle to a lien. Price v. Kirk, 90 Pa. 47.

The plan of a house or the model of a ship does not enter into the structure and cannot be regarded as within the statutes by which liens are given to materialmen and laborers. Ames v. Dyer, 41 Me. 397.

Hence the character of the work must be set out. Merely naming it as "architect's work" is not sufficient. Rush v. Able, 90 Pa. 153.

No lien can be acquired by lumping the claim with that for other work. Nelson v. Withrow, 14 Mo. App. 277; Edgar v. Salisbury, 17 Mo. 271.

Superintending.

On the one side, it is held that a contractor is entitled to a lien for his own services. Sweet v. James, 2 R. I. 270.

Overseeing entitles to a lien. Willamette Falls T. & M. Co. v. Remick, 1 Or. 169.

On the other side, it is held that the contractor has no right to a lien by reason of his superintendence. Jones v. Shawhan, 4 Watts & S. 232; Blakey v. Blakey, 37 Mo. 89.

There is no lien for superintending. Murphy v. Murphy, 22 Mo. App. 18.

A mere superintendent has no lien unless he performs manual labor himself upon the work. Griell's App. (Pa.) 8 Cent. Rep. 868. H. P. F.

whose favor a lien is declared must under the rule ejusdem generis be a person of the same class as a mechanic.

See the word "other" in 17 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 278 et seq.

Walker, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

A lien is claimed under section 8018 of the Code upon a building and upon the lot of land on which it is erected. By the judgment a lien was declared only on the building, and not on the lot. This could be done under the statute. Bedsale v. Peters, 79 Ala. 133. In the statement filed by the plaintiff in the office of the judge of probate a lien was claimed upon the building only, and not upon the lot. Of course, the lien declared could not extend beyond the claim as asserted in the statement.

The first question to be considered is whether the building was sufficiently described. The description is: "A certain three-story brick building situated on rear part of lots 2 and 8, block 123, 20th street, between Ave. A. and B., in the city of Birmingham." This description points out with reasonable certainty a three-story brick building, occupying the hindmost part of two designated lots in a certain named city block,—the part thereof furthest from the street front of the two lots. This description, if followed by a person familiar with the locality, would lead him to the two lots named, and if he found the rear part thereof occupied by a three-story brick building he could identify that building as the only one corresponding with the description. This is sufficient certainty. Bedsale v. Peters, 79 Ala. 133; Kearney v. Marks, 15 Or. 529; Phillips, Mechanics' Liens, 2d ed. § 378. The statement avers that "the building is the property of one Dr. B. M. Hughes," who was deceased when the claim was filed. This did not render the description insufficient. The statute expressly provides that "no error . . . in name of the owner or proprietor shall affect the lien," Code, § 8022. The plaintiff claims a lien for the amount of the compensation due him for work and labor as an architect in the preparation of drawings, plans, and specifications for the building and in superintending the erection thereof. Are such services by an architect "work or labor upon . . . a building or improvement on land," within the meaning of the Statute? Code, § 8018. It is plain that a contractor for the construction of the building is within the protection of the statute. If he was also intrusted with the planning of the building, and with the sole supervision of its erection, we think it is equally plain that his services in these particulars could be regarded as properly a part of his work "upon the building," and that compensation therefor might be included in the amount for the security of which he could acquire a lien under the statute. There is nothing in the circumstance that such services were rendered by another person to put them beyond the protection of the statute. Under a New York statute a lien was authorized in favor "of any person who shall perform any labor, or furnish any materials, in building, altering or repairing any house, etc., by virtue of any contract with the owner," etc. "This language," it was said in Stryker v. Cassidy, 76 N. Y. 50, 83 Am. Rep. 262, "is general and comprehensive, and its natural and plain import includes all persons who perform labor in the construction or reparation of a building, irrespective of the grade of their employment, or the particular kind of service. The architect who superintends the construction of a building performs labor as truly as the carpenter who frames it, or the mason who lays the walls, and labor of a most important character. . . . The language quoted makes no distinction between skilled and unskilled labor, or between mere manual labor and the labor of one who supervises, directs, and applies the labor of others. . . . The general principle upon which the Lien Laws proceed is that any person who has contributed by his labor or by furnishing materials to a structure erected by an owner upon his premises, shall have a claim upon the property for his compensation." The claim of an architect was allowed in that case. What was there said seems eminently sound, and is equally applicable to the Alabama statute. An architect who prepares the drawings, plans, and specifications for a building, and superintends the erection thereof, may as truly be said to perform labor thereon as any one who takes part in the work of construction. That he is within the protection of the statute is a proposition well supported by adjudications upon other similar statutes. Phillips, Mechanics' Liens, 2d ed. § 158.

Dr. Hughes, who was the owner of the building in question, and under a contract with whom, as claimed by the plaintiff, the services were rendered, died intestate before the suit was instituted. The only defendant was the administrator of his estate. On the death of the intestate his heirs became the owners of the property. A lien cannot be declared and enforced in a proceeding to which the owner of the property on which the lien is claimed is not a party. Roman v. Thorn, 83 Ala. 443. If the suit had been brought against the intestate in his lifetime it could have been revived and prosecuted against his personal representative alone, without making his heirs parties. The statute expressly provides for that contingency. Code, § 8081. This provision does not apply to suits brought after the death of the owner or proprietor of the property. In such case the general rule applies that he who is, at the time the suit is commenced, the owner of the building or structure upon which the lien is sought to be enforced, is a necessary party defendant, without whose presence the lien cannot be declared or enforced. 15 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, 165; Phillips, Mechanics' Liens, § 393. The personal representative of the deceased owner may also be made a party defendant. The prohibition against bringing suits against personal representatives within six months after the grant of letters does not apply to suits for the enforcement of such liens. Code, § 3043. Because of the absence of necessary parties defendant the judgment must be reversed.

Reversed and remanded.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT, SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF ILLINOIS.

FARMERS LOAN & TRUST CO.

v.

GRAPE CREEK COAL CO.

(50 Fed. Rep. 481.)

The issuance of receiver's certificates which shall be a first lien on the mortgaged property cannot be authorized by the court in a suit to foreclose a mortgage on the property of a mere private corporation such as a coal mining company.

(May 7, 1892.)

APPPLICATION by Joseph G. English, the receiver appointed in a proceeding to foreclose a mortgage, for permission to issue receiver's certificates which should be a first lien on the property to enable him to raise money to operate the mortgaged property. Denied.

The Grape Creek Coal Company is an Illinois corporation, and was the owner and operator of certain coal mines located near Danville, Illinois. Some time ago the company executed to the Farmers' Loan & Trust Company a mortgage to secure an issue of bonds amounting to $500,000. These bonds were sold on the market, and the mortgage was the usual form of trust mortgages given under such circumstances. The company became insolvent, made default in the payment of its interest, and the Farmers' Loan & Trust Company filed its bill in the United States circuit court for the Southern District of Illinois for a decree of foreclosure. In that proceeding Mr. J. G. English was appointed receiver, and under an order of the court took possession of the property. The mines were in operation at the time of the appointment.

The receiver presented his petition representing that the mines were in a dilapidated condition; that the same were subject to overflow from water, and required constant operation of pumps to keep them free from water; that the mines were subject to waste by reason of the decay of timbers, and the constant falling in of the roof, etc.; that the mines, in order to preserve them in proper condition, should be worked and operated; that in order to do so it would require that he should make contracts for the sale of coal and employ sufficient force to operate the mines; that coal could only be sold upon terms requiring payments for coal delivered every thirty days; that the statutes of Illinois require payments to be made to miners every week; that this would require the receiver to have a capital on hand sufficient to pay his men weekly, pending the collection from sales; and that to obtain this capital it would be necessary to make temporary loans for that purpose. He asked for instructions in the premises, and for authority to issue receiver's certificates for the purpose of raising funds wherewith to make certain necessary repairs, and to furnish a working capital for the operation of the mines.

A majority of the bond-holders consented that an order might be entered in accordance with the prayer of the petitioner. A minority of the bond-holders, however, appeared and objected to the issue of the certificates asked for.

Mr. W. J. Calhoun for the receiver.

Messrs. Runnells & Barry for Farmers Loan & Trust Co.

Messrs. Hess & Johnson for objecting bond-holders.

NOTE.—Power to permit receiver of private corporations to create liens on its property.

The distinction taken in this case between quasi public and private corporations has not always been observed in practice, although in the cases in which it has been disregarded it seems that no question has been raised as to the power of the court to permit the receivers to charge property in their possession for current expenses.

In Allison v. Coal Co., 87 Tenn. 60, in which a settlement was being made of the affairs of the corporation, the court said that royalty which accrued to owners of the mine operated by the corporation while in the hands of the receiver was the first charge on the funds in his hands, being a receiver's debt.

In Neafie's App. (Pa.) 11 Cent. Rep. 186, the controversy was as to the payment of certain certificates which had been issued by a receiver in possession of the property of the American Ship-building Company, and the court said that the power of the court to permit the issuance of such certificates is not questioned, and they were therefore treated as valid so far as issued within the terms of the order authorizing them.

In Raht v. Attrill, 42 Hun, 414, the question was as to the validity of receiver's certificates which had been issued to pay the wages due to workmen of the Rockaway Beach Improvement Company, before the property went into the hands of a receiver; the court adjudged them void for the reason that it was not proper for the receiver to issue certificates for wages earned before he took possession of the property, and their validity does not seem to have been questioned on the ground that certificates of such property could not properly be authorized.

In Karn v. Rorer Iron Co., 86 Va. 754, it appeared that a mine and a railroad were operated by the same company in connection with each other, and the court decreed that under those circumstances it was proper to issue certificates which should be a charge upon the whole property, mine as well as railroad.

In Fidelity Ins. & S. D. Co. v. Shenandoah Iron Co., 42 Fed. Rep. 377, an order of court had given the receiver of an iron company permission to issue certificates to pay interest, taxes, wages, and freight until the business in his hands should realize sufficient to pay the same, and also for materials necessary in the protection of the business. It was held that orders given workmen upon a merchant for goods did not come within the terms of the order and were void although the power of the court to authorize such certificates is not questioned. See also Gay v. Brierfield C. & L. Co., ante, 564.

The question, however, came directly before the court in the case of Bound v. South Carolina R. Co., 50 Fed. Rep. 312, in which it was sought to obtain prior payment out of the funds of a steamship company. The court held that permission to receivers to create liens upon property in their hands had never been granted in any case except that of railroads, and the court refused to enforce the charge in the case before it.

H. P. F.

Gresham, Circuit Judge, delivered the following opinion:

The defendant, a private corporation, whose chief business is mining and selling coal, conveyed to the complainant, in trust, lands and two coal mines in Vermilion county, Ill., to secure an issue of bonds amounting to $500,000. An installment of interest was allowed to remain due for more than six months, and this bill was filed to foreclose the trust deed. Joseph G. English, who was appointed receiver, asks for an order authorizing him to issue receiver's certificates not exceeding in all $24,000, which shall be a first lien upon the trust property, to enable him to pay taxes now due, amounting to $3,428.64, take up outstanding certificates amounting to $6,400, which were issued under an order of the Vermilion circuit court, in a suit to foreclose the same trust deed, and to continue the operation of the mines. The receiver represents that, with additional working capital, he could operate the mines profitably, and better protect them. The holders of 75 per cent of the bonds and the corporation join in the receiver's request. The holders of the remaining 25 per cent resist the application. The corporation is insolvent. It is not claimed that the receiver is without means to pay taxes, and it is chiefly to enable him to continue the operation of the mines for anticipated profits that he desires authority to issue certificates.

When it becomes necessary for a court of chancery to take possession of property which is the subject of litigation, by placing it in the hands of a receiver, all expenses incident to its safe-keeping and preservation are properly chargeable against it; and, if there be no income, such expenses will be paid out of the proceeds of the corpus before distribution to lien or other creditors. It does not follow, however, that because property of a private corporation or a natural person may be thus protected and preserved before sale, that, in order to raise money to operate it for profit, a court may place a charge upon it in advance of existing liens. Pending a suit to foreclose a mortgage executed by a railroad corporation, the road may be operated by a receiver, and debts contracted for labor, supplies, and other necessary purposes before as well as after the appointment of a receiver, may be made a first lien upon income, and, if that is not adequate, upon the corpus of the property. In the exercise of this exceptional and extraordinary jurisdiction, which is of comparatively recent origin, courts have entered orders making receiver's certificates first liens on the mortgaged property. This has been done, however, on grounds not applicable to mortgages executed by private corporations. A railroad corporation is a quasi public institution, charged with the duty of operating its road as a public highway. If the company becomes embarrassed and unable to perform that duty, the courts pending proceedings for the sale of the road will operate it by a receiver, and make the expense incident thereto a first lien. This is done on account of the peculiar character of the property. It is generally mortgaged to secure bonds, and persons who invest in such securities know that the mortgage rests upon property previously impressed with a public duty.

16 L. R. A.

Private corporations owe no duty to the public, and their continued operation is not a matter of public concern. It is only against railroad mortgages that the Supreme Court of the United States has sustained orders giving priority to receiver's certificates representing particular indebtedness, and, as already stated, then only on principles having no application to a mortgage executed by a private corporation owing no duty to the public. Fordick v. Schall, 99 U. S. 285, 25 L. ed. 889; Barton v. Barbours, 104 U. S. 126, 26 L. ed. 673; Mittenberger v. Logansport, C. & S. W. R. Co., 106 U. S. 286, 27 L. ed. 117; Union Trust Co. v. Illinois M. R. Co., 117 U. S. 484, 29 L. ed. 968; Wood v. Guarantee Trust & S. D. Co., 128 U. S. 421, 32 L. ed. 473; Kneeland v. American Loan & Trust Co. of Boston, 136 U. S. 89, 34 L. ed. 879; Morgan's L. & T. R. & S. Co. v. Texas Cent. R. Co., 137 U. S. 171, 34 L. ed. 625.

In Wood v. Guarantee Trust & S. D. Co. the court said: "The doctrine of Fordick v. Schall has never yet been applied in any case except that of a railroad. The case lays great emphasis on the consideration that a railroad is a peculiar property, of a public nature, and discharging a great public work. There is a broad distinction between such a case and that of a purely private concern. We do not undertake to decide the question here but only point it out."

In Kneeland v. American Loan & Trust Co. of Boston, supra, in discussing the jurisdiction of the chancellor to displace the lien of a railroad mortgage, the court said: "Upon these facts we remark, first, that the appointment of a receiver vests in the court no absolute control over the property, and no general authority to displace vested contract liens. Because, in a few specified and limited cases, this court has declared that unsecured claims were entitled to priority over mortgage debts, an idea seems to have obtained that a court appointing a receiver acquires power to give such preference to any general and unsecured claims. It has been assumed that a court appointing a receiver could rightfully burden the mortgaged property for the payment of any unsecured indebtedness. Indeed, we are advised that some courts have made the appointment of a receiver conditional upon the payment of all unsecured indebtedness in preference to the mortgage liens sought to be enforced. Can anything be conceived which more thoroughly destroys the sacredness of contract obligations? One holding a mortgage debt upon a railroad has the same right to demand and expect of the court respect for his vested and contracted priority as the holder of a mortgage on a farm or lot. So, when a court appoints a receiver of railroad property, it has no right to make that receivership conditional on the payment of other than those few unsecured claims which, by the rulings of this court, have been declared to have an equitable priority. No one is bound to sell to a railroad company, or to work for it; and whoever has dealings with a company whose property is mortgaged must be assumed to have dealt with it on the faith of its personal responsibility, and not in expectation of subsequently displacing the priority of the mortgage liens. It is the exception, and not the rule, that such priority of liens can be displaced. We emphasize this fact of the sacredness of contract liens for the reason that there seems to be growing an idea that the chancellor, in the exercise of his equitable powers, has unlimited discretion in this matter of the displacement of vested liens."

And further on in the same opinion the court said: "If, at the instance of any party rightfully entitled thereto, a court should appoint a receiver of property, the same being railroad property, and therefore under an obligation to the public of continued operation, it, in the administration of such receivership, might rightfully contract debts necessary for the operation of the road, either for labor, supplies, or rentals, and make such expenses a prior lien on the property itself."

In the language above quoted, there is a plain implication that the limited power which courts may exercise in displacing the liens of railroad mortgages should not and cannot be extended to mortgages executed by private corporations. The court is not asked to subvert the lien of the mortgage on the ground that the trustee or bond-holders have got possession of anything which, in equity, belongs to general creditors. It is to enable him to operate the mines for the benefit of bond-holders, against the wish of part of them, that the receiver desires to be invested with authority to issue certificates which shall be a prior lien upon the property embraced in the trust deed. Extensive as are the powers of courts of equity, they do not authorize a chancellor to thus impair the force of solemn obligations and destroy vested rights. Instead of displacing mortgages and other liens upon the property of private corporations and natural persons, it is the duty of courts to uphold and enforce them against all subsequent incumbrances. It would be dangerous to extend the power which has been recently exercised over railroad mortgages (sometimes with unwarranted freedom), on account of their peculiar nature, to all mortgages. The power does not exist, and the application is denied.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

Pierre BOURGET

v.

City of CAMBRIDGE.

(.....Mass.....)

A traveler on a highway who stoops to pick up and throw out of the way a loose telephone wire which is hanging so as to endanger travelers is not as matter of law guilty of such negligence as to prevent him from recovering against the city for the injury received from the wire which is charged with electricity on the ground that it is a defect in the highway.

(May 10, 1892.)

EXCEPTION by plaintiff to a ruling of the Superior Court for Middlesex County directing a verdict for defendant in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have resulted from a defect in one of defendant's highways. Sustained.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. D. E. Ware and J. Hewins, for plaintiff:

Mr. Charles J. McIntire, for defendant:

There is no municipal liability to individuals receiving injuries from defects in highways beyond that which is defined by statute.

Hill v. Boston, 123 Mass. 844, 23 Am. Rep. 833, and cases cited.

It is not enough for plaintiff to show he was lawfully in the street, or that there was a defect which might have injured him while traveling. He must show that the defect caused injury to him who at the time of the injury was using the street for the purposes of travel.

Nyge v. Lowell, 119 Mass. 472; Lyons v. Brookline, 119 Mass. 491; Stickney v. Salem, 8

Allen, 874; Blodgett v. Boston, 8 Allen, 237. Compare with Hunt v. Salem, 121 Mass. 294.

The plaintiff cannot be considered a traveler, for he was merely engaged in an employment upon a limited territory which included a portion of the street. One who uses the street for the purpose of play is not a traveler. By what rule is he a traveler who appropriates the street for the purpose of work?

Blodgett v. Boston, 8 Allen, 240.

A person may so employ himself while on the highway "as to make it clear that he has ceased to use it as a traveler, and when there is no evidence that plaintiff is using it as a traveler it is the duty of the court to take the case from the jury."

Britton v. Cummington, 107 Mass. 849.

The removal of the wire so that it should not be in the way of other people had no connection with traveling, and the statute does not apply to it.

McDougall v. Salem, 110 Mass. 21.

The wire belonged to the employers of the plaintiff, and was attached to their building on the premises where he was employed. He attempted to remove it off the sidewalk.

This is what he might be expected to do in the interest of his employers and in the scope of his employment.

The master could not recover if he was attempting the same object. What different right has the servant?

Boston v. Worthington, 10 Gray, 496, 71 Am. Dec. 678; Burt v. Boston, 123 Mass. 228, and cases cited; Bartlett v. Boston Gas Light Co. 117 Mass. 583, 19 Am. Rep. 421.

Holmes, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The question as presented by the plaintiff's

NOTE.—We find no other adjudication as to the right of a traveler to recover for injuries resulting from an attempt to remove an obstruction from the highway.

16 L. R. A.

evidence, and the ruling of the court, is whether, if one who is traveling in the highway sees a loose telephone wire hanging so as to endanger travelers, and stoops to pick it up and throw it out of the way, he does by that act lose the protection given to travelers by the statute, so that he cannot recover for a defect in the highway, under Pub. Stat. chap. 53, § 18. It must be assumed that the jury might have found that the plaintiff was using due care, unless the contrary appears as matter of law, and that the wire charged with electricity was a defect. The fact that the wire belonged to the plaintiff's master is immaterial. Burt v. Boston, 122 Mass. 223, 227; Hill v. Winsor, 118 Mass. 251, 255.

Our decisions have drawn the line of liability rather favorably for towns, and the case at bar comes pretty near the line, but we are of opinion that the plaintiff ought to have been allowed to go to the jury. It is plain that the mere fact that he stopped momentarily, if he did, which is not clear, would not deprive him of his rights as a traveler. Bliss v. South Hadley, 145 Mass. 91, 94, 5 New Eng. Rep. 124; Varney v. Manchester, 58 N. H. 430; Duffy v. Dubuque, 68 Iowa, 171. If he was a traveler, the mode of his coming into contact with the defect is not material, if it was not negligent. The fact that he voluntarily took hold of the wire no more prevents his recovery than his voluntarily brushing against it or voluntarily walking over a pitfall. It may be said, no doubt, that such voluntary handling of the wire, even if not negligent, is not incident to the use of the highway for purposes of travel; and that, therefore, if harm comes of it, it should not be imputed to the traveler, or give rise to liability, although the cause of the harm was a defect for which the city would have been liable if it had interfered with travel, and had done the damage in that way. We agree that cases of benevolent intermeddling by a volunteer can be put in which he would take the risk of any harm that might befall him; for instance, if a man should come with carts and bricks and mortar to make serious changes and repairs. But it seems to us that to throw on one side, out of the way of travel, either with one's stick or one's hands, a light, movable object, which is an annoyance or a nuisance where it is, is one of those everyday acts of kindly feeling which fairly may be said to be an incident of travel, as it commonly goes on, and to be within the protection of the law. Babson v. Rockport, 101 Mass. 98, 94, Britton v. Cummington, 107 Mass. 347; Gul-liver v. Lowell, 144 Mass. 491, 4 New Eng. Rep. 236; Graham v. Boston (Mass.) 30 N. E. Rep. 170.

Exceptions sustained.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

PEOPLE of the State of New York, ex rel.
Henry BRADLEY et al., Respts.,

v.

Thomas G. SHAW et al., Board of Canvassers of Minerva Township, Appts.

(.....N. Y.)

1. The lack of any nomination does not prevent voting for a person under a provision that "the voter may write or paste upon his ballot the name of any person for whom he desires to vote for any office."
2. The fact that paster ballots placed on ballots for town officers contain also the names of candidates for excise commissioners that cannot lawfully be voted for on that ticket will not justify the inspectors in refusing to count and declare them in stating the result where these paster ballots were a part of those printed at private expense by candidates of an independent meeting or caucus, all of which were alike.

(June 17, 1892.)

APPEAL by defendants from an order of the General Term of the Supreme Court, Third Department, affirming an order of a Special Term of said court which was filed in the office of the clerk of Essex county which required the Board of Canvassers of Minerva Township to reassemble, and recount the ballots cast at an election held March 1, 1892, NOTE.—For note on marks and devices to distinguish ballots, see Rutledge v. Crawford (Cal.) 12 L. R. A. 761.

16 L. R. A.

including certain paster ballots, and declare the result of such recount. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. J. W. Houghton, with Mr. John H. Cunningham, for appellants:

A peremptory writ will not issue except in a case of clear and unquestioned legal right, and should not be granted on a disputed claim or where its validity is controverted.

People v. Chenango County Suprs. 11 N. Y. 563; People v. Greene County Suprs. 64 N. Y. 600; People v. Wendell, 71 N. Y. 171.

The relators having failed to receive a proper nomination and file a certificate thereof as required by the Ballot Reform Law, were not legally candidates and were not entitled to be voted for and were not eligible to office at the said town meeting, and the paster ballots voted for them were void and of no effect.

The provisions of the Ballot Reform Act are held by this court to be mandatory and a disregard of them upon any pretense whatever constitutes a violation of the law.

People v. Onondaga County Canvassers, 14 L. R. A. 624, 129 N. Y. 420.

No voter shall place any mark upon his ballot or do any other act in connection with a ballot with the intent that it may be identified as the one voted by him; no person shall place any mark upon or do any other act in connection with a paster ballot with intent that it may afterwards be identified as having been voted by any particular person.

Ballot Reform Law, § 83.

When a ballot has been deposited in a ballot box, upon which or upon a paster affixed thereto a writing or mark of any kind has been placed by the voter, or by any other person to his knowledge, with the intent that such ballot shall afterwards be identified as the one voted by him, the same shall be void and of no effect.

Ballot Reform Law, § 85; Laws 1891, chap. 296.

The ballots should differ internally only in the names of the candidates for office.

Opinion of Judge Gray in People v. Onondaga County Canvassers, supra.

Messrs. Foley & Wing for respondents.

Gray, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

These appellants composed the board of town canvassers for the town of Minerva, and, in proceedings instituted upon the application of these relators, a peremptory writ of mandamus issued, requiring them to reassemble, and to declare the result of a town meeting, allowing to the several relators the number of votes cast for them as stated in the moving affidavits, and called "paster ballots," and directing the board to issue a certificate of election to the candidates having the greatest number of ballots cast for them, including such "paster ballots."

The first objection—that the relators, having failed to receive a proper nomination by a political party which at the last election before the holding of the convention or primary meeting polled at least 1 per centum of the entire vote cast in that political division of the state for which the nomination is made—is wholly unsound, and without force. The plan contained in sections 1, 2 and 8 of the Ballot Reform Act was a provision for the printing of an official ballot at the public expense; a feature well designed to secure the desired secrecy and independence of the ballot. But that it was in no wise intended to prevent the voter to vote for any candidate whom he chose is evident from the further provisions of the law (sec. 25) that "the voter may write or paste upon his ballot the name of any person for whom he desires to vote for any office." Indeed, to hold otherwise would be to disfranchise, or to disqualify, the citizen, as a voter or a candidate, and, in my opinion, to affect the law quite unnecessarily with the taint of unconstitutionality in such respects.

The interesting and more important question in the case relates to the effect which the presence upon the paster ballot of the name of the office of excise commissioner, and of the name of the candidate therefor, had upon the ballots cast for the relators. Being upon the ballot officially indorsed and to be cast for town officers other than excise commissioners, who, under the Ballot Law, are to be voted for upon a separate ballot, and in a separate box, of course they could not be counted as votes for the candidate for excise commissioner; but it was argued that the effect upon the ballot was to mark or identify it, and to subject it to the condemnation of the law. The relators, who were nominated for the several town offices at an independent meeting or caucus, were obliged to have paster ballots printed at their own expense, for use at the polls. All of these paster ballots had printed upon them the name of the candidate for the office of excise commissioner; and, if that was a fact which made the ballot a marked one, within the meaning of the Ballot Law, then every one of the ballots printed for this independent ticket and for the use of its supporters was vitiated. The effect of this appearance upon the paster ballots, however, was not for consideration in this proceeding, otherwise than as to whether it constituted any reason for rejecting them in counting the votes and declaring the result.

The case, upon the affidavits presented, quite warranted the issuance of the writ in question. Aside from the grounds stated in the opposing affidavits for defeating the relators' application, which concerned the legality of the mode by which the relators were put in nomination, all that was urged against the "paster ballots" cast for them was that they were defective, "in that they contained the name of an office, and a candidate therefor, that was not upon the official ballots, and could not be properly on the same ticket with the other town officers," etc. That was, in substance, a claim that these paster ballots were illegal, and could not be counted. There was no conflict as to the number or description of these paster ballots, and each bore the proper official indorsement entitling it to be deposited. The protest which was filed by the appellants, and which appears in the case, was upon the sole ground that no names for any office should be counted unless they were such as had received a legal nomination, properly certified to the clerk. We think that by a proper reading and construction of the Ballot Law it was the duty of the inspectors to have counted the ballots in declaring the result of the election, and that any objection to them upon the ground that they were marked ballots within the meaning of the Act could not be determined in this proceeding. The question before the court upon the application of these relators was purely one of law on a conceded state of facts, and one which it was competent and proper for the court to decide upon the hearing. It went solely to the right of the relators to have the paster ballots counted and declared by the board of canvassers in stating the result of the town election. The particular feature objected to in these paster ballots suggested no ground for their rejection under the Election Law, and there was no other question properly before the court in this proceeding. These ballots should therefore have been counted by the board, and, because of their rejection, the peremptory writ of mandamus was properly ordered to be issued.

No other questions call for any review by us, and the order appealed from should be affirmed, with costs.

All concur, except Finch, J., not voting.

TEXAS SUPREME COURT.

William HOEFLING & Son, Appts.,
v.
City of SAN ANTONIO.

(.....Tex.....)

1. The constitutional equality and uniformity of occupation taxes is violated by an ordinance which is fair on its face imposing a tax upon those who sell meat, but which is collected only from those who sell in their own shops while there is a persistent failure to collect it from those who rent stalls from the city and who pay only the rental value thereof.
2. A city cannot levy an occupation tax on persons not similarly taxed by the state under Const., art. 8, §1, providing that such taxes by any county, city, or town "shall not exceed one half of the tax levied by the state for the same period on such profession or business."
3. An occupation tax paid under coercion of criminal proceedings may be recovered back where the ordinance imposing it was unconstitutional although fair on its face because of the persistent failure to enforce it against part of the persons to whom it applied.

(June 10, 1892.)

APPEAL by plaintiffs from a judgment of the District Court for Bexar County rendered upon an agreed case on appeal from a justice's court, in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover back money which had been exacted from plaintiffs as an occupation tax. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. George C. Altgelt and Henry E. Vernon, for appellants:

The ordinance of the city of San Antonio imposing an annual occupation tax upon butchers establishing private stalls for vending meats within the city is not equal and uniform, and is therefore void; and appellants having paid such tax under protest duly entered, should have been awarded judgment against appellee for the amount paid with interest and costs.

Const. art. 8, §§ 1, 2; Pullman Palace Car Co. v. State, 64 Tex. 274; 2 Desty, Taxn. p. 1897; St. Louis v. Spiegel, 75 Mo. 145.

The ordinance of the city of San Antonio levying a tax of $75 per annum upon individuals for the right of establishing stalls for vending of meats, is without authority of law because the state levies no occupation tax upon said business or calling, and such tax levied by the city is therefore forbidden by the Constitution of the state.

W. & W. Civil Const. § 989; 2 Cooley, Taxn. pp. 209, 387; 2 Desty, Taxn. p. 1384; Burroughs, Taxn. p. 392; Dillon, Mun. Corp. §§ 357, 740, 763, 764.

NOTE.—As to the right of municipalities to impose occupation taxes, see note to Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Beltsville (N. C.) 2 L. R. A. 284.

As to municipal licenses, see note to Magenau v. Fremont (Neb.) 9 L. R. A. 786.

16 L. R. A.

Messrs. Upson & Bergstrom, for appellee:

The ordinance of the city of San Antonio, imposing a tax of $75 upon butchers who establish stalls for vending meats within the city, being a tax imposed upon all persons alike, so establishing such stalls, irrespective of the locality within the city limits where established, is not obnoxious to the criticism of being unequal and ununiform, and is therefore valid and enforceable.

By section 76 of the charter of the city of San Antonio, the city council is authorized to license, tax and regulate all trades, professions, occupations, and callings, the taxing of which is not prohibited by the Constitution of the state, and there being no constitutional inhibition against taxing individuals for establishing stalls in any part of the state for vending meat, the ordinance in question is valid.

City Charter of San Antonio, § 76, approved April 18, 1870; Hirshfield v. Dallas, 29 Tex. App. 242.

Stayton, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This case originated in justice's court, and on appeal to the district court judgment was rendered against appellants upon the following agreed case: "First. That plaintiffs, Wm. Hoeftling, Sr., and Wm. Hoeftling, Jr., are and were partners in business under the firm name of Wm. Hoeftling & Son, doing business as butchers in the city of San Antonio, Bexar county, Texas, at two separate establishments or private markets, upon their own property, and not in the market house of the city of San Antonio. Second. That said plaintiffs opened said private markets upon their own property with the consent and approval of the city council of the city of San Antonio, under the provisions of the city ordinance, hereinafter set out. Third. That the city of San Antonio maintains, and for many years has had, a public market, with stalls that are rented to individuals at certain rentals, with prices according to location, and values fixed by the city council of San Antonio; but the market master does not collect said amount of $75 from butchers occupying stalls in said public market in addition to such stall rents. Fourth. That the following ordinance, passed by the city council of the city of San Antonio, is the only ordinance by virtue of which the sum of money herein sued for was collected from plaintiffs, and paid by them under protest, to wit: 'Sec. 20. The city council may grant to individuals the right of establishing in any designated locality within the city stalls for the vending of meat, granting general market privileges. Each person or firm granted such right shall pay therefor to the market master, for the use of the city, seventy-five dollars per annum, quarterly in advance, and shall post the receipts in a conspicuous place in said stall. The city council may revoke any grants made hereunder, at any time deemed necessary.' Fifth. That heretofore, to wit, on the 1st day of April, 1891, plaintiffs were required by the market master named in said ordinance to pay to said city the sum of thirty-seven dollars and fifty cents, ($37.50) being eighteen dollars and seventy-five cents ($18.75) on each one of said meat stands, for three months' license tax from April 1, 1891, to June 30, 1891. Sixth. That plaintiffs paid said tax under protest, and after the institution of criminal proceedings in the recorder's court in the city of San Antonio, and before making said payment, duly notified the authorities of the said city of San Antonio that said payment of thirty-seven dollars and fifty cents was made under protest, and that suit would be brought for money so paid under protest. Seventh. That there is no question before the court as to sufficiency of the protest, or as to the amount paid by plaintiffs, but that the only question before the court is the validity or invalidity of the ordinance aforesaid. Eighth. That there is no other ordinance of the city of San Antonio imposing any occupation tax or license tax upon butchers except the one embodied in this agreement. Ninth. That the sole question for the determination of the court is the validity of the aforesaid city ordinance, so that, if the same is held valid, judgment should be rendered for defendant, and if the same is held invalid judgment should be rendered for plaintiffs.

The charter of the city, enacted on August 18, 1870, provides that the mayor and council shall have power "to license, tax, and regulate merchants, commission merchants, hotels, and boarding-house keepers, restaurants, drinking houses or saloons, bar-rooms, beer saloons, and all places or establishments where intoxicating or fermented liquors are sold, brokers, pawn-brokers, money brokers, real-estate agents, insurance brokers, insurance agents, and auctioneers, and all other trades, professions, occupations, and callings, the taxation of which is not prohibited by the Constitution of the state, which tax shall not be construed to be a tax on property." Sp. Laws 1870, p. 253. Section 175 of the charter provides that the city council "shall have power to levy and collect taxes, commonly known as 'licenses,' upon trades, professions, callings, and other business carried on," and, after enumerating many things and occupations that may be thus taxed, but not embracing butchers, it declares that "this enumeration shall not be construed to deprive the city council of the right and power to levy and collect other license taxes, and from other persons and firms, under the general authority herein granted." Another section provides "that, if any person shall engage in any business, calling, avocation, or occupation which by ordinance is subject to a license tax, without first having obtained such license, he, she, or they shall be liable to imprisonment and fine of ten dollars for each day said violation of said ordinance shall continue." Section 178. Another section provides that the city council shall have power "to make such rules and regulations in relation to butchers as they may deem necessary and proper." Section 67. Other sections give power to make regulations to secure the health of the city, and to keep cleanly and in good order all places where offensive matter is liable to accumulate, and to enforce such regulations by fine and imprisonment. Sections 49, 54, 62, 91. Section 76 of the charter gives the power to license, tax, and regulate all occupations, trades, and professions; but it is evident that the power given to license such occupations is not the same as the power to tax them, nor are either of these powers the same as the power given to regulate them.

In a general sense, "a license is an official permit to carry on a business or trade or perform other acts which are forbidden by law except to persons obtaining such permit." Abbott. This, however, is not the sense in which the word is used in the charter of the city of San Antonio, for there was no law in force in this state which prohibited the following of many of the occupations contemplated by the charter, or of that of a butcher engaged in vending meats, unless a license was first obtained. There are occupations, however, which, on account of their character, may prove hurtful to the public unless properly conducted, and, although they are not prohibited by the common law nor by statute, it has been seen that the public welfare requires that they should to some extent be kept under some restraint; and to this end it has become usual to grant a permit to follow such occupations, and usually, to insure proper conduct of the business, an obligation to conduct it properly is required to be executed before this permit is issued; but this is not always the case, and when not, if the business be not one to the conduct of which a privilege is necessary, the permit serves but little purpose other than to give information to the public authorities of the persons engaged in a given occupation, their places of business, and other like matters, which will enable them the more readily to exercise over them such control as the law permits. The power to license, however, does not confer a power to tax, by which we understand to be meant the power to take from the citizen a sum for the support of the government, whether that be national, state, or municipal. It is usual, however, to exact a fee for the issuance of the permit, and it has sometimes been said that a further sum might be demanded for a license, to be used to meet the necessary expenses of inspection and regulation of the business to be conducted under the license; but it seems to us that money exacted for the latter purpose has much the semblance of a tax. It is said by Mr. Cooley that, "as all delegated powers to tax are to be closely scanned and strictly construed, it would seem that when a power to license is given the intentment must be that regulation is the object, unless there is something in the language of the grant, or in the circumstances under which it is made, indicating with sufficient certainty that the raising of revenue by means thereof was contemplated. If a revenue authority is what seems to be conferred, the extent of the tax, when not limited by the grant itself, must be understood to be left to the judgment and discretion of the municipal government, to be determined in the usual mode in which its legislative authority is exercised. . . . Where the grant is not made for revenue, but for regulation merely, a much narrower construction is to be applied. A fee for the license may still be exacted, but it must be such a fee only as will legitimately assist in the regulation, and it should not exceed the necessary or probable expense of issuing the license and of inspecting and regulating the business which it covers." Cooley, Taxn. 597.

The fact that the charter does not in terms provide for the exaction of a license fee, and the further fact that throughout it provides for the enforcement of all public regulations by fine and imprisonment, are strongly persuasive that it was not intended the city should exact for license the sum demanded and received of appellants as a condition on which they might vend meats on their own premises, and that the sum demanded was demanded and received by the city under its power expressly given to levy and collect taxes upon occupations. In fact, looking to the whole charter, it is apparent that the taxes, other than taxes on property, which the city is authorized to levy and collect, are occupation taxes, within the meaning of the Constitution. It is said that, "concerning useful trades and employments, a distinction is to be observed between the power to 'license' and the power to 'tax.' In such cases the former right, unless such appears to have been the legislative intent, does not give the authority to prohibit, or to use the license as a mode of taxation, with a view to revenue, but a reasonable fee for the license and labor attending its issue may be charged." Dillon, Mun. Corp. 357. Whether legislation authorizing the demand and reception of license fees for the grant of a permit to pursue a useful and lawful occupation ought not to be deemed included within the provisions of the Constitution now in force in this state regulating the collection of occupation taxes may be a question on which there would be difference of opinion; but, looking to the charter of the city of San Antonio, we are of opinion that the money demanded and received from appellants was demanded and received under the power given to collect taxes on occupations. The Constitution provides that "all occupation taxes shall be equal and uniform upon the same class of subjects within the limit of the authority levying the tax." Const. art. 8, § 2. This is as binding in case of occupation taxes levied by a municipal corporation as in such taxation levied by the state. The agreement makes it clear that butchers who vend meats in stalls rented from the city do not pay the tax imposed on appellants, who conduct the same kind of a business at stalls on their own premises; and that the former pay only what is deemed a proper rental for the stall owned by and rented to them by the city, this varying with the location of the stall and its rental value.

It seems to be conceded by counsel for appellee that the ordinance under which the tax was demanded and received from appellants applies to butchers who vend meats at the public market in stalls rented to them by the city as well as to butchers who vend meats at stalls owned by themselves, and they seek to avoid the proposition that the tax levied on appellants is in violation of that part of the Constitution above quoted, by the following propositions: "The intent of the city council is clearly expressed, and imposes a tax upon all persons who pursue the avocation of vending meat at a stall used for that purpose anywhere within the city limits, and it nowhere appears in the ordinance that any individual pursuing the occupation of vending meat in a stall established for that purpose is exempted from paying the tax imposed. The fact that the market master of the city has not collected such tax from those persons having stalls within the city market house cannot avail the appellants in their effort to have the ordinance declared invalid, for, though the market master may have supposed, in acting as he did, that he was placing the proper construction upon the ordinance, yet neither this court nor the appellee is bound by any such construction. The ordinance imposes a tax upon all persons within the city having stalls for vending meat, and if the city official charged with the duty of collecting the tax, and thus carrying into effect the law of the city, fails in his duty, the proper remedy for appellants will be to apply to the courts of the county to compel the official to discharge his sworn duty." From the agreement we understand that the city has not asserted the right to collect the occupation tax received from appellants from persons who pursue the same occupation in stalls rented from the city, and, if the ordinance was intended to impose the same tax upon them as upon persons doing business as were appellants, then, in view of the broad powers conferred on the city to enforce the collection of all taxes it may lawfully levy, to hold that it may lawfully collect occupation taxes from some persons, while others pursuing the same occupation were continuously permitted to escape such a tax by failure of the city to compel the proper officer to collect it, would be to hold that the city might accomplish by wrongful nonaction what it could not lawfully do by an ordinance declaring that the tax should be collected only from some persons engaged in the particular business. Such persistent failure on the part of the city to cause the tax to be collected from those who sold meats in the public markets would evidence as fully an intention not to subject them to the tax as would an ordinance expressly exempting them from it. The Constitution requires that occupation taxes shall be equal and uniform, and this applies to the collection of such taxes as well as to the levy, and its command cannot be evaded by an ordinance imposing the tax on all persons engaged in a given occupation, if there be no intention or effort to enforce it against a class designated by the place where they do business or in any other manner. An ordinance intended so to operate, or permitted by the city so to operate, would be an invasion of the letter and spirit of the Constitution, which requires such taxes to be equal and uniform, not only in the sense imposed as a tax upon a given occupation, but in its collection also. The mere failure of the tax collector to collect a tax from some persons pursuing the taxed occupation from whom it might be collected would not invalidate the tax as to others; but, if a city intentionally fails to compel its collector to collect from all who pursue such occupation, while it enforces collections from some, then this ought to be held to be unequal taxation, and the city held liable to respond.

This is not a case in which the citizen is attempting to restrain the collection of a tax, but is a case in which plaintiffs paid the sum claimed, under such coercion as is conceded to have been sufficient to entitle them to recover it if the tax was illegal; nor is it a case in which it can be claimed that those doing business in the stalls rented from the city were paying an occupation tax based on any classification, either legal or illegal. If, however, the ordinance applies, and was intended to apply, only to those who might vend meats in stalls established on their own premises, which is probably what was intended, then the ordinance and tax collected under it were illegal, because in direct conflict with the Constitution, which would require the taxing of all persons in the city who pursued the same occupation, without reference to the place where the business was conducted, or would otherwise deny the right to tax any person engaged in that business.

It is claimed by appellants that, as the state has never required an occupation tax of persons engaged in the business on account of which the tax was demanded and received by the city from appellants, the city had no power to impose such a tax. This proposition is based on the last paragraph of section 1, art. 8, of the Constitution, which provides that "the occupation tax levied by any county, city, or town for any year on persons or corporations pursuing any profession or business, shall not exceed one half of the tax levied by the state for the same period on such profession or business." The charter of the city, created prior to the adoption of the Constitution now in force, is broad enough to sustain such a tax; but, if in conflict with the Constitution, must be held to be in so far repealed, or to stand in subordination to the requirements of that instrument. The purpose of so much of the Constitution as is quoted was evidently to place a limitation on the power of municipal corporations to levy and collect occupation taxes; to deny to them the unrestricted power to tax any occupation. Under the Constitution, the sum a municipal corporation may collect as a tax on a given occupation cannot "exceed one half of the tax levied by the state for the same period on such profession or business," and this necessarily involves the proposition that the Legislature must determine that the occupation shall be taxed for the benefit of the state before a municipal corporation can tax it at all. When the Legislature has declared that a named occupation shall be taxed, and has fixed the amount of the tax, then, and not before, has a county, city, or town the power to tax that occupation; for the Constitution does not require occupations to be taxed, and only permits it when the Legislature deems it proper. Its failure to require such taxation for the benefit of the state is, in effect, a declaration that it is neither necessary nor proper for the use of municipal corporations. The measure of a municipal corporation's right to tax an occupation is made dependent on the sum the state may levy on the same occupation; and when the state has not taxed it at all, is it to be believed that it was the purpose of the people in such case to give to municipal corporations the power to tax the occupation as in the discretion of a municipal council might seem proper, while a limitation was placed on the amount such a corporation might levy in all cases in which the Legislature had declared it proper and necessary that the occupation should be taxed for the benefit of the state? It was not intended to confer on a municipal corporation the power to tax an occupation not taxed by the state. If the state levies no tax on the occupation, a municipal corporation cannot levy or collect a tax, unless the proposition that the half of nothing is something can be maintained. The Constitution wisely leaves it to the Legislature to determine what, if any, occupations shall be taxed, and this power is not so likely to be misused by the representatives of the people of the entire state as by the council of a single municipality. In the case of Hirschfeld v. Dallas, 29 Tex. App. 242, it seems to have been held that a municipal corporation might tax an occupation not taxed by the state [p. 244], but it seems to us that due effect was not given in the case to the provision of the Constitution before noticed, and the authorities cited in support of the opinion do not consider such a question.

If appellants had voluntarily paid the sum claimed as a tax, then they would not be entitled to recover it; but they paid it upon coercion, after the institution of criminal proceedings against them, and under the agreement of the parties are entitled to recover the sum so paid, together with costs incurred in all the courts.

Judgment of the court below will be reversed, and here rendered in favor of appellants as above indicated.

OHIO SUPREME COURT.

STATE of Ohio, ex rel. ATTORNEY-GENERAL,

v.

FIDELITY & CASUALTY INSURANCE CO. of New York.

(.....Ohio St.....)

*1. A foreign insurance company, exercising in this state franchises and privileges without authority of law, may be ousted therefrom by a proceeding in quo warranto.

*Head notes by the COURT.

2. The issuing of a license to a foreign insurance company to do business in this state by the superintendent of insurance is a ministerial, and not a judicial, act, and is therefore not a bar to a proceeding in quo warranto, where it is charged with exercising franchises and privileges without authority of law.

3. The provisions of section 282, Rev. Stat., imposing on insurance companies of another state or nation, doing business in this state, the same obligations and prohibitions that are imposed in such other state or nation upon Ohio companies doing business therein, are retaliatory in character, and must, therefore, be confined to such cases as fairly fall within the letter of the statute.

NOTE.—For note on the subject of retaliatory legislation affecting insurance companies, see State 16 L. R. A.

v. Western Union Mut. L. & Acc. Soc. (Ohio) 8 L. R. A. 129.

4. To make a case for the application of the retaliatory provisions of section 282, Rev. Stat., against an insurance company of another state, doing business in this state, it must be made to appear that an Ohio company has been formed in this state to do substantially the same kind and lines of insurance, and would, by the laws of that state, be precluded from transacting the same therein, or be subjected to burdens not imposed by the laws of this state on such foreign company.
5. The making and filing, for the purpose of profit, of articles of incorporation in the office of the secretary of state, do not make an incorporated company; such articles are simply authority to do so. No company exists, within the meaning of the statute, until the requisite stock has been subscribed and paid in, and the directors chosen.

(June 24, 1892.)

PROCEEDINGS in quo warranto to oust defendant from the privilege of doing certain lines of business in the state. Dismissed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. David K. Watson, Atty-Gen., and Harrison, Olds & Henderson for relator.

Mr. W. J. Gilmore for defendant.

Minshall, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

1. The defendant is a fidelity and casualty insurance company, organized under the laws of the state of New York, and doing, in this state, what, by the laws of New York, is authorized and known as four lines of such insurance, to wit: First, against injury, disablement, or death of persons resulting from traveling or general accidents by land or water; second, guaranteeing the fidelity of persons holding places of public or private trust; third, upon plate glass against breakage; fourth, upon steam boilers against explosion, and against loss or damage to life or property resulting therefrom. Its right to do more than one of such lines of business in this state is challenged by the attorney-general on the ground that, by the laws of New York, no company incorporated in this state can transact in that state more than one of such lines of insurance; and therefore, under the provisions of section 282, Rev. Stat. of this state, it has no right to make in this state more than one of the lines of insurance it is doing. That section reads as follows: "When, by the laws of any other state or nation, any taxes, fines, penalties, license fees, deposits of money, or of securities or other obligations or prohibitions are imposed on insurance companies of this state, doing business in such state or nation, or upon their agents therein, so long as such laws continue in force, the same obligations and prohibitions, of whatever kind, shall be imposed upon all insurance companies of such other state or nation doing business within this state, and upon their agents here."

16 L. R. A.

A demurrer to the petition, objecting to the jurisdiction of the court as well as to the sufficiency of the pleading, having been overruled, the defendant, as a third defense to the petition, answered: "That under the laws of New York it is legally authorized and empowered to do, and is now doing, the four lines of insurance in that state, which the petition charges it with illegally doing in Ohio; and that, under the laws of Ohio, a corporation could be legally incorporated and organized with power to do the same four lines of insurance, or any one or more of them, therein, but that no such company has yet been organized to do said four lines of insurance in Ohio, and hence no such company has yet made or could make, application to the proper officers in New York for a license to do said four lines of insurance in the state of New York." A demurrer to this defense having been overruled, the plaintiff asked leave to reply in substance as follows: That on January 13, 1887, the requisite number of persons, citizens of Cuyahoga county, "subscribed and acknowledged articles of incorporation," stating therein the name, place of business, and capital stock of the proposed corporation, and its object, to wit, under paragraph 2, § 8641, Rev. Stat., to do the four kinds of insurance now being done by the defendant in this state; and the same, having been approved by the attorney-general as in conformity to the laws of the state, were then filed and recorded in the office of the secretary of state of Ohio, "whereby," it is averred, "an Ohio corporation was duly and legally formed for the purpose of doing the lines of insurance mentioned in the articles of incorporation." As no report has heretofore been made of any of the rulings of the court in the progress of the case, it is proper that two of them should be noticed before passing on the application for leave to reply; that is to say, (1) the jurisdiction of the court, and (2) the sufficiency of the third defense.

1. It is claimed that, as the defendant is a foreign corporation, it cannot be affected by a proceeding in quo warranto in the courts of this state. That it cannot be ousted of the right to be a corporation, or of any of the franchises conferred on it by the laws of New York, is not doubted; but as to such franchises and privileges as are derived from the laws of the state of Ohio it is as much amenable to the courts of this state as an Ohio corporation, and, when found exercising such franchises without authority of law it may be ousted therefrom, as held in State v. Western Union Mut. L. Ins. Co., 47 Ohio St. 167, 8 L. R. A. 129, decided since the commencement of this action.

2. Upon the facts stated in the third defense it is claimed that the defendant is not affected by the provisions of section 282, Rev. Stat., on which the demand of the state is based. The character of this section is relative to its construction. It is claimed to be reciprocal in character, and should therefore be liberally construed. A little reflection will, we think, show that it is not of this nature, but, upon the other hand, retaliatory, and should therefore be strictly construed; or, in other words, not applied to a case that does not fairly fall within its letter. Reciprocity expresses the act of an interchange of favors between persons or nations; retaliation, that of returning evil for evil, or disfavours for disfavours. Accurately speaking, we reciprocate favors and retaliate disfavours. This, then, is a retaliatory statute. It treats the companies of other states as Ohio companies are treated in them; but the moment it is made to appear that Ohio companies are not treated with the same favor in another state that companies of that state are treated in Ohio, a case is made for the application of its provisions, and retaliation follows as a result. It is true that the ultimate object of the statute is to secure reciprocity; but what we have now to do with is not its ultimate, but its immediate, object, and that is to retaliate on the companies of a given state disfavours shown to Ohio companies in the same state.

The question, then, arises, The averments of the third defense being admitted, is a case made for the application of the provisions of the statute to the defendant? We think not. It is admitted that Ohio companies may be, but it is averred that none have been, formed to do the four lines of insurance which the defendant is doing in this state. Hence no case is made for the application of the statute, the language being: "When by the laws of any other state . . . any . . . prohibitions are imposed upon insurance companies of this state doing business in such state, . . . so long as such laws continue in force, . . . the same prohibitions, of whatever kind, shall be imposed upon all insurance companies of such other state doing business in this state." To bring a case within the statute, there must at least be an Ohio company formed to which the prohibitions of the New York statute would apply, should it attempt to enter and do business in that state. It is said that the very reason that there are no such Ohio companies may be the existence of this New York statute. This is a very remote conjecture, yet, admitting its possibility, it does not vary the language of our statute. If it should be deemed desirable to foster the formation of such Ohio companies to do business in other states, it can easily be accomplished by the Legislature making the statute apply where Ohio companies may be, as well as where they are, formed to do such business in other states. We do not believe that any lawyer would affirm that an indictment drawn upon such a statute as this would be good that failed to aver the existence of an Ohio company to which the discriminating features of the statute of the other state might apply. And there is no reason why a different rule of construction should be adopted in this proceeding. The consequences to the defendant are of a penal nature. If found guilty as charged, it must not only abandon the business it has established, but cease to do more than one of its lines of business in the state, so long as the legislation of the two states remains unchanged.

In construing this statute according to its letter, we have, as we believe, given expression to the intention of the Legislature. It is a just compliment to human nature to say that, as a general rule, every man would prefer to have his favors construed largely and his disfavours narrowly; in other words, no one would deliberately do more injury to another than is required by his own interests, and would regard it as an honor to be as generous as he could; and that such are the sentiments of the civilized man is apparent from all writers upon public law. Decisions in some of the other states have been cited which, it is claimed, sustain the construction placed on our statute by the relator. We have examined these decisions, and find none of them upon statutes worded as our own. The case of State v. Fidelity & C. Co., 77 Iowa, 648 (being the same company defendant in this case), is relied on as in point. By the language of the statute in that state (Iowa) it is put into operation "when by the laws of any other state, any . . . prohibitions are imposed or would be imposed on insurance companies of this state doing or that might seek to do business in such other state." It was there held that through the language of their statute, just quoted, the existence of the law in another state is sufficient to put the law in Iowa in force, without showing that the state of New York has ever actually enforced its law against an Iowa company. But we submit that this is so by reason of language found in the Iowa statute, and which is not found in our statute; and to give to our statute the same construction would require us to read into its language found only in the Iowa statute. The following cases are also cited as authority: Home Ins. Co. of New York v. Welch, 29 Kan. 672; State v. Fidelity & C. Ins. Co., 39 Minn. 539; Home Ins. Co. v. Swigert, 104 Ill. 655; Talbot v. Fidelity & C. Co. (Md.), 19 Wash. L. Rep. 546. The wording of the statute in each case, as before stated, differs from our own; but if it were otherwise, we should require more cogent reasons than any that have been suggested to induce us to depart from well-recognized principles of construction by reading into a statute of this character words not found in its text, for the purpose of giving it a construction in conformity to its supposed policy.

3. The next question is, Should leave be given to file the proposed reply to the third defense? We think not, for the reason that it does not show that an Ohio company has been formed to do the four lines of insurance in which the defendant is engaged. It will be observed that it does not aver that any officers or directors have been chosen, or that any of the stock has been subscribed, or that any organization whatever has been effected. It is simply that "articles of incorporation" have been made and filed and recorded in the office of the secretary of state. Articles of incorporation do not make an incorporated company; they are simply authority to do so.

Before disposing of the case, it may be well enough to notice another defense relied on in the answer, and to which a demurrer has been sustained; and that is, the license granted the defendant to do business in this state by the superintendent of insurance. We are all of the opinion that the issuing of a license to a foreign insurance company to do business in this state is a ministerial and not a judicial act, and, while it will protect the company in the transaction of its business during its continuance, is not a bar to a proceeding against it in quo warranto where it is found to be exercising any of the franchises of the state without authority of law. State v. Fidelity & C. Ins. Co. 89 Minn. 538, and cases cited in brief of counsel for relator.

Application for leave to reply to the third defense of the answer overruled, and petition dismissed.

WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT.

James MORGAN et al., Respts.,

v.

William BELL, Appt.

(.....Wash.....)

1. An action to enforce specific performance of a contract for the sale of land need not be brought in the county in which the land is situated under a statute which requires actions to be so brought which are for the recovery of, for the possession of, for the partition of, for the foreclosure of a mortgage on, or for the determination of all questions affecting the titles, or for any injuries to, real property.

2. Equity will not take jurisdiction of a suit seeking specific performance of a contract or damages for its breach when to the knowledge of plaintiff at the time of the commencement of the action and without fault of defendant, specific performance could not be enforced and there is no other ground for equitable interference.

3. It is impossible for a man to perform a specific contract to convey land which was community property after the death of his wife and the descent of her interest to an infant four or five years old.

4. Mistake as to the extent of his right under the community law to property which a man contracts to convey is not a mistake of law from which equity will refuse to grant relief.

5. The maxim that ignorance of law is no excuse for nonperformance of a contract has no application where the mistake is as to the laws of a state of the Union other than that of the contractor's domicile.

6. The measure of damages in case one believing that he has a right to convey real estate contracts in good faith to do so but is prevented from fulfilling his contract by failure of title, is the amount of the advance payment with interest, and not the alleged profit which would have accrued from the purchase.

(Hoyt, Ch. J., dissents from proposition 1.)

(January 20, 1892.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for Jefferson County

NOTE.—Effect of defendant's inability to specifically perform upon the jurisdiction of chancery over the suit.

The above heading refers to total disability to perform or to such disability as amounts to total failure so that no decree for performance will be passed, and the note is not intended to cover cases of compensation for the amount which cannot be performed after performance of a portion.

Equity will not take jurisdiction of a case merely to assess damages. Carroll v. Wilson, 22 Ark. 82; Zoringue v. Texas & P. R. Co. 84 Fed. Rep. 239; Richards v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 26 Ill. App. 344; Peeler v. Levy, 26 N. J. Eq. 380; Welsh v. Bayaud, 21 N. J. Eq. 188.

To justify it in doing so there must be some special equity. Sims v. McEwen, 27 Ala. 192.

Of course even in cases brought for specific performance which cannot be decreed there are frequently circumstances present which bring the case clearly within other branches of equitable jurisdiction, and such cases will be retained and relief will be granted, but such cases are not properly treated as cases of specific performance; and in some cases a recovery of damages is permitted without any discussion of the jurisdictional question. See O'Meara v. North American Min. Co. 2 Nev. 112.

But the general rule is as stated above, that it is only under very special circumstances that equity will retain possession of a suit for the purpose of awarding damages. Hatch v. Cobb, 4 Johns. Ch. 559, 1 L. ed. 686.

So where the ground of a controversy is the mere pecuniary value of the lands in dispute equity will not retain the suit to award damages. Curtis v. Blair, 26 Miss. 327, 59 Am. Dec. 257.

So when the court ascertains that specific performance cannot be decreed because it was never in defendant's power to perform, the bill should be dismissed. Lewis v. Yale, 4 Fla. 438.

When plaintiff knows that performance cannot be enforced.

When the defendant had disabled himself before the filing of the bill and plaintiff knew of that fact, the case is reduced to one of a bill filed for the sole purpose of assessing damages for the breach of contract, and is not within equitable jurisdiction. Kempshall v. Stone, 5 Johns. Ch. 193, 1 L. ed. 1064.

Where plaintiff knows at the time of filing his bill that specific performance cannot be enforced, the bill will be dismissed. Doan v. Mauzey, 33 Ill. 227.

Where the plaintiff had knowledge when he filed the bill that the land covered by the contract which he sought to have specifically enforced had no existence, the court will not retain the case to award damages. Morris v. Elmendorf, 11 Paige, 277, 5 L. ed. 135.

Where at the commencement of a suit to compel the conveyance of land the vendor was without title, to the knowledge of the vendee, the only decree which can be rendered is a dismissal of the suit. Adair v. Adair (Or.) March 7, 1892.

Where the contract was to procure for plaintiff a deed for property which to plaintiff's knowledge defendant did not own, in case he failed to do so equity will not retain a bill for specific performance in order to award damages. Hill v. Flake, 38 Mo. 520.

Where before suit brought the land had been conveyed away to the knowledge of plaintiff equity will not retain the suit to give damages. McQueen v. Chouteau, 20 Mo. 223, 64 Am. Dec. 173; Gupton v. Gupton, 47 Mo. 37.

Where it appears at the trial that the defendant in favor of plaintiffs in a suit brought to enforce specific performance of a contract to convey land or to recover damages for its breach. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Hughes & Hastings and R. H. & R. A. Ballinger for appellant.

Messrs. Hays & Plumley for respondents.

Dunbar, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

A correct understanding of this case will necessitate a presentation of the material allegations in the pleadings. The first allegation in the complaint is: "That on the 10th day of December, 1889, the plaintiffs and defendant entered into an agreement in writing, of which the following is a copy: 'Contract made and entered into this 10th day of December, 1889, by and between William Bell, of Toledo, Ohio, and James Morgan, of Port Townsend, Jefferson county, Washington, witnesseth: The said William Bell, being the owner in fee simple of the premises hereinafter described, has agreed and does hereby agree to sell and convey the said premises to the said James Morgan upon the following conditions, to wit: The said William Bell has agreed and does hereby agree, in consideration of the sum of twenty thousand dollars, to be paid to him by the said James Morgan, five hundred dollars thereof to be paid cash in hands, the receipt of which is hereby acknowledged, and the sum of nineteen thousand five hundred dollars thereof to be paid on or before four months from the date hereof; and the said

William Bell has agreed and does hereby agree, upon receipt of the full sum of said twenty thousand dollars, that he will execute and deliver to the said James Morgan a sufficient warranty deed conveying to him a fee simple title to the following described premises: [Description omitted.] And it is further agreed by and between said parties that, should the said James Morgan fail to pay said sum of nineteen thousand five hundred dollars on or before four months from the date hereof, then the said sum of five hundred dollars this day paid by him shall be forfeited to the said William Bell.'" (Duly signed, sealed, and witnessed by William Bell and James Morgan.) The second allegation is to the effect that it was agreed upon by the plaintiffs that Morgan should act for them jointly in the purchase of the land, and that they were all jointly interested in the purchase of said land and in the proceeds of said agreement. "(8) That on the 10th day of April, 1890, the plaintiffs demanded the conveyance of the said property from the defendant, and tendered nineteen thousand five hundred dollars to the defendant, and were ready and willing at all times, under the terms of said agreement, to accept and pay for said lands, and to duly and fully perform their said agreement under the said covenants upon the like performance by the defendant; but the defendant failed and refused to make said conveyance, or to perform his portion of said agreement at said date, or at any other time, and still refuses to so perform, or in any way make proper restitution for such failure and refusal. (4) That since had not and never had the title to the property which he contracted to convey, and that the plaintiff knew these facts, the action should be dismissed. Stevenson v. Buxton, 37 Barb. 13.

Where the right of a lessee to assign the lease is made to depend on the written consent of the lessor, a person who contracts with the lessee for such assignment with full knowledge of the inability of the latter to perform his agreement without such consent will have no right to have damages in lieu of specific performance in case the lessor's consent is not obtained. Hurlbut v. Kantzler, 112 Ill. 432.

An action to enforce specific performance of a contract to repair the foundations of a building cannot be retained when it appears that complainant has already made the repairs. Holy Communion Church v. Paterson Extension R. Co. 46 N. J. Eq. 372, 43 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 654.

Where defendant disables himself pending action.

In an early English case, brought to compel specific performance of a contract, the defendant stated in his answer that he had sold the house which was the subject of the contract to a third person and the court referred the case to a master to determine the plaintiff's damages. Denton v. Stewart, 1 Cox, Ch. 258.

And this case was followed in Greenaway v. Adams, 12 Ves. Jr. 400, where the conveyance to the third person appears to have been before suit brought.

But where the bill stated that defendant could not make a good title damages were refused. Gwillim v. Stone, 14 Ves. Jr. 128.

In Todd v. Gee, 17 Ves. Jr. 279, Denton v. Stewart, supra, was limited to a case in which the property was conveyed to a third person pending suit.

And in Sainsbury v. Jones, 5 Myl. & C. 1, which was not a case for specific performance, Denton v. 16 L. R. A.

Stewart is stated to have been expressly overruled and the same statement is in effect made in Jenkins v. Parkinson, 2 Myl. & K. 5.

But the doctrine of it had become well established and is recognised as good law by numbers of decisions, and it is held that where during the pendency of the action defendant in any way renders specific performance impracticable, damages may be assessed. Head v. Meloney, 1 Cent. Rep. 858, 111 Pa. 99.

When defendant has at any time rendered himself incapable of performing.

There is a dictum in Woodcock v. Bennett, 1 Cow. 711, 13 Am. Dec. 568, that where defendant has put it out of his power to perform the contract, the bill will be retained to assess damages, and in Woodward v. Harris, 2 Barb. 442, that rule is stated to have been well settled by that case.

General jurisdiction over damages.

There is a dictum in Fisher v. Kay, 2 Bibb, 436, that there is no principle better settled than that the obligee in a bond for title may resort to equity for specific performance and in the event of the obligors being unable to convey, for damages, and the court being possessed of the whole case may award damages, if that is the most equitable relief.

And in Slaughter v. Tindle, 1 Litt. 358, in which the bill suggested a doubt as to whether or not a good title could be made, the court held that it was proper to retain the case to award damages.

The tendency of the modern cases, however, is to make the awarding of damages depend not so much on the acts of defendant as upon the good faith of plaintiff.

It has been stated that the question whether or not the court will award damages depends upon the good faith of the complainant in bringing the the date of said agreement, to-wit, December 10, 1889, and prior to the expiration of the four months mentioned in said agreement of sale, said lands had greatly increased in value above the said agreed purchase price of twenty thousand dollars, and were worth at the date or time provided in said agreement for the conveyance and sale of said lands, upon the market in the vicinity of said land, one thousand dollars per acre, or of the aggregate value of one hundred and fifty-four thousand five hundred and fifty dollars, and of the cash value of one hundred and thirty-four thousand five hundred and fifty dollars over and above the said nineteen thousand five hundred dollars agreed by said plaintiff to be paid at said time to said defendant. (5) That the plaintiffs are still ready and willing to pay the purchase money of the said property to the defendant. Wherefore plaintiffs demand judgment (1) that the defendant execute to the plaintiffs a sufficient warranty deed, conveying to them a fee simple title to all of said lands described and set forth in said contract, and recited in this complaint; (2) for the sum of one hundred and thirty-four thousand five hundred and fifty dollars, with ten per cent interest thereon since the 10th day of April, 1890, and their costs and disbursements."

To this complaint defendant interposed a demurrer on the grounds "(1) that the said complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action; (2) that there is a defect of parties plaintiff, in that there is shown suit. If it was brought in the honest hope and expectation that it would succeed in getting specific performance the court will award the damages in case of failure, but if at the start there was an expectation of failure and that the only relief to be had was a compensation, the court will not award it. Borden v. Curtis (N. J.) March 12, 1891.

If the fact of inability to comply with the contract is unknown to the complainant when his bill is filed he may have his damages assessed. Wiswall v. McGowan, Hoffm. Ch. 125, 6 L. ed. 1087.

Where plaintiff brought his suit without knowledge of the disability, in good faith supposing and having reason to suppose himself entitled to specific performance, the court will award damages in all cases where a defect in title, right, or capacity in the defendant to fulfill his contract is developed in his answer or in the course of the hearing or after an order of fulfillment. Milkman v. Ordway, 106 Mass. 253.

Under this rule it is immaterial that the defendant conveyed to a third person before the suit was brought. Andrews v. Brown, 3 Cush. 180.

So where after the contract and prior to the suit defendant had sold the land to a third person damages were decreed. Gibbs v. Champion, 3 Ohio 335.

In a case to enforce specific performance of an agreement as to improvements contained in a lease, where the lease had expired before suit was brought the court stated that the case was for compensation and damages only, but it awarded the relief sought on the ground of inadequate remedy at law. Berry v. Van Winkle, 2 N. J. Eq. 269.

The effect of modern legislation.

In England an Act was passed in 21 and 22 Victoria, known as the Cairns Act, which gave equity the power to assess damages in certain cases when the equitable relief prayed for was not given. That Act has been construed as follows:

In a case in which before the Cairns Act the court would not have interfered it will not since that Act assess damages. Scott v. Rayment, L. R. 7 Eq. 112.

The Act did not apply to cases where specific performance could not have been given. Lavery v. Pursell, L. R. 39 Ch. Div. 509.

Where the suit is brought to compel the specific performance of a resolution to allot shares of stock, or if that could not be done to recover damages, and all the shares had been allotted when the bill was brought, the damages cannot be awarded under the Cairns Act. Ferguson v. Wilson, L. R. 2 Ch. App. 77.

Where a mortgagor had contracted to grant a lease but the mortgagee refused to ratify it and a suit was brought for specific performance, the court said that the Cairns Act was not meant to transfer the jurisdiction from law to equity, and 16 L. R. A.

that if the contractee knew that specific performance could not be had he had no right to come into equity merely for damages; but the court awarded the relief in that case for special reasons. Howe v. Hunt, 31 Beav. 420.

After a defendant has failed to comply with a decree of specific performance and a motion is made for rescission of the contract and damages, the court will not order both rescission and a reference to ascertain the damages. Henty v. Schroeder, L. R. 12 Ch. Div. 666.

Where the action was to enforce specific performance of an agreement to grant a lease for two months, and pending the suit the two months expired, the court awarded damages. Oakley v. Ramsey, 37 L. T. N. S. 745.

But see Debrassac v. Martyn, 11 Week. Rep. 1020, where the specified term of the lease expired pending suit and the court refused to award damages on the ground of plaintiff's laches.

The effect of the Code provisions.

In Hall v. Delaplaine, 5 Wis. 217, 68 Am. Dec. 57, the court said, since the Code of Procedure went into effect it has become impossible to send a party from a court of equity to a court of law, and there seems to be no reason for not retaining a case brought for specific performance to give damages if performance cannot be enforced.

Under the Code of Civil Procedure the action will not be dismissed when the impossibility of enforcing specific performance appears, but the court will go on and assess the damages. Sternberger v. McGovern, 56 N. Y. 12; Beck v. Allison, 56 N. Y. 366, 15 Am. Rep. 480, overruling 4 Daly, 450, in which there is a very full review of the cases upon the subject.

Since the union of legal and equitable jurisdiction in the same court it has ceased to be necessary to dismiss the complaint. Genet v. Howland, 30 How. Pr. 373.

Where a bill provides for specific performance of a contract to build a fence and for other relief a demurrer was held to be properly overruled for the reason that though the case was not a proper one for specific performance it might be retained for damages. Cincinnati & C. R. Co. v. Washburn, 25 Ind. 259.

There are recent cases in which damages are assessed upon failure of the equitable relief, in which it is difficult to determine whether that course was pursued because of failure to question the jurisdiction, because the court regarded it as proper equity practice or because of statutory provisions. See American Land Co. v. Grady, 38 Ark. 554.

There are also cases cited above which were decided in code states in which the action was dismissed and the case sent back for a jury trial.

H. P. F.

upon the face of the complaint that there is no privity of contract between any of the plaintiffs herein except the plaintiff James Morgan."

The demurrer was overruled, and the defendant answered. A demurrer to the answer was sustained, and an amended answer was filed, in which defendant admitted the execution of the written instrument set out in paragraph 1 of the complaint, but denied the other allegations in paragraph 1, and denied each and every the allegations in paragraphs 2, 3, and 4 of the complaint, and for an affirmative defense alleged, substantially, that he acquired the land in question by purchase on the 28th day of January, 1888, while he was a married man, the husband of one Elva E. Bell, who died intestate on the 1st day of March, 1888, leaving as her sole heir-at-law Elva Elain Bell, as the fruit of the marital relations between her and the defendant, and that the said Elva Elain Bell was still an infant, of the age of five years, and that the money used in purchasing said land was not owned by him at the time of marriage, or acquired after marriage by gift, devise, bequest, or descent. That at the time said agreement was entered into he was, and for a long time previous thereto had been, a resident of Toledo, in the state of Ohio, and was wholly unacquainted with the laws of the state of Washington providing for the community interests of the wife with her husband in real estate acquired by him by purchase during the existence of the marital relation, and fully believed that he was the sole owner of said land, having full power of alienation thereof; and averred that plaintiffs were, and for a long time previous thereto had been, residents of the state of Washington. That the said agreement was entered into between this defendant and the said plaintiff James Morgan at the instance and request of the said plaintiff, and upon his express representation to this defendant, either fraudulently and willfully, to mislead this defendant, or ignorantly, believing the same to be true, that this defendant was the sole owner in fee simple of the real estate described in said agreement, with full power of alienation thereof; he, the said plaintiff, well knowing at the time that this defendant acquired the said land by purchase as aforesaid during the lifetime of said wife, and that his said wife was then deceased, and that she had died intestate, leaving as her sole heir-at-law one Elva Elain Bell, her child by this defendant, and that said child was still living, and of the age of about four years, and no more; and that he, this defendant, relying upon said representations of said plaintiff Morgan, and fully believing said representations to be true, executed said agreement, and delivered it to said plaintiff. That afterwards, on or about the 8th day of July, 1890, and before the institution of this action, this defendant discovered, and avers the same to be a fact, that he was not the sole owner in fee simple of said real estate, but was the owner of the undivided one half of the same, the remaining one half being the property of the said Elva Elain Bell as the heir-at-law of the said Elva E. Bell, deceased, who during her lifetime was, by operation of law, the owner of a community interest in said real estate with this defendant. That immediately upon the discovery by him that he was not the sole owner of the said real estate as aforesaid, this defendant executed to said plaintiff James Morgan, without any knowledge that the plaintiffs of said Morgan held or claimed any interest in said agreement or the subject thereof, his deed of conveyance, with covenants of warranty, for his undivided one half of said real estate, and tendered the same to said plaintiff, demanding of him a proportionate amount of the consideration agreed by said plaintiff to be paid, less the amount already paid thereon, to wit, $9,500, which said deed of conveyance he, the said plaintiff, then and there and ever afterwards declined and refused, and still declines and refuses, to accept, and which proportionate amount of said consideration he, the said plaintiff, then and there, and ever afterwards, still declines and refuses to pay. That upon such refusal by plaintiff the defendant tendered to plaintiff the amount paid by plaintiff as a cash payment on said agreed consideration, to wit, $500, together with interest at the rate of 10 per cent per annum from the date of said payment until the time of said tender, and offered to rescind said agreement, and that said plaintiff then refused, and ever afterwards has and still refuses, to rescind said agreement. Alleges that he has ever since said tender been, and still is, ready to convey his undivided one half interest for a proportionate part of said agreed price, less the amount already paid him, or to refund said money paid, with interest on the same at the rate of 10 per cent per annum, and that ever since said tender of $500 and interest, as aforesaid, he has been and still is ready and willing to pay the same to plaintiffs. The third affirmative defense, in addition to the matters alleged in the second, is that plaintiff Morgan, who was at the time of the execution of the contract a resident of the state of Washington, and well acquainted with the value of land, and who was on terms of social and business intimacy and friendship with the defendant, came to defendant's house in Toledo, Ohio, and, well knowing his want of information as to the value of said lands, and fraudulently taking advantage thereof, falsely represented to him that the said land was not worth more than the sum of $20,000, and that defendant, relying upon said representations, and having full faith and confidence in the truthfulness of said representations, executed said agreement. Alleges that afterwards, to wit, about the 8th day of July, 1890, he discovered, and avers it to be a fact, that the lands were of far more value than $20,000, which fact was well known to plaintiff Morgan at the time. And demands judgment—First, that said agreement is void; second, that the plaintiff produce said agreement, and deliver it up for cancellation; and, third, for costs of action and general relief.

Plaintiffs' demurrer to all that portion of defendant's amended answer in the second and third alleged affirmative defenses and the allegations of new matter was sustained. On the issues left, the cause was tried, and the court found, among other things, that the value of the land in question at the time of the commencement of the action was $46,215, and, as a conclusion of law, that plaintiffs were entitled to recover as damages the difference between the price agreed upon in the contract, to wit, $20,000, less the amount paid by plaintiff at the date of the contract, $500, equaling $19,500, and the value of said land on the 10th day of April, 1890, the date for the fulfillment of the agreement for the conveyance of said lands, to wit, the sum of $46,215, which said difference is $26,715. Or, in other words, the measure of damages allowed by the court was the difference in the value of the land at the time of the breach and the value of the land at the date of the contract; and judgment was entered accordingly.

The first point argued by the appellant is that this is an action affecting the title to real estate, and should have been brought in Clallam county, where the land is situated, by virtue of section 47 of the Code, which provides that actions for the recovery of, for the possession of, for the partition of, for the foreclosure of a mortgage on or for the determination of all questions affecting the titles, or for any injuries to real property, shall be commenced in the county or district in which the subject of action, or some part thereof, is situated. We do not think this is the character of cases contemplated by the statute. The title to this land was not in dispute, and could not be affected by the decree of the court, under the pleadings. It is true that the court could decree a specific performance of the contract under the allegations of the complaint, but it would be a decree affecting the parties to the action personally. It would not determine any question affecting the title, in the sense in which the word "title" is evidently employed in the statute. We do not think that anything was decided in McLeod v. Ellis, 2 Wash. 117, having any application to this kind of a case.

The second point raised by appellant is that specific performance could not be decreed in this case, and that consequently the action should not have been maintained, as no damages could be warranted. While it is true that the complaint does not disclose the fact that specific performance could not be enforced, it is plain from the testimony, both of defendant and plaintiffs, that such is the fact, and that such fact was known to plaintiffs at the time of the commencement of the action. In fact, there can be no dispute that the recognized and acknowledged inability of the defendant to perform the contract was the direct and only cause of the action; for the defendant had tendered a warranty deed, which had been refused by the plaintiffs because he was powerless to convey. This proposition is not disputed at all, but is rendered certain by the testimony of plaintiffs' attorney Hays. Page 117 of the transcript. In answer to a question as to the identity of the deed the witness said: "I cannot say that. There was, as I stated before, a paper writing purporting to be a warranty deed upon its face; but having examined the title to the land prior to this date or that date, as attorney for the company, I had discovered that the defendant had not the power to make a warranty deed." And the witness then proceeds to give the reasons for his conclusions, viz., that the land was community property, and that upon the death of the wife, under the community laws of this state, one half of the property descended to the heirs of the wife, and that, the wife leaving one heir of her body, one fourth went to the heir, the wife having died intestate. (While it is not material to this cause, yet, not wishing to be understood as indorsing the theory of construction of the community law advanced by respondent, "that the surviving spouse is the heir with the child of the deceased spouse in the community estate," we will notice the statute. It is true that section 3803 of the Code provides that when any person shall die seised of any lands, etc., it shall descend as follows: If the decedent leaves a surviving husband or wife, and only one child or the lawful issue of one child, in equal shares to the surviving husband or wife and child, or issue of such child. But it is evident that it is the decedent's separate property that is spoken of in this section; for section 2412, which occurs in the chapter devoted to community property, provides that "in case no testamentary disposition shall have been made by the deceased husband or wife of his or her half of the community property, it shall descend equally to the legitimate issue of his, her, or their bodies.") In this case, it appears that the defendant had offered to deed to plaintiffs his undivided one-half interest in the land, which offer had been refused, so that it does not fall within the class of cases where part performance can be enforced, and damages given for the balance. It seems well established by the authorities, and is most certainly in strict harmony with common sense, that the court will not do a useless thing, or make a nugatory decree. It is plain that the court could not in this case decree a specific performance, and that the plaintiffs knew that it could not when they brought their action. Then the question arises whether the jurisdiction of a court of equity can be so extended that it will entertain a case and give relief which is not incidental to the main relief sought, or auxiliary to the relief asked which gave the court jurisdiction of the case, or granted for the purpose of making such relief complete, but a purely independent relief. Or, in other words, will a court of equity, in an action asking for an enforcement of specific performance as a basis of a complaint, award damages for the violation of the contract, when it conclusively appears that, at the time of the commencement of the action, specific performance could not be decreed; or shall the plaintiffs be relegated to their remedy at law for the violation of the contract? And this is a question, the investigation of which is not coveted by this court, in view of the fact that the authorities are conflicting, and that many decisions have been made by the courts as to the class of cases in which this independent relief can be given.

It is the fundamental principle regulating the exercise of this equitable jurisdiction that, whenever the legal remedy of damage is sufficient, equity will not interfere, and the specific performance will be refused. Pom. Cont. § 47. We take it that the fair corollary to this proposition would be that, where the legal remedy of damages is all that can be decreed, equity will not exercise jurisdiction, and the original proposition applies more forcibly where the fact is determined that legal damages are all that is actually sought; and in this case the plaintiffs must have brought their action on the theory that a compensation in damages would furnish a complete and satisfactory remedy, for they knew that no other remedy could be decreed. The presumption that the award of damages will not be an adequate remedy is the very foundation for the jurisdiction to decree specific performance; and it philosophically and logically follows that jurisdiction will not attach when the inadequate remedy is all that can be enforced. Any other construction renders inharmonious the operations of law, and confuses the principles upon which the jurisdiction is based. Under the authorities, however, where something inequitable is shown in the transactions of the party who is trying to avoid the specific performance, or where there are inequitable circumstances surrounding the case, courts of equity, notwithstanding they cannot decree the performance of a contract, will grant relief in damages; and, whether or not such an exception to the general rule can be justified on the ground of reason, the doctrine seems to be so well established by the decisions of the courts that it cannot with safety be disregarded. So the rule is announced that if the defendant has by his own act incapacitated himself from performance the court of equity may, instead of dismissing the plaintiff's suit, award him the legal remedy of damages. Id. § 294. The plain inference is that, if the reverse be true, damages cannot be awarded; and the following proposition is announced in Mr. Waterman's work on Specific Performance (sec. 515:) "As a general rule, compensation is regarded as an incident only, unless there is a special equity authorizing the court to give relief, and jurisdiction will not be exercised for the sole purpose of assessing the damages for a breach of contract. If the jurisdiction attaches, except as ancillary to a specific performance or to some other relief, it must be under very special circumstances and upon peculiar equities, as, for instance, in cases of fraud, or in cases where a party has disabled himself by matters ex post facto from the specific performance, or in a case where there is no adequate remedy at law." We think that all the cases holding that damages can be awarded where it was known to the plaintiff that specific performance could not be decreed are decided on the ground mentioned in the text above quoted, or based on some other decision holding that ground, though possibly not always distinguished by the indorsing court. In Woodman v. Freeman, 25 Me. 588, the court exhaustively reviews the leading decisions on this question, and decides that the jurisdiction of the court to give relief in equity by compensation in damages where the facts do not authorize the court to give any other relief attaches only in the following cases: (1) In cases of fraud and mistake, where there does not appear to be a plain and adequate remedy at law. (2) When relief against a forfeiture or penalty is sought and obtained. 8. When a contract or conveyance is properly set aside or rescinded under circumstances requiring that some compensation should be made to one of the parties to adjust the equities and do complete justice. (4)

When specific performance is sought and decreed in whole or in part. (5) When specific performance ought to have been and could have been decreed upon the state of facts existing when the bill was filed, but cannot be decreed upon a hearing of the cause, because the defendant, pending the suit, has voluntarily disabled himself to make a conveyance. (6) When, by a bill of discovery and relief, the discovery sought is obtained, the court, having acquired jurisdiction of the case for the discovery, will retain it and give relief; and, if necessary, by an assessment of damages. (7) When necessary to adjust the accounts, claims and equities between a cestui que trust and a trustee chargeable for delinquency or unfaithfulness. (8) When necessary for the adjustment of equities between mortgagor and mortgagee. (9) When necessary for the liquidation and settlement of the concerns of a partnership, when one of the partners is chargeable for misconduct or fraud. (10) When necessary to give complete relief in a case of nuisance. And by an examination of the cases reviewed by the court, but which it is not necessary to cite here, it will be found, as it was found by that court, that, in nearly all cases of this character, where a court of equity assumes to award damages as an independent remedy, the circumstances of the case brought it within the provisions of one of the classes of cases announced above. That was a case where the court found that specific performance could not be enforced, and the court in conclusion, says: "After this examination, suited to exhaust the patience both of reader and writer, the conclusion is irresistible, both upon principle and upon authority, that the jurisdiction of a court of equity to give relief by the assessment of damages in the matter before stated cannot be sustained." Some of the courts have referred to Woodcock v. Bennet, 1 Cow. 711, 18 Am. Dec. 568, as supporting the doctrine that the court will assess damages where specific performance could not be enforced; but an examination of that case shows that it was not properly distinguished, and it only needs a short quotation to show upon what ground the court stood. Said the court: "It seems to be well settled that the court of chancery will not, except under very particular circumstances, if the party be not entitled to a specific performance, direct an issue of quantum damnificatus, or a reference to the master to ascertain the damages. If a party elect that remedy, he must resort to law; but where the defendant has put it out of his power to perform the contract the bill will be retained, and it will be referred to the master to assess the damages.

The leading case holding this doctrine is Denton v. Stewart, 1 Cox, Ch. 258, and it was followed by Greenaway v. Adams, 12 Ves. Jr. 395. It seems to be with some hesitation, however, that the court in that case extended the jurisdiction. The court says: "The party injured by the non-performance of a contract has the choice to resort either to a court of law for damages, or to a court of equity for specific performance. If the court does not think fit to decree a specific performance, or finds that the contract cannot be specifically performed either way, I should have thought there was equally an end of its jurisdiction; for in the one case the court does not see reason to exercise the jurisdiction; in the other, the court finds no room for the exercise of it. It seems that the consequence ought to be that the party must seek his remedy at law." Notwithstanding these cogent reasons, however, the judge goes on to say that, Lord Kenyon having decided the other way in Denton v. Stewart, he felt constrained to follow that decision. In Todd v. Gee, 17 Ves. Jr. 274, after deciding that, except in very special cases, it is not the course of proceeding in equity to file a bill for a specific performance of an agreement praying in the alternative, if it cannot be performed, for damages, the lord chancellor says: "In Denton v. Stewart the defendant had it in his power to perform the agreement, and put it out of his power pending the suit. The case, if it is not to be supported upon that distinction, is not according to the principles of the court." In that case the specific performance was possible at the time the action was commenced, and when it was commenced the court had rightful jurisdiction of the case; and, once having obtained jurisdiction, it would not allow itself to be divested of that jurisdiction by the wrongful act of the defendant. But, whatever we may think of the soundness of the law announced in those cases, the principles upon which they were based can have no application to the case at bar. Here there are no inequitable circumstances of any kind surrounding this case, and no suspicion of any on the part of the defendant. It is conceded that at the time the contract was made the title was not in Bell, and that he could not convey, and that the same condition of things existed and was known to the plaintiffs when the action was commenced. There is no suspicion of fraud. He did not seek the purchasers, but they sought him, and it was at their request that the agreement was made. He was simply mistaken as to his authority to sell, and the testimony shows that he made every effort to comply with his contract, and to place the plaintiffs in statu quo; that he offered to settle the matter in an equitable manner. So that there is not a circumstance surrounding the case, or connected with it, that tends in the least to make it an exception to the general rule that where specific performance cannot be enforced the court of equity will not award damages for violation of the contract.

The proposition of the respondents that defendant was in a position to perform his contract, and avoid his principal liability for its non-performance, cannot be maintained. This land is absolutely beyond his control. It can only be sold by order of the probate court at public auction, and such order can only be obtained upon an affidavit that such sale is necessary for the payment of the debts of the estate, or the maintenance of the family or heirs, and that must also be a showing satisfactory to the judge. It is not within the contemplation of the law that the lands of minors will be ordered sold in aid of real-estate speculations by outside parties, whether relatives or strangers. Without any fault of his own, Bell was legally incapacitated from performing the contract, and plaintiffs knew this when they commenced the action, and the court never had rightful jurisdiction of the case; but as the appellant did not object to the jurisdiction at the trial, and treated it as an equity case, he can not raise the question here.

The third contention of the appellant is that the court erred in granting alternative relief, and that such relief can only be granted, in an action for specific performance, when the plaintiff has shown a performance of all the conditions of the contract on his part, and the inability of the court to compel the performance is due to the fault of the defendant. This involves substantially the propositions that were discussed under the second point.

We think the fourth point of appellant, that the court erred in sustaining the demurrer to the second and third causes of defense pleaded in defendant's amended answer, must be sustained. The answer not only alleges the impossibility of the performance without fault of defendant, but that such impossibility was known to plaintiffs before action was brought, which fact, if proven, would have been sufficient, under all the authorities, to defeat the decree for specific performance, and was consequently a good and sufficient defense to an action for specific performance; but it also alleges a mistake of law on the part of the defendant, by reason of his residence in another state, and by fraudulent representations on the part of plaintiffs; that the agreement was entered into at the solicitation and request of plaintiff Morgan; and that, after he discovered his inability to convey as per agreement, he tried to make an equitable settlement with the plaintiffs, and offered to pay them back the money advanced, with interest thereon. The matters and things set up in the amended answer went to show that there were none of those inequitable circumstances of fraudulent acts surrounding this case which justify a court of equity in awarding damages, or take it out of the general rule that courts of equity will not award damages except as ancillary to some other relief decreed. The plaintiffs had invoked the aid of a court of equity. This was an equitable defense, and the defendant was entitled to it. Suppose the plaintiffs had alleged in their complaint that, at the time Bell made the contract, he could not legally convey the land; that the title was not in him; and that he entered into the contract through an honest mistake of the laws of Washington, he being at the time a resident of the state of Ohio,—and, at the time the action was commenced, plaintiffs were aware of such facts, together with other affirmative averments in regard to the misrepresentation and fraud on the part of plaintiffs. It would certainly have appeared on its face that the court of equity could not decree specific performance; and, if that be true, it is apparent that if the answer sets up the identical, same matter, it would be a good defense to such a complaint.

Respondents rely upon the application of the maxim, ignorantia legis non excusat; and there can be no contention concerning the general rule, even in its application to courts of equity, that the simple mistake by a party as to the legal effect of an agreement which he executes, or the legal result of an act which he performs, is no ground for either defensive or affirmative relief, for reasons which are obvious, and have been so frequently decided that it would be idle to repeat them here. But it is equally true that there are some exceptions to this rule; for as Mr. Pomeroy, in his Equity Jurisprudence, (sec. 842), says: "Equity does sometimes exercise its jurisdiction on occasion of mistakes of law. If the mistake of law is not pure and simple, but is induced or accompanied by other special facts giving rise to an independent equity on behalf of the mistaken person, such as inequitable conduct of the other party, there can be no doubt that a court of equity will interpose its aid. It is not necessary that such inequitable conduct should be intentionally misleading, much less that it should be actual fraud. It is not necessary that the misconception of law was the result of, or even aided or accompanied by, incorrect or misleading statements of facts by the other party." The material question here is, Does this case fall within the rule or the exception? And in the outset, in discussing this interesting question, to avoid the discussion of unnecessary propositions, it is well to keep in mind a well-defined distinction between ignorance of an antecedent existing right, which is to be affected by the agreement, and the legal import of the agreement itself. Thus, in this case, if Bell's defense was that he did not know the legal effect of the agreement which he entered into, in the absence of fraud or inequitable conduct on the part of plaintiffs, it would not be a defense to the action; but this is not the defense which he offers, but it is that he was mistaken about his right to enter into such a contract. "Mistakes, therefore," says Mr. Pomeroy, "of a person, with respect to his own personal private rights and liabilities, may properly be regarded, as in great measure they are, and may be dealt with, as mistakes of facts. Courts have constantly felt and acted upon this view, though not always avowedly." But there is nothing in the proposition announced by Judge Story, as cited by respondent, that conflicts with this proposition. Many instances are there given where the courts refuse to relieve from a mistake of law, but they are all cases where the party was asking relief from the consequences flowing from a misunderstanding of the legal effect of the contract. Indeed, Judge Story, in section 180 of his work on Equity Jurisprudence, indorses the same distinction: "Sec. 180. There may be a solid ground for a distinction between cases where the party acts or agrees in ignorance of any title in him, or upon a supposition of a clear title in another, and cases where there is a doubt or controversy or litigation between parties as to their respective rights. In the former cases, (as has been already suggested,) the party seems to labor, in some sort, under a mistake of fact as well as law. He supposes, as a matter of fact, he has no title, and that the other party has title." The principle in the case at bar is the same, though the facts are reversed. Bell supposed, as a matter of fact, that he had the title. He did not intend to convey land which he did not possess, but proceeded upon the supposition that it was his to convey. It was not a mistake in calculation as to the legal consequences of his agreement, but purely and simply a mistake of an existing antecedent right affecting his title.

16 L. R. A.

An investigation of the cases cited by respondents shows that these decisions will in no wise militate against the position taken above, but simply go towards establishing the general rule, which, as we have before observed, cannot be disturbed. In Bank of United States v. Daniel, 87 U. S. 12 Pet. 32, 9 L. ed. 989, the controversy was over the legal effect of the instrument; and the court repeated the text, that mere mistakes are not remedial, and repeats the language used in Hunt v. Rhodes, 26 U. S. 1 Pet. 2, 7 L. ed. 27, 21 U. S. 8 Wheat. 174, 5 L. ed. 76, that, whatever exceptions there may be to the rule, they will be found few in number, and to have some peculiarity in their character, and to involve other elements of decision. Jacobs v. Morange, 47 N. Y. 57, is a case where the parties mistook the proper court of appeals, and plaintiff sought relief because he did not know the law; and the court of appeals there asserted the general doctrine, and stated that there are no circumstances of any description which add anything to the ground of relief. In Champlin v. Laytin, 18 Wend. 407, 81 Am. Dec. 832, the court found that the mistake complained of as error was mistake of fact and not of law, and the discussion on the other question was clearly outside of the case. Justice Bronson, however, giving his personal views, may be fairly said to have undertaken to maintain the position contended for by appellant. The very able concurring opinion of Senator Paige takes exactly the opposite view. All the 27 members of the court voted for the reversal of the decree; but, in view of the two opinions expressed, it is impossible to tell on what grounds. Wood v. Price, 46 Ill. 439, was a case where relief was claimed on a misapprehension of the legality of the terms employed in the contract. It is conceded by all the authorities that no relief can be given in this kind of a case where there are no inequitable circumstances surrounding it, and there were none claimed in this case. Hoover v. Reilly, 2 Abb. (U. S.) 471, is a case where the party claims to have misapprehended the legal effect of his agreement. Goltra v. Sarasack, 58 Ill. 458, involves the same principle. It was a mistake of the legal effect of a deed. Several of the cases cited by respondent, and nearly all of the American cases which have adopted the harsher rule, have drawn their inspiration from Hunt v. Rhodes, 26 U. S. 1 Pet. 2, 7 L. ed. 27, 21 U. S. 8 Wheat. 174, 5 L. ed. 76, which may be regarded as the leading case maintaining that view. So that it becomes necessary to give this case a careful scrutiny; and from such scrutiny it will be found that while the judge who rendered the opinion indulged in a good many general observations, which have been caught up by other courts and quoted as the decision, without discriminating the case under consideration which called forth the remarks, yet when we come to examine what was really decided in that case, and what was before the court for determination, we find that this case is no authority against the doctrine sought to be maintained. This was a case where the party accepted a power of attorney as security from his debtor instead of a mortgage. It afterwards eventuated that they had made a mistake as to the efficacy of the power of attorney, and he asked to have his power of attorney reformed, and declared a specific lien on two certain vessels, as it was alleged that it was the intention of the parties that the power of attorney should be a lien on the vessels. So that it will be seen that there was no mistake of law here concerning an ancillary or existing right of anyone, but that, like all the other cases, it was a misconception of the legal effect of the instrument executed. And, as showing just what was decreed in that case, we quote: "It is not the intention of the court, in the case now under consideration, to lay it down that there may not be cases in which a court of equity will relieve against the plain mistake arising from ignorance of law. But we mean to say that where the parties, upon deliberation and advice, reject one species of security, and agree to select another, under the misapprehension of the law as to the nature of the security so selected, a court of equity will not, on the ground of such misapprehension, and the insufficiency of such security, in consequence of a subsequent event,—not foreseen, perhaps, or thought of,—direct a new security of a different character to be given, or decree that to be done which the parties supposed would have been effected by the instrument which was finally agreed upon." Again, equities of other creditors was the determining influence in this decision, for the opinion concludes with this remark: "If all other difficulties were out of the way, the equity of the general creditors to be paid their debts equally with the plaintiff would, we think, be sufficient to induce the court to leave the parties where the law has placed them." Indeed, it will be seen by reference to the history of this case that the consideration of the last proposition was all that was before the court; for the case had been before the court before in 1823, (reported in 8 Wheat. 174), and the court there decided (Chief Justice Marshall handing down the opinion) that the demurrer to plaintiff's bill could not be sustained, and reversed the judgment of the lower court on that ground. Said the court: "We find no case which we think precisely in point, and are unwilling, where the effect of the instrument is acknowledged to have been entirely misunderstood by both parties, to say that a court of equity is incapable of affording relief. The decree of the circuit court is reversed; and, as this is a case in which creditors are concerned, the court, instead of giving a final decree on the demurrer in favor of the plaintiff, directs the cause to be remanded that the circuit court may permit the defendants to withdraw their demurrer and answer the bill." And as the result of such order the case in due course of time was brought up again, with the result as reported in 1 Pet. So that it will be seen that as between the parties to the transaction, even in a case where the mistake was a mistake as to the effect of the instrument executed, the supreme court of the United States has decided that a court of equity can grant relief, while, as between one of the contracting parties and the creditors of the other, such relief will not be granted when the effect of granting the relief will be to establish a lien on the property which would be otherwise subject to execution by the creditors. But the questions involved in this case are not decided there at all. Landown v. Landown, Mos. 364, is a case holding in favor of equitable relief in this kind of a case. There the plaintiff had a dispute with his uncle concerning the respective rights to inherit the land of the plaintiff's deceased father; the plaintiff being the only son of an older brother of the defendant, who agreed to leave the matter to a school-master, who examined some law-books and informed them that the land went to the younger brother, the plaintiff's uncle. Upon this opinion they agreed to share the land between them, and conveyances were executed accordingly. Plaintiff afterwards ascertained that the school-master had given him erroneous advice, and that, through a mistake of law, he had deeded away property which clearly belonged to him, and filed a bill to be relieved. And it is held that the maxim, ignorantia legis non excusat, did not apply to that kind of a case. Blakeman v. Blakeman, 39 Conn. 820, is also a case exactly in point. There a right of way had become extinguished, and the grantor conveyed the land, warranting its privileges and appurtenances. Both the grantor and grantee supposed that the right of way still attached to the land; and the court said the respondent sold and the defendant bought an extinct thing, both supposing it to be existing, and both ignorant that from the nature of the case, and as matters of law, the object could not exist. There was not here a mistake as to the legal effect of the deed, but a mistake as to the existence of the subject-matter; nor was there a mistake as to the nature and operation of any known or contemplated principle of law. There was simply added to the mistake of fact a mistake of a principle of law, which, if known and contemplated, would have prevented the mistake under which the parties acted. So in the case at bar. If the principles of the community law, as they are now interpreted by the courts, had been known and contemplated, this contract never would have been entered into. See Bingham v. Bingham, 1 Ves. Sr. 126; Cooper v. Phibbs, L. R. 2 H. L. 149; 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 849.

But there is another principle of law which is conclusive in this case. The demurrer admits the fact that Bell was not a resident of the state of Washington, but of the state of Ohio, when this contract was made, and his mistake of the laws of this state is held to be a mistake of fact. Nor does the maxim that "ignorance of law is no excuse of the breach or nonperformance of an agreement" apply to foreign laws, or laws of other states of the Union. Ignorance of those laws is deemed to be ignorance of fact. King v. Doolittle, 1 Head, 77. Ignorance of law signifies ignorance of the law of one's own country, not ignorance of the laws of a foreign country. In this respect the laws of other states in the Union are foreign laws. Haven v. Foster, 9 Pick. 111, 19 Am. Dec. 353. To the same effect are Patterson v. Bloomer, 35 Conn. 57, 95 Am. Dec. 218; Raynham v. Canton, 3 Pick. 293; Bank of Chillicothe v. Dodge, 8 Barb. 233.

But notwithstanding the rigid rule laid down by some courts, under all the circumstances surrounding this case as shown by the answer, considering the fact that the nonresident defendant, who was ignorant of the situation of the land, both as to its value and its legal standing, was sought out by the resident plaintiff, who made a trip of thousands of miles to induce him to enter into this agreement, a man sufficiently wide awake and well versed in the land speculation business to be intrusted by a syndicate of business men, one of whom at least was a practicing lawyer of the state, as the manager and agent of the business, who perfectly understood the history of the land, and of the circumstances surrounding it, and who by his representations to defendant persuaded and induced him to enter into this contract, and considering the earnest and unavailing efforts of the defendant to fulfill his contract, there cannot be a case found that will support the judgment in this case; and, if a court of equity cannot find circumstances surrounding it which will warrant it in granting relief, then the time-honored and universally accepted definition of Blackstone, that equity is the correction of that wherein the law, by reason of its universality is deficient, has lost its meaning, and has become as "sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal." It is not claimed that plaintiffs entered into possession under this agreement, or made valuable improvements, or expended any money in any way, by reason of the contract, whereby they could claim any equities. No damages were proven in any way, except the loss of their bargain. They simply have an investment of $500, and have refused the defendant's offer to place them in statu quo.

Appellant's fifth point is also well taken; and the answer, if for no other reason, should have been sustained, as furnishing a basis for the introduction of proof of bona fides in mitigation of damages. And this brings us to the consideration of the important proposition on which it must be confessed there is a lamentable conflict of authority, though so far as the adoption of rules applicable to the principles involved in this particular case is concerned the conflict is more limited. The question here is, couched in homely phrase, Shall the vendee be allowed the benefit of his bargain where the vendor contracted to convey in good faith, believing that he had the right to convey, and is prevented from doing so? The leading case holding the negative of this proposition is Flureau v. Thornhill, 2 W. Bl. 1078, where Chief Justice De Grey, in rendering the opinion of the court, said: "Upon a contract for a purchase, if the title proves bad, and the vendor is (without fraud) incapable of making a good one, I do not think that the purchaser can be entitled to any damages for the fancied goodness of the bargain which he supposes he has lost." Justice Blackstone added: "These contracts are merely upon condition, frequently expressed but always implied, that the vendor has a good title. If he has not, the return of the deposit, with interest and the costs, is all that can be expected." And while the doctrine announced in this case by such eminent authority as Lord Blackstone has received some criticism, as being an exception to the rule of law that a vendor who, from whatever cause, fails to perform his contract, is bound to place the purchaser, so far as money will do it, in the position he would have been in if the contract had been performed, yet it has received the sanction of the great majority of the English courts, as being an exception that is founded in common justice and right, and is acknowledged to be the English rule to-day; and what criticisms have been made on this decision do not reach the case at bar. But the principal criticism is that the rule is too broad, and does not distinguish between the cases where the vendor contracted under the honest belief that he had the title, and where he contracted with a view of afterwards obtaining the title for the purpose of conveying it, and failed to so obtain it; and, so far as the last proposition is concerned, that case has been modified by some of the courts, if such a case could fairly be presumed to have fallen within the rule laid down. Nor do we understand that it is asserted by Mr. Sedgwick, in his work on Damages, that such is not the prevailing doctrine, although he is inclined to criticize its consistency. It is conceded by the respondent that the rule contended for by the appellant is the rule adopted by the English courts, so that a further analysis or citation of English authorities is unnecessary; but it is contended that the weight of authority in the United States is that the measure of damages is the difference between the contract price and the value of the land at the time of the breach, and a decision of the United States Supreme Court, to wit, Hopkins v. Lee, 19 U. S. 6 Wheat. 109, 5 L. ed. 49, is cited as sustaining that view. But while the court in that case laid down the general rule that the measure of damages is not the price stipulated in the contract, but the value at the time of the breach, no question was before the court as to the incapacity of the grantor to convey, and there is no indication as to what rule the court would lay down in that kind of a case; and the court expressly states that it is not prescribing a rule of damages in case of eviction. The case of Doherty v. Dolan, 65 Me. 87, 20 Am. Rep. 677, cited by respondents, is strictly in point in favor of respondents' contention; and it is there squarely decided that the measure of damages is the same whether the vendor acted in good or bad faith. But in Kirkpatrick v. Downing, 58 Mo. 83, 17 Am. Rep. 678, also cited by respondents, the court decided that where the vendor in a contract for the sale of land knew at the time the contract was entered into that he has no title, or if, having the title, the sale is prevented because he changes his mind, or because he neglects to take the proper steps to put the purchaser in possession, the purchaser may, in an action for breach of such contract, recover, beyond his expenses, damages for the loss of his bargain. The court found that the defendant had disabled himself, and the opinion distinguished that case from cases where the vendor acted in good faith, and was prevented from making title. Nor can we agree with the respondents that Pumpelly v. Phelps, 40 N. Y. 59, 100 Am. Dec. 469; Baldwin v. Munn, 2 Wend. 399, 20 Am. Dec. 627, and Tracy v. Gunn, 29 Kan. 508,—show that, in states where the liberal rule is recognized, it is continually questioned and modified. In Pumpelly v. Phelps, supra, the decision of the court was that the rule that the vendor who contracts to sell and convey real property in good faith, believing he had a good title, but who discovered it to be defective, and for that reason refuses or is unable to fulfill his contract, is, in an action against him by the vendee for the breach, liable only for nominal damages, could not be extended to cases where the party contracts to sell lands which he knows at the time he has not the power to sell and convey. So that, while the court was opposed to extending the rule, the rule itself was in no way questioned. In Baldwin v. Munn, supra, the court, after very emphatically announcing the rule laid down in Flureau v. Thornhill, proceeded to say that "if the vendor acts in bad faith, and refuses to convey because the property has increased in value, and with a view of putting the enhanced value in his own pocket, it becomes a case of fraud, and plaintiff would clearly be entitled either to compel a specific performance in equity, or to recover by way of damages the difference between the contract price and the enhanced value when the conveyance should have been made." In Tracy v. Gunn, supra, the court, speaking through Judge Brewer, says: "In breaches of contracts to convey real estate a peculiar distinction as to the measure of damages runs through the cases, and that founded upon the motive with which the vendor acts. If he acts in good faith, it is held that the contract price becomes the measure of damages, while if he acts mala fide the vendee may recover the actual damages,"—and cites Sedgwick on Damages (page 209), where that author, in distinguishing these kinds of cases, says: "In these cases the line has been repeatedly drawn between parties acting in good faith, and failing to perform because they could not make a title, and parties whose conduct is tainted with fraud or bad faith. In the former case the plaintiff can only recover whatever money has been paid by him, with interest and expenses; in the latter, he is entitled to damages resulting from the loss of his bargain. This exception cannot, I think, be distinguished or explained on principle, but it is well settled in practice." The rule is thus laid down by Mr. Field in his work on Damages, 2d ed. § 481: "In an action for the breach of contract, the commonly received doctrine, both in England and in this country, is that, where the consideration has been paid on a contract to convey lands at a future time, if there is a breach on the part of the seller, and he has acted in good faith, and the failure arises from no intentional fault or wrong of his own, the purchaser can only recover the consideration paid and interest; and where, under similar circumstances, no consideration has been advanced, the purchaser can recover nothing, or only nominal damages." In Staats v. Ten Eyck, 3 Caines, 111, 2 Am. Dec. 254, Chief Justice Kent, in delivering the opinion of the court in support of this doctrine, says that no prudent man would venture to sell his property if there was no limit to the damages for which he would be responsible in the event of the failure of his title. He asks who, for the sake of £100, would assume the hazard of re-lying as many thousands, to which value the property might arise by causes not foreseen by either party, and says the supposed general rule is to limit the recovery, as much as possible, to an indemnity for the actual injury sustained, without regard to profits which the plaintiff has failed to make, and the rule is laid down accordingly.

The case at bar aptly illustrates the injustice which the eminent justice sought to prevent. If plaintiff's allegations are true, the contract was for sale of lands which in December were worth $20,000 and in April following were worth $150,500; and the result is that for the pitiful sum of $500, the defendant, who was acting in perfect good faith, is called upon to yield up $134,500 in response to plaintiff's investment of $500 for four months. If such a rule were adopted in this western country, where what is cheap agricultural or farming land one year is valuable city property the next, and where the laws, by reason of the formative condition of the state, are unsettled and unadjudicated, a conveyance of land would be a perilous transaction, which a prudent man might well hesitate to engage in. It must be conceded that no rule can be laid down that will provide against all hardships, but the one that commends itself to this court is the one which will most evenly adjust the equities between the contracting parties. Hence we decide that in this case the measure of damages is the amount paid, with legal interest thereon from the date of payment; and this, it seems, was tendered by the defendant before the commencement of the action. An investigation of this subject has convinced us that even in the United States the great weight of authority sustains the rule announced. The extreme length of this opinion will prevent any further review of the cases; but we will cite, as supporting the rule: Sawyer v. Warner, 36 Iowa, 383; Cockcroft v. New York & H. R. Co. 69 N. Y. 201; Suoen v. Steele, 5 Iowa, 352; Foley v. McKeegan, 4 Iowa, 1, 66 Am. Dec. 107; Thompson v. Guthrie, 9 Leigh, 101, 33 Am. Dec. 225; Conger v. Weaver, 20 N. Y. 144; Drake v. Baker, 34 N. J. L. 358; Peters v. McKeon, 4 Denio, 546; Hall v. Delaplaine, 5 Wis. 206, 68 Am. Dec. 57; McNair v. Compton, 35 Pa. 28; Leggett v. New York Mut. L. Ins. Co. 53 N. Y. 394; Herndon v. Harrison, 34 Miss. 486, 69 Am. Dec. 399.

It was asserted by the respondents' attorney, in the argument of this case, that this court had already passed upon this question, in opposition to the rule here laid down, in Hanson v. Tompkins, 2 Wash. 508. We have examined that case, and find that it was decided there that where a party makes a misrepresentation of a material fact, and the other party acts on it, the first party is liable for any damages which the second party sustains by reason of such misrepresentation, whether the party making them knew them to be false or not. The case then under consideration, and the authorities cited, show conclusively that there was no question of mistake of law in the case.

For the reasons given the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded to the lower court, with instructions to dismiss the same, with costs for defendant.

Anders, Ch. J., and Scott and Stiles, JJ., concur.

Hoyt, J.: I concur in the result, but not in holding the action transitory.

VIRGINIA SUPREME COURT OF APPEALS.

Melvin J. MOORE, Pfg. in Err.,
v.

W. S. ROLIN.

(.....Va.....)

1. The malicious filing by a subcontractor of a mechanics' lien without authority of law, with intent to injure the business of the contractor, constitutes an actionable libel where it results in damage by loss of credit and customers.
2. A declaration for libel by filing a mechanics' lien need not aver that the lien has been ended in favor of the plaintiff.

(June 16, 1892.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for the City of Richmond to review a judgment in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged publication of a libel. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Courtney & Patterson, for plaintiff in error:

No mechanic, whether a general or a subcontractor, is entitled to take out a lien until and except the work be "done," "completed," "terminated," according to contract. Statutory liens are strictly construed; no right but what is expressly given can be legally claimed; there is no "inchoate lien" given by statute.

Quimby v. Sloan, 2 Abb. Pr. 98; Phillips, Mechanics' Liens, § 215; Cumming v. Wight, 72 Ga. 767; Franklin St. Church Trustees v. Davis, 85 Va. 198. See also Lanedale v. Daniels, 100 U. S. 115, 25 L. ed. 588; Phillips, Mechanics' Liens, § 187, citing Luter v. Cobb, 1 Coldw. 525.

The lien is not good if premature.

Malbon v. Birney, 11 Wis. 107; McLagan v. Brown, 11 Ill. 519; McOullough v. Caldwell, 8 Ark. 281; Catlin v. Douglass, 88 Fed. Rep. 569; Davis v. Bullard, 82 Kan. 284; Seaton v. Chamberlain, Id. 289.

Instead of pursuing the careful course, the defendant chose to proclaim through the public records and daily papers that he believed petitioner to be financially embarrassed or morally bankrupt.

Phillips, Mechanics' Liens, § 120.

On special damage, see—

Newell, Defamation, Slander & Libel, pp. 634, 635; Collins v. Whitehead, 34 Fed. Rep. 121.

If a wanton attack upon the honesty and solvency of a business man, blasting in one moment a reputation it has taken years to secure, and destroying his trade which a lifetime will not suffice to reconstruct,—if such conduct be not actionable, then common law is no longer common sense, nor courts of law the abiding place of justice. Petitioner's declaration should have been sustained. His action was in the nature of a suit for libel,—a libel upon plaintiff's character, and a libel upon his business. Such cases are frequent.

Haney Mfg. Co. v. Perkins, 78 Mich. 1; Price v. Conway, 8 L. R. A. 193, 184 Pa. 840; Williams v. Davenport, 42 Minn. 893; Oruikshank v. Gordon, 118 N. Y. 178; Newell, Defamation, Slander & Libel, p. 94, § 14.

Mr. L. O. Wendenburg, for appellee:

The declaration seems to be in the nature of an action for slander of title, or for a malicious prosecution or proceeding in a civil matter or suit. If this were not so, the action could not be maintained at all.

Marshall v. Bussard, Gilm. (Va.) 9.

In Young v. Gregorie, 3 Call, 451, Judge Roane says: "Tribunals of justice being instituted for the convenience and benefit of the people, it is a claim of right to prosecute a civil action or proceeding, whatever the ultimate decision on it may be. It then only becomes culpable and actionable when the party has instituted such proceedings from a corrupt motive, and without any ground or cause therefor."

Prof. Minor says in 4 Minor, Inst. pt. 1, p. 401: "In civil proceedings the party's reputation is, in general, not affected; and as to the expense of defending himself against such proceeding, he is supposed to be reimbursed by the costs which he recovers.

"Three things are necessary to maintain an action for slander of property or title: (1) the words must be false; (2) they must be maliciously published; (3) they must result in a pecuniary loss or injury to the plaintiff."

Newell, Defamation, Slander & Libel, 204; Green v. Button, 2 Crompt. M. & R. 715.

The facts set out in the declaration show that the appellee has asserted a bona fide claim of a lien for the work actually done, and this NOTE.—Libel by Filing Lien.

The law is well settled that it is actionable to publish words tending to injure a person in his business (notes to Morey v. Morning Journal Asso. (N. Y.) 9 L. R. A. 622; Price v. Conway (Pa.) 8 L. R. A. 194), or to impute insolvency or want of credit to a business man. Notes to Hayes v. Press Co. (Pa.) 5 L. R. A. 643.

The above case is a novel application of the doctrine, and a careful search has failed to reveal any case analogous to it, and owing to the peculiar circumstances which gave rise to it few cases like it will be likely to occur. See, however, the recent case of May v. Jones (Ga.) 15 L. R. A. 637, holding that the false and malicious protest of a business man's paper is actionable.

Cases of slander of title because of the wrongful and malicious filing of a lien may, however, be not uncommon.

Where a false claim to a lien was maliciously asserted against personal property, which prevented its being delivered to its owner and he thereby lost the use of it in his business, the action was held to be maintainable. Green v. Button, 2 Crompt. M. & R. 707.

Evidence that one is prevented from selling land by reason of another's filing against it a claim to have it conveyed to himself will sustain a verdict for substantial damages in favor of the owner, without further proof of special damage. Collins v. Whitehead, 34 Fed. Rep. 121.

Registering a chancery order which prevented a defendant from disposing of lands is not actionable in the absence of malice. Gibbs v. Pike, 1 Dowl. N. S. 409.

H. P. F.

alone disproves malice and is sufficient to defeat the action.

Pitt v. Donovan, 1 Maule & S. 689, 648; Smith v. Spooner, 3 Taunt. 246, 254; Walkley v. Bostwick, 49 Mich. 874; Thompson v. White, 70 Cal. 135; Like v. McKinstry, 3 Abb. App. Dec. 62, 66, 67; Pater v. Baker, 3 C. B. 831, 868; Wilson v. Dubois, 85 Minn. 471, 59 Am. Rep. 835.

The declaration shows on its face that the appellee had a sufficient probable cause for believing he had the right to file the lien; and the best evidence of this is the fact that one of the most learned of the circuit court judges of this state has so decided by sustaining the demurrer on this ground.

Jones v. Finch, 84 Va. 207; Bailey v. Dean, 5 Barb. 301.

To sustain an action for slander of title, or for malicious prosecution, there must be a want of probable cause.

Starkie, Slander & Libel, 202-206; Smith v. Spooner, 3 Taunt. 248; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 428; Hargrave v. Le Breton, 4 Burr. 2422; Brittidge's Case, 4 Coke, 18; Newell, Defamation, Slander & Libel, 207.

The declaration did not allege that the lien had been ended in favor of the appellant; this was fatal.

4 Minor, Inst. pt. 1, p. 896; Thompson v. White, 70 Cal. 185; Brook v. Rawl, 4 Exch. 524; Bailey v. Dean, 5 Barb. 300; Starkie, Slander & Libel, 158, 159, 323; Newell, Defamation, Slander & Libel, 209.

Lewis, P., delivered the opinion of the court:

This was an action in the circuit court of the city of Richmond for a libel. The declaration states, in substance, that the plaintiff, who is the plaintiff in error here, was, in the fall of the year 1890, a carpenter and builder, of good name, fame, and credit; that about that time he was employed by the Virginia Land & Loan Company to build certain houses in the city of Richmond; that in the execution of this contract the plaintiff employed the defendant, as a subcontractor, to do the brick work, at a certain price, to be paid for at a certain time; that before the work was done, and before anything was due by the plaintiff to the defendant, the latter maliciously and without probable cause, intending to injure the plaintiff in his business, placed upon record in the clerk's office of the chancery court of the city of Richmond a mechanics' lien against the property of the said Virginia Land & Loan Company, for the improvement of which the plaintiff had contracted as aforesaid; that the defendant also notified the company not to pay anything to the plaintiff on account of the said improvement without the defendant's direction or approval; the meaning of all which, it is averred, was to charge publicly that the plaintiff was either unwilling, because dishonest, or unable, because insolvent, to pay whatever was justly due by him to the defendant on account of said work. It is also averred that in consequence of the said wrongful acts of the defendant the land and loan company did for a long time, and against the consent of the plaintiff, retain the price of said improvements, notwithstanding a large sum was due the plaintiff on account thereof, during all which time the plaintiff was deprived of the use of the money so due him as aforesaid, to the great injury of his name and credit, involving loss of customers in his business, etc.

16 L. R. A.

There was a demurrer to the declaration, which was sustained by the judgment complained of; and the question thus presented is the single question to be determined. That the lien was prematurely filed by the defendant is clear. The lien of a subcontractor in such cases is given by section 2475 of the Code; and by section 2477, it is provided that any subcontractor, in order to perfect the lien so given him, shall comply with the provisions of section 2476. He must also give notice in writing to the owner of the property, or his agent, of the amount and character of his claim. It is essential, therefore, to the validity of the lien, that it be perfected according to the provisions of section 2476, and that section enacts as follows: "A general contractor, in order to perfect the lien given him by the preceding section, shall at any time after the work is done or materials furnished by him, and before the expiration of thirty days from the time such building or structure is completed, or the work thereon otherwise terminated, file in the clerk's office of the county or corporation court of each county or corporation in which the building or structure or any part thereof is, or in the clerk's office of the chancery court of the city of Richmond, if the said building or structure is within the corporate limits of the said city, an account showing the amount and character of the work done or material furnished, the prices charged therefor, the payments made, if any, and the balance due, verified by the oath of the claimant or his agent, with a statement attached, declaring his intention to claim the benefit of said lien, and giving a brief description of the property on which he claims the lien." It is also provided that such account and statement shall be recorded by the clerk in a book to be kept for the purpose, called the "Mechanics' Lien Record," and that, from the time of such filing, all persons shall be deemed to have notice thereof. It is apparent from the language of this section, which must be strictly construed, that no lien can be perfected in a case like the present before the work for which the subcontractor engages is done, i. e., before his contract is completed. The statutes of the several states on this subject are not uniform. In some of the states a lien is given from the commencement of the work, and others, from the time notice of an intention to claim a lien is filed in the proper office; while in others, as in Virginia, no claim can be perfected until the work is done. It is conceded by the defendant that this was the law in Virginia before the adoption of the new Code, and if the Legislature had intended to change it,—that is, to give a right to claim a lien or liens for fragments of the work as it progresses,—such intention would no doubt have been expressed in clear and unmistakable terms. Franklin St. Church Trustees v. Davis, 85 Va.

193. This view is strengthened by the provisions of section 2479 of the Code, which, as a protection to the subcontractor, gives him the right to notify the owner or his agent in writing before the work is performed, stating the probable value thereof, and which also makes the owner personally liable if, after the work has been performed, and within thirty days after the completion of the building or structure, a correct account, etc., is furnished, as prescribed by that section; the owner, however, not to be so liable in a sum exceeding the amount of his indebtedness to the general contractor at the time notice is given. In the present case, therefore, not only was the lien in question filed and recorded without authority of law, but the declaration avers, and the demurrer consequently admits, that the defendant recorded it maliciously, without probable cause, and with intent to injure the plaintiff in his business; and both general and special damage are alleged in the declaration. There is no principle, then upon which the demurrer can be sustained. It is a settled rule of the common law that every publication of language that naturally and necessarily tends to injure another in his office, trade, or employment is, if without justification, libelous or slanderous, as the case may be, and actionable per se. Thus, to speak or write of a trader that he is insolvent, or of an innkeeper that his house is infected with a contagious disease, or to impute dishonesty or incapacity to one in his business, is actionable without any averment or proof of special damage, since in all such cases the law implies damage from the nature of the language used. Hodge, Slander & Libel, 80; 2 Rob. Pr. (New) 633; Whittaker v. Bradley, 7 Dowl. & R. 649; Newbold v. Bradstreet, 57 Md. 88; Pollard v. Lyon, 91 U. S. 235, 23 L. ed. 308; Price v. Conway, 184 Pa. 840, 8 L. R. A. 193; Haney Mfg. Co. v. Perkins, 78 Mich. 1; Orr v. Skoefeld, 56 Me. 483. Where, however, the language does not import such defamation as will of course be injurious, and is therefore actionable only because it occasions special damage to the plaintiff, i. e., damage which, though the natural and immediate, is yet not the necessary, result of the language used, there the damage must be both alleged and proved. 2 Greenl. Ev. § 420; 4 Minor, Inst. 381; Townshend, Slander & Libel, § 146 et seq. In the present case it would, no doubt, be going too far to say that the wrong complained of falls within the first of these rules; that is to say, that, in contemplation of law, damage necessarily results to the plaintiff in such case. In other words, the filing of a mechanics' lien by a subcontractor for an alleged indebtedness to him by the general contractor, cannot be taken, as a matter of law, as imputing insolvency or dishonesty to the general contractor, nor as necessarily tending to injure him in his business. Newbold v. Bradstreet, 57 Md. 88. The declaration, however, alleges special damage, resulting from the tying up in the owner's hands of the money due the plaintiff, and the consequent loss of credit and customers, though the names of such customers are not specified in the declaration. The rule, however, that in an action for slander or libel, by which the plaintiff has lost his customers, he cannot give in evidence the loss of any whose names are not specified in the declaration, is not inconsistent with the admission of evidence of general loss. 2 Starkie. Slander & Libel, 63; Evans v. Harries, 33 Eng. L. & Eq. 347.

It has been argued in support of the demurrer that the declaration is bad because it does not aver that the asserted lien has been ended in favor of the plaintiff, either by the limitation prescribed by the Code, or by a decree of the chancery court. But this was not necessary. The want of analogy between the present case and Young v. Gregorie, 8 Call, 446, and other similar cases, holding that in an action for malicious prosecution in suing out an attachment without cause the declaration must aver that the attachment has been ended, is obvious. The case much more nearly resembles that of Grainger v. Hill, 4 Bing. N. C. 212, in which case it was ruled that in an action for abusing the process of the court in order to effect an object not within the scope of the writ, as to compel the defendant illegally to give up his property, it is not necessary to aver and prove that the action in which the process was improperly employed has been determined, or that the process was sued out without probable cause.

The judgment must therefore be reversed, the demurrer overruled, and the case remanded for further proceedings.

MISSISSIPPI SUPREME COURT.

ILLINOIS CENTRAL R. CO., Appt.,
v.
A. F. MINOR.

(.....Miss.....)

1. An appeal on a special bill of exceptions will not be dismissed for lack of a general bill which could not be considered for any purpose whatever.

2. A common carrier is required to protect a passenger from an unprovoked assault of a fellow passenger, if the conductor knew that it was threatened and could have prevented it with the assistance of employes and willing passengers.

NOTE.—Duty of carrier to protect passenger from assault by fellow passenger.

In New Orleans, St. L. & C. R. Co. v. Burke, 53 Miss. 200, 24 Am. Rep. 639, referred to in the above opinion, plaintiff's hat was taken from him and he went in search of the conductor, who returned with him to the car where his tormentors were and requested them to return the hat, immediately after which they began an assault on the complaining passenger. The conductor remonstrated and

3. The defense that a passenger who was injured by riotous conduct of fellow passengers voluntarily placed himself in danger thereof, cannot be raised for the first time on appeal.
4. The court cannot instruct the jury that their verdict must not exceed a certain sum although two former verdicts on the same evidence have been set aside as excessive and the verdict on a third trial is made conclusive by statute.
5. The constitutionality of a statute making the third verdict conclusive as to the amount of damages cannot be attacked for the first time on appeal.
6. An instruction that a railroad company is bound to exercise very great vigilance and care in maintaining order and guarding passengers against violence will require a reversal against such a company for lack of care, although other instructions correctly require a lower degree of care.

(May 22, 1892.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Panola County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been received by plaintiff while a passenger on defendant's train, in consequence of an assault from another passenger. Reversed.

The case sufficiently appears in the opinion. Messrs. Moyes & Harris for appellant. Messrs. Shands & Johnson and W. D. Miller for appellee.

Woods, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The motion of the appellee to dismiss the left the car followed by the assaulted passenger and his assailants. The conductor rendered little if any more assistance and the passenger was somewhat injured. The court, after discussing the question, continued, "We conclude that the undoubted power which is vested in railroad officials to preserve peace and good order on their trains and if necessary for this purpose to eject therefrom disorderly persons, carries with it the absolute duty to exercise this power when called upon to do so in a proper case by the other passengers; a failure to discharge this duty stands to some extent upon the same footing as the omission to perform any other official duty and renders the company liable." As limitations the court says it may be necessary in each case to bring home to the conductor knowledge or an opportunity to know that the injuries were threatened and to show that he could have prevented or mitigated them; and that he cannot be expected to accomplish more than he can with train hands and willing passengers. That decision was questioned in Royston v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 67 Miss. 374, in which it was decided that the conductor was absent in another part of the train, not knowing of the assault or that it was threatened.

In the leading case of Pittsburgh, Ft. W. & C. R. Co. v. Hinds, 53 Pa. 517, the rule adopted seems to be that the conductor must do all in his power to protect a passenger, and if he fails to do that the company will be held liable; and that case was followed in Pittsburgh & C. R. Co. v. Pillow, 76 Pa. 511.

The carrier will be held liable when by the exercise of proper care the acts of violence might have been foreseen and prevented. Britton v. Atlanta & C. A. L. R. Co., 88 N. C. 644.

16 L. R. A.

appeal, and to affirm the judgment of the court below, must be denied. If the appellant had made its motion in the court below to set aside the third verdict, and the same had been overruled, two former verdicts for the appellee having already been set aside for errors not of law, and the appellant had excepted, and had then brought his appeal to this court on a general bill of exceptions to this action of the trial court, we could not have considered it for any purpose whatever, as has been repeatedly held in this state. See Strickland v. Hudson, 55 Miss. 285, and Bowers v. Ross, 55 Miss. 218, and the earlier cases therein cited. What reason can be assigned, then, for requiring the appellant to do this vain and fruitless thing? That the proper course was pursued in excepting to the action of the trial court in giving and refusing instructions, and in presenting the appeal on a special bill of exceptions, is not open to controversy. See Ray v. McCary, 26 Miss. 404; Thornton v. Feliciana R. Co., 29 Miss. 148; Garnett v. Kirkman, 38 Miss. 389; Parham v. Stith, 61 Miss. 199; and the cases already cited in 55 Miss. supra.

1. The action of the court in refusing the peremptory instruction prayed by the appellant is the error first assigned; and this assignment is elaborately and strongly supported on three grounds, viz.: (a) That no cause of action was presented by the declaration, nor was any made out by the evidence, a carrier not being required to protect a passenger from the assault of his fellow passenger; (b) that the evidence fails to show that the injury complained of was inflicted by a fellow passenger, or by any one on the

It is the duty of the conductor to use the utmost vigilance and carefulness in maintaining order and protecting passengers from the violence of others; but he must have knowledge of the threatened danger. Spohn v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 87 Mo. 80; Jackson v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 104 Mo. 452.

The carrier is bound to see that no harm comes to a passenger from a fellow passenger whose condition and conduct clearly show that he is a dangerous person; when train hands are changed the new ones must be informed as to passengers who need watching. King v. Ohio & M. R. Co. (Ind.), 18 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 386.

It is its duty to provide ready help sufficient to protect passengers against assaults from every quarter from which they might reasonably be expected to occur under the circumstances of the case and the condition of the parties. Britton v. Atlanta & C. A. L. R. Co. supra.

Where a conductor when appealed to for aid, instead of granting protection, insulted and left a passenger to his fate, exemplary damages against the company were held proper. Flannery v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 4 Mackey, 111.

The carrier is liable for injuries inflicted on a civilian passenger by the discharge of a gun dropped on the deck of the steamer by a soldier who was engaged in a struggle with another soldier. Flint v. Norwich & N. Y. Transp. Co., 34 Conn. 554.

If a person employed by a conductor to expel a passenger from a train strikes him unjustifiably in expelling him, the company will be liable although the blows were struck against the conductor's orders. Coleman v. New York & N. H. R. Co., 106 Mass. 160.

train, or by any person under the control of the servants of the railroad company in charge of the train, and (c) that, if the liability of the carrier to a passenger for injury inflicted by a fellow passenger be conceded, then this case does not fall within that rule, because Minor voluntarily placed himself in a position of exceptional danger, consented to the disorder, and did not claim the protection of the carrier or its servants.

On the first contention, we have to say that while the rule announced and applied in the case of New Orleans, St. L. & O. R. Co. v. Burke, 58 Miss. 200, does not command the concurrence of our judgment, yet we are not to be understood as denying all responsibility on the part of railroad companies for injuries suffered by one passenger at the hands of his fellow passenger. Our dissatisfaction arises out of the application, mistakenly made, as we conceive, to the facts of that case. The case, as it seems to us, involves the making of a bad precedent to meet a hard case. But the decision has stood unassailed for sixteen years, and the doctrine, with the limitations put upon it by the court in its opinion, has been accepted and acted upon as the rule of the passenger's rights and of the railway's responsibility, through this long period; and, as intimated in Royston v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 67 Miss. 376, we "feel constrained to yield to that decision as authority for the rule it announces." But, as was declared by us in Royston's Case, "we shall certainly not extend the doctrine so as to embrace any other than a case clearly falling within it." The Burke Case has been carefully reviewed by us, and its doctrine protractedly and repeatedly examined, and we decline to overrule the case and repudiate the rule.

The second contention under the assignment we cannot consider. In the peculiar attitude in which the appeal is presented to us, we can only look to the evidence contained in the special bill of exceptions for the purpose of passing upon the alleged errors of law said to have been committed by the trial court. Of course, if it appeared that there was absolutely no evidence showing or tending to show that Minor's injury was inflicted by a fellow passenger, the peremptory instruction should have been given; but the record discloses much testimony tending to show that the hurt was done by a fellow passenger, and this disputed question of fact has, by three successive verdicts, been found in Minor's favor.

The third contention under this first assignment, to the effect that Minor voluntarily placed himself in a position of exceptional danger, consented to the risks of the riotous conduct of his fellow passengers, and did not claim protection of the company, strongly impresses us, and, if supported by evidence, would seem to put this case without the general rule that imposes liability upon the railroad company for injuries inflicted upon one passenger by his fellow passenger. If Minor in fact voluntarily put himself in a position of known, apparent, exceptional danger, and took the chances of hurt from his drunken and disorderly fellow passengers, on a Sunday excursion train of negroes

The corporation was held liable where a drunken and indecent person was knowingly admitted to a street-car and subsequently assaulted a passenger riding in the car. Hendricks v. Sixth Ave. R. Co. 12 Jones & S. 8.

The company was held liable where it permitted a riot to occur on its cars in consequence of which a passenger was injured. Holly v. Atlanta St. R. Co. 61 Ga. 215, 34 Am. Rep. 97.

The general doctrine was recognized in Putnam v. Broadway & S. A. R. Co., 55 N. Y. 103, 14 Am. Rep. 190, but held not to apply to the facts of that case, the conductor not being aware of the intended assault.

For neglect of this duty the liability is no more extensive than in case of the negligence from which an injury comes to the person or property of the passenger from other causes: the liability is limited to such damages as are within the contemplation of the contract between the carrier and the passenger or within the scope of the former's duty. Weeks v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 72 N. Y. 60.

Where there was nothing to show circumstances calculated to warn the railroad employees of the possibility of the assault, the company was held not liable. Felton v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 69 Iowa, 480.

There is no liability where there is no proof that the officials did not sufficiently protect the passenger and they testify that they did all they could to prevent the assault. McGuinn v. Forbes, 37 Fed. Rep. 639.

Where the assault was sudden and the conductor had no reason to anticipate it and interfered as soon as he could the company was held not liable. Mullan v. Wisconsin Cent. R. Co. 46 Minn. 474.

16 L. R. A.

The company is not liable for an injury inflicted on a passenger by a mob if it was without power to prevent them. Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Pillsbury (Ill.) 6 West. Rep. 790.

But it may be negligence to carry non-union working men to work for an employer against whom there is an organized strike and stop the train to let them off at a place not the regular station, if such course will be likely to subject passengers to assault from the strikers. Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Pillsbury, 11 West. Rep. 757, 123 Ill. 10.

In England it seems that if the company does not know of the passenger's danger when it sells him his ticket, and there is nothing about his fellow passengers to cause the company to think they are dangerous, it is not bound to protect him from assaults although the trainmen have knowledge of such assaults. Pounder v. North Eastern R. Co. [1892] 1 Q. R. 235.

In that case the plaintiff had incurred the ill-will of certain pit-men and they took passage in the same carriage with him and embraced the opportunity to assault him.

This doctrine is comparatively modern and in several cases is characterized as novel and a disposition is manifested to repudiate it, but in Winnegar v. Central Pass. R. Co., 85 Ky. 558, in which the assault was made by a servant of the company, the court said: "It is now well settled that the law implies a contract for the protection of the party carried from insults and wanton interference of strangers, fellow passengers, the carrier himself, and his servants. See also Goddard v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 57 Me. 222, 2 Am. Rep. 39; Sherley v. Billings, 8 Bush, 147, 8 Am. Rep. 451; Chicago & R. R. Co. v. Flexman, 103 Ill. 550, 42 Am. Rep. 33.

H. P. F.

mainly, and if he continued, from Memphis to Love's station, to retain his position, in the face of great apparent danger, without any effort to avoid the same, and without any complaint to the railroad company's servants, we would be inclined to the opinion that his case is exceptional, and not embraced in the rule announced in the Case of Burke. But no such question was presented to the court below, nor was any such issue tried by the jury. To say now that the peremptory instruction should have been given for the railroad company, in view of the theory we are considering, on the principle volenti non fit injuria, would be to permit a new case to be made here, and the controversy to be determined on an issue never raised or tried below. This we cannot do, much as we are impressed by the view now advanced by counsel in this court.

2. We come next to consider the contentions numbered 5 and 6 in the abstract of counsel for appellant. These may be properly examined together, and thus looked at the contention is this: that the third instruction given for the plaintiff was erroneous, in that it informed the jury that they were the judges of the amount of damages to be assessed, and that they should be governed by the evidence disclosing the circumstances of the case, without adding thereto the qualification that, under the peculiar attitude of the case, they could not exceed the sum of $5,000, or a sum not materially in excess of that awarded by the former verdict. The argument in support of this proposition is that the trial court, in the exercise of the power confided to it to prevent the gross injustice of unconscionable verdicts by juries, resulting from passion or prejudice, had twice set aside verdicts, one for $8,000, and the other for $10,000, on the sole ground that they were excessive, and, the third trial having been had on the evidence produced on the former trials, the court should have interposed its power to prevent a repetition of the imposition of damages in the amount already held by the court to be excessive,—the product of passion or prejudices. In other words, as we understand it, the court, by the addition of the qualification named, should have prevented the jury from passing the bound twice determined by the court, on the same testimony, to be proper. But we submit that this course on the part of the learned court, while professedly taken in vindication of the essential prerogatives and powers of a court of justice, would have been really a finding by the court, and would have been an invasion of the constitutional right of the appellee to have a finding by the jury. Say the counsel, in weighty words: "Under the constitution of our judicial system, the power is committed to the judge, in the exercise of a sound discretion, to check the imposition of unconscionable verdicts, the results of passion or of prejudice. It would be idle, and, we respectfully submit, a judicial farce, to concede such a power, if it is to be not merely nullified, but even, as in this case, made to act as a sort of boomerang, simply by the persistence of successive juries. It would then be no power. Its only practical result would be to punish the defendant for an effort by the court to shield him within reasonable limits. The greatness, itself, of the passion, the very invincibility of prejudice, will lead inevitably to the result attained here,—that on the subsequent trial the verdict will be increased by the action of the court, striving within the limits of its authority for the reverse; and on the third trial, when the court and the defendant are run into the cui-de-sac of the statute," the defendant will be without any protection from the passion or prejudice of the jury. If the appellant had pressed the views impugning the strength and validity of our statute, which is thus indirectly assailed, upon the attention of the trial court, in support of a motion for a new trial, and had pressed them here on us, a new trial having been denied below, we should consider and pronounce upon their weight; but, as the statute was not assailed on the trial below, it is impossible for us to intimate any opinion now, nor are we to be understood as making any intimation whatever touching the constitutionality of the statute complained of.

16 L. R. A.

8. Having thus failed to agree with the counsel for appellant, we come now at last to consider the remaining error complained of, to which we think it necessary to advert. It is asserted that the first and second instructions given for the appellee were erroneous, and in conflict with the charges of the appellant. The first instruction complained of is objectionable because of its abstract character. It is a long compilation of mere abstract propositions, and contains no sort of reference or application of its statements of law to the case in hand. But it is not alone objectionable on account of this very prevalent vice of indoctrinating a jury by the statement of legal abstractions. The opening statement, the initial legal abstraction, is palpably incorrect, and was doubtless misleading. This instruction informs the jury that "railroad companies are bound to exercise very great vigilance and care in maintaining order, guarding passengers against violence, from whatever source arising," etc. If this is correct, the jury was told that the highest degree of vigilance and care was the test to be applied to the conduct of the railroad's servants in guarding Minor and other passengers. Or to put it in another way, for the purpose of exposing its unsoundness, if the conductor and servants of the railroad company were in the slightest degree wanting in vigilance and care, then Minor was entitled to a recovery. Stated in any form the proposition is not true. Nor do we understand the learned counsel of the appellee to so contend. Their position seems to be that, even if this charge be erroneous in this particular, yet its hurtfulness is cured in other instructions given, in which the jury was told that reasonable care and diligence was the measure of the appellant's accountability. In the face of the irreconcilable conflict in the instructions touching the measure of care and diligence on the part of the railroad company, can it be affirmed that the first instruction for appellee, which informed the jury that very great vigilance and care was the measure of appellant's duty, may not have tended to produce the result arrived at? Can it be said that in the absence of this erroneous instruction the jury would have rendered the same verdict? We feel constrained to answer negatively. Wherefore, for this error of law, committed by the court below in giving the first instruction for the appellee, the judgment is reversed, a venire de novo awarded, and the cause remanded.

FLORIDA SUPREME COURT.

FLORIDA SOUTHERN R. CO., Appt.,

Walter J. HIRST.

(.....Fla.....)

*1. A negligent act done prior to the Statute of June 7, 1887, § 2345, Rev. Stat., and resulting in injury to another, will not sustain an action for damages if negligence upon the part of the person injured was contributory to his incurring such injury. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Yntestra, 21 Fla. 700, affirmed.

2. The law requires of railroad companies the exercise of the highest degree of care for the safety of passengers traveling upon their trains; and it authorizes such companies to make, and requires passengers to observe, all rules reasonably necessary for the safety of the latter. A rule of a railroad company requiring that passengers shall remain in the cars provided for them, and, consequently, that they shall not ride in an express car, or

*Head notes by RANNEY, Ch. J.

NOTE.—Passenger's riding in baggage or express car as contributory negligence.

Where there is a statute providing that in case a passenger is injured while riding in a baggage car contrary to the rules of the company there can be no recovery, such statute is conclusive and no suit for recovery can prevail. Higgins v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 36 Mo. 434.

Where there is no rule on the subject it seems that it would be immaterial that the passenger was riding in the baggage car unless perhaps in case he had been forbidden to do so by a servant of the company. Washburn v. Nashville & C. R. Co. 8 Head, 642, 75 Am. Dec. 784.

So where a postal clerk is returning to his run and takes his place in the postal car, he is not guilty of such contributory negligence as will defeat his recovery in case he is injured, if there is no rule of the company forbidding him to do so. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. State, 6 L. R. A. 706, 72 Md. 38.

Violation of rules.

Where there are rules of the company which prohibit a passenger from riding in a baggage car, and the passenger with knowledge of such rule deliberately violates it and takes his place in such car, he cannot recover damages if he is injured while there. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Langdon, 22 Pa. 21, 37 Am. Rep. 651.

So where the passenger knows that the rules of the company prohibit his being in the baggage car, and he goes there without necessity, even though with the knowledge of the conductor, and is injured by a wreck of the train, he cannot recover if he would not have been injured had he remained in the passenger car. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Clemmons, 55 Tex. 88, 40 Am. Rep. 799.

But being in the baggage car without knowledge of the rule forbidding it is not negligence. Jacobus v. St. Paul & C. R. Co. 20 Minn. 125, 18 Am. Rep. 380.

other place of increased danger set apart for another purpose, is reasonable.

3. It is contributory negligence for a passenger to ride in an express car in violation of a known rule of the company, even with the permission, connivance or knowledge of the conductor of the train, or without his protestation against it, when the conductor is cognizant of the rule and of its infraction, if by such violation of the rule the passenger brings upon himself injury from which he would have escaped, notwithstanding that the negligence of the company produced the accident, had he remained in the passenger car set apart, and affording space, for his accommodation.

4. It is the duty of the conductor of a railroad train to enforce a rule of the company requiring passengers to ride in the passenger cars, but the obligation upon passengers and the protection to the company, of a rule of this kind, is not dependent upon the fidelity of the conductor or other agent charged with its enforcement.

5. Where a passenger who knows of a rule requiring him to ride in the pas-bus v. St. Paul & C. R. Co. 20 Minn. 124, 18 Am. Rep. 380.

Where the company was guilty of gross negligence and the conductor had apparently acquiesced in the passenger's being in the express car, he was held entitled to recover. Watson v. Northern R. Co. 24 U. C. Q. B. 103.

Where riding in such car did not contribute to accident.

There is a strong tendency in some of the cases to inquire whether or not by being in the baggage car the passenger increased the risk of injury (see Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Clemmons, 55 Tex. 88, 40 Am. Rep. 799; New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. v. Ball (N. J.) June 1, 1891; Kentucky Cent. R. Co. v. Thomas, 79 Ky. 167, 42 Am. Rep. 208; Carroll v. New York & N. H. R. Co. 1 Duer, 580); and in one case where it appeared that he probably escaped death by being there the court held that a charge that the jury should determine whether plaintiff by being in that car contributed to the injury and that if he did he could not recover was as favorable to defendant as he could ask. Webster v. Rome, W. & O. R. Co. 23 N. Y. S. R. 778.

It is immaterial that the passenger was in the baggage car if his being there was not the proximate cause of the injury. Jacobus v. St. Paul & C. R. Co. 20 Minn. 125, 18 Am. Rep. 380.

Where the accident consisted of the overturning of the baggage car the court held that the passenger's going into the baggage car to get some article of baggage was such a plain act of negligence that he could not recover for injuries received while there by reason of such accident. Peoria & R. I. R. Co. v. Lane, 83 Ill. 449.

Power of conductor to waive rule.

Whether or not the conductor can waive a rule senger cars, rides in an express car or other place on the train which cannot be regarded as intended for accommodation of passengers, but naturally suggests that it was not intended for them, the burden is upon him to prove that he was justified in riding in such prohibited place.

6. If a railway company which has a rule prohibiting passengers from riding in the express car, or in other cars than the passenger cars, habitually permits passengers to ride in the express car, it will incur the same responsibility to passengers for injuries received by them, through the company's negligence, when riding in the express car as if they were in a passenger car.

7. Though a passenger, who riding in an express car receives an injury, knows at the time that there is a reasonable rule of the company prohibiting his riding there, cannot invoke the mere delinquency of the conductor in enforcing the rule as a bar to the company's claiming the protection of the rule, still a company may by its conduct abandon the rule, or preclude itself from protection thereunder. It may, by its conduct, have held out its employees in control of its trains, as authorized, notwithstanding such a rule, to consent to plaintiff's riding in an express car; or its employees may have been accustomed to allow passengers to ride in the express car so generally and constantly that the officers of the company must be held to have known of and acquiesced in the violation of the rule; or there may have been such continued and habitual disregard of the rule by the employees as must have reasonably produced the belief that the company had practically abandoned its rule. There must be such conduct as in effect establishes the concurrence of the company in the disregard of the regulation.

8. It is error to submit a case to a jury upon the theory that the virtue or efficiency of a rule prohibiting passengers from riding in express cars is entirely dependent upon the fidelity of the conductor or other agent charged with its enforcement.

9. Where a party has inflicted an injury intentionally, or where it has been done through negligence and hence unintentionally and his conduct in doing it has been wanton or reckless of its injurious consequences, the contributory negligence of the person injured is not a defense to an action brought by him for such injury.

10. The use of the expression "gross negligence" in a charge to a jury does not of itself define, nor does it include only, that extreme degree of negligence which is wanton or reckless of its injurious consequences, and to which the defense of contributory negligence does not obtain, and cannot be held as having been intended to submit the case to a jury for consideration as one of that character, and particularly so where other charges have recognized contributory negligence as a defense to the action.

11. Exemplary damages can be allowed in cases of negligence, only where the negligence is of a gross and flagrant character evincing reckless disregard of human life, or of the safety of persons exposed to its dangerous effects; or there is that entire want of care which would raise the presumption of a conscious indifference to consequences, or which shows wantonness, or recklessness, or a grossly careless disregard of the safety and welfare of the public, or that reckless indifference to the rights of others which is equivalent to an intentional violation of them. As "gross negligence" is not confined to this extreme degree of negligence, it is not proper to charge a jury simply that gross negligence will justify the imposition of such damages.

12. The actual payment of fare is not of the company prohibiting passengers from riding in the baggage car seems to be a question on which there is some conflict. It seems that it is the passenger's duty to obey the instructions of the conductor and go into a baggage car if he so requires. Galena & C. U. R. Co. v. Yarwood, 15 Ill. 458.

It has been held that the conductor's permission to remain in such a car is a waiver of the rule. Jacobus v. St. Paul & C. R. Co. 20 Minn. 125, 18 Am. Rep. 860. See also Watson v. Northern R. Co. 24 U. C. Q. R. 102.

If the passenger is in the baggage car with the assent of the conductor he is where, as between himself and the company, he has a right to be notwithstanding its rule that he cannot ride there, and in case of injury through the company's negligence he may recover unless the injury was caused by being in the baggage car. Carroll v. New York & N. H. R. Co. 1 Duer, 580.

This is especially so if the rule is habitually disregarded. Jones v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 43 Minn. 279.

So where the passenger had no knowledge of the rule, and he and others had frequently been permitted to ride in the baggage car before, and the conductor had accepted and punched their tickets while there, the court held that the passenger took the risk of any injuries from dangers inherent in the construction or use of the car for the purpose of carrying baggage, but that his conduct, even if it be considered as contributing to an injury received from extraneous causes, could not have been deemed to have been negligent. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. v. Ball (N. Y.) June 1, 1891.

If the danger from the particular accident which occurred was materially increased by the fact that the passenger was not in his proper place he cannot recover unless he was where he was with the consent of the conductor; but if the nature of the accident is such that the danger of it was not enhanced in consequence of the position occupied by the passenger, or if he occupied the place with the knowledge of the conductor, his right of recovery will not be affected by the fact that he was in an improper place. Kentucky Cent. R. Co. v. Thomas, 79 Ky. 167, 42 Am. Rep. 208.
16 L. R. A.

The conductor is not bound at the peril of the company to know that the passenger is in a position of danger and warn him away. Kentucky Cent. R. Co. v. Thomas, 79 Ky. 167, 42 Am. Rep. 208.

Where workmen were in the habit of returning from work in the baggage car with the acquiescence of the conductor, the court held that the jury might reasonably conclude that they were there with the permission of the conductor and for the benefit of the company, and that they could recover for injuries received by the breaking of a rail in the roadbed. O'Donnell v. Allegheny Valley R. Co. 59 Pa. 240, 38 Am. Dec. 886.

In Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Langdon, 92 Pa. 21, 37 Am. Rep. 651, the question was very fully discussed as indicated in the principal case, and the case of O'Donnell v. Allegheny Valley R. Co. was distinguished on the ground that in the one case the violation had been going on for two months while in the other the accident occurred during the first violation so far as the injured passenger was concerned, and the court held that the conductor has no authority to waive such a rule. H. P. F.

essential to the status of a passenger on a railroad train.

13. A person who was injured while in an express car of a passenger train had, up to six weeks prior to the accident out of which the action arose, been an express messenger, and had run on the same train with the conductor of the colliding passenger train, but had left such employment and at the time of the accident was engaged in other business not connected with the railroad. On boarding the train he went into the passenger car. He had funds sufficient to pay his fare, but the conductor, who, there was evidence to show, was aware of these facts, omitted, without fault of the party, to ask him for his fare, and gave as a reason for this omission that he thought the party was in the employ of the express company. Held, that the evidence did not justify a conclusion either that the party was attempting to obtain a ride without paying fare, and to this end was practicing a fraud or imposition on the conductor or the company by passing himself off as an express messenger returning to his "run," or that he had at no time the legal status of a passenger thereon.

(June Term, 1892.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Alachua County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have resulted from defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. J. R. Parrott and Robert W. Davis for appellant.

Mr. E. C. F. Sanchez for appellee.

Raney, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court*:

This is an action to recover damages received by Walter J. Hirst in a collision between two trains on appellant's railroad, Hirst being on a passenger train, which was on its schedule time, and the other train being a special, or extra, train loaded with iron rails.

The rule as to negligence announced by this court in Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Ynietra, 21 Fla. 700, is that notwithstanding a person may be guilty of a negligent act from which injury results to another, still if the party injured has by his own negligence contributed to his receiving the injury, he cannot recover damages from the other party for such injury. The injury must have been caused solely by the negligence of the former party to entitle the latter to recover. This decision, which we see no reason to disturb, necessarily, even though impliedly, repudiates the doctrine of comparative negligence, which has found favor in the Illinois and other courts; and it dispenses with the necessity of our noticing the citations from those states made by appellee's counsel. The injury in question was received prior to the passage of the Act of June 7, 1887, chapter 8744, Laws of Florida, and hence the provision of the first section of this statute as to diminishing damages in proportion to the amount of the default of the plaintiff, where both parties are at fault, has no application.

There is in the cause before us testimony to the effect that Hirst on boarding the train got on the passenger car; and that a rule of the Florida Southern Railway Company, appellant, forbade passengers from riding in any other than the passenger car, or, consequently, in the express car, in which car Hirst had gone and was at the time of the accident, he being six feet from the fore end of it, and sitting on the iron express box; and that the plaintiff knew of such rule; and also to the effect that this car was next to the engine, and was a more dangerous place than the passenger car, and was neither set apart as, nor was it in fact, the place where passengers usually rode, and was not arranged for them, nor had any seats, but was for the use of the express company; also that the plaintiff had ridden in the express car previously on the trip on the day of the accident in question, and that the conductor had been in there with him a short time, and that plaintiff had gone in there with the conductor and by his permission, or with his at least tacit consent; and tending to show that the conductor also knew that the plaintiff was in this car at the time of the collision between the passenger train and the special train loaded with iron rails. It was also testified that there was ample room in the passenger car, and that the plaintiff would not have been injured if he had been in the passenger car, and that he and the express agent were the only ones injured. There was no testimony tending to show that the conductor attempted to enforce the rule, or even suggested to the plaintiff the advisability of its observance, although the conductor says that plaintiff was not in the car by his permission. Hirst had not paid any fare, nor had the conductor applied to him for it.

Exceptions taken by the defendant to charges given to the jury, and to the refusal of one asked by the defendant, involve an inquiry into the legal effect of a rule of a railroad company forbidding passengers to ride in parts of the train set apart for other purposes, and naturally more dangerous than passenger cars, and of the power of conductors to waive such rules.

In Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Moore, 49 Tex. 81, 80 Am. Rep. 98, the deceased, when he received the injuries from which he died, was riding on a freight train with the knowledge and consent of the conductor, but whether he had paid fare, or had a pass or permit, was not shown. He was the only person, except the employes of the company, on the train, and prior to a month or six weeks before his death, had run on the company's road for a year or two as an engine driver, and knew that passengers were not allowed to travel on the company's freight trains, and that officers in charge of such trains were forbidden to allow parties to ride on them without a special pass from the general superintendent of the road, which passes were not given, in view of the increased risks, without a release of the company from liability in cases of accidents to passengers. The decision of the court was that a regulation that freight and passengers shall be carried on separate trains is reasonable, and highly salutary to both the company and the public; and no one has the right to demand that he shall be allowed to ride on trains devoted exclusively to the carriage of freight, when the company makes other and suitable provisions for the transportation of passengers; and that a party who in violation of such regulation, and without the consent of the company, forces himself into one of its freight trains cannot hold the company responsible to him as a passenger, or recover of the company for injury thus contributed to by him while thus wrongfully on the train. That while it might be true that when the company should, notwithstanding such a regulation, habitually permit persons to travel on its freight trains it would be liable to such passenger the same as if he were on a regular passenger car, still when there is such a regulation, and there are no cars attached to freight trains except those ordinarily accompanying trains exclusively of this character, or only such cars as by their appearance or the manner in which they are fitted up, cannot be regarded as inviting persons on freight trains as passengers, the burden of proving that the party injured on such a train was justified in going on it as a passenger is upon him; and the conclusion of the court was that the evidence showed that the conductor did not have authority to waive the regulation, and that the deceased must have known this.

*Judge Young, of the fourth circuit, sat in the place of Mr. Justice Taylor, who was disqualified.)

In Prince v. International & G. N. R. Co., 64 Tex. 144, the injuries of the plaintiff were alleged to have been received through the negligence of defendant's employes while he was riding on a hand car on which he was invited to ride, and on which he was received as a passenger, and that the company sometimes used such car for the transportation of passengers invited to travel on it by the proper agents of the company free of charge; and the questions arose on a demurrer to the petition. The order overruling the demurrer was affirmed, and it was held that a railway company is liable in damages to one who is injured by the negligence of its agents while traveling on a hand car of the company, on which he had been invited to ride by the agent of the company in charge of the car free of charge, it appearing that such a car was sometimes used by the company for the transportation of passengers, and not shown that any regulation of the company prohibited traveling on such a car. In the opinion, the effect of the decision in Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Moore, supra, is stated to be that the question whether or not a passenger is lawfully on a train does not depend necessarily upon the purposes to which the train is usually devoted; if, however, the train is usually employed in the transportation of passengers, a person who has paid his fare, or has been invited to ride free of charge, is presumed to be lawfully on the train. That if by the rules of the company passengers are expressly forbidden to be carried upon particular trains, the presumption is that any one claiming to be a passenger upon such a train is an intruder, and 16 L. R. A. without lawful right to be there; but this presumption may be rebutted by showing that, though the rules forbid the transportation of passengers on such trains, yet, with the knowledge of the company, and without objection on its part, persons are habitually permitted to take passage on them. That the company, through its proper officers, having the right to make these rules, may, through the same officers, relax or dispense with them, and the public are authorized to consider them dispensed with when not practically enforced. The conductor cannot relax these regulations without the consent of the company, because he is the agent whose special duty it is to see that they are enforced, and any relaxation of the rule on his part would be a disobedience of the orders of his superiors. The case of Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Campbell, 76 Tex. 174, was one in which the plaintiff sued for personal injuries suffered when upon a freight train, and there was evidence that he was refused passage by the conductor who told him he had no authority to carry passengers and could not; but that subsequently plaintiff was given permission to board the train by a man who stood on the platform and had a lantern in his hand, and in reply to the question, if he had charge of the train, answered affirmatively. It was held that plaintiff's presence on the train was not with the company's consent, and that he contributed to his injury, and among the charges held to have been improperly refused was one embodying what is set out above in the last three sentences relating to the Prince Case.

In Robertson v. New York & E. R. Co., 22 Barb. 91, a railroad company by its printed rules and regulations prohibited its engineers from allowing any one, not in its employ, to ride on the engines. The plaintiff applied to the engineer to ride upon his engine, and was informed that it was against the rules of the company to permit it, but finally consented, and plaintiff rode there, without the knowledge of the conductor, and without paying fare; and it was held that the consent of the engineer conferred no legal right, and that the plaintiff, as he was not lawfully on the engine, was a wrong-doer, and that he could not recover damages for injuries incurred, through the negligence or want of skill of the defendant, while he was riding there; and further, that the onus was upon the plaintiff to show that the engineer had authority to permit him to ride on the engine, the presumption being that he had no right to be there, whether he paid fare or not. In the opinion it is said: "The plaintiff, without information on the subject from any of the defendants' agents or servants, had no right to presume that the engineer had authority from the defendants to permit him to ride upon the engine, especially as he paid no fare. The presumption was against his right to be upon the engine, whether he paid fare or rode free. The engine is not the place where even that class of passengers who pay no fare usually ride."

Eaton v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co., 57 N. Y. 382, 15 Am. Rep. 518, is a case in which it is held that where a railroad company makes, as it has the right to do, a complete separation of freight and passenger business, a freight conductor has such general authority only as is incidental to the business of moving freight, and no power as to the transportation of passengers; and notice of this limited authority will be implied from the nature and apparent division of the business. It was further decided that the presumption is, that a stranger riding on a freight train is not legally a passenger, and is not lawfully upon the train, and no liability for negligence can be imposed upon the company as to him, unless the special circumstances of the case rebut this presumption. The plaintiff was invited by the conductor of a coal train on defendant's road, to ride in the "caboose," with a promise to get him employment as a brakeman. No passenger car was attached to it, but, in addition to the coal cars, only the "caboose," for carriage of train implements and the accommodation of the train employés. Through the negligence of the defendant's employés the train was run into by another, and plaintiff while riding in the caboose, was injured. By a regulation of the defendant, printed for the use of the employés, passengers were forbidden to ride on coal trains, but of this plaintiff had no actual notice. It did not appear that passengers were permitted to ride, even occasionally, in the caboose. The trial court instructed the jury that if the plaintiff was upon the train with the assent of the conductor, and without being informed of the regulation, the defendant was liable; but the conclusion of the court of appeals was that this was error; that there was nothing in the attendant circumstances indicating any apparent authority in the conductor to create between the parties the relation of passenger and carrier, or to make an arrangement for plaintiff's employment as a brakeman, and that the facts did not establish that the plaintiff was lawfully on the train.

The same rule as to the presumption that persons riding upon trains which are palpably not designed for the carriage of passengers is announced in Waterbury v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., cited below.

Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Langdon, 92 Pa. 21, 37 Am. Rep. 651, presents a case in which one Langdon died from injuries received in a collision of trains, such collision resulting from a misunderstanding of orders by the conductor of the train on which Langdon was. On boarding the train he went immediately to the baggage car, and was engaged in conversation with the baggage master when the collision occurred, the train having proceeded but a short distance in a brief period of time. He was in the employ of the defendant company as a night inspector of locomotives at the outer Pittsburgh depot of the Pennsylvania Railroad, and was not at work on the branch road, the Western Pennsylvania Railroad, operated by defendant company, on which branch road he was killed. He was riding on a commutation ticket, such as were ordinarily sold to passengers, and is accorded the position of a passenger, in the opinion. He lived on the line of the Western Pennsylvania Railroad, and was in the habit of riding to and from his home daily on that road. When injured, he was in the baggage car contrary to a printed notice posted in it forbidding any passenger from riding therein. It appeared that no harm would have occurred to the deceased had he gone into any other car on the train. The defense relied on was that he was in the baggage car in violation of the rule of the company, and with positive knowledge, as a railroad employé, that he had gone into a forbidden place, and was there at his own peril, and that by this unlawful act, he had been the occasion of his death, and was guilty of contributory negligence. Plaintiff introduced evidence tending to show that Langdon was in the car with the implied assent of the conductor of the train, but not with express consent or permission to ride there. It was held that a passenger who voluntarily leaves his proper place in the passenger car of a railroad train, and rides in the baggage car or other place of danger, in violation of a known rule of the company, and is injured in consequence of such violation, cannot recover damages for the injury, though the accident by which it was occasioned was the result of the negligence of the company, and that a railroad conductor cannot, in violation of a known rule of his company, license a passenger to occupy a place of danger,—e. g., the baggage car—and by such license render the company responsible for injury incurred by the passenger in consequence of his violation of the rule; and that a conductor cannot waive a rule which, by its very terms, he is commanded to enforce; that he may neglect to enforce it, and if it is a mere police regulation, such neglect may amount to a waiver of it as between the passenger and the company, but not so when the rule is for the protection of human life, as is one prohibiting passengers from riding in places of increased danger.

In the opinion in the last case the Pennsylvania court draws a distinction between the violation of a rule whose object is the safety of passengers, and those which are merely for the comfort of passengers, or for the convenience of the railroad company, observing that where the rule is for the convenience of the company, the company will be liable unless the violation of the rule caused the accident, whereas in the other case it is sufficient to relieve the company that the injury was received in consequence of the violation of the rule; and this, notwithstanding the fact that the negligence of the company's servants was the cause of the accident. The opinion also states the distinction, and the want of any inconsistency, between Langdon's Case and that of O'Donnell v. Allegheny V. R. Co., 59 Pa. 239, the conclusion in which case, it is said, was, on account of its facts, mainly upon the ground that the plaintiff and his associates had been riding in the baggage car daily for two months under circumstances which would justify the jury in finding that their doing so was an arrangement for the benefit of the company, rather than as ordinary passengers; while, on the other hand, Langdon "was riding in the baggage car for his own convenience and to have a chat with the baggage master, with whom he appeared to have been intimate." The court also distinguishes the case of Lackawanna & E. R. Co. v. Chenoweth, 52 Pa. 882, 91 Am. Dec. 168, as one where the rule violated had no relation to the safety of the plaintiff as a passenger, the fact being that the plaintiff induced some of the company's employes, in the absence of the superintendent, to attach his freight car to a passenger train, in violation of a rule of the company, he agreeing to run all risks and to attend to the brakes on his freight car; and that of Creed v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 86 Pa. 139, 27 Am. Rep. 698, where the plaintiff was riding in a caboose car, in violation of the rules of the company, on a mixed passenger and freight train, but it did not appear that the rule was one intended for the safety of the passenger, and was not claimed that the car was a place of danger.

In Virginia Midland R. Co. v. Roach, 88 Va. 376, the plaintiff, Roach, knew, or from the fact that he had been for months, until recently, an employe of the defendant company, should have known, that its rules forbid any one except the engineer and fireman to ride on its engines, yet, upon the invitation of the engineer or conductor, he got on the engine, and while riding there the train was negligently thrown off the track and he was injured; and the decision was that he could not recover. See also Waterbury v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 21 Blatchf. 814.

The doctrine of these authorities as to the absence of power in a conductor to waive rules intended for the safety of passengers is in effect approved in Beach on Contributory Negligence, 2d ed. §§ 151-164, and Patterson's Railway Accident Law, 288-290.

There are, however, other authorities which need to be noticed: Hutchinson, Carriers, § 654, and Jacobus v. St. Paul & O. R. Co. 20 Minn. 125, 18 Am. Rep. 860, and Dunn v. Grand Trunk R. Co. of Canada, 58 Md. 187, 4 Am. Rep. 267. The commentator named says: "Even where the riding in such car is against the rules of the company, of which the passenger is informed, if he is in it with the knowledge of the conductor and without any attempt on his part to enforce the rule by removing the passenger, his presence there would not be such negligence as would exonerate the company from the consequence of its negligence or want of care." The doctrine of the stated Minnesota case, which he cites, seems to sustain his assertion, but the same cannot be said of such of the other cases cited by him as are within our reach: Washburn v. Nashville & O. R. Co. 8 Head, 638, 75 Am. Dec. 784; Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Derby, 55 U. S. 14 How. 468, 14 L. ed. 502,—for in neither of these was there any question of the effect of a rule like that in question, and, according to what is said in Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Langdon, 92 Pa. 82, 37 Am. Rep. 361, the same observation is true of Carroll v. New York & N. H. R. Co. 1 Duer, 571, a case not at hand, as it is of Baltimore & O. P. Co. v. State, 72 Md. 86, 6 L. R. A. 16 L. R. A.

706. Of the Minnesota case it may be observed that in McVeety v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co., 45 Minn. 268, 11 L. R. A. 174, where it was held that if a person knowingly induces the conductor of a railroad train to violate a rule of his company, and carry him without charge, he is guilty of a fraud on the company and cannot claim the rights of a passenger, it is said, citing the second and third cases supra, from Texas, and other authorities, that the same result follows if he rides upon a part of the train from which passengers are excluded, knowing that his act is against the rules of the carrier, and in permitting it the conductor is disobedient. The case of Dunn v. Grand Trunk R. Co., supra, is one in which there was evidence tending to show that the plaintiff entered the saloon car attached to defendant's freight train; that the conductor saw him when the train started, and they conversed together; that he paid the conductor the usual fare; that the saloon car was thrown from the track and plaintiff injured; and was also testimony tending to show that the conductor notified the plaintiff when the train started that he had no right to carry passengers, but this was denied by the plaintiff. There were rules against passengers traveling on freight trains. The verdict was for plaintiff, and it was affirmed. Of this case it is properly said by the New York Court of Appeals, in Eaton v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co., supra, that it, in its precise facts, is not opposed to the conclusions of the New York court in the case mentioned. That the Maine case was distinguishable from the other by payment of fare and the attachment of a "saloon car," that it was not stated precisely that the saloon car was; that it might be assumed to be one fitted up for the accommodation of passengers, and the company might thus be assumed to have assented to a relaxation of its rules, and that the principle acted on was not to be extended beyond its precise facts. The Pennsylvania court remarks correctly of the same cause in Langdon's Case, supra: "There was no point that it was a place of danger," adding "nor that the rule was intended for the safety of passengers." We will not go into any more critical examination of the Maine case, nor determine whether or not it should be regarded as having been treated, in the opinion of that court, as a case in which the passenger had no knowledge or notice of the rule. We will remark that in discussing the duty of passengers to comply with reasonable rules, and the effect of employes' waiver of such rules, it is observed by Mr. Beach, in the second edition of his work on Contributory Negligence, section 164, citing numerous authorities, that with respect to the carriage of passengers on freight trains the rule is somewhat modified to the effect that whenever the company receives passengers upon its trains and collects fare from them, although it is done in violation of a rule of the company, it is lawful for the passenger to ride, and if, while so riding, he suffers an injury due to the company's negligence, he may have his action; the relation of carrier and passenger being created, notwithstanding the rule, when the passenger is received on the freight train and allowed to pay his fare. An admission of the entire correctness of this proposition is, however, not inconsistent with our conclusions in the case before us, considering its facts.

The law requires of railroad companies the exercise of the highest degree of care for the safety of passengers traveling upon their trains. This care is not due only to the individual as such, but it is also a public duty for the protection of the state's citizens. It would be a strikingly odd system of jurisprudence which, while exacting of the operators of this very dangerous yet highly useful, means of transportation, the duty of extreme care towards those whom they undertake to carry, yet would refuse to permit such transportation companies to require of passengers that they, while being transported, shall confine themselves to the places provided for them as most conducive to their safety, and abstain from riding in parts of a train of greater danger, and set apart for other purposes. Such a system of law would present the hurtful incongruity of demanding a result indispensable to the safety of the traveling public, while, in the same breath, inhibiting an essential of such result. The preservation of the life and limb of the passenger require that he shall conduct himself consistently with, and not in antagonism to, the maintenance of his safety, and this duty involves that of observing all rules of the railroad company which may be reasonably necessary to his protection from harm. A rule which requires that passengers shall remain in the cars set apart for them, and shall not ride in a baggage or an express car, or other place of increased danger, is unquestionably reasonable, and is within the power of a railroad company. See also Toledo, W. & W. R. Co. v. Brooks, 81 Ill. 245, 250.

In view of the law as it is shown above to be, there was error in the following charge given to the jury:

"If you believe from the evidence that the conductor in charge of the defendant's train at the time of the accident knew that the plaintiff was traveling on the train the day the accident occurred, and before the accident occurred, and that the conductor knew that the plaintiff was in the express car and did not forbid his being there, then the court charges you that the plaintiff's being there at the time of the collision would not be contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff."

"If it is contrary to the rules of the defendant company for passengers on its passenger trains to ride in the express car on such trains, and if the conductor of such train knew that that was the company's rule, and that to ride in such express car was accompanied by greater danger than other portions of such train, then it becomes the duty of such conductor to look out for and prevent the riding of passengers in such express cars, if he has knowledge thereof; and if he is cognizant thereof and permits passengers to thus ride in such express cars without taking any steps to prevent them, then the defendant company through such conductor or its agent is guilty of negligence in not taking the necessary steps to prevent its passengers from riding in such dangerous portions of its train and is liable for any damages that may result to such passenger from a collision of such train with another of its trains while such passenger is thus riding."

Of the first of these instructions it is sufficient to say, as can safely be said, that its effect is to reject and entirely ignore the company's rule and the plaintiff's violation of it as constituting any defense to his action. The second charge makes the obligation upon passengers and the protection to a company, of a rule of this kind, even when it is known to the passengers, dependent upon the fidelity of the conductor where he knows that it is being violated; and under such instruction the rule can be of no protection to the company unless, to say the very least, there is some effort on the part of the conductor to enforce it. In this view we do not concur. Our judgment, on the contrary, is that the public welfare and sound reasoning dictate that it should be held contributory negligence for a passenger to violate a known rule of this character, even with the permission, connivance, or knowledge of the conductor, or without his protestation, where that officer is cognizant of both the rule and its infraction, if by the violation of such rule the passenger brings upon himself injury from which he would have escaped, notwithstanding that the negligence of the company produced the accident, had he remained in the passenger car set apart and offering space for his accommodation. Whether there may be an exception to this view in cases of persons of tender years, or other disqualifying characteristics, is not for us to say; the point is not before us; the plaintiff was at the time of the accident not only twenty years of age, but also had been an express messenger on the defendant company's road long enough to render him familiar with the increased danger of riding in an express car next to the engine, over that incident to traveling in a passenger coach in the rear part of the train.

Of course as between the company and the conductor, it is the duty of the latter, as it is of any other agent, to enforce the rules of the company; but when a passenger voluntarily violates a reasonable rule, like that under consideration, which is for his preservation from harm, and brings upon himself injury which he would not otherwise have received, he not only cannot find relief from the consequences of his own negligence in the omission of the conductor to do his whole duty, but besides this, where, knowing of such a rule, he goes from the passenger car into a place like that in question, which cannot be regarded as intended for passengers, but naturally suggests that it is not for them, the burden is upon him to prove that he was justified in going there.

II. Though where the passenger suing knew at the time of the accident that there was a rule of this kind in force, he cannot invoke the mere delinquency of a conductor in enforcing the rule, still it cannot be denied that there may be cases in which the conduct of the company has been such as to amount to an abandonment of the rule, or to preclude itself from claiming protection under it.

In Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Moore it is conceded, as shown above, that it may be true that where a railroad company habitually permits passengers to travel on its freight trains, notwithstanding a regulation to the contrary, it will incur the same responsibility to such passengers as if they were on a regular passenger car. In Jones v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co., 48 Minn. 279, a case in which it was held that the presence of the plaintiff in the baggage part of the combination car was not, under the circumstances of the case or nature of the injury, contributory to his receiving the injury, there was evidence that passengers used the baggage compartment as a smoking room, and the jury found specially that the rule forbidding passengers to be there was not in force; and it was said by the Minnesota court that this finding, read in connection with the evidence, must mean that the rule posted up was not enforced, but was disregarded by the defendant and its servants; and that this being so, it was immaterial that the plaintiff had or had not notice that such a rule had been posted up. There was evidence that the rule had been posted up in the car, but it did not appear that the plaintiff saw or knew the rule. It was also previously observed that even though there was such a rule posted up, if it was not enforced, if the defendant, through its servants in charge, habitually disregarded the rule and permitted passengers to ride in the baggage compartment so that the passenger might assume the rule to have become obsolete, it certainly could not treat the passenger as a wrong-doer from passing through the baggage compartment to reach the passenger division of the car on boarding the same. The facts in Waterbury v. New York Cent. & H. R. Co., 21 Blatchf. 814, were that there was no express contract creating the relation of passenger and carrier between plaintiff and defendant, but on various prior occasions the plaintiff and other drovers, whose cattle were being transported between designated points, had been permitted by the employes of the railroad company to accompany their cattle by the same train, sometimes riding on the cars of the cattle train, and sometimes on the engine. At times the trains were delayed between these points and the cattle required attention, and, as no employe of the defendant was assigned to looking after the cattle, it seemed to be assumed between the employes of the defendant and the drovers that the latter should look after their own cattle. Upon the occasion of the accident, the plaintiff and another drover got upon the engine, there being only box cars on the train, and the engineer inquired of them if they had cattle on the train, and being informed that such was the fact, he made no objection to their riding on the engine. The engine ran off the track in consequence of a misplaced switch and plaintiff was injured. A rule of the company forbade its employes from permitting any person to ride on the engine. The conclusion of the court in this case was that the plaintiff was not entitled to be carried as a passenger as an implied condition of the contract to carry the cattle, but the most that could be claimed was that he was riding on the engine permissively. That the real question in the case was whether he was being carried on the engine with the consent of the defendant, or only by the unauthorized permission or invitation of the defendant's employes. That it should have been left to the jury to determine, as a question of fact, whether the defendant had by its conduct held out its employes to the plaintiff as authorized, under the circumstances, to consent to his being carried on the train with his cattle. That, in this case where the company may have derived some benefit from the presence of drovers upon its cattle trains, and may have allowed its employes in charge of such trains to invite or permit drovers to accompany their cattle, the presumption against a license to the person thus carried may be overthrown; and it should have been left to the jury to determine, as a question of fact, whether, notwithstanding its rules for the government of its employes, the defendant had not held them out as having authority to consent to his being carried; and that if it should appear that its employes had been accustomed to allow drovers to accompany their cattle on the cattle trains so generally and constantly that the officers of the company must have known it, the consent of the company might be predicated upon acquiescence and ratification.

In the case before us the evidence as to the enforcement of the rule was as follows: Hirst said the express car is not the place where passengers usually ride. . . . It is not a place where passengers usually ride, but it is a common occurrence for passengers to go into the express car to ride and talk with the agent. . . . Yes, I knew the company claimed to have a rule that passengers should not ride anywhere but in the passenger cars, but it was never carried out; it was a frequent and common occurrence for friends of the express messenger to come into the express car and sit there and talk with the messenger, and passengers frequently went into the express car and sat around on the baggage and boxes in there, and smoked, and it was never objected to by the conductor. And the conductor Gamble testified: "It was against the rules of the company for passengers to ride in the express car, and Hirst knew it. . . . Passengers frequently sit in the express car, and talk and smoke."

If the trial judge had, upon the basis of this testimony, submitted to the jury the question: whether or not the defendant company had by its conduct held out to the plaintiff its employes in control of the train as authorized, notwithstanding its rule, to consent to his riding in the express car; or whether its employes had been accustomed to allow passengers to ride in the express car so generally and constantly that the officers of the company must have known it, and have acquiesced in the violation; or the question of there having been such continued and habitual disregard of the rule by the employes as must have reasonably produced the belief that the company had practically abandoned its rule, there would still be a question as to the testimony being sufficient to sustain a finding against the company on such theory or theories. Certainly where, as here, a passenger knows of the existence of such a rule, he cannot rely upon any mere delinquency of the conductor or other agent charged with its enforcement; but, on the contrary, there must be something which establishes the concurrence of the company in the disregard of the regulation. There has, however, not been even a submission to the jury of any such question, but the judge gave the case to the jury upon the theory that the virtue of the rule was dependent solely upon the fidelity of the conductor; and in this, as shown above, there was error.

III. In what is said above we have not lost sight of the fact that when the defendant has inflicted the injury intentionally, or when he has done so unintentionally, yet his conduct, though still within the domain of negligence, has been wanton or reckless of its injurious consequences, or, in other words, he has been guilty of what is now called, it may be inaptly, "willful negligence," the contributory negligence of the plaintiff is not a defense. Beach, Contrib. Neg. 2d ed. §§ 61-64; Cooley, Torts, 2d ed. 810; Pulmer v. Chicago, St. L. & P. R. Co. 112 Ind. 250, 11 West. Rep. 676; Brannen v. Kokomo, G. & J. Gravel Road Co. 115 Ind. 115, 14 West. Rep. 837; Banks v. Highland St. R. Co. 136 Mass. 485; Donahoe v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. 83 Mo. 548, 58 Am. Rep. 594; Gothard v. Alabama G. S. R. Co. 67 Ala. 114; Peoria & R. I. R. Co. v. Lane, 83 Ill. 448. Though such wanton or reckless conduct has sometimes been spoken of as "gross negligence," the term does not define it, nor is gross negligence confined to only such an extreme degree of negligence, (Beach, Contrib. Neg. §§ 61, 62; Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. v. Arms, 91 U. S. 489, 23 L. ed. 874; Chattanooga, R. & O. R. Co. v. Liddell, 85 Ga. 482,) and we are entirely satisfied that the term "gross negligence" was not used by the circuit judge in his charge in any such extreme sense, for had it been he would not have recognized contributory negligence as a defense, as he has done in charges not necessary to be set out here. Not only was the case not submitted to the jury for consideration by it in this light, but the facts are not such as would authorize an appellate court to say, as a matter of law, that it was one in which the defense of contributory negligence cannot have a standing (Brannen v. Kokomo, G. & J. Gravel Road Co., supra;) and to treat as harmless the errors pointed out above, and affirm the judgment.

IV. Exemplary damages can be allowed in cases of negligence, as distinguished from those of intentional injury, only where, as was said in Florida R. & Nav. Co. v. Webster, 25 Fla. 394, 419-421, and the authorities 16 L. R. A.

there cited, the negligence is of a gross and flagrant character evincing reckless disregard of human life, or of the safety of persons exposed to its dangerous effects; or there is that entire want of care which would raise the presumption of a conscious indifference to consequences, or which shows wantonness or recklessness, or a grossly careless disregard of the safety and welfare of the public, or that reckless indifference to the rights of others which is equivalent to an intentional violation of them. This being the rule, and the term "gross negligence" not being confined to this extreme degree of negligence, it is not proper to charge a jury simply that gross negligence will justify the imposition of such damages. It leaves the jury to its own ideas, whatever they may be, as to what want of care constitutes the gross negligence authorizing the allowance of such damages. The character of negligence should, instead of using the term "gross negligence," be defined as indicated above, in order that the jury may understand in what cases such damages may be given or inflicted. Chattanooga, R. & O. R. Co. v. Liddell, supra.

V. The testimony does not justify us in concluding that Hirst was attempting, as claimed by counsel for appellant, to obtain a ride without paying fare, and to this end was practicing a fraud or imposition on the conductor or the company, by passing himself off as an express messenger returning to his "run." It is true there is testimony that up to six weeks before the day of the accident he had been an express messenger and had run on the same train with the conductor or who was in charge of the colliding passenger train, but there is also testimony to the effect that he had left this employment, and, at the time of the accident, was engaged in other business at Tampa, and that on boarding the train he went into the passenger car, and that he had funds sufficient to pay his fare. The evidence, moreover, justified the jury in concluding that the conductor was aware of all this. The conductor did not ask him for his fare, and gives as a reason for not doing so that he thought Hirst was in the employ of the express company. There was, however, nothing in the conduct of Hirst to throw upon him any blame for this omission of the conductor.

Under this evidence we cannot conclude that Hirst's presence or his purposes on the train were fraudulent, or that he at no time had the legal status of a passenger thereon. The actual payment of fare is not indispensable to such status. Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Muhling, 80 Ill. 9, 81 Am. Dec. 336; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Books, 57 Pa. 339; Cleveland v. New Jersey S. B. Co. 68 N. Y. 306; The "New World" v. King, 57 U. S. 16 How. 469, 14 L. ed. 1019; Willon v. Middlesex R. Co. 107 Mass. 108, 9 Am. Rep. 11; Philadelphia & R. Co. v. Derby, 55 U. S. 14 How. 648, 14 L. ed. 502; Sherman v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 72 Mo. 62, 37 Am. Rep. 428; Toledo, W. & W. R. Co. v. Beggs, 85 Ill. 80, 28 Am. Rep. 613; Toledo, W. & W. R. Co. v. Brooks, 81 Ill. 245.

The case is of course not one which involves the measure of the duty of a railroad company to an express messenger, or other employe of an express company, traveling in an express car and injured while in the due performance of his ordinary functions, through the negligence of the company or its agents.

There are other assignments of error, but they need not be noticed. What has been said above seems sufficient for future proceedings in the cause.

For the reasons indicated above, the judgment must be reversed, and it will be so ordered.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS (2d Div.).

Wilhelmine STERGER, Appt.,

J. Wyckoff VAN SICLEN, Respnt.

(.....N. Y.....)

1. Permitting the stairway in the rear of a private residence to become decayed and unsafe does not constitute a nuisance as to the occupant of an adjoining house so as to entitle him to damages from its owner if he is injured while attempting to use it for purposes of his own.

2. A property owner owes no duty to one who goes upon his premises in search of a child who is accustomed to play there, to have stairways thereon in a safe condition, the neglect of which will render him liable for injuries received by such person in consequence of the breaking of a step.

(May 2, 1902.)

APPPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the General Term of the Supreme Court, Second Department, affirming a judgment of a Circuit Court for Kings County in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries received by plaintiff in consequence of the breaking of a step in a stairway on defendant's premises. Affirmed.

Statement by Parker, J.:

By this action the plaintiff seeks to recover damages for injuries sustained under the following circumstances: On the afternoon of June 20, 1886, while descending the steps leading from the ground to the rear stoop of premises known as "No. 68 Schenck Avenue," Brooklyn, a step broke, causing her to fall and resulting in injury. The premises were owned by the defendant, but occupied by one Leopold, a tenant, who entered into possession about the 1st of March, 1884. The plaintiff occupied the house next adjoining, and between four and five feet from the one in which Leopold resided. The premises were separated in the rear by a fence through which an opening had been made by knocking off some of the boards. It appeared that the defendant knew of the condition of the steps and agreed to repair them, and he offered evidence tending to show that he made an agreement with the tenant by which he was to make the repairs for a fixed sum, which was deducted from the rent. This testimony was to some extent con-troverted; and, plaintiff's counsel having asked to go to the jury before the court dismissed the complaint, the refusal of such request is assigned for error on this review. But appellant's contention cannot avail if, adopting the view of the evidence most favorable to her, a dismissal of the complaint was required.

Mr. James D. Bell, with Mr. Roswell H. Carpenter, for appellant:

If the premises were in an unsafe and insecure condition to defendant's knowledge when he rented them he is liable in this action although he was not in actual possession at the time the injury happened.

Hungerford v. Bent, 28 N. Y. S. R. 191, affirmed by Court of Appeals, 2d Div. Dec. 1, 1891; Edwards v. New York & H. R. R. Co. 98 N. Y. 247, 50 Am. Rep. 659; Ahern v. Steele, 5 L. R. A. 449, 115 N. Y. 208; Davenport v. Ruckman, 87 N. Y. 568, 574; Timlin v. Standard Oil Co. 126 N. Y. 514.

The duty of a landlord of demised premises which he has agreed to keep in repair towards persons lawfully upon the premises is to keep them in such state of repair as that they will not suffer injury.

Palmer v. Dearing, 98 N. Y. 7; Pell v. Reinhart, 12 L. R. A. 843, 127 N. Y. 881.

Only the tenant can take advantage of the covenant. The landlord's liability to other persons grows out of his general duty not to use his property to the detriment of persons lawfully upon it. In other words it is based upon his negligence and not upon his contract.

Odell v. Solomon, 99 N. Y. 635.

Here the landlord agrees to repair and by reason of that covenant he is privileged to enter upon the premises for a reasonable time, for the purpose of ascertaining the necessary repairs.

Saner v. Bilton, 47 L. J. Ch. Div. 267.

Under such a covenant we understand the law to be that the guest or visitor is not a mere licensee, but he has a right upon the premises, and the landlord is liable to him for the landlord's negligence.

Anderson v. Kryter, 9 Cent. L. J. 385.

Mr. A. Simis, Jr., for respondent:

The plaintiff was not upon the premises where she was injured by reason of any invitation from defendant, either expressed or implied. He was under no duty or obligation to her to keep said premises in repair; conse-

NOTE.—Upon the question of a landowner's duty to a trespasser or licensee, see Schmidt v. Bauer, 5 L. R. A. 580, and note, 80 Cal. 605; note to Wasson v. Pettit (N. Y.) 5 L. R. A. 794; Gordon v. 16 L. R. A.

Cummings, 9 L. R. A. 640, and note, 128 Mass. 512.

For an interesting application of the doctrine in case of one who went upon the premises to attend a wake, see Hart v. Cole (Mass.) ante, 587.

quently there was no negligence as to her which can give a right of action.

Larmore v. Crown Point Iron Co. 2 Cent. Rep. 409, 101 N. Y. 391.

The defendant's covenant with Mrs. Leopold to keep her premises in repair, upon which plaintiff relies, does not inure to the benefit of the plaintiff; such covenant can only be enforced by the covenantee or his assigns.

Odell v. Solomon, 99 N. Y. 635.

Parker, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

We are of the opinion that the evidence does not permit a recovery. No contractual relation exists between the plaintiff and defendant. The covenant of the landlord to repair does not inure to the benefit of a stranger sustaining injury because of its breach. Odell v. Solomon, 99 N. Y. 635. But when the occasion of the injury constitutes a nuisance as to the party complaining, then a landlord may be chargeable in damages, on the ground that he maintains a nuisance, where the contract of letting contains a covenant authorizing him to re-enter for the purpose of making repairs. Ahern v. Steele, 115 N. Y. 203, 5 L. R. A. 449. We are thus brought to the question whether the decayed steps in the rear of defendant's premises, leading from the ground to a stoop, constituted a nuisance as to the plaintiff, who occupied an adjoining house. If so, the defendant, by reason of his covenant to repair, may be responsible for the injury occasioned to plaintiff while walking down them. This inquiry admits of but one answer, and does not seem to be worthy of the citation of authority, but it may not be out of place to refer to the cases cited by the appellant. It may be observed, in passing, that the owner may ordinarily exercise such dominion over, and make such use of, his real estate, as he chooses, provided the rights of others are not thereby violated. No right of the plaintiff was violated. The enjoyment of the premises occupied by her was not interfered with. Had she remained on them the injury would not have occurred. But she chose to go on private property, and up or down back steps, over which she had no authority, and as to which she had acquired no such interest, by contract or otherwise, as would have entitled her to demand as a right that the so-called nuisance be abated. As to her, it was not a nuisance, because it did not invade either her property or personal rights. Murphy v. Brooklyn, 98 N. Y. 642.

Appellant cites Timlin v. Standard Oil Co., 126 N. Y. 514, where it is held that, if an owner lease premises without abating an existing nuisance, he is liable to respond in damages for an injury resulting therefrom. But that case has no application here. The nuisance complained of was dangerous to the public and the adjoining owner. The wall of a building was so out of repair that it fell over upon the tracks of a railroad company, killing plaintiff's intestate while engaged in repairing the track.

In Beck v. Carter, 68 N. Y. 283, 23 Am. Rep. 175, the owner made an excavation on his own land, but so near to the highway as to render travel thereon dangerous, and failed to guard it, and the instruction of the trial court to the jury that the excavation was a nuisance if made in the highway, or so near it that a person exercising ordinary care was liable to fall into it, was sustained; the court holding that the circumstances of that case imposed a duty on the defendant to protect the excavation. It appeared that the excavation had been made in a place long used by the public, and the character of the user was thus described by the court: "It was not the case of a bare permission by the owner to cross his land adjoining a public street. The land had, by use long continued, been made, for the time being, a public place, and part of the highway." While the court held that the situation presented by the evidence supported the judgment, it did not fail to emphasize the general rule that the owner of property has the right to put his property to such use as he chooses, "and in the absence of special circumstances, if a person traveling on a highway deviates therefrom, and falls into a pit or excavation on the adjacent land, the owner is not responsible for the resulting injury." There are cases where the use to which an owner of property puts it is of such a public character that he is bound to observe reasonable care in keeping it in such a condition as to save harmless those who are invited to come on to it for the benefit and profit of the owner.

Cases of this kind are considered by this court in Clancy v. Byrne, 56 N. Y. 129, 15 Am. Rep. 391. A drayman, in the ordinary course of his business, drove a horse upon pier No. 34, North river; and, a rotten plank giving way, the horse fell through and was killed. In the opinion by Folger, J., it is said that the occupant is liable "for an injury to the property of a person lawfully upon it therewith. . . .

This is not put upon the ground that the south half of the pier was a public place or highway. It was private property, to a certain degree, though held as such for public objects. . . . By the use to which it was put by the occupant, from which a profit to him was directly or indirectly derived, and which persons of the calling of plaintiff aided, there was a license and an invitation given to the plaintiff to come and go over this pier in the following of his employment, . . ." and thus "was imposed on him the duty of taking care, so long as it was thus kept open, that those who had a lawful right to go there could do so without danger to their property."

Swords v. Edgar, 59 N. Y. 28, 17 Am. Rep. 295, was a case of injury by a defective pier, and the court said: "Though the pier be private property, and though it be granted that the owner or occupant thereof might at any time close it, and refuse entrance upon it to any and all persons, yet so long as it was kept open to that portion of the public of which the intestate was one, for the profit of defendant's lessees, there was upon such lessees, primarily, the duty of taking care, so long as it was thus kept open, that those who had lawful right to go there could do so without incurring danger to their persons." But a further consideration of cases is neither needful nor useful. No case has been found, nor do I think can be, which supports the contention that as to this plaintiff the decayed back stairs of a private residence, under the circumstances proven, constituted a nuisance.

As there is no injury, in a legal sense, which can give a right of action, unless it is occasioned by a violation of some duty owing to the injured, there remains for consideration but one other ground on which it is claimed that defendant's liability can be predicated. It is urged that a recovery can be supported because the defendant negligently permitted the stairs to remain in an unsafe condition. The question is therefore presented, Did the defendant's duty require the exercise of any care to protect the plaintiff while on the premises? The fact that a landlord leases premises with a condition that he may re-enter for the purpose of making repairs does not enlarge his responsibility as to third persons, or burden him with the duty, as to them, of observing any greater degree of care than would be required were he in possession. As it may tend to avoid confusion, therefore, we will consider the question of negligence from the standpoint of actual occupation by the owner, this defendant. It will be well to get in mind first the situation of the premises, and the circumstances surrounding and leading up to the injury. For such purpose, we will take the testimony of the plaintiff. At the time of the injury, she occupied a house next to, and between four and five feet from, the house of defendant, where the injury occurred. Between the houses was a fence, and in the rear of the houses an opening had been made by knocking some boards off. Her little girls were accustomed to go into the yard and play; and on the 20th of June, 1886, about half past 5 in the afternoon, plaintiff went over to bring the children home. They were then in the house; and as she was walking down the back steps, holding one of them by the hand, the fourth or fifth step from the bottom broke, and her foot went through, causing her to fall to the ground, resulting in injury. From these facts, it appears that the plaintiff was not brought within the risk of these unsafe steps by the occupier's invitation on a matter of common interest, or in the exercise of a right. She was therefore a mere licensee. "Permission involves leave and license, but it gives no right. If I avail myself of permission to cross a man's land, I do so by virtue of a license, not of a right. It is an abuse of language to call it a right. It is an excuse or license, so that a party cannot be treated as a trespasser." Martin, B., in Bolch v. Smith, 7 Hurlst. & N. 745. The general rule is that a licensee must take the property as he finds it. Mr. Pollock, in his work on Torts, states the rule as follows: "Persons who, by the mere gratuitous permission of owners or occupiers, take a short cut across a waste piece of land, or pass over private bridges, or have the run of a building, cannot expect to find the land free from holes or ditches, or the bridges to be in safe repair, or the passages and stairs to be commodious and free from dangerous places." The exceptions to which he alludes need not be mentioned, for they are not in point here. Mr. Pollock cites, in support of the rule quoted, English decisions, mainly; but the same rule has been generally, if not universally, applied in the various jurisdictions in this country. In Severy v. Nickerson, 120 Mass. 306, 21 Am. Rep. 514, a laborer employed in loading ice on board a vessel from the wharf, after finishing his work, went on board the vessel, for the gratification of his curiosity, and there fell down an open hatchway and broke his leg. Devens, J., speaking for the court, said: "The distinction which exists between the obligation which is due by the owners of premises to a mere licensee, who enters thereon without any enticement or inducement, and to one who enters upon lawful business by the invitation, either expressed or implied, of the proprietor, is well settled. The former enters at his own risk. The latter has a right to believe that, taking reasonable care himself, all reasonable care has been used by the owner to protect him, in order that no injury may occur." In Larmore v. Crown Point Iron Co., 101 N. Y. 391, 2 Cent. Rep. 409, the plaintiff, an employé of defendant, quit work two days before the injury on account of the supposed danger incident to the work at the pit where he was employed. At the suggestion of the foreman of that pit, he applied at another pit, and was engaged to commence work there on the following Monday; and while near a machine used in raising buckets of ore from the mines to the surface of the ground, a lever was thrown out of its socket, and, flying around, struck and broke his leg. It was held that he could not recover, the court saying: "He was on the premises, at most, by the mere implied sufferance or license of the defendant, and not on its invitation, express or implied; nor was he there, in any proper sense, on the business of the company. . . . The fact that the plaintiff had, on going to pit No. 10, engaged to commence work on the following Monday, did not change his relation to the company, or make him other than a mere licensee on the premises."

That case is decisive of the one under consideration, so far as the question of negligence is concerned; for it is an authority for the assertion that the plaintiff's own testimony establishes conclusively that while she was on defendant's premises she was, at most, a mere licensee.

The judgment should be affirmed.

All concur, except Haight, J., not voting.

16 L. R. A.

RHODE ISLAND SUPREME COURT.

Welcome B. DARLING, Admr., etc., of James W. Pemberton, Deceased,

NEW YORK, PROVIDENCE & BOSTON
R. CO.

(.....R. I.....)

1. The maintenance of a tell-tale intended to warn brakemen of the approach of a train to a bridge, which is unsafe for brakemen on a portion of the cars which are of unusual height, is a breach of the railroad company's duty to provide safe appliances, although it is safe for cars of the ordinary height.
2. A brakeman does not assume the risk of an unsafe tell-tale intended to give warning of approach to a bridge and which should not be in itself a source of any danger, especially where it is only dangerous to brakemen on cars of more than ordinary height.
3. A joking remark to the jury that they can have "all night if necessary" in answer to the foreman's promise to knock at a certain time and let the court know if they had agreed, made by an officer sent to inquire if there was prospect of agreement, is not to be regarded as a threat to keep them out all night, or as putting such a constraint upon them as to render their verdict void, where it does not appear that any prejudice resulted from it.

4. The affidavit of a juror to his belief that a message from the court and the remark of an officer influenced the verdict, is not conclusive of the fact, even if it is to be held competent evidence.

(May 21, 1892.)

PETITION by defendant for a new trial of an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries resulting in death and alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence, in which a verdict had been returned in plaintiff's favor. Denied.

The facts are stated sufficiently in the opinion.

Mr. Lorin M. Cook, for defendant, in support of the petition.

Messrs. Arthur L. Brown and Augustus S. Miller, for plaintiff, contra:

A tell-tale which is in itself a source of danger is an absurdity.

If a tell-tale is made of such rigidity that it can sweep a man from a car top, then it becomes as dangerous as the bridge itself, and there should be another tell-tale to give warning of approach to it.

NOTE.—Coercion of disagreeing jury.

By court.

By the ancient common law, jurors were kept together as prisoners of the court until they had agreed upon their verdict. Thompson & Merriam, Jurors, § 210.

And it was regarded as not only proper, but requisite, that they be coerced to an agreement upon a verdict. Proffatt, Jury Trials, § 475.

While the court may properly advise the jury to cultivate a spirit of harmony and agree upon a verdict if possible, there should be no intimidation of extended confinement if they did not agree. Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Moog, 81 Ala. 385.

In Wiggins v. Downer, 67 How. Pr. 65, Vann, J., said: "It is in the power of the court, without threatening constraint, to actually constrain a jury by confining them for a long time with nothing to eat."

In Green v. Telfair, 11 How. Pr. 261, Harris, J., said: "A judge may also keep the jury together as long as, in his judgment, there is any reasonable prospect of their being able to agree; but beyond this, I do not think he is at liberty to go. An attempt to influence the jury, by referring to the length of time they are to be kept together or the inconvenience to which they are to be subjected, in case they shall be so pertinacious as to adhere to their individual opinions, and thus continue to disagree, cannot be justified. A judge has no right to threaten or intimidate a jury, in order to affect their deliberations. I think he has no right even to allude to his own purpose as to the time they are to be kept together." In this case a verdict was set aside for a remark by the court to the jury on Saturday afternoon that they should be confined till Monday unless they agreed; before he left town on that evening. The verdict was agreed upon within half an hour thereafter.

Westbrook, J., in Erwin v. Hamilton, 50 How. Pr. 22, says that it should "be left to the good sense and wise discretion of the judge who presides at the trial to determine how long the jury shall be detained, and what, if anything, shall be said as to the probable length of the detention;" and he refused to set aside a verdict because he had informed the jury at about 7:30 o'clock on Friday evening that unless they agreed within an hour, the court should adjourn till 8:30 on the following Monday, and sent them the same information at 10:30 on that evening, whereupon within five minutes they came to an agreement. He expressly repudiated Green v. Telfair, 11 How. Pr. 261.

In Slater v. Mead, 53 How. Pr. 57, the jury after being out a long time reported that they could not agree. After further instructions the court said: "You must agree upon a verdict; I cannot discharge you until you agree upon a verdict." A verdict upon an almost immediate agreement was set aside as induced by constraint.

In this case Green v. Telfair, supra, was approved. It is reversible error for the judge to send word to a jury that they would be kept together till a time four days distant unless they sooner agreed. Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. Jackson, 81 Ind. 19.

In Taylor v. Jones, 2 Head, 565, a new trial was granted for a remark of the judge to a disagreeing jury that he must keep them together until they could agree,—until the fourth Monday of the next month if necessary,—with an intimation that it would be better to find a wrong verdict than not to agree.

In East Tennessee & W. N. O. R. Co. v. Winters, 35 Tenn. 240, 248, it was held that the remarks of the judge to a disagreeing jury taken as a whole were not erroneous although the court disclaimed ruling that one sentence, viz., "I do not like to work all the week without accomplishing anything,"—taken alone, would not constitute reversible error.

It is reversible error for the court to say to a jury, out for two days, that they would not be discharged till the end of the term, "if it lasted three weeks, unless they sooner agree," where they re-

This is one of the appliances which it is the master's duty to maintain in proper condition. Warden v. Old Colony R. Co. 137 Mass. 204.

There was no contributory negligence.

It is the absolute duty of the master to provide safe machinery and appliances, and the servant is justified in relying upon the master's performance of this duty.

Mulvey v. Rhode Island Locomotive Works, 14 R. I. 204; Connolly v. Poillon, 41 Barb. 866; Pantzar v. Tilly Foster Iron Min. Co. 90 N. Y. 868; Wood, Mast. & S. p. 715, note; Myers v. Hudson Iron Co. 150 Mass. 125; Scanlon v. Boston & A. R. Co. 147 Mass. 484; Ferren v. Old Colony R. Co. 3 New Eng. Rep. 330, 143 Mass. 197; Ford v. Fitchburg R. Co. 110 Mass. 240, 260.

Pemberton was entitled to take it for granted that the tell-tale was not dangerous.

Contributory negligence is not imputable to a person for failing to look out for a danger, when, under the surrounding circumstances, the person sought to be charged with it had no reason to suspect that danger was to be apprehended.

Gustafsen v. Washburn & M. Mfg. Co. 158 Mass. 468; 4 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, pp. 34, 35; Nance v. Newport News & M. V. R. Co. (Ky.) Nov. 12, 1891; Georgia Paa. R. Co. v. Davis (Ala.) April 30, 1891; Dorsey v. Phillips Colby Co. 42 Wis. 583; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Welch, 52 Ill. 183, 4 Am. Rep. 593.

turned a verdict on the following day. Chesapeake, O. & S. W. R. Co. v. Barlow, 86 Tenn. 637.

In Physloc v. Shea, 75 Ga. 464, it was said: "The old idea of starving juries to coerce a verdict has passed away," and it was there held error for the trial judge to inform a jury which had been out all night without supper or breakfast that meals would be allowed them only at their own expense, because such statement operated as a threat to starve those jurors without money into finding a verdict, as was shown by an agreement within ten minutes thereafter.

Where the court ordered a jury reporting a disagreement just before dinner time looked up till they should agree, without allowing them to have their dinner, a verdict agreed upon within several hours was set aside. Hancock v. Elam, 3 Bart. 33.

The trial judge may properly in his discretion intimate to a disagreeing jury his intention to confine them till the end of the term—some ten days distant. State v. Grizzard, 39 N. C. 116.

Where the jury on Saturday of the first week of the term announce that they cannot agree it is not error for the judge to state that there are two more weeks of the term and he will give them plenty of time to consider and then to direct the sheriff to provide comfortable accommodations for them. Osborne v. Wilkes, 108 N. C. 653. It is there said: "The jury . . . are supposed to have sufficient intelligence to understand the extent of the judge's power, and to have such conceptions of their own duty that they will not be driven to return a hasty and unjust verdict for fear of being kept in comfortable quarters, but separated from their families, for a few days or for two weeks, if they could not sooner concur as to their findings."

By bailiff in charge.

In Wiggins v. Downer, 67 How. Pr. 65, it was held that a statement by the officer in charge of a jury, which had already been out fifteen hours, purporting to be a message from the court, that unless they agreed they would be confined till the next day at noon, while improper, did not amount to such legal constraint as would avoid the verdict.

Looney v. McLean, 129 Mass. 83, 87 Am. Rep. 293; Whittaker v. West Boylston, 97 Mass. 278; Reed v. Northfield, 13 Pick. 94, 23 Am. Dec. 662; Kane v. Northern Cent. R. Co. 128 U. S. 91, 32 L. ed. 339; Jones v. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. 128 U. S. 443, 32 L. ed. 478.

There is not the slightest suggestion that any improper influence was exerted upon the jury or that the prevailing party derived any advantage.

The affidavit of the juror is harmless, but inadmissible.

Tucker v. South Kingstown, 5 R. I. 558; Handy v. Prov. Ins. Co. 1 R. I. 400; Leach v. Wilbur, 9 Allen, 213.

The jury had retired at 5 o'clock P. M., on Thursday. Between 4 and 5 o'clock in the morning of Friday one of the jurors asked the officer in charge how long the court was going to keep them there, to which the officer replied that he did not know but they would have to stay there till Saturday night; and a little after 5 o'clock of the same morning the jury agreed. The court refused to grant a new trial.

Where an officer told the jury that unless they agreed, they would be detained until the next day at noon; this, though improper, was held not sufficient to avoid the verdict.

Wiggins v. Downer, 67 How. Pr. 65.

ing to be a message from the court, that unless they agreed they would be confined till the next day at noon, while improper, did not amount to such legal constraint as would avoid the verdict.

It is improper for a bailiff in charge of a jury to inform them that the court is about to adjourn, and unless they agree upon a verdict soon—it being late Saturday evening—they will be kept over until a certain time Monday morning, but where the information was not given as coming from the court, a new trial will not be ordered on that account. Nelling v. Industrial Mfg. Co. 78 Ga. 280.

In Cole v. Swan, 4 G. Greene, 82, a new trial was awarded because the bailiff in charge of the jury informed them that they would be kept by the court from Saturday evening until Monday morning without anything to eat unless they would agree upon a verdict. It does not appear whether such message purported to be that of the court.

In Obear v. Gray, 68 Ga. 182, judgment was reversed because the bailiff told them that in his opinion the judge would keep them out a week or compel them to agree.

A jesting remark by the bailiff to the jury that, unless they decided the case one way or the other, they should have nothing more to eat, and no water to drink, although taken seriously by some of the jury, will not vitiate their verdict. Pope v. State, 36 Miss. 121.

In Gholston v. Gholston, 31 Ga. 625, a verdict was set aside because of a communication to the jury by the sheriff of his belief that the judge was preparing to take them with him into another county unless they agreed.

A new trial will not be granted because the foreman of the jury or the officer in charge kept them out till 2 o'clock in the morning, and did not inform the other jurors at 11 o'clock—three hours earlier—of the direction of the presiding justice to permit the jury to separate if they had not agreed at that hour. Spinney v. Bowman (Me.) 4 New Eng. Rep. 639.

J. G. G.

Such communications will not afford ground for a new trial where it is obvious that no prejudice resulted.

Thompson, Trials, § 2556.

Matteson, Oa. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant petitions for a new trial on several grounds, of which three only were urged at the hearing, viz.: (1) That the verdict was against the evidence; (2) that the court erred in its instructions to the jury; (3) that the jury were influenced in their decision by a communication to them by the officer in charge of them.

We think the evidence was sufficient to warrant the jury in finding that the deceased was thrown from the train by coming in contact with the lower bar of the "tell-tale," that the tell-tale, though safe for brakemen upon trains composed of cars of the ordinary height,—the space between the top of a common box car and the lower bar of the tell-tale being six feet and two and twenty-eight one hundredths inches,—was unsafe for brakemen upon cars of a greater height, which have come into use for special purposes, such as cars for the transportation of beef, some of which were a part of the train on the night of the accident to the deceased; that the maintenance of a tell-tale, which was unsafe, by reason of the height of some of the cars in use and by reason of the weight or rigidity of its frame, rendering it likely to throw brakemen from their feet if they came in contact with it, was a breach of the defendant's duty to provide safe appliances for its employes which amounted to negligence. We also think that, while the deceased assumed all the ordinary risks incident to his employment as brakeman, the risk of injury from the tell-tale was not such a risk. A tell-tale is not in itself a source of danger, since its purpose is to protect by giving timely warning of the approach to a bridge. Moreover, this particular tell-tale was dangerous only to brakemen upon cars of a greater than ordinary height. It was therefore not a manifest danger. The deceased had a right to assume when he entered upon the employment that the defendant had performed its duty to provide and maintain safe appliances, and hence that this particular tell-tale was safe, and, unless it be shown that he had been, in some way, apprised of the danger and continued in the employment, he is not to be held to have assumed the risk of injury from it. The evidence does not show that he had been so apprised. He had been in the employment of the defendant about five weeks. The train went over the side track, under this tell-tale, on an average two or three times a week, for the purpose of taking on or leaving cars, but only in the night; and though the place was lighted, to a greater or less degree, by an electric light, the darkness and his absorption in the performance of his duties were circumstances not favorable to a close observation of the height of the tell-tale above the cars; besides, his position as "head middleman" frequently required him to be upon the ground, when the train was passing under the tell-tale, for the purpose of throwing switches, and even when upon the top of the train he was in no danger, unless he happened to be upon a car of the greatest height. It does not appear that he had previously been upon such a car when passing under the tell-tale, or had had his attention directed to its height above such a car, and, being a structure intended for his protection, his attention would, on that account, also, be less likely to be directed to it as a source of danger. We are of the opinion that the verdict was not against the evidence.

The instructions of the court to the jury were in accordance with the views herein stated. We find no error in them, or in the refusals to give the instructions requested by the defendant.

After the case had gone to the jury, and they had been in their room about an hour deliberating upon their verdict, the judge directed the officer in charge of them to inquire of the foreman if there was a prospect of an early agreement, as he wished to go out to dinner at a quarter of 6. The officer conveyed the message to the foreman, who answered that he would knock by a quarter of 6, and let the court know whether the jury had agreed. Thereupon the officer said to the foreman, "If you do not, you can take your own time;" and jokingly added, "All night, if necessary." The defendant contends that this remark of the officer operated as a threat to the jury that, unless they agreed before a quarter of 6, they would be kept out all night, or, at least, until they should agree within that time, and was therefore such a constraint put upon them as to render their verdict void; and it further contends that it is not required to show affirmatively that such communication tended to its injury, but that such communication was so dangerous and impolitic that it should be presumed conclusively that harm was done. There are cases which support this claim. Cole v. Swan, 4 G. Greene, 82; Obear v. Gray, 68 Ga. 182. But the weight of the authority, and the better opinion, as it seems to us, is to the effect that, unless the communication from the officer to the jury had a manifest tendency to influence the jury improperly against the unsuccessful party, or was such that prejudice has resulted to such party, it furnishes no ground for a new trial. Thus in Wiggins v. Downer, 67 How. Pr. 65, it was held that the expression to the jury by the officer in charge of them of an opinion that, unless they agreed, they would be detained until the next day at noon, though improper, was not such an irregularity as should avoid the verdict, and did not amount to an illegal constraint. And again, in Leach v. Wilbur, 9 Allen, 212, it appeared that, between 4 and 5 o'clock in the morning, the jury having retired to their room about 5 o'clock of the preceding day, Thursday, one of the jurors asked the officer having them in charge how long the court would keep them together, and he replied that he did not know, but they would have to stay until Saturday, and that a little after 5 o'clock the jury agreed. It was held that a new trial would not be granted. And see Reins v. People, 30 Ill. 256; Price v. Lambert, 8 N. J. L. 122; Pope v. State, 36 Miss. 121; McGuire v. State, 10 Tex. App. 125. The officious intermeddling of the officer was highly reprehensible, and might have subjected him to punishment. It was a violation of his duty and of his oath; but it appears to have been thoughtless, without any design to favor either party, and it had no manifest tendency to prejudice the defendant; nor does it appear that prejudice has resulted from it to the defendant. The defendant, it is true, has produced the affidavit of a juror to his belief that the message of the court and the remark of the officer influenced the jury in giving a verdict for the plaintiff, as immediately after certain of the jury who had been for the defendant changed, and agreed to a verdict for the plaintiff. But, apart from the consideration that the affidavit of a juror is not competent evidence to prove what takes place in the jury room for the purpose impeaching the verdict, the affidavit is only to the belief of the juror, based upon a fact by no means conclusive.

Defendant's petition for a new trial denied and dismissed.

CALIFORNIA SUPREME COURT.

Henry D. P. ALLEN, Appt.,

v.

Charles F. ALLEN et al., Respts.

(.....Cal.....)

1. The statutory rule that a Statute of Limitations may be pleaded without stating the facts by a general statement that the cause of action is barred by a specified section of the statute, is not subject to an implied exception in the case of a statute as to actions barred in another state.

2. The time for redemption of land from a mortgage or absolute deed given as security cannot be extended by subsequent statute as this would change the contract rights and obligations of the parties.

3. The right to redeem land from a mortgage or absolute deed given as security is governed by the law of the place where the land lies, and a rule there prevailing that such right is barred when an action on the debt is barred must control, although in another state where the parties reside and the contract was

NOTE.—Change of decision of a state court as an unconstitutional impairment of contract.

The Constitution of the United States provides, article 1, section 10, that no state shall pass any law impairing the obligation of contracts.

In Ohio Life Ins. & T. Co. v. De Bolt, 57 U. S. 16 How. 418, 14 L. ed. 997, which was taken to the Supreme Court of the United States from a state court, the claim was made that the validity of a contract had been impaired by subsequent state legislation. Incidentally the question arose as to the effect upon a corporate charter which a change in the construction of the state Constitution by a supreme court of the state would have. The court said that "the sound and true rule is that if the contract when made was valid by the laws of the state as then expounded by all the departments of its government and administered in its courts of justice, its validity and obligation cannot be impaired by any subsequent act of legislation of the state or decision of its courts altering the construction of the law." It will be noticed that the language in the above decision is broad enough to bring a decision by the supreme court of the state within the inhibition of the Constitution of the United States against impairing the obligation of contracts, but further investigation will show that the rule as adopted was merely intended as one for guidance of the United States court in dealing with cases which had reached it in some proper manner and not as an adjudication that such decision was an unconstitutional Act which would give the United States court jurisdiction to revise the judgment of the state court.

In Gelpcke v. Dubuque, 68 U. S. 1 Wall. 175, 17 L. ed. 520, which was a writ of error to the district court of the United States for the district of Iowa, and involved the validity of bonds issued by a municipal corporation, the court refused to follow decisions of the state court rendered after the bonds were issued which overruled former decisions holding them valid.

A similar ruling was made in Havemeyer v. Iowa County Supra, 70 U. S. 3 Wall. 235, 18 L. ed. 33, which went up on certificate of decision between judges of the United States circuit court for the district of Wisconsin. In Lee County v. Rogers, 74 U. S. 7 Wall. 181, 19 L. ed. 180, which went up on a writ of error from the circuit court of the United States for the northern district of Illinois. In Kenosha v. Lamson, 78 U. S. 9 Wall. 477, 19 L. ed. 725, which was a writ of error to the circuit court of the United States for the district of Wisconsin. Olcott v. Fond du Lac County Supra, 88 U. S. 16 Wall. 678, 21 L. ed. 882, which was a writ of error to a United States circuit court. Douglass v. Pike County, 101 U. S. 677, 25 L. ed. 968, which came from a United States court. Weightman v. Clark, 103 U. S. 256, 26 L. ed. 393, which came from a United States court. Taylor v. Ypsilanti, 105 U. S. 60, 26 L. ed. 1008, which came from a United States court. Louisiana v. Pillsbury, 105 U. S. 278, 26 L. ed. 1080, which although a writ of error to the state court, was taken up on the ground that the contract had been impaired by subsequent legislation and the court had occasion incidentally to consider a change in the construction given by the state court to its Constitution and reiterated the statement that the exposition given by the highest tribunal of the state must be taken as correct so far as contracts made under the statute interpreted were concerned and their validity and obligations could not be impaired by any subsequent decision altering the construction. Burgess v. Seligman, 107 U. S. 20, 27 L. ed. 359, which came from a United States court. Anderson v. Santa Anna, 116 U. S. 358, 29 L. ed. 633, which was from a United States court. German Sav. Bank of Davenport v. Franklin County, 126 U. S. 526, 32 L. ed. 519, which was from a United States court.

It will be noticed that although the United States court refuses to permit a state court to impair the obligations of a contract in all of the above decisions it was only after it had acquired jurisdiction on some grounds other than the unconstitutionality of such decisions. While the above decisions were being rendered and in connection with the Iowa municipal bonds, an attempt was made to bring up for review a decision of the supreme court of the state declaring bonds invalid. The report of the case does not show that the bonds were issued in accordance with decisions holding them valid, but from the time in which the case came up and the general circumstances it may be inferred that there was little if anything in it to distinguish it from the above cases, but the court dismissed the writ of error for want of jurisdic-made the bar of the debt would not defeat the right to redeem.

4. Decisions on which the parties to a contract rely do not constitute a part of it so as to exempt the contract from the operation of a subsequent decision declaring a different rule upon the same subject and overruling the earlier decisions.

(Beatty, Ch. J., dissents.)

(June 18, 1892.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court for Humboldt County in favor of defendants and from an order denying his motion for new trial in an action brought to redeem from an absolute deed given as security for a loan. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Stanly, Stoney & Hayes, with Messrs. J. N. Gillett and E. W. Wilson, for appellant:

I. Defendants never in any form pleaded the laws of the state of New York. The statute or law upon which they depended must be set out in hac verba or else it will not be considered as pleaded.

Gillette v. Hill, 83 Iowa, 220; Hoyt v. McNeil, 18 Minn. 390; Norris v. Harris, 15 Cal. 255; Roots v. Merriwether, 8 Bush, 397.

tion, holding it to be a fundamental error "that this court can as an appellate tribunal reverse the decision of a state court, because that court may hold a contract to be void which this court might hold to be valid." Mississippi & M. R. Co. v. Book, 71 U. S. 4 Wall. 177, 18 L. ed. 381.

In the case of Mississippi & M. R. Co. v. McClure, 77 U. S. 10 Wall. 510, 19 L. ed. 997, which was a writ of error to the Supreme Court of Iowa and involved the validity of municipal bonds, the case was dismissed for want of jurisdiction, and the court stated that the state had passed no law upon the subject after the bonds were issued, and the Constitution of the state which as construed by the supreme court worked the result complained of, was in force when the bonds were issued. The 25th section of the Judiciary Act was held not to give jurisdiction in such cases, but the court stated that if the case had been brought from the circuit court under the 23d section of that Act the question of the validity of the bonds would have been open for examination.

In Knox v. Exchange Bank of Virginia, 79 U. S. 12 Wall. 379, 20 L. ed. 414, which was a writ of error to the Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia, the claim was made that the charter of the bank making its notes receivable for debts due to it, was a contract which the decision of the Virginia court had impaired. The court stated: "We are not authorized by the Judiciary Act to review the judgment of the state courts because their judgments refuse to give effect to valid contracts or because those judgments in their effect impair the obligations of the contract."

In New Orleans Water Works Co. v. Louisiana Sugar Ref. Co., 125 U. S. 12, 31 L. ed. 607, the court said that the prohibition in the United States Constitution against the impairment of the obligations of contracts was aimed at the legislative power of the states and not at the decisions of their courts, and in Brown v. Smart, 145 U. S. 454, 36 L. ed. 773, the court said that a decision of the state court was not a law within the meaning of the provision of the Constitution which declares that no state shall pass any law impairing the obligation of a contract. The decisions of the United States 13 L. R. A.

The plea was fatally defective for the reason that it neither alleges that the cause of action arose in the state of New York nor that the period of time prescribed by that law had elapsed at the commencement of the action. These are necessary and material averments.

Headington v. Neff, 7 Ohio, 229; Templeton v. Sharp (Ky.) 10 Ky. L. Rep. 499.

Section 91 of chapter 8 of title 1, of Wait's Annotated Code of Procedure, pleaded by defendants, applies solely to personal actions. The appellant's cause of action was one to ascertain the amount due upon a mortgage and therefore that section does not govern the case.

Miner v. Beekman, 50 N. Y. 337; Hubbell v. Sibley, 50 N. Y. 468.

An action to redeem under these circumstances is in effect under our system merely an action to remove a cloud. And since a court of equity may require justice to be done as a condition of removing a cloud why should there be any period of limitation for such an action.

Raynor v. Drew, 73 Cal. 307.

If the personal demand is barred under the laws of the state of New York because of a failure to elect that remedy the defendants may still elect to foreclose their mortgage here and to which suit the plaintiff could not successfully plead the Statutes of Limitation.

court have, however, had more or less effect upon state decisions, and the state courts have to some extent acquired the idea that the obligation of a contract ought not to be impaired by a subsequent decision of a court.

In Ray v. Western Pennsylvania Nat. Gas Co., 13 L. R. A. 230, 188 Pa. 578, it was ruled that the principle of the United States decisions did not apply where the decision complained of was upon a question of general common law and not an interpretation of a state statute.

In Farrlor v. New England Mortg. Security Co. (Ala.) 13 L. R. A. 853, the court decided that overruling decisions of a state court of last resort, which were in force at the time a mortgage was given by a married woman, and which upheld its validity under the statutes, did not affect the right of the mortgagee, upon the ground that contracts when made under such circumstances cannot be annulled by subsequent decisions of the same court overruling former ones.

In Harmon v. Auditor of Public Accounts, 11 West. Rep. 69, 123 Ill. 122, the court said that the state court cannot by a decision any more than a state legislature can by a statute impair the obligation of a contract.

In Geddes v. Brown, 5 Phillim. 180, the court ruled that one who in accordance with the law as laid down by the court of last resort enters into a contract, should not suffer because it is subsequently set aside and another rule substituted for it. See also Menges v. Dentler, 33 Pa. 495.

Upon the question of impairment of remedy generally, see note to Best v. Baumgardner (Pa.) 1 L. R. A. 355.

Of impairment of contract right by procrastinating remedy, see Phinney v. Phinney, 4 L. R. A. 343, and note, 81 Me. 450.

Upon the question of whether the rule of the lex fori or that of the lex loci governs in determining whether an action is barred, see O'Shields v. Georgia Pac. R. Co. 6 L. R. A. 152, and note, 83 Ga. 621; notes to Bank of North America v. Budge (Mass.) 13 L. R. A. 56, and Nelson v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. (Va.) 15 L. R. A. 563.

H. P. F.

Ould v. Stoddard, 54 Cal. 613; Henry v. Confidence G. & S. Min. Co. 1 Nev. 619; Mackie v. Lansing, 2 Nev. 302; Michigan Ins. Co. of Detroit v. Brown, 11 Mich. 265; Cookes v. Culbertson, 9 Nev. 199.

The cause of action arose within the state of California and not within the state of New York. Acts of limitation unless they expressly discharge the debt are simply a part of the remedy.

Carson v. Hunter, 46 Mo. 467, 2 Am. Rep. 520; Miller v. Brenham, 68 N. Y. 88; State v. Swope, 7 Ind. 91; Meek v. Meek, 45 Iowa, 294; McElmoyle v. Cohen, 88 U. S. 18 Pet. 312, 10 L. ed. 177; McCormick v. Brown, 86 Cal. 180; DeCordova v. Galveston, 4 Tex. 470.

The instrument in this case was and is a mortgage executed in the state of New York, upon lands situated in the state of California. Under such circumstances the nature, construction, and validity of the contract is to be governed by lex loci contractus while all matters pertaining to the remedy or the enforcement of the contract, must be determined by lex fori.

Klinck v. Pries, 4 W. Va. 4, 6 Am. Rep. 268; Swank v. Huftnagle, 9 West. Rep. 629, 111 Ind. 458; Goddard v. Sawyer, 9 Allen, 78; United States v. Crosby, 11 U. S. 7 Cranch, 115, 8 L. ed. 287; Oregon & W. T. & I. Co. v. Rathbun, 5 Sawy. 82; 1 Jones, Mortg. § 828; Farmers L. & T. Co. v. Postal Telegr. Co. 5 New Eng. Rep. 346, 55 Conn. 334.

The law of the remedy is therefore no part of the contract, and "when the question is settled that the contract of the parties is legal and what is the true interpretation of the language employed by them in framing it, the lex loci ceases its functions and the lex fori steps in and determines the time, the mode, and the extent of the remedy.

Burchard v. Dunbar, 82 Ill. 450, 25 Am. Rep. 334.

The court found as facts that the plaintiff was continuously a resident of the state of New York and absent from the state of California from March, 1865, to the year 1885, and that the defendants never came to nor were in the state of California until in the year 1886. Under our laws, then, the action was not barred and could and can be enforced at any time within four years after that period.

Code Civ. Proc. § 351; Brown v. Nourae, 55 Me. 230; Graves v. Weeks, 19 Vt. 178; Petchell v. Hopkins, 19 Iowa, 531; Wood, Cal. Dig. art. 22, § 22.

We are not called upon to look further than the law in force at the time the action was brought since that law governs the case.

Winston v. McCormick, 1 Ind. 56; State v. Swope, 7 Ind. 91; Sampson v. Sampson, 68 Me. 328.

The Code of Civil Procedure went into effect less than four years after the execution and delivery of the mortgage.

Under section 346 plaintiff has the right to bring his action to redeem from the mortgage at any time, or until the defendants have continuously maintained an adverse possession of the mortgaged premises for five years after breach of some condition of the mortgage.

Warder v. Ensten, 78 Cal. 291.

The bar of the statute not then having been come complete, the effect of this provision was to extend the plaintiff's right to commence his action for an indefinite time unless a five years' adverse possession intervened.

The right to foreclose and the right to redeem are co-existent, and until the remedy to foreclose is barred, the right to redeem may be exercised.

Montgomery v. Spect, 55 Cal. 352; Taylor v. McClain, 60 Cal. 651.

If neither of the parties were ever in the state how can it be said that the cause of action of either one is barred.

Plaintiff is entitled to have the cloud removed from his title independent of the Statute of Limitations.

De Casara v. Orena, 80 Cal. 182; Booth v. Hoskins, 75 Cal. 271; Hall v. Arnott, 80 Cal. 348.

Can there be any laches imputed to the plaintiff when the legal title never passed from him and where the defendants have never been in possession.

Williams v. Conger, 49 Tex. 582.

An unbroken line of decisions from April, 1858, down to April, 1870, held that a mortgage, whatever its terms, was a mere security and conveyed no title to the mortgagee.

McMillan v. Richards, 9 Cal. 411, 70 Am. Dec. 655; Nagle v. Macy, 9 Cal. 428; Hagley v. Maier, 18 Cal. 18; Johnson v. Sherman, 15 Cal. 287, 76 Am. Dec. 481; Goodenow v. Ewer, 16 Cal. 461; Fogarty v. Sawyer, 17 Cal. 589; Lord v. Morris, 18 Cal. 488; Dutton v. Warschauer, 21 Cal. 609, 82 Am. Dec. 765; Grattan v. Wiggins, 23 Cal. 16; Cunningham v. Hawkins, 27 Cal. 608; Polhemus v. Trainer, 30 Cal. 687; Gay v. Hamilton, 33 Cal. 688; Jackson v. Lodge, 36 Cal. 28; Mack v. Wetzel, 39 Cal. 247.

Such laws are a part of the contract.

Bishop, Cont. §§ 565, 566; Brine v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 96 U. S. 627, 24 L. ed. 858; Edwards v. Kearsey, 96 U. S. 595, 24 L. ed. 793.

Since the rendering of the decisions in the cases of De Esplanosa v. Gregory, 40 Cal. 58, and Hughes v. Davis, 40 Cal. 117, our court has returned to the doctrine announced in its many earlier decisions and with them now holds that a deed absolute in form given merely to secure an indebtedness is a mortgage and does not pass the legal title to the premises.

Taylor v. McLain, 64 Cal. 514; Healy v. O'Brien, 66 Cal. 517; Raynor v. Drew, 72 Cal. 307; Booth v. Hoskins, 75 Cal. 271; Smith v. Smith, 80 Cal. 323; Hall v. Arnott, Id. 343; Murdock v. Clark (Cal.) June 7, 1890.

Under neither the former nor the present decisions therefore did the legal title pass to the respondents.

II. The deed from John H. Allen to respondents was a mortgage.

The real character of the instrument depends upon the intention and purpose of the parties in executing it to be determined from the facts and circumstances surrounding and succeeding its execution.

Sweetzer's App. 71 Pa. 273; Montgomery v. Spect, 55 Cal. 352.

The true test is whether the object of the instrument was to evidence a purchase and transfer an interest in land, or merely to secure a debt or obligation. In the former case it is a deed, in the latter case it is a mortgage.

Montgomery v. Spect, supra; Horn v. Keteltas, 46 N. Y. 611; Carr v. Carr, 52 N. Y. 258; Husheon v. Husheon, 71 Cal. 411.

The instrument is none the less a mortgage because the grantor is not the person whose debt is secured and who holds the equity of redemption.

Murray v. Walker, 81 N. Y. 399; Houser v. Lamont, 55 Pa. 815; Carr v. Carr, 52 N. Y. 258; Pardee v. Treat, 82 N. Y. 391; Dodd v. Neilson, 90 N. Y. 248; Smith v. Oremar, 71 Ill. 185; Purdy v. Bullard, 41 Cal. 447; Morris v. Budlong, 78 N. Y. 552; McBurney v. Wellman, 42 Barb. 401; Stoddard v. Whiting, 46 N. Y. 627.

An instrument which when executed is a mortgage is always thereafter a mortgage.

Horn v. Keteltas, supra; Odell v. Montross, 68 N. Y. 500.

The respondents' right to foreclose their mortgage was not barred at the date of the commencement of the action for the following reasons:

(1) The respondents' action to foreclose their mortgage could only have been brought in the state of California.

(2) At the date of the deed to respondents, December 80, 1869, the following was the law of California:

"If when the cause of action shall accrue against a person he is out of the state, the action may be commenced within the time herein limited after his return to this state."

2 Hittel, Gen. Laws, 4364, § 22, p. 685. See Palmer v. Shaw, 16 Cal. 98; Watt v. Wright, 66 Cal. 202.

When the Codes went into operation the appellant's right to redeem had not been barred both because the right to foreclose still existed and because the respondents never having been in the actual occupancy of the premises, the statute had not yet commenced to run.

Hubbell v. Sibley, 50 N. Y. 473; Miner v. Beekman, 50 N. Y. 841.

The Civil Code changed the rule followed by the courts before its adoption and gave to mortgagors the privilege at any time after the principal obligation becomes due to have the lien extinguished that would otherwise cloud their title upon paying the debt regardless of the running of the Statute of Limitations against the principal obligation.

Hall v. Arnott, 80 Cal. 855; Hubbell v. Sibley, 50 N. Y. 473; Moore v. Cable, 1 Johns. Ch. 387, 1 L. ed. 182; Miner v. Beekman, 50 N. Y. 841.

The provisions of the Codes became applicable to mortgages made before as well as afterwards when the statute had not already extinguished them.

Dillings v. Hall, 7 Cal. 1; Grattan v. Wiggins, 28 Cal. 16; Skinner v. Buck, 29 Cal. 253; Wood, Lim. Act, chap. 1, § 2.

If the Code prescribes the rule the statute has not yet commenced to run against the appellant's cause of action as the respondents have never been in the actual possession of the land.

Moore v. Cable and Hall v. Arnott, supra.

In New York the statutory limitation against a mortgagor was ten years, and the statute did not commence to run until the mortgagee entered and held the premises adversely.

16 L. R. A.

Hubbell v. Sibley and Miner v. Beekman, supra.

Respondents were not only mortgagees, but trustees of the appellant. The legal title had been conveyed to them by John H. Allen, appellant's trustee, and accepted by them with a knowledge of and subject to the trust. It is a principle of equity that the holder of an equitable title, for example the beneficiary of a trust, can be divested of his equitable title by adverse possession only.

Gilbert v. Sleeper, 71 Cal. 290; Reynolds v. Sumner, 12 West. Rep. 827, 126 Ill. 72; Loce v. Watkins, 40 Cal. 571, 6 Am. Rep. 624; Coulson v. Walton, 34 U. S. 9 Pet. 81, 9 L. ed. 59; Harris v. King, 16 Ark. 122; Wood, Lim. Act, chap. 17, § 219; Varick v. Edwards, 11 Paige, 291, 5 L. ed. 140.

Messrs. J. D. H. Chamberlin and S. M. Buck, for respondents:

I. The cause of action was clearly barred by the provisions of section 843 of the Code of Civil Procedure of this state.

The cause of action set forth in the complaint was an equitable action, not otherwise provided for in the Code, and suit must be brought thereon in four years.

Piller v. Southern Pac. R. Co., 53 Cal. 48.

The defendants can plead the lex fori all parties to the action being nonresidents and submitting themselves to the jurisdiction of the courts of this state.

Fike v. Clark, 55 Mo. 105; Thomas v. Black, 22 Mo. 330; Moore v. Carroll, 54 Ga. 126.

A statutory exception to the bar of the statute similar to section 851 of the Code of Civil Procedure of this state applies only to residents of this state and not to nonresidents submitting themselves to the jurisdiction of the courts where the remedy is sought.

If defendants cannot enforce their claims against the plaintiff for money paid and advanced to him by reason of the Statutes of Limitation then the plaintiff cannot enforce his equitable right to redeem.

Grattan v. Wiggins, 28 Cal. 85; Cunningham v. Hawkins, 24 Cal. 408, 35 Am. Dec. 78; De Espinosa v. Gregory, 40 Cal. 62; Taylor v. McClain, 60 Cal. 651.

At the execution of these deeds a deed absolute in form, but intended as a mortgage, conveyed the legal title as title.

Jackson v. Lodge, 36 Cal. 28; Hughes v. Davis, 40 Cal. 120; De Espinosa v. Gregory, supra; Davenport v. Turpin, 48 Cal. 604; Pico v. Gallardo, 52 Cal. 206; Higgins v. Higgins, 46 Cal. 264.

If the deeds in controversy conveyed the legal title although given as security, then as no possession was given defendants under said mortgage deeds the Statute of Limitations commenced to run at the execution of the deeds.

Code Civ. Proc. §§ 839-861; Grant v. Burr, 54 Cal. 840; Koch v. Briggs, 14 Cal. 256, 73 Am. Dec. 651.

When plaintiff's right to redeem became barred by the Statute of Limitations defendants' title became absolute; when plaintiff's right to enforce his equity of redemption was gone, all his equities became merged in the legal title.

2 Jones, Mortg. § 1146, and cases cited.

The rights of redemption and foreclosure are reciprocal.

Raynor v. Drew, 72 Cal. 307; Taylor v. McClain, 60 Cal. 651.

II. A trust deed executed as security for the payment of money transfers the legal title.

Fuquay v. Stickney, 41 Cal. 583-587; Partridge v. Shepard, 71 Cal. 478; Koch v. Briggs, 14 Cal. 256, 73 Am. Dec. 651; Grant v. Burr, 54 Cal. 298; Bateman v. Burr, 57 Cal. 480; Durkin v. Burr, 60 Cal. 860.

In order to constitute a mortgage, the conveyance and defeasance must be between the same identical parties.

Low v. Henry, 9 Cal. 549; Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, title Defeasance.

Defendants could not have sustained an action to foreclose this absolute deed.

Koch v. Briggs, supra.

The court cannot decree that defendants hold the legal title in trust for plaintiff as security for moneys advanced and to be advanced, because there are no allegations of the complaint which would authorize it.

Taylor v. McClain, 64 Cal. 513; De Cazara v. Orena, 80 Cal. 184; Mondran v. Gouz, 51 Cal. 153; Boone v. Chiles, 35 U. S. 10 Pet. 209, 9 L. ed. 899; Rathbun v. Rathbun, 6 Barb. 107; Green v. Covillaud, 10 Cal. 832, 70 Am. Dec. 725; Morenhout v. Barron, 42 Cal. 605; Gregory v. Nelson, 41 Cal. 284; Green v. Palmer, 15 Cal. 411, 76 Am. Dec. 492; Murdock v. Clarke, 59 Cal. 688.

The legal title being in defendants, the statute commenced running in 1869, and when defendants' cause of action to recover the money advanced to plaintiff became barred, then any cause of action plaintiff may have had to redeem became barred also.

2 Jones, Mortg. § 1146; Cunningham v. Hawkins, 24 Cal. 408, 85 Am. Dec. 73; Grattan v. Wiggins, 23 Cal. 16; Arrington v. Liscomb, 84 Cal. 866; Koch v. Briggs and Taylor v. McClain, supra.

By the laws of New York defendants lost their right to collect the moneys advanced to plaintiff in 1875, ten years before plaintiff came to this state.

The effect of section 861 (Code Civ. Proc.) is to permit a defendant who is sued here by one who has not been a citizen of this state, and upon a contract made in another state, to plead the Statute of Limitations of such state when more favorable to him than our own.

Osgood v. Artt, 10 Fed. Rep. 385; Penfield v. Chesapeake, O. & S. W. R. Co. 29 Fed. Rep. 494, 134 U. S. 352, 38 L. ed. 942.

The laws of this state which existed when the transaction occurred, and which created and defined the legal and equitable obligations of the parties arising out of the loan and the execution of the deeds as security therefor, are to be read as forming part of the contract itself.

Bishop, Cont. §§ 565, 566; Bronson v. Kinzie, 42 U. S. 1 How. 819, 11 L. ed. 146; United States v. Quinoy, 71 U. S. 4 Wall. 550, 18 L. ed. 408.

At the time these deeds were executed, being absolute in form, intended as security only, they transferred the legal title, and there was left in the person executing it a mere equity of redemption.

16 L. R. A.

Hughes v. Davis, 40 Cal. 117.

And whenever the debt to secure which the deed was made became barred by the Statute of Limitations the right to redeem was also barred.

De Espinosa v. Gregory, 40 Cal. 58.

The right to foreclosure and the right to redeem were always regarded as reciprocal and commensurable, and if one was lost by lapse of time, so was the other also.

Cunningham v. Hawkins, 24 Cal. 408, 85 Am. Dec. 73; Arrington v. Liscom, 84 Cal. 866; Koch v. Briggs, 14 Cal. 257, 73 Am. Dec. 651.

The states may change the remedy, provided no substantial right secured by the contract is impaired; whenever such a result is produced by the Act in question, to that extent it is void.

Walker v. Whitehead, 88 U. S. 16 Wall. 318, 21 L. ed. 358.

Section 846 of the Code of Civil Procedure, if held applicable, would operate as a material change in the rights and obligations of the parties as they existed at the date of the execution of these deeds.

Heyward v. Judd, 4 Minn. 483; Phinney v. Phinney, 4 L. R. A. 348, 81 Me. 450.

The settled interpretation of the law by our supreme court in Hughes v. Davis, 40 Cal. 117; De Espinosa v. Gregory, 40 Cal. 58; Davenport v. Turpin, 48 Cal. 604; Pico v. Gallardo, 53 Cal. 206,—became a part of the law of this state, as much so as if incorporated into the body of it by the Legislature.

Christy v. Pridgeon, 71 U. S. 4 Wall. 196-203, 18 L. ed. 322-324; Union Nat. Bank of Chicago v. Bank of Kansas City, 136 U. S. 223, 34 L. ed. 341.

III. Whenever the transaction has been one whereby the legal title to the property passed out of the mortgagor no foreclosure is necessary.

Koch v. Briggs, 14 Cal. 256, 73 Am. Dec. 651; Cunningham v. Hawkins, 24 Cal. 408, 85 Am. Dec. 73; Millard v. Hathaway, 27 Cal. 120-146; Arrington v. Liscom, 84 Cal. 866; Taylor v. McClain, 60 Cal. 652; Grant v. Burr, 54 Cal. 300; Tyler v. Mayre (Cal.) June 30, 1891; Fuquay v. Stickney, 41 Cal. 583; Partridge v. Shepard, 71 Cal. 478; Bateman v. Burr, 57 Cal. 480; Durkin v. Burr, 60 Cal. 860.

The several sections of the Code show that the Legislature never intended those sections to be retroactive.

New York & O. M. R. Co. v. Van Horn, 57 N. Y. 477; Goillotel v. New York, 87 N. Y. 443; Thorne v. San Francisco, 4 Cal. 182; Davis v. Minor, 1 How. (Miss.) 183, 28 Am. Dec. 325; Woart v. Winnick, 3 N. H. 473, 14 Am. Dec. 884; Society for Prop. Gosp. v. Wheeler, 2 Gall. 139; Chew Heong v. United States, 112 U. S. 559, 28 L. ed. 778; Mann v. McAtee, 37 Cal. 14; Sharp v. Blankenship, 59 Cal. 289; Central Pac. R. Co. v. Schackelford, 63 Cal. 265; Hibernia Sav. & Loan Soc. v. Jordan, 6 Pac. Coast L. J. 686; Hibernia Sav. & Loan Soc. v. Hayes, 56 Cal. 297.

The Legislature has no power to take away, change, or modify vested rights. Any law postponing the time within which appellant was obliged to pay in order to preserve his equity impaired the obligation of this contract.

Louisiana v. New Orleans, 102 U. S. 207, 26 L. ed. 133.

Such acts have been held within the inhibition of the Constitution in numerous cases.

January v. January, 7 T. B. Mon. 543, 18 Am. Dec. 211; Goosen v. Schroeder, 8 Minn. 387; Boice v. Boice, 27 Minn. 371; Greenfield v. Dorris, 1 Sneed, 548; Robinson v. House, 18 Wis. 342.

The laws relating to enforcement of a contract are part thereof.

Robinson v. Magee, 9 Cal. 81, 70 Am. Dec. 688; Smith v. Cleaveland, 17 Wis. 568; Edwards v. Kearney, 96 U. S. 595, 607, 24 L. ed. 798, 798.

In this case the legal title to the property vested in defendants. The Legislature had no power to divest it and confer it upon plaintiff.

Helm v. Webster, 85 Ill. 116; Koenig v. Omaha & W. R. Co. 3 Neb. 883; Dewey v. Lambier, 7 Cal. 347; Stafford v. Lick, Id. 480; Skinner v. Buck, 39 Cal. 253.

The Legislature cannot alter or repeal an Act so as to affect contracts made during the existence of the Act.

Toulumne Redemption Co. v. Sedgwick, 15 Cal. 515.

The remedy enters into and forms a material part of the obligation of a contract.

Walker v. Whitehead, 83 U. S. 16 Wall. 814, 21 L. ed. 357; Rawson v. Thornton, 48 Ga. 587; Gunn v. Barry, 82 U. S. 15 Wall. 610, 21 L. ed. 212; Johnson v. Higgins, 8 Met. (Ky.) 566; Scaine v. Bellerille, 89 N. J. L. 526.

And a statute can no more impair the efficacy of a contract by changing the remedy than attack its vitality in any other way.

Smith v. Morse, 2 Cal. 524; Johnson v. Duncan, 3 Mart. (La.) 581, 6 Am. Dec. 675; Coffman v. Bank of Kentucky, 40 Miss. 29; Curran v. Arkansas, 56 U. S. 15 How. 804, 14 L. ed. 705; United States v. Muscatine, 75 U. S. 8 Wall. 568, 19 L. ed. 498; Walker v. Whitehead, supra; Olcott v. Fond du Lac County Suprs. 83 U. S. 16 Wall. 678, 21 L. ed. 382; Gunn v. Barry, 82 U. S. 15 Wall. 623, 21 L. ed. 215; Edwards v. Kearney, 96 U. S. 601, 24 L. ed. 796; Taylor v. Stearns, 18 Gratt. 244; Nevitt v. Port Gibson Bank, 6 Smedes & M. 518; Von Baumbach v. Bada, 9 Wis. 560; Thompson v. Com. 81 Pa. 314.

Paterson, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Appellant received from the state a certificate of purchase for the lands described in the complaint, on March 28, 1860, and in August following assigned the same to one Collins, to secure an indebtedness of $30, and thereafter a patent was issued from the state to Collins. Appellant paid Collins the amount due him; and the latter, by request of appellant, conveyed the land to John H. Allen, who paid no consideration therefor. Respondents thereafter advanced to the appellant certain sums of money for the payment of taxes which had become delinquent, and, to secure the repayment to them of said sums, the appellant, on June 12, 1869, caused said John H. Allen to convey the lands to them as security for the repayment of the money they had advanced. This deed was absolute in form. John H. Allen received no consideration for the deed. Neither of the parties has ever been in actual possession of the land. The contract of loan was oral, and no time was fixed in which appellant was to make repayment. Plaintiff never made any demand for an accounting, or any offer to redeem, prior to the year 1885, and defendants did not, prior to that time, assert any claim of title to the lands adverse to plaintiff's right to a reconveyance upon payment of the indebtedness. This action was commenced March 15, 1887. The court below rendered judgment for the defendants. A motion for a new trial was denied, and plaintiff appealed from the order, and from the judgment.

1. The court below held that plaintiff's cause of action was barred by the provisions of section 361, Code Civ. Proc. That section provides: "When a cause of action has arisen in another state, or in a foreign country, and by the laws thereof an action thereon cannot be maintained against a person by reason of the lapse of time, an action thereon shall not be maintained against him in this state, except in favor of one who has been a citizen of this state, and who has held a cause of action from the time it accrued." It is claimed by appellant that under that section it was incumbent on the respondents to set out the facts upon which they rely, to show that the cause of action arose in the state of New York, and that, under the laws of that state, it was barred by the Statute of Limitations. A complete answer to this contention is found in section 458, Id., which provides: "In pleading the Statute of Limitations it is not necessary to state the facts showing the defense, but it may be generally stated that the cause of action is barred by the provisions of section (giving the number of the section and subdivision thereof, if it is so divided, relied upon) of the Code of Civil Procedure, and if such allegation be controverted the party pleading must establish on the trial the facts showing that the cause of action is so barred." The rule thus established was intended to simplify the form of pleading such defenses, and is one which the court cannot depart from on a conjecture that the Legislature intended to except from its operation cases of this kind.

The contract was made in New York, where all the parties resided, and neither of them was in this state thereafter until the year 1885; and it is claimed by appellant that, under sections 346, 351, Id., and 2903, Civil Code, the respondents' right to foreclose their mortgage was not barred at the date of the commencement of this action; that appellant remained the equitable owner of the property, and his right to redeem was kept alive. Those sections read as follows: "Sec. 346. An action to redeem a mortgage of real property, with or without an account of rents and profits, may be brought by the mortgagor, or those claiming under him, against the mortgagee in possession, or those claiming under him, unless he or they have continuously maintained an adverse possession of the mortgaged premises for five years after breach of some condition of the mortgage." Sec. 351. If, when the cause of action accrues against a person, he is out of the state, the action may be commenced within the term herein limited after his return to the state; and if, after the cause of action accrues, he departs from the state, the time of his absence is not part of the time limited for the commencement of the action." "Sec. 2908. Every person having an interest in property subject to a lien has a right to redeem it from the lien at any time after the claim is due, and before his right of redemption is foreclosed." Civil Code. In support of this contention, counsel for appellant say, in substance: "Respondents' action to foreclose could have been brought only in this state. The word 'return,' as employed in section 351, supra, is applicable to persons coming from abroad, as well as to citizens who have left the state for a temporary purpose and returned thereto. The statute had not commenced to run in 1865, because the respondents had never been in the actual occupancy of the premises. Section 2908, Civil Code, and section 346, Code Civil Proc., provided rules of limitation different from those which had previously been followed by the courts of this state, and those new rules are applicable to mortgages made before, as well as those made after, the adoption of the Codes, unless the remedy was extinguished at the time the Codes took effect. Respondents were not only mortgagees but trustees of appellant; and the statute could not commence to run in their favor until an offer to redeem was made by appellant. There could be no laches on the part of appellant, because the legal title remained in him, and no adverse claim was made by respondents." These contentions cannot be lightly passed over. They deserve to receive and they have received our careful attention. In the solution of the question presented as to the effect of the deed, we must read, as a part of the contract, the laws of this state existing at the time the contract was made, (Klinck v. Pries, 4 W. Va. 4, 6 Am. Rep. 268; United States v. Crosby, 11 U. S. 7 Cranch, 115, 3 L. ed. 287), although the nature of the construction of the contract of loan, which was made in New York, is determined by the latter state, (De Wolf v. Johnson, 28 U. S. 10 Wheat. 367, 6 L. ed. 348.) It is true an action to foreclose must be brought where the property is situated; but it does not follow that respondents could have maintained an action to foreclose at the time this suit was commenced. Both parties resided in the state of New York, where the contract was made, and either could have maintained an action there on the contract. The plaintiff could have enforced his right to redeem, and the defendants could have recovered the amount for which they held the land as security. Montgomery v. Spect, 55 Cal. 352; Kanawha Coal Co. v. Kanawha & O. Coal Co. 7 Blatchf. 415; Gardner v. Ogden, 22 N. Y. 327, 78 Am. Dec. 192; Williams v. Fitzhugh, 37 N. Y. 444. In this state, when an action on a promissory note, secured by mortgage of the same date upon real property, is barred by the Statute of Limitations, the mortgagee has no remedy upon the mortgage. Lord v. Morris, 18 Cal. 482; Heinlin v. Castro, 23 Cal. 100. The debt is regarded as the principal, and the mortgage as a mere incident. When the debt is barred, the remedy upon the mortgage is also barred. McCarthy v. White, 21 Cal. 495. If, therefore, respondents could not maintain an action in New York for the recovery of the money due, they could not maintain an action in this state to foreclose the mortgage. Code Civ. Proc. § 361. At the time the conveyance was made by John H. Allen to the respondents, a deed absolute in form, but intended as a mortgage, in this state, transferred the legal title, and there was left in the person executing it a mere equity of redemption; and whenever the debt, to secure which the deed was made, became barred by the Statute of Limitations, the right to redeem was barred. Hughes v. Davis, 40 Cal. 117; De Espinosa v. Gregory, Id. 68. The right to redeem and the right of the creditor to sue on a contract were reciprocal. When one was lost the other could not be enforced. Cunningham v. Hawkins, 24 Cal. 403, 85 Am. Dec. 73; Arrington v. Liscom, 34 Cal. 366; Grattan v. Wiggins, 23 Cal. 35. No subsequent legislation could change the rights or obligations of the parties, or extend the time for action. The right and time to redeem were fixed by the laws in force at that time. Bronson v. Kinzie, 42 U. S. 1 How. 316, 11 L. ed. 145; Walker v. Whitehead, 88 U. S. 16 Wall. 318, 21 L. ed. 358; Heyward v. Judd, 4 Minn. 483, (Gil. 375); Phinney v. Phinney, 81 Me. 450, 4 L. R. A. 848. Under the decisions just cited, section 346, Code Civ. Proc., is inapplicable, because it would effect a material change in the rights and obligations of the parties, (Phinney v. Phinney, and Heyward v. Judd, supra;) and for the same reason Raynor v. Drew, 72 Cal. 807, and other and later cases declaring the rule stated in that section, are not in point. They are based upon that section of the Code, and it was passed posterior to the time the parties entered into the contract.

It is claimed by the appellant that the finding of the court, "that the cause of action stated in the complaint is barred by the provisions of section 361 of the Code of Civil Procedure," is not supported by the evidence. The defendant introduced in evidence section 91, chap. 3, title 11, Wait Code. It is not disputed that this section applies to personal actions, and supports the fourteenth finding of the court "that, by the laws of the state of New York, an action upon a verbal agreement for the payment of money is barred within six months after the cause of action accrues thereon, and the right of defendants to maintain any action against plaintiff to recover the said sum of $500, as security for which the said deeds from Cox and John H. Allen were executed to them, has been barred by the laws of said state at all times since the 20th day of November, 1874; and the right of defendants to maintain any action against plaintiff to recover the moneys advanced by them to him, as stated in finding No. 11, has been barred by the laws of said state at all times since September 18, 1877." But it is claimed that, as the appellant's cause of action is one to ascertain the amount due upon a mortgage, and that he may be permitted to pay the same, and remove a cloud from his title, the section referred to does not apply to the case, but is governed by section 97, which provides that an action for relief not otherwise provided for must be commenced within ten years after the cause of action shall have accrued. As we have seen, however, as soon as the debt is barred the remedy upon the mortgage is lost. Respondents could not have maintained an action in New York for the recovery of the money due. They, therefore, could not maintain an action in this state to foreclose the mortgage, and the right to redeem was lost; and as the right to redeem and the right to maintain an action on the contract are reciprocal, the fourteenth finding of the court, which is not attacked, is conclusive against the plaintiff's right to maintain this action.

If it be conceded that in New York an action to redeem from a mortgage of lands situated in that state can be maintained, although an action for the recovery of the money due could not be maintained there, the result must be the same, because, as stated before, the effect of this deed depends upon the laws of this state existing at the time the contract was made. The interest of each party in the land was measured and controlled by the lex loci rei sita. Klinck v. Price, and United States v. Crosby, supra. The right to redeem is governed by the laws of this state.

It is claimed that, at the time the contract was entered into, it was the established rule in this state that a conveyance absolute in form, but intended merely as security, did not pass the legal title to the grantees. It is true there had been decisions to that effect, but in the year following it was held (Espinosa v. Gregory and Hughes v. Davis, supra), that a deed absolute in form intended as a mortgage did convey the legal title. These decisions did not change the law; they simply declared what was the law. Every one is conclusively presumed to know the law, although the ablest courts in the land often find great difficulty and labor in finally determining what the law is. The courts cannot make or repeal a law. "They can say what a law means; and if afterwards they see that they have made a mistake, they can correct their error by an overruling of a former decision, the consequence of which overruling is that the blunder is thenceforward deemed never to have been law." Bishop, Cont. § 569. It has been held here that, although it appears the parties have entered into a contract relying upon a previous decision of the supreme court, they would not be relieved from the obligations thereof because of a subsequent decision by the same court overruling the former one, and declaring a different rule upon the same subject. Kenyon v. Walby, 20 Cal. 687. There are some cases in which the Supreme Court of the United States has held that the construction given to a statute by the highest tribunal in the state, whether sound or not, must be taken as correct, so far as contracts made under the Act are concerned, and no subsequent decision altering the construction can impair their validity. The construction becomes a part of the statute,—as much so as if it were an amendment made by the Legislature. Gelpcke v. Dubuque, 68 U. S. 1 Wall. 175, 17 L. ed. 520; Louisiana v. Pilsbury, 105 U. S. 294, 26 L. ed. 1095; Douglass v. Pike County, 101 U. S. 677, 25 L. ed. 968; Thompson v. Lee County, 70 U. S. 8 Wall. 827, 18 L. ed. 177. These cases, however, all involved the question as to the validity of negotiable securities. We think that the case of Oulahan v. Sweeney, 79 Cal. 587, is distinguishable from the case at bar. The amendment therein referred to simply required the purchaser of property sold for delinquent taxes to serve upon the owner of the property a notice stating that the property had been sold for delinquent taxes, the date of the sale, the amount for which it was sold, the amount then due, the time when the right of redemption would expire, and when the purchaser would apply for a deed. This requirement was a mere incident to the right of the purchaser to receive a deed; it merely prescribed the manner in which he should proceed to demand the deed to which he was entitled. It was conceded, "for the purposes of the case, that the Legislature cannot make an absolute extension of the time for redemption of property previously sold."

We think the court below held the right view of the case, and its judgment and order are therefore affirmed.

We concur: McFarland, J.; Harrison, J.; Garoutte, J.; DeHaven, J.

Sharpstein, J., concurs in the judgment.

Beatty, Ch. J., on June 28, 1892, filed the following opinion:

I dissent. According to the opinion of the court, the plaintiff's action was barred by section 861 of the Code of Civil Procedure, because, and only because, an action by defendants to foreclose would have been barred by said section.

I am not satisfied with the reasoning by which the conclusion is reached that the defendants were barred of their action to foreclose before this action was commenced, but, conceding it to be correct, it does not follow, in my opinion, that the plaintiff's right of action was thereby lost. That the right to redeem and the right to foreclose were barred at the same time was undoubtedly the law of this state prior to the Codes, but since they were enacted the right to redeem is unaffected by the extinguishment of the right to foreclose. Code Civ. Proc. § 846; Civil Code, § 2908; Raynor v. Drew, 72 Cal. 870; Booth v. Hoskins, 75 Cal. 271; De Cazara v. Orena, 80 Cal. 184; Hall v. Arnott, 80 Cal. 354; Warder v. Enslan, 73 Cal. 291. In other words, the Codes have prescribed another rule for the limitation of actions to redeem from mortgages and other liens. By the old rule the right to redeem was barred when the right to foreclose was barred, and whether this resulted from the fact that each was covered by the same clause of the statute, or from the equitable doctrine of mutuality of rights and remedies under such contracts, the rule itself had no other effect than to fix a period of limitation to the right to redeem. This rule has been changed, and the period of limitation enlarged, by a law passed since the making of the contract here involved, but before the right of action of either of the parties had been lost, and before the commencement of this suit. The question, therefore, is, Which rule applies, the old or the new?

That these provisions of the Codes were intended to apply to all actions commenced after they took effect is to my mind perfectly clear. It is true the Codes are not retroactive, (Civ. Code, § 8; Code Civ. Proc. § 8,) and it is also true that vested rights should never be impaired by giving a retroactive effect to a law. But a law enlarging the period of limitations upon existing contracts is not a retroactive law, and it impairs no vested rights. Unless restricted in its operation by its own terms, a new rule of limitations necessarily applies to all actions thereafter commenced, and to all causes of action not already extinguished by the running of time under the pre-existing rule. This being so, we have only to look to the express provisions of the Codes to see how far the new rules by them prescribed are restricted in their operation upon actions commenced after they took effect. In section 6 of the Civil Code we find the following provision: "No action or proceeding commenced before this Code takes effect, and no right accrued, is affected by its provisions." Section 8 of the Code of Civil Procedure contains the same language. The clear implication is that actions not commenced and rights not vested prior to the adoption of the Codes are to be controlled by their provisions. The more specific provision respecting the application of the new rules of limitation is found in section 362 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and is as follows: "This title does not extend to actions already commenced, nor to cases where the time prescribed in any existing statute for acquiring a right or barring a remedy has fully run, but the laws now in force are applicable to such actions and cases, and are repealed subject to the provisions of this section." Here the implication is equally clear that the new rules apply to all actions not already commenced, and to all cases where the time prescribed by existing statutes for barring the remedy has not fully run. In this case the time had not run, and the action had not been commenced. The conclusion, therefore, cannot be avoided that the rule of the Code applies, unless its application would have the effect of changing the contract or impairing its obligation. The respondents contend, and the court holds, that such would be its effect. They say that the law of the state of California, as it existed at the date of their deed from John H. Allen, defining the mutual rights and obligations of the parties to the transaction, entered into and became a part of the contract, and that such law gave them (the respondents) an important right which the above-cited provisions of the Codes would take away or materially abridge. If this is true, it must be conceded that the Code provisions are inapplicable. But is it true? What are the rights conferred by the Law of 1889 which the Codes take away or impair? They do not take away or impair the right of a mortgagee to foreclose, they merely enlarge the time within which the mortgagor may redeem, and this is all the respondents have to complain of. By the law of California prior to the Codes, they say a mortgage in the form of an absolute conveyance invested the mortgagee with the legal title to the land, leaving in the mortgagor a mere equity of redemption which was barred and extinguished at the same moment that the debt was barred, thereby creating in the mortgagee a title complete, absolute, and indefeasible, without the necessity of a foreclosure; and, therefore, they insist it must be held that this right to obtain a complete title without foreclosure was among the advantages they bargained and paid for, and is a right of which they could not be deprived by subsequent legislation, as they would be if subjected to the Code provisions (Sec. 346, Code Civ. Proc.; sec. 2903, Civ. Code,) under the operation of which they could never perfect their title except by foreclosure, or by five years' adverse possession of the mortgaged premises after condition broken. The completeness of this argument is marred by the fact that it assumes too much for the law of California before the Codes. The decisions relied on by respondents do not go to the extent claimed for them. The cases cited are Hughes v. Davis, 40 Cal. 117; De Espinosa v. Gregory, 40 Cal. 58; Pico v. Gallardo, 53 Cal. 206. A critical examination of this line of decisions will show that the only case in which a mortgagee by deed absolute could acquire an indefeasible title to the mortgaged estate without foreclosure was when he had possession. This was the case in De Espinosa v. Gregory. The mortgagee was in possession, the right to foreclose was barred, and it was held that the mortgagor had thereby lost the right to redeem. The mortgagee got the land without foreclosure. But in Hughes v. Davis, and Pico v. Gallardo, the mortgagors were in possession, and the mortgagees were suing in ejectment after their right to foreclose was barred. It was held that the mortgagees had the legal title to the lands, and that they were entitled to recover possession, in the absence of allegations in the answers setting forth the equities of the defendants, with an offer to pay the amount of the mortgage liens, and prayer that the conveyances be declared mortgages. In other words, a right of redemption on the usual terms, against the mortgagee out of possession, was distinctly admitted, although the right to foreclose was barred.

Now, what right of these respondents under the law as declared in the cases referred to, would be taken away or impaired by sustaining plaintiff's action to redeem? They never had possession of the mortgaged premises, and had no right to the possession. If, after their right to foreclose was barred,—if it ever was barred,—they had anticipated the plaintiff in taking possession of the land, their title might thereby have become perfect under the doctrine of De Esplanosa v. Gregory, but if plaintiff had anticipated them in taking possession, their only remedy would have been to sue in ejectment, in which case he could have set up his equity, and effected a redemption, according to the doctrine of Pico v. Gallardo, upon precisely the same terms that can be imposed in this action. The only difference between this case and the case supposed is that plaintiff, without taking possession, and without waiting to be sued, offers the respondents, in advance, all that he would be compelled to pay in order to redeem if he had taken possession, and waited for them to sue. To allow this would surely not be to deprive the respondents of any valuable right. Enough has been said, I think, to show that respondents never brought themselves within the rule of De Esplanosa v. Gregory, because they never had possession of the land; but if the fact had been otherwise all the decisions of this court are to the effect that a law extending plaintiff's right of redemption would be valid. Take the case of tax sales: Prior to March, 1885, the purchaser of land sold for delinquent taxes became at once entitled to a tax deed if the property was not redeemed before the expiration of the year. In March, 1885, the law was so amended as to require the purchaser to give 80 days' notice to the owner or occupant of the land of his intention to apply for a deed. This amendment to the law was held to apply to sales made before its adoption. Oullahan v. Sweeney, 79 Cal. 589. It is impossible to distinguish that case from this, and if it was correctly decided there can be no doubt of the power of the Legislature to extend the right of a mortgagor to redeem. See also Moore v. Martin, 88 Cal. 488, and Toutumne Redemption Co. v. Redgwick, 15 Cal. 515.

In the briefs of counsel a large number of decisions are cited from the reports of other states bearing more or less directly upon this point, with respect to which it can only be said that they are so conflicting as to furnish no ground for reversing our own decision in Oullahan v. Sweeney, supra. A decision on this point by the Supreme Court of the United States would of course be binding authority, as the immunity asserted arises under the Constitution of the United States, but no such decision has been cited. What was said by Judge Taney, in Bronson v. Kinzie, 42 U. S. 1 How. 816, 11 L. ed. 145, has been pronounced obiter, and its authority denied by this court. See dissenting opinion of Judge Heydenfeldt, in Thorne v. San Francisco, 4 Cal. 156, adopted in Moore v. Martin, 88 Cal. 488. Of the cases cited in the department opinion heretofore filed, (27 Pac. Rep. 80,) that of Phinney v. Phinney, 81 Me. 450, 4 L. R. A. 848, comes nearer than any other to sustaining the contention of respondents, but even that might be distinguished, for the law there held unconstitutional was one by which the equity of redemption could be indefinitely extended at the suit of a stranger to the mortgage. Finally, it may be said that if the doctrine under discussion is to control the decision of this case, it may be invoked by the appellant with quite as much justice as by respondents.

The cases of Hughes v. Davis and De Esplanosa v. Gregory were not decided until the year following the deed of John H. Allen, and they directly overruled a long line of decisions by this court holding that a mortgage by deed absolute did not pass the legal title. The construction given to our laws by these decisions was the law itself at the date of that deed, and fixed the rights of the parties so that they could not be changed by a subsequent construction any more than by subsequent legislation. Douglas v. Pike County, 101 U. S. 677, 25 L. ed. 968; Gelpcke v. Dubuque, 68 U. S. 1 Wall. 175, 17 L. ed. 520. For these reasons I conclude that the finding of the superior court, that plaintiff's cause of action was barred by section 361 of the Code of Civil Procedure, is not sustained by the evidence, and, therefore that a new trial should have been granted, and that the order appealed from and the judgment should be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

NORTH DAKOTA SUPREME COURT.

Daniel J. DAVIS et al., Respts.,

v.

Lorenzo N. BRONSON, Appt.

(.....N. Dak.....)

Defendant having refused to perform a contract for the erection of a Head note by CORLISS, Ch. J.

creamery by plaintiffs before they had entered upon the performance thereof.—Held, that an action to recover the contract price would not lie, although plaintiffs had, notwithstanding defendant's refusal to perform, completed the creamery according to contract. Plaintiffs had no right to go on with the contract under such circumstances, and recover the contract price; their only remedy being for damages for breach of the contract.

NOTE.—Rights of one who completes contract in disregard of notice to desist.

In Clark v. Maraglia, 1 Denio, 817, defendant delivered to plaintiff certain paintings to be cleaned and repaired. After plaintiff had commenced the work defendant countermanded his order. It was held that plaintiff could recover for labor and materials used prior to the countermand and such damages as might be assessed for the breach of

16 L. R. A.

November 27, 1901.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for La Moure County in favor of plaintiffs in an action brought to recover the contract price for the erection of a creamery. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. George W. Newton, for appellant:

Before the plaintiffs had done any act under said contract—could have received it even—the appellant, by letters and telegram, revoked and countermanded his contract; or, in other words, broke his contract. Thus, there was a breach of his executory contract. At the very most, it only subjected him to an action, on the part of the plaintiffs, to recover the damages suffered by them up to that point—the time of the breach. Such damages were for the jury to find and assess, and that question should have been submitted to the jury for their determination.

The court refused to submit the question of damages to the jury as an open question and ruled that the measure of damages was the subscription with legal interest from the time the creamery was completed.

Danforth v. Walker, 87 Vt. 239, 40 Vt. 257; Derby v. Johnson, 21 Vt. 17; Nye v. Taggart, 40 Vt. 295, found in Roberts' Vermont Digest, p. 168 (240, 241, 256); Clark v. Marsiglia, 1 Denio, 317; Spencer v. Halstead, Id. 606; Dillon v. Anderson, 43 N. Y. 237; Wilson v. Martin, 1 Denio, 602; Moline Scale Co. v. Beed, 52 Iowa, 307; Nebraska City v. Nebraska H. Gas Light & C. Co. 9 Neb. 339.

The fact of others being subscribers has no effect upon the question. The contract was a several contract with the plaintiffs, on the part of each subscriber.

Davis v. Belford, 14 West. Rep. 202, 70 Mich. 120.

Whether appellant would be liable to his co-subscribers for damages for not fulfilling or his part, is a question not in the case. It can, in no way, be made available to the plaintiffs.

Ashuelot B. & S. Co. v. Hoyt, 56 N. H. 548, found in 1 Waterman, Corp. p. 167, note; Athol M. H. Co. v. Carey, 116 Mass. 473; Cottage Street M. E. Church v. Kendall, 121 Mass. 528, 28 Am. Rep. 286.

That plaintiffs would be liable to the appellants' co-subscribers in case they had not performed, is a question not in the case. If it were, the reply is, that the claim, as an element of damages, is entirely too remote.

Smith v. Smith, 45 Vt. 433; Roberts, Vt. Dig. p. 178 (358).

Messrs. Moor & Harris for respondents.

Corliss, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The theory on which plaintiffs were allowed to recover against the appellant was that they had fully performed on their part all the conditions of an agreement with appellant and others to erect and equip a creamery at La Moure in this state. We are compelled to reverse the judgment because it appears that the plaintiffs were not justified in proceeding with the work under the contract for the purpose of charging the appellant with the full amount which he and his copartner agreed to pay as their share of the contract price, as it is undisputed that the appellant broke the contract the day after it was made, and plaintiffs received notice of his determination not to carry out the agreement on his part on the second day after the contract was entered into. This was be-contract, but not for labor performed after the countermand.

The court said: "In all such cases the just claims of the party employed are satisfied when he is fully recompensed for his part performance and indemnified for his loss in respect to the part left unexecuted; and to persist in accumulating a larger demand is not consistent with good faith toward the employer."

Clark v. Marsiglia, supra, is cited with approval on this point in Lord v. Thomas, 64 N. Y. 107.

In Moline Scale Co. v. Beed, 52 Iowa, 307, the defendant ordered of the plaintiff a scale to be built by the latter in co-operation with the former, who was to furnish the foundation and lumber. Before the plaintiff had received the order from its agent it was countermanded. In disregard of the countermand the plaintiff proceeded with its part of the contract and sued for the contract price. Held that it could not recover.

Notice to a contractor not to proceed with the erection of houses under the contract will preclude recovery of a payment for work performed subsequent to the notice. Heaver v. Lanahan (Md.) June 17, 1891.

In Nebraska City v. Nebraska H. Gas-Light & C. Co., 9 Neb. 339, a city notified a gas company to furnish no more gas to it under a contract still in force. The court said: "The taking of this step, however, did not amount to a rescission of the contract, but simply to a breach of it, for which the company in a proper action would be entitled to recover adequate damages. But, in such action, the contract price of the gas furnished after the refusal to receive it would not necessarily be the measure of damages recoverable."

Where several tax-payers unite in an agreement to contest by legal proceedings the issuance of municipal bonds, but before any steps are taken or any expense incurred thereunder one of them gives notice of his withdrawal, he is not liable to contribute to the payment of expenses subsequently incurred by his associates. Solomon v. Pennoyer (Mich.) Dec. 21, 1891.

In Marsh v. Blackman, 50 Barb. 333, a recovery of an installment due on a contract made by the defendants for the support of their father during his natural life was upheld, notwithstanding notice to the plaintiff from the defendants that they "shall pay nothing further under said contract, and prefer to pay such damages as you may be legally entitled to than to proceed any further under it." The court was of opinion that the contract was one that equity would specifically enforce against the defendants, and said: "If it be a case for specific performance, the plaintiff, having the power to perform, is at liberty to do so, and recover at law under the contract."

In McAllister v. Sadley, 35 Iowa, 719, it was held that one who selected a monument to be completed, inscribed, and erected could not rescind the contract, and that notwithstanding notice that one would not take it before the seller had inscribed or erected it, the latter could complete and erect it according to the contract and recover the agreed price. In this case the transaction was treated as a sale by which the title to the monument passed.

J. G. G.

fore they had taken any steps under it. Appellant could not, under the facts of this case, rescind the agreement without the assent of all parties thereto. Nor is it claimed that he did rescind it. The utmost that can be urged is that he arbitrarily refused to perform his part of the contract. This would subject him to an action for damages for breach of the contract. But the plaintiffs could not, in the face of this refusal on his part to perform, undertake and carry to completion the work under the contract to be performed by them, and thereupon insist that they were entitled to recover from the appellant his share of the contract price. The authorities are very clear on this point. Bishop, Cont. §§ 887-841; Danforth v. Walker, 87 Vt. 239, 40 Vt. 257; Moline Scale Co. v. Beed, 52 Iowa, 807; Nebraska City v. Nebraska H. Gas-Light & C. Co., 9 Neb. 839; Clark v. Marsiglia, 1 Denio, 817; Butler v. Butler, 77 N. Y. 472.

No damages for breach of the contract by the appellant were proved, nor was there any allegation of such damages. The action was upon the contract to recover the contract price, and not for damages for breach of it. For this vital error the judgment is reversed, and a new trial ordered.

All concur.

ON REHEARING.

It is urged that Kadish v. Young, 108 Ill. 170, and Roebbing's Sons' Co. v. Lock Stitch Fence Co., 180 Ill. 660, are conclusive in favor of the doctrine that one party to a contract cannot, by notice of his determination not to perform, given before the time to begin performance has arrived, create such a breach of the contract as will compel the other party, who does not assent to the breach, to treat the contract as then broken, and limit him to the recovery of such damages as are proper on the basis that the contract is then broken. These cases do sustain such a doctrine, and it is undoubtedly an elementary rule of law. The full scope of these and kindred decisions is that the person who has not broken his part of the compact may, at his option, extend to the person who has signified his purpose to violate the agreement an opportunity for repentance, measured by the time to elapse between the refusal to perform and the date when performance is to commence. He may, and some cases hold that he must, treat the contract as subsisting, not for the purpose of performing it in the face of a persistent, unchangeable refusal of the other party to carry out, and then of recovering the full contract price, but for the purpose of insisting that such party shall, when the time of performance arrives, finally determine whether he will stand by his agreement or by his former repudiation thereof. All that these cases decide is that the repudiating party may not force the other party to sue for a breach of the contract before the time of performance arrives, and therefore have his damages fixed by the condition of affairs at the time of the premature repudiation of the contract, as though such repudiation had been made on the day of performance. But when the time to perform arrives, then, if the refusal to carry out the agreement is not withdrawn, there is no principle on which the other party to the contract can perform and sue for the contract price any more than in the case of a refusal made for the first time on the very day of performance. The party keeping the contract need not mitigate the damages by treating as final a premature repudiation thereof, but this is far from establishing the proposition that he may increase the amount to be paid by the other party by completing the contract after notice of repudiation, made on the day of performance, or made before that day, and never withdrawn, but, on the contrary, constantly insisted upon down to and including that day. In Kadish v. Young, 108 Ill. 170-185, the soundness of the cases cited to sustain our conclusion is expressly recognized. After citing some of them, the court says: "It will be observed in each of these cases the time for the performance of the contract had arrived, and its performance had been entered upon. In neither of them was the defendant at liberty, after notifying the plaintiff not to proceed further in the performance of the contract, to demand that he should proceed to perform it. As it was said in Frost v. Knight, L. R. 7 Exch. 111, the defendant was, in case of notice, not to perform a contract the time of performance of which is to commence in the future. In these cases there is no time or opportunity for repentance or change of mind; in those there was." The court quotes with approval the language used in Danforth v. Walker, 87 Vt. 244, where the court says: "While a contract is executory, a party has the power to stop performance on the other side by an explicit direction to that effect by subjecting himself to such damages as will compensate the other party for being stopped in the performance on his part at that hour or stage in the execution of the contract. The party thus forbidden cannot afterwards go on, and thereby increase the damages, and then recover such damages of the other party." It is to be noted that in the case at bar the refusal to perform was not premature. The contract specified no time when performance thereof should be entered upon by the plaintiffs, but it provided that the building, with all of its equipments, must be finished within 100 days after the amount had been subscribed. The plaintiffs might, under these provisions, have entered upon the performance of their part of the agreement at once. It was the right of the appellant to notify them immediately of his determination not to carry out his part of the contract, in order to save himself from the increased damage which a partial performance before notice might cause. Daniels v. Newton, 114 Mass. 533, 19 Am. Rep. 384, is confidently relied on by respondents. The language used in this and similar cases must be construed in the light of the facts. In the case in 114 Mass. an action for damages was brought before the defendant was under any obligation to perform the contract, the action being based upon defendant's premature refusal to carry out the contract. The decision merely was that the action was prematurely brought; that the defendant might, before the time for performance arrived, change his mind, and insist on a performance of the contract. The case does not decide that when one party to a contract may, under its terms, enter upon the performance of it, the other party may not, subject always to liability for damages, prevent the completion of the contract, or prevent the commencement of work thereunder, for the purpose of subjecting him to liability for the full contract price. If respondents' contention is sound, it was beyond the power of the appellant ever to escape the payment of the contract price, although he had been the only party to the contract on his side. He could not break it so as to subject himself to damages, and prevent the respondents from completing the creamery and holding him for the contract price until the same had been fully completed and ready for delivery, for only then, it is said, was the appellant bound to do any act on his part under the contract; and when the creamery was finished it was claimed that appellant would not escape payment of the price, because it is said the title instantly vested in him and his associates in the contract, not only without his assent, but against his will. What, then, becomes of the doctrine that one party to a contract cannot, except in special cases, enforce specific performance thereof, but must make his claim for damages? And what becomes of the authorities recognized as sound by respondents' own cases, which hold that the party who has something to do must not, after notice of refusal from the other party, go on with the work, and thus increase the liability of such other party to him? Respondents seem to urge that at no time is notice of refusal to perform efficacious to prevent performance on the other side except at the moment that the party breaking the compact is bound to perform. Their own cases are against this position. Said the court in Daniels v. Newton, 114 Mass. 538, 19 Am. Rep. 384: "The plaintiff's rights are invaded by repudiation of the contract only when it produces the effect of non-performance, or prevents him from entering upon or completing performance on his part, at a time when, and in a manner in which, he is entitled to perform it or have it performed." It may well be true that where the performance by the party notified not to perform consists of a single act—as the tender of a deed—notice before the time for such delivery will not warrant an action for damages; but where the final act of tender is the culmination of other acts which, in the nature of the case, must precede it,—as where the party is to manufacture or build the thing to be delivered, then it is quite clear that the conduct which before the time of delivery prevents the taking of the preliminary steps,—the manufacture of the article or the erection of the building,—as effectually prevents, before the day of tender arrives, the possibility of delivery, as though that day in fact had arrived, and a tender of the thing had been rejected. In such a case the contract is as effectually broken by the notice not to go on with it, given before the day of delivery arrives,—the person who is to do the work having then the right to enter upon the performance of the same,—as though the notice had been given on the very day of delivery. The question in all cases is whether one party has prevented performance by the other party at the time when performance by him is due. This can be done as well by preventing the taking of those preliminary steps without which the final step cannot be taken as by preventing the taking of such final step itself. These preliminary steps must often precede by many days the time of performance, and it therefore must follow that notice of refusal to carry out the contract in such a case, given before the time of performance, will operate as a breach of the contract in case the time has arrived at which the person willing to keep the contract may enter upon the work under the contract.

Counsel refer to the statute touching rescission of contracts, and insist that the appellant has not shown that the case falls within any of the provisions of such statute. In this he is correct. There was no rescission of the contract. A lawful rescission of an agreement puts an end to it for all purposes, not only to preclude the recovery of the contract price, but also to prevent the recovery of damages for breach of the contract. This is the common-law rule, and our statute merely echoes this rule. "A contract is extinguished by rescission." Section 3588, Comp. Laws.

Counsel seem to be unable to make the distinction between the right of one party to refuse to perform his agreement, always subject to his liability for damages, and the rescission or utter destruction of a contract for all purposes, resulting from mutual consent, or from the action of one party alone, where by reason of fraud, duress, or other legal ground for rescission the right is vested in him to elect to abrogate the contract without liability thereunder for damages or for the contract price. The burden of the argument seems to be that no person can break a contract unless he can and does rescind it. The result is that no compact can ever be violated so as to subject the person attempting to infringe it to damages, for there is no breach on this theory, except in cases where there can be no breach, because by rescission the contract is annihilated so effectually that in contemplation of law it has never had any existence, even for the purpose of being broken. The two lines of thought run in diverse directions. One starts with the fact that one party has refused to perform, and leads to the conclusion that the other party must do nothing from the moment he is aware of such refusal to increase the liability of the one breaking the agreement, and must, therefore, so long as such refusal is not recalled, abstain from going on with the work he has to perform under the contract; the other finds a mutual abandonment of the contract, or an abandonment by one who, under the law, has a legal right to abandon it, and leads inevitably to the conclusion that there is no contract to be performed by any one, and hence that no damages for breach thereof can be incurred, and that no liability for the contract price can possibly exist. That the Massachusetts supreme court, in Daniels v. Newton, did not intend to decide contrary to our views is apparent from the fact that the same court, only six months later, without overruling Daniels v. Newton, or even regarding it as at all bearing on the question, expressly recognized and enunciated the doctrine on which we rest our decision. In Collins v. Delaporte, 115 Mass. 159, that court says: "A party to an executory contract may stop its performance by an explicit order, and will subject himself only to such damages as will compensate the other party for being deprived of its benefits."

It is urged that the plaintiffs were bound to build the creamery despite the defendant's refusal to go on with the contract, because there were other parties to the contract, who could have held the plaintiffs liable in damages had they, acting upon defendant's breach of the agreement, refrained from constructing the building. We see no principle on which the other parties could have recovered from the plaintiffs damages under these circumstances. Their agreement was with all the defendants, including this appellant. They did not agree to build a creamery for the other defendants, and take their responsibility for the contract price. It furnishes an ample justification for a failure to go on with the work that one of the contracting parties—perhaps the only responsible one—has by a breach of the contract made it impossible for the plaintiffs to complete the building, and charge such party with the contract price. The contract was entire, and the plaintiffs could not be compelled to perform it as to and for only a portion of the contracting parties. It is illogical to assert that the plaintiffs would have been liable to the other parties had they, acting upon the appellant's breach, refrained from carrying out the agreement on their part. On what principle does this assertion stand? The general rule is, as we have already stated, that the contracting party who has certain things to do under his contract, has no right to proceed with the execution of the contract, and charge the other party with the expense thereof, after he has been notified that such other party will not stand by his compact. There is no reason why the rule should not apply in the case of a refusal to perform, emanating from one of two. The parties on the same side of a contract are bound together in interest, and there is no reason why all of the rest should not be responsible for the default of any one. The nature of the engagement is that the contracting party will continue bound to perform only on condition that they all continue faithful to their compact, and not on condition of only a portion standing by their engagement. Whether defendant may be liable to his co-contractors for breach of an implied agreement to keep his promise we need not now decide.

It is urged that the decision in Buchel v. Lott (Tex. App.) 15 S. W. Rep. 418, is in point. We cannot see the faintest resemblance between that case and the one at bar. The appellant, with others, had signed a subscription list, aggregating $28,000. The amount subscribed was to be a bonus to be paid on the construction of a line of railway within a specified time. The railroad was so constructed, and in an action against the appellant to recover the amount of his subscription, the court held him liable on the theory that the consideration for his promise was executed; the promise of each subscriber being such a consideration for the promise of the others as rendered absolute the obligation to pay the amount of the subscription; and that, therefore, appellant could not withdraw his subscription. In the class of cases of which this is one the doctrine is recognized that the liability is as absolute as though each subscriber had received as a loan the amount which he agrees to pay as a subscription. There is an obligation to pay the money, which is indefeasible by any act of the subscriber. Said the court in this case: "He became bound upon said contract, the moment he signed it, for the amount subscribed by him, subject only to the condition that the railway should not be constructed according to the terms of the contract." This doctrine is by no means recognized universally, and it is not too much to say that the weight of reason and authority is against it. Twenty-Third St. Bapt. Church v. Cornwell, 117 N. Y. 601, 6 L. R. A. 807; Presbyterian Church of Albany v. Cooper, 112 N. Y. 517; Cottage Street M. E. Church v. Kendall, 121 Mass. 528, 23 Am. Rep. 286; University of Des Moines v. Livingston, 57 Iowa, 807.

But this question we are not called upon here to decide, nor is it at all material, for, assuming the decision to be sound, it makes nothing against our position, for here there was a general agreement on the part of all to pay $5,000 for the creamery. Each was bound for the full amount. The plaintiffs agreed to build the creamery for $5,000, and the engagement of the subscribers is to pay, not the amount set opposite their several names, but the sum of $5,000 generally. "We, the subscribers hereto, parties of the second part, agree to pay the above amount for said creamery when completed," etc. The consideration for this joint promise to pay $5,000 was the erection of this creamery. The consideration therefore was not executed, but executory. There did not arise upon the signing of the contract by the appellant an absolute obligation to pay $5,000, or any portion of it, the same as though he had actually received the consideration for the promise,—the theory upon which subscribers are held liable in the class of cases to which Buchel v. Lott, belongs—but he became bound to stand by his agreement, or, in default thereof, to pay such damages as a breach of his contract would cause.

The petition for rehearing is denied.

All concur.

Bartholomew, J., having been of counsel, did not sit on the hearing of the above case, nor take any part in the decision: Judge Templeton, of the first judicial district, sitting by request.

CALIFORNIA SUPREME COURT.

William S. BARNES, Respt.,
v.

Hattie A. Smith BARNES, Appt.

(..... Cal.)

1. The filing of a paper stating that an action is dismissed does not take away jurisdiction of the court until entry of a judgment of dismissal.
2. Causing mental suffering, although not affecting bodily health, may constitute extreme cruelty under Civ. Code, § 94, which defines it as the "infliction of grievous bodily injury or grievous mental suffering."
3. There is no abuse of discretion in refusing a motion for a continuance if the circumstances cast suspicion on the good faith of the application.

(Beatty, Ch. J., and DeHaven and Harrison, JJ., dissent.)

(June 18, 1902.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for the City and County of San Francisco in favor of plaintiff and from an order denying a new trial in an action brought to secure a divorce. Affirmed.

The case is stated in the opinion.

Mr. John P. O'Brien, with Messrs. E. L. Campbell, W. T. Baggett and W. W. Foote, for appellant:

The court erred in making its order herein dated July 2, 1899, granting plaintiff leave to withdraw his dismissal, and had no jurisdiction to proceed with the trial of the cause.

Thompson v. Spragg, 66 Cal. 350; Merritt v. Campbell, 47 Cal. 543; Grimes v. Chamberlain, 27 Neb. 605.

The discretion confided to the court to deny continuance is a legal discretion to be exercised not capriciously or arbitrarily but by fixed legal principles, and in a manner to subserve and not to impede or defeat the ends of substantial justice.

Bailey v. Taafte, 29 Cal. 424; Lybecker v. Murray, 58 Cal. 189; Stringer v. Davis, 30 Cal. 322; Purinton v. Frank, 2 Iowa, 565; State v. Painter, 40 Iowa, 298; Ex parte Marks, 49 Cal. 681; Ex parte Hoge, 48 Cal. 5; Garfield Nat. Bank v. Colwell, 28 N. Y. S. R. 723; Carter v. Wharton, 82 Va. 264; Haines v. Roebuck, 47 N. J. L. 228; Wright v. Levy, 23 Minn. 466.

Courts are extremely liberal in granting adjournments even when simply expedient and much more when any necessity exists.

Turner v. Morrison, 11 Cal. 31.

The public has an interest in such cases, and the court should afford both parties the fullest possible hearing in such matters.

McBlain v. McBlain, 77 Cal. 509; Wadsworth v. Wadsworth, 81 Cal. 183; Cottrell v. Cottrell, 88 Cal. 460; Stewart, Mar. & Div. § 327.

The finding of the court, as a conclusion of law, "that the defendant has inflicted upon the plaintiff grievous mental suffering," is wholly without support from and is wholly contrary to the evidence produced.

Waldron v. Waldron, 9 L. R. A. 437, 85 Cal. 251.

The evidence on behalf of plaintiff does not constitute or support a cause of action for divorce on the ground of extreme cruelty.

Ibid.; Mahoney v. Mahoney, 19 Cal. 626, 81 Am. Dec. 91; Rice v. Rice, 6 Ind. 100; Beebe v. Beebe, 10 Iowa, 183; Cloze v. Cloze, 25 N. J. Eq. 526; Stewart, Mar. & Div. §§ 263-267.

The alleged accusations if made at all,—and we have only the hired private detective, Mrs. Mahoney's evidence to support the allegation,—were never made by the defendant either in the presence of the plaintiff or in public. They were made, if at all, to a private detective employed for the very purpose, no doubt, of inducing the defendant, under the guise of a sympathetic friend, to say harsh things against her husband. The plaintiff could never have heard of them but for the act of his father in purposely communicating them, that he might, if possible, induce the son to abandon the defendant. There is not an adjudication by any court, and we confidently believe never will be, that accusations thus made constitute a ground for divorce.

Blake v. Blake, 70 Ill. 618; Moller v. Moller, 115 N. Y. 466; Peck v. Peck, 10 West. Rep. 524, 66 Mich. 586; Minds v. Minds, 9 West. Rep. 125, 65 Mich. 638.

The uncorroborated testimony of Mrs. Mahoney was insufficient to support a decree of divorce in the case at bar.

Blake v. Blake, supra; Browning, Mar. & Div. p. 70; Moller v. Moller, supra.

Mr. W. S. Hinkle, for respondent:

This action was never dismissed, and the court had jurisdiction to make all proper orders therein, and to try and determine the same.

Seymour v. Wood, 68 Cal. 81; Sore v. McGovern, 65 Cal. 244; Page v. Alameda County Super. Ct. 76 Cal. 372; Page v. Page, 77 Cal. 88; Re Cook, 1 L. R. A. 567, 77 Cal. 230.

The general appearance for the defendant by Hon. David S. Terry and W. T. Baggett, Esq., gave the court jurisdiction of the person of defendant.

Douglas v. Pacific Mail S. S. Co. 4 Cal. 804; Seale v. McLaughlin, 28 Cal. 688; Mahony v. Middleton, 41 Cal. 41.

The filing by defendant of her answer and cross-complaint was a second appearance on her behalf, and waived service of summons

NORM.—What seems to be the present tendency of the law on the subject of divorce is well illustrated by the above decision, in which the more conservative position of the earlier cases is departed from and one of greater liberality in favor of divorce is adopted.

16 L. R. A.

For another illustration of this tendency, see Robinson v. Robinson (N. H.) 15 L. R. A. 121.

For note on the subject of cruelty as a ground for divorce, see Doolittle v. Doolittle (Iowa) 5 L. R. A. 187.

or the issuing of process. By this proceeding the defendant was fully within the court's jurisdiction.

Cronise v. Carghill, 4 Cal. 121; Snydam v. Pitcher, 4 Cal. 280; Douglas v. Pacific Mail S. S. Co. supra; Smith v. Curtis, 7 Cal. 584; Hayes v. Shattuck, 21 Cal. 51; Randall v. Folkner, 41 Cal. 242; Foot v. Richmond, 42 Cal. 489; Dyer v. North, 44 Cal. 157; Johnson v. Tyson, 45 Cal. 257; Kimball v. Alameda County Suprs. 46 Cal. 19; Ghiradelli v. Greene, 56 Cal. 629; Spring Valley Water Works v. Schottler, 62 Cal. 70; Tyrrell v. Baldwin, 67 Cal. 1.

The affidavit of an attorney of a party that he is "informed and believes" as to any fact in issue is not evidence which could properly have any persuasive influence on the court.

Barnard v. Wilson, 66 Cal. 258; People v. Jenkins, 56 Cal. 5.

An allegation that the facts could not, "so far as affiant knows, be proved by any other person or persons," falls far short of the well-known rule that the party must show that the facts cannot otherwise be proved.

Pope v. Dalton, 81 Cal. 218.

Mr. Baggett's voluntary absence from the state after the cause was set for trial was no ground for a continuance.

Lightner v. Menad, 35 Cal. 452; Kern Valley Bank v. Chester, 55 Cal. 51.

The whole case showed that the defendant wished the court to continue the trial of a case which had been three times set for trial because she was traveling with an Opera Bouffe Company which was expected to bring up in San Francisco some time during the month of January, and that her claim of sickness was a transparent sham. There was no abuse of discretion in proceeding with the trial under such a state of facts.

Frank v. Brady, 8 Cal. 47; Musgrove v. Perkins, 9 Cal. 212; Pilot Rock Creek Canal Co. v. Chapman, 11 Cal. 161; Griffin v. Polhemus, 20 Cal. 181; People v. DeLacey, 28 Cal. 590; People v. Gaunt, 23 Cal. 156; Hastings v. Hastings, 31 Cal. 95; Wilkinson v. Parrott, 32 Cal. 102; Harper v. Lamping, 33 Cal. 641; Carey v. Philadelphia & C. P. Co. Id. 694; People v. Mortimer, 46 Cal. 114; Kern Valley Bank v. Chester, supra.

The false and malicious charges made by defendant against the plaintiff entitled him to the relief awarded by the court.

De Haley v. Haley, 74 Cal. 491, 67 Cal. 24; Powelson v. Powelson, 22 Cal. 358.

Whether a false and malicious charge, made after the actual separation of the parties, would be less apt to inflict grievous mental anguish for that reason, is for the trial court to determine in view of all the facts.

Valensin v. Valensin, 73 Cal. 106.

Nor need the vicious slander any more than threats or words of menace be addressed to or in the presence of the assailed party.

1 Bishop, Mar. & Div. p. 780; D'Aguilar v. D'Aguilar, 1 Hagg. Eccl. Rep. 778, 3 Eng. Eccl. Rep. 329; Hollister v. Hollister, 6 Pa. 449.

As to the view which courts take of such conduct as that imputed to the plaintiff by the defendant, see—

Ciocci v. Ciocci, 26 Eng. L. & Eq. 604; Leach v. Leach (Me.) 3 New Eng. Rep. 828; Holyoke v. 16 L. R. A.

Holyoke, 3 New Eng. Rep. 169, 78 Me. 404; Popkin v. Popkin, 1 Hagg. Eccl. Rep. 765.

The law gives the same relief to a complaining husband as to a complaining wife.

Kirkwall v. Kirkwall, 2 Hagg. Consist. Rep. 277; Waring v. Waring, 3 Phillim. 132, 1 Eng. Eccl. Rep. 210; White v. White, 1 Swab. & T. 591; Lynch v. Lynch, 33 Md. 328; Kempf v. Kempf, 34 Mo. 211; Jones v. Jones, 66 Pa. 494.

Per Curiam:

Action for divorce upon the ground of extreme cruelty. Judgment was entered in favor of plaintiff, and the defendant appeals.

1. After the filing of the complaint in this action, and before any appearance on the part of defendant, the attorney for plaintiff filed with the clerk of the superior court a paper properly entitled in the cause, and stating, "The above-entitled action is hereby dismissed;" but no judgment of dismissal was entered. It is claimed by appellant that upon the filing of this paper the court lost jurisdiction of the action, and that jurisdiction was not restored by the subsequent appearance and answer of defendant. This objection to the jurisdiction of the court was made in various forms in the court below, and overruled. The court did not err in its rulings upon this point. The filing of the paper referred to was, in effect, an order for a dismissal of the action, and would have been sufficient authority for the clerk to have entered a judgment of dismissal; but until the entry of such judgment the court retained jurisdiction of the case. Page v. Alameda County Super. Ct. 76 Cal. 372; Acocok v. Halsey, 90 Cal. 215; Rochat v. Gee, 91 Cal. 355.

2. It is urged by appellant that the facts alleged in the complaint and found by the court do not entitle plaintiff to the decree which he obtained, dissolving the marriage which existed between him and appellant. The cruelty alleged and found is that appellant inflicted grievous mental suffering upon plaintiff by imputing to him, in the presence of others, the grossest immorality and personal impurity. It is not necessary to state here, with any particularity, the language by which these charges were made. It is sufficient to say that such charges, if false, were well calculated to bring upon a person of ordinary sensibility grievous mental suffering. But it is not alleged in the complaint, nor is it found by the court, that the charges of which plaintiff complains had any injurious effect upon his health, and for this reason it is claimed that the complaint and findings do not support the judgment under the law as declared by this court in Waldron v. Waldron, 85 Cal. 251, 9 L. R. A. 487. It was held in that case that a finding to the effect that the defendant had inflicted upon the plaintiff therein grievous mental suffering, but without injury to her health, was not equivalent to a finding of extreme cruelty upon the part of the defendant, and would not sustain a judgment for divorce upon that ground; and in discussing the question as to what constitutes such extreme cruelty as will justify a divorce, the court said: "Although the character of the ill treatment, whether it operates directly upon the body or primarily upon the mind alone, and all the attending circumstances, are to be considered for the purpose of estimating the degree of the cruelty, yet the final test of the sufficiency, as a cause of divorce, must be its actual or reasonably apprehended injurious effect upon the body or health of the complaining party." And it was further said in that case "that the practical view of the law is that a degree of cruelty which cannot be perceived to injure the body or the health of the body 'can be practically endured,' and must be endured if there is no other remedy than by divorce; because no 'scale' by which to gauge the purely mental susceptibilities and sufferings has yet been invented or discovered, except such as indicate the degrees thereof by their perceptible effects upon the physical organization of the body." Tested by this rule, it must be conceded that the findings here are insufficient to sustain the judgment. But the case from which we have just quoted was decided by a bare majority of the court as it was then constituted, and, while the conclusion there reached finds support in many earlier cases cited in the opinion, we do not think it can be sustained without a wide departure from the letter and spirit of section 94 of the Civil Code of this state, which declares: "Extreme cruelty is the infliction of grievous bodily injury or grievous mental suffering upon the other by one party to the marriage." The language of this section is plain, and cannot be properly construed as declaring that only grievous bodily injury shall constitute extreme cruelty, and that extreme mental suffering, which is not shown to have injuriously affected the body or health of the complaining party, is not sufficient. The tendency of modern decisions, reflecting the advanced civilization of the present age, is to view marriage from a different standpoint than as a mere physical relation. It is now more wisely regarded as a union affecting the mental and spiritual life of the parties to it,—a relation designed to bring to them the comfort and felicities of home life,—and between whom, in order to fulfill such design, there should exist mutual sentiments of love and respect. "It was formerly thought that to constitute extreme cruelty, such as would authorize the granting of a divorce, physical violence is necessary; but the modern and better considered cases have repudiated this doctrine as taking too low and sensual a view of the marriage relation, and it is now very generally held that any unjustifiable conduct on the part of either the husband or wife which so grievously wounds the feelings of the other or so utterly destroys the peace of mind of the other as to seriously impair the health, . . . or such as utterly destroys the legitimate ends and objects of matrimony, constitutes extreme cruelty under the statute." Carpenter v. Carpenter, 80 Kan. 744.

Section 94 of the Civil Code is in harmony with the law as thus stated, and under it the infliction of grievous mental suffering is extreme cruelty. It may be true that there is "no scale by which to gauge the purely mental susceptibilities and sufferings" of another, nor is it necessary that there should be any such exact measure. The common judgment of mankind recognizes the fact that there may be unfounded charges and cruel imputations which are not more easily borne than physical bruises, and the necessary effect of which is to cause great mental distress to the person against whom they are made. Whether in any given case there has been inflicted this "grievous mental suffering" is a pure question of fact to be deduced from all the circumstances of each particular case, keeping always in view the intelligence, apparent refinement, and delicacy of sentiment of the complaining party; and no arbitrary rule of law as to what particular probative facts shall exist in order to justify a finding of the ultimate facts of its existence can be given. As said by Mr. Justice McFarland in his dissenting opinion in Waldron v. Waldron, supra: "Every case where a divorce is sought on this ground must depend upon its own particular facts; and a correct decision must depend—as most cases depend—upon the sound sense and judgment of juries and courts." We cannot say in this case that the court was not fully justified in finding that the conduct of the defendant inflicted upon plaintiff grievous mental suffering, as alleged in the complaint. The evidence was sufficient to sustain the finding of the court that plaintiff had been a resident of the state for more than six months prior to the commencement of the action.

The refusal of the court to grant a continuance cannot be held to be an abuse of discretion. In Kneebone v. Kneebone, 88 Cal. 647, the court said: "It is settled law in this state that applications for continuance are addressed to the sound discretion of the trial court, and its action will not be disturbed on appeal, unless the record affirmatively shows that it abused its discretion. In Musgrove v. Perkins, 9 Cal. 212, the court, per Field, J., said: 'The granting or refusing a continuance rests in the sound discretion of the court below, and its ruling will not be revised except for the most cogent reasons. The court below is apprised of all the circumstances of the case, and the previous proceedings, and is therefore better able to decide upon the propriety of granting the application than the appellate court, and when it exercises a reasonable, and not an arbitrary, discretion, its action will not be disturbed.' And similar language has been used in many subsequent decisions." This action was commenced on May 14, 1889. The defendant was personally served with summons nine days later, and on June 21st she appeared, and demurred to the complaint. On July 28 the demurrer was withdrawn, and the defendant was allowed thirty days in which to answer the complaint. She procured further extension of time, and filed an answer and cross complaint on October 15, 1889. An application was made on the 16th of October to have the cause set for trial, but by reason of the illness of the presiding judge the hearing of the motion was postponed until the 25th, when the cause was set for trial on December 2, following. Counsel for defendant objected to the order of the court setting the case for trial on December 2 on the ground that it would be necessary to take the depositions of witnesses residing in New York; that defendant was an actress by profession, and dependent upon herself for a living; and that her senior counsel would be necessarily absent from the state for about a month. Counsel for plaintiff stated that he would waive service of notice for the issuance of the commission to take depositions, and thereupon the order was made as stated. An application was made on December 2 for a continuance until the 15th day of January, 1890, and the cause was continued until the 6th day of December, 1889, at which time the motion for a continuance to January 15th was made and denied. The commission to take depositions was not issued until the 18th day of November, 1889. When the cause came on for trial, December 6th, 1889, counsel for defendant filed an affidavit, and in connection therewith several letters and telegrams received from the defendant, as a basis for his motion for a further continuance until January 15. It is apparent from the language of the court in denying this last motion that it believed the defendant was not acting in good faith, but was endeavoring to postpone the action of the court until her business engagements would bring her to San Francisco, and we cannot say that such conclusion may not have been fairly drawn from all the circumstances of the case. Defendant had actual notice more than six months prior to the day of the trial of the charge which plaintiff made against her, and the cause was at issue nearly two months before the trial occurred. It appears from the letters and telegrams that the defendant was at Minneapolis, Minn., November 15; Milwaukee, Wis., November 19; Marshalltown, Iowa, November 22; Des Moines, Iowa, November 23; Kansas City, November 26 and 27; St. Louis, December 2d, 4th and 6th; and was informed at these times of all that had occurred. The court doubtless concluded that, if the defendant could thus travel about in the east, she was able to make the trip to San Francisco in time to be present at the trial; and, as stated before, we cannot say that its order was an abuse of discretion. It has been held here that there is no abuse of discretion in refusing a motion for a continuance if the circumstances cast suspicion on the good faith of the application, and induce the belief that it was intended only for delay. People v. Mortimer, 46 Cal. 120. While the trial court should be most liberal in granting continuances in divorce cases, because the public as well as the parties to the action are interested in the result of the suit, a defendant must be held to the exercise of good faith and diligence, and cannot be heard to complain if the failure to present his defense results from an attempt to subordinate the business of the court to his own business engagements and convenience.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

De Haven, J.:

I dissent from the judgment and from so much of the foregoing opinion as holds that the action of the court below in denying the motions of defendant for a continuance was not an abuse of discretion. The defendant is a nonresident of the state; and her answer was filed October 15, 1889, and on the 25th of that month the court, on motion of plaintiff, and against the objection of defendant, set the case for trial on December 2, 1889; and afterwards the time for trial was continued by consent until December 6, 1889, without prejudice to the right of defendant to move for a further continuance. Upon that day the defendant moved for a continuance of the case until January 15, 1890. The motion was upon the ground that depositions of certain witnesses had not been returned, and also for the alleged reason that defendant was ill at Kansas City, Mo., and unable to come to San Francisco without endangering her prospects for recovery. This motion was supported by the affidavit of one of her attorneys, which stated, among other things, "that affiant is further informed by telegrams received from defendant on the 23d, 26th, and 30th days of November, 1889, and also from affidavits of Dr. J. C. Rogers, hereto attached, and affiant believes, and thereupon states, that defendant is now ill at Kansas City, Missouri, and unable to travel without danger to her health." Accompanying this was the affidavit of defendant herself and her physician to the same effect. Many telegrams from defendant to her attorney were also produced. I am unable to find anything in the record which directly contradicts the facts stated in these affidavits in regard to the state of defendant's health. That which comes the nearest to doing so is found in the statement or affidavit of plaintiff's father, wherein it is said: "I am informed and believe that she is now performing as an opera bouffe artist with a company, and has been doing so for many months, and is not too sick to come here or travel." Manifestly, this is not an assertion that the defendant was not in fact sick, as stated in the affidavits of herself and physician; but it is argued that the telegrams, dated at different places, show that she was traveling with her company, and, therefore, that she was not sick. These telegrams certainly show that she had not severed her connection with the company, and that she was able to travel between the places, but it does not necessarily follow, because she did this, that it would have been prudent for her to attempt the longer overland journey. The motion for a continuance until January 15th was denied, and upon the next day the defendant moved for a continuance for one week. The motion was made upon the same affidavits, and additional telegrams and a letter from defendant. One telegram was dated upon the previous day, December 6, and is as follows: "Allow sufficient time for traveling. Last notice too short. Fight for continuance. Telegraph early." The letter was dated December 2, 1889, and was addressed to her attorney. In it she said: "I am very anxious to hear definitely about the trial. I am unable to take so long a journey alone at present. I have worried myself ill, until nervous prostration got the better of me. I am also suffering from rheumatism. I must give notice this week to the company, if I intend to remain with them, and open January 18 in San Francisco. I can't put them off in this matter. I can't hear from you, and every night they send for decided answer, and I am unable to decide. If I come to San Francisco, I give up my engagement in the middle of winter. You say nothing about the divorce being granted to me, if I accept settlement. I have done nothing to grant a divorce, but if there is no other alternative I must." This motion was also denied, and in so doing, as well as in its denial of the previous motion, I think the court erred. The defendant was a nonresident of the state, an actress by profession, and under engagement as such, and while it appears from the letters and telegrams to her counsel that she did not wish to break this engagement if she could avoid it, and that this was one reason why she may have desired a postponement of the trial, still there is nothing in these letters and telegrams to warrant the inference that she and her counsel were acting in bad faith with the court in asking for a continuance upon the ground of the state of her health, as represented in the affidavits of herself and physician, or that such affidavits were untrue.

In actions for divorce public policy imperatively requires that nothing should be done in haste. The public are interested in having no divorce granted except for adequate cause, and the surest way to determine whether there is good cause or not is to hear both sides. In accordance with this rule, it has always heretofore been held by this court that in actions for divorce, applications to set aside a judgment of default; and for leave to answer, a more liberal rule is to be applied than in other cases, in which only private rights of property are involved. Thus in the case of Wadsworth v. Wadsworth, 81 Cal. 182, this court reversed the action of the lower court in refusing to set aside a default, although it was admitted that the appellant had been guilty of such negligence as would in an ordinary action have deprived her of the right to such relief. The court there said: "So far as the divorce awarded to the defendant is concerned, the motion should have been granted under the rule laid down in McBlain v. McBlain, 77 Cal. 509. In that case the court, per Paterson, J., said: 'The parties to the action are not the only people interested in the result thereof. The public has an interest in the result of every suit for divorce. The policy and the letter of the law concur in guarding against collusion and fraud; and it should be the aim of the court to afford the fullest possible hearing in such matters.' In the present case there seems to have been an honest desire on the part of the plaintiff to present her side of the case; and while, in an ordinary action, the neglect shown might be sufficient to deprive her of a right to relief, yet in this kind of case a more liberal rule should prevail." It is plain to my mind that if the court below had kept in view the rule as thus declared it would not have denied to the absent defendant a continuance for one week, which would have enabled her to be present, and give evidence in her own defense; more especially when such motion was based upon the solemn affidavit of her counsel, in which he assured the court, upon his information and belief, "that it was the intention of the defendant to be present in San Francisco at said trial on December 2, 1899, and that she was and is prevented therefrom by her said illness, and not otherwise." It is very apparent from all of the telegrams, letters, and affidavits submitted to the court that defendant desired to be present at the trial, and neither of the motions for a continuance called for any unreasonable delay, and there is nothing in this record to show that plaintiff could possibly have been injured if either of them had been granted. Under such circumstances, the refusal of the court to postpone the trial was error, and not within the limits of that judicial discretion which the law intends shall govern and restrain courts in their rulings upon such questions, and which discretion is never capricious, arbitrary, or unjust, but is always "exercised in conformity with the spirit of the law, and in a manner to subserve, and not to impede or defeat, the ends of substantial justice." Bailey v. Taaffe, 29 Cal. 424. Whatever cause may have existed for a divorce in this case, or however unwise or unfortunate the marriage between the parties may have been in the first instance, I can find in such facts no justification for bringing on the trial against a nonresident woman in fifty-three days after issue joined, in the face of a demand for the limited and reasonable postponement asked for by her counsel, and which motions it must be presumed from this record were made in good faith. The marriage was a lawful one, and gave to the defendant rights of which she should not be deprived without full and complete opportunity for defense. The judgment and order should be reversed.

We concur: Beatty, Ch. J.; Harrison, J.

VERMONT SUPREME COURT.

Joseph BALLARD

v.

Oscar A. BURTON.

(.....Vt.....)

1. Forebearing to withdraw money from a bank for a reasonable time although without any definite time agreed upon is a sufficient consideration for the signing by a third person as surety of another certificate of deposit in place of a former one which is surrendered.

NOTE.—Upon the question of what will constitute a sufficient consideration for a contract, see note to First Presby. Church v. Cooper (N. Y.) 8 L. R. A. 468; Talbott v. Stemmons, 5 L. R. A. 856, and note, 69 Ky. 222.

R. A.

2. A benefit to the promisee or a detriment to the promisor is not necessary to make a good consideration for a contract if the exercise of a present right is forfeited because of the promise.

3. The return of a certificate of deposit is properly made to the receiver of a bank where the bank has been closed and a receiver appointed.

4. One who takes a new certificate of deposit signed by a third person instead of withdrawing his money may testify that he would have withdrawn it if such person had not signed the certificate.

5. Merely adding the word "surety" to his signature by one who signs his name on the back of a certificate of deposit in order to induce a depositor to take such certificate in place of a former one, instead of withdrawing his money, does not prevent him from being held liable as maker instead of as indorser.

(June 3, 1892.)

EXCEPTIONS by defendant to rulings of the Franklin County Court made during the trial of an action brought to enforce the alleged liability of defendant for the amount of a certificate of deposit which he had indorsed, which resulted in a judgment in favor of plaintiff. Judgment reversed.

The certificate of deposit which constituted the foundation for the cause of action was as follows:

"No. 8,488. First National Bank of St. Albans. St. Albans, Vt., Jan. 14, 1884. I hereby certify that Joseph Ballard has this day deposited in this bank nine hundred sixty-two dollars, payable to the order of himself on return of this certificate properly indorsed, with interest at 4 per cent per annum.

[Signed] A. Sowles, Cashier;"
—and on the back thereof, "E. A. Sowles, A. Sowles. O. A. Burton, Surety."

Messrs. Farrington & Post and Wilson & Hall, for defendant:

In order to sustain the action, plaintiff must show a valuable consideration, and a valuable consideration is defined as imparting a benefit or gain to the party making the promise, or a loss or injury of some kind to the party to whom it is made.

Dan. Neg. Inst. § 160.

No benefit is shown either to the bank, to E. A. Sowles, to Albert Sowles, or to the defendant. The only consideration for the certificate was a past and executed consideration; and such a consideration will not support the promise of a third party.

1 Chitty, Cont. p. 69; Rix v. Adams, 9 Vt. 288; Harding v. Cragie, 8 Vt. 501.

It cannot be said that the simple fact of leaving money that had been on deposit for years, without any definite time being fixed and subject to immediate payment is a benefit to the debtor. The bank was insolvent and the payment to any creditor in full would naturally work an injury to the directors and stockholders by increasing their personal liability, and liability to a larger assessment upon their stock.

U. S. Rev. Stat. § 5242.

The exchange of certificates worked no harm to the plaintiff; his money was in the bank and he waived no security. Forbearance to sue is not enough to support a promise; there must be an agreement to forbear.

Mcconney v. Stanley, 8 Cush. 85; Manter v. Churchill, 127 Mass. 84.

The bank was hopelessly insolvent and plaintiff knew it. Hence he could not have retained the money had he drawn it.

U. S. Rev. Stat. § 5242; Larkin v. Hapgood, 56 Vt. 597; First Nat. Bank of Selma v. Colby, 88 U. S. 21 Wall. 609-616, 22 L. ed. 687-689; Bump, Bankr. § 5128, and cases cited; Eoberts v. Hill, 24 Fed. Rep. 571.

16 L. R. A.

Plaintiff never returned the certificate in question indorsed, and never made a demand on the bank or either of the indorsers, therefore he cannot recover.

Bellows Falls Bank v. Rutland County Bank, 40 Vt. 377; Smilie v. Stevens, 39 Vt. 815; Brown v. McElroy, 52 Ind. 404.

Messrs. H. C. Adams and Ballard & Burleton, for plaintiff:

The case shows that the plaintiff forbore drawing out his money. Whether any particular time was given is immaterial.

Hakes v. Holchkie, 23 Vt. 281.

Any damage or suspension or forbearance of a right will be sufficient to sustain a promise.

Seaman v. Seaman, 12 Wend. 881.

Start, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant's motion for a verdict was properly overruled. It appears from testimony, not controverted, that the defendant was a stockholder and director of the First National Bank of St. Albans. The plaintiff and his sister had money deposited there, evidenced by certificates of deposit. There was a run on the bank, and the plaintiff presented these certificates, and demanded the money evidenced by them. There was a sufficient amount of money at hand to pay the sums demanded; but the officers of the bank desired to retain it, and asked the plaintiff to leave it. Thereupon he told them he would accept of a new certificate signed by the defendant; otherwise he wanted the money. They gave him such a certificate, and he surrendered up to the bank the old certificates. The plaintiff subsequently paid his sister the amount of her certificate, which was included in the new certificate. The cashier of the bank understood the plaintiff was to forbear for a reasonable time the exercise of his right to draw his money, and the plaintiff did forbear until the bank closed its doors, and its funds went into the hands of a receiver. At this time the bank was insolvent. The evidence fails to show that a definite period of forbearance was agreed upon, but no question is made but that the plaintiff did forbear for a reasonable time. The uncontroverted evidence clearly entitled the plaintiff to a holding by the court that there was a sufficient consideration for the defendant's promise. The request by the officers of the bank that the plaintiff leave the money, his reply, the giving of a new certificate, the surrender of the old ones, and the forbearance of the plaintiff admit of but one interpretation. The plaintiff, in consideration of a new certificate signed by the defendant, surrendered the old certificates, and agreed to and did forbear the exercise of a legal right to then draw his own and his sister's money. In view of the uncontroverted facts and circumstances in the case, any other construction of the contract would be meaningless. It is a rule, in construing contracts, that they are to be so understood as to have legal and actual operation; and a construction which would be senseless, in view of the circumstances of the case, or wholly inapplicable, should never be adopted. Story, Cont. § 640; Athood v. Cobb, 16 Pick. 227. 26 Am. Dec. 657; Evans v. Sanders, 8 Port. (Ala.) 497, 33 Am. Dec. 297.

